The Preface to the READER.

Foraſmuch as we are come now to the time of Q. Mary, when as ſo many were put to death for the cauſe, eſpecially of the Maſſe, and the ſacrament of the Altar (as they call it) I thought it convenient upon the occaſion given, in the ingreſſe of this foreſaid ſtory, firſt to prefixe before, by the way of Preface, ſome declaration collected out of divers Writers and Authors, whereby to ſet forth to the Reader the great abſurdity, wicked abuſe, and perillous idolatry of the Popiſh Maſſe, declaring how and by whom it came in, and how it is clouted and patched up of divers additions, to the intent that the Reader ſeeing the vaine inſtitution thereof, and weighing the true cauſes why it is be exploded out of all Churches, may the better thereby iudge of their death which gave their lives for the teſtimony and the word of truth.

Firſt, concerning the origine of this word Miſſa, whether it came of Miſſach in Hebrew, Deut. 16. or Mincha, Levit. 6. which ſignifieth oblation; or whether it came of ſending away the Catechumeni, and perſons unworthy out of place of miniſtration, as certaine Writers ſuppoſe; or elſe, Ex miſſis donariis & ſymbolis quæ in offertorio proponebantur, that is, of gifts and oblations wont to be offered before the Communion; or whether Miſſa is derived of Remiſſa, which in the former Writers was uſed pro remiſſione: or whether Miſſa, pro licentia dimittendi populum, is taken of ſending away the congregation by the words of the Deacon, Ite miſſa eſt: or whether Miſſa hath his denomination of that the Grecians call ἄφεσις τοῦ λαοῦ, dimiſſion of the people, alluding to the ſtory of the Hebrewes, licenſed of Pharao to depart out of captivitie after the eating of the Paſchal Lambe, as I read in an old Popiſh booke intituled De Sacramentis Sacerdotalibus; or what terme ſoever it bee elſe, either Latin, Syrian, Dutch, or French: or howſoever elſe it taketh his appellation, as there is no certainty, amongſt themſelves that moſt magnifie the Maſſe, ſo it is no matter to us that ſtand againſt it. To my iudgement and coniecture this later expoſition of the word ſeemeth more probable, both for that it is ioyned with the word Ite, which ſignifieth departing; and alſo the time and order in ſpeaking the ſame agreeth wel thereunto. For as the old Hebrewes, after the ſupper of the Lamb, and not before, were ſet at liberty ſtraightway to depart out of captivity: ſo belike to declare our myſticall deliverance by Chriſt offered and ſlain for us, firſt goeth before the action of the holy ſupper: that done, then the Prieſt or Deacon ſaith, Ite miſſa eſt, meaning thereby the deliverance and liberty which is ſpiritually wrought in us, after that the bodie of Chriſt hath beene offered for us. Or elſe, if Miſſa otherwiſe ſhould ſignifie the celebration or the action of the ſupper, it would not be ſaid Ite, but Venite, miſſa eſt, &c. Moreover, beſides other arguments, there be certaine places in Caſſianus which ſeeme to declare that Miſſa ſignifieth dimiſſion of the congregation: as where he writeth of him which commeth not in time to the howers of prayer, ſaying it not to be lawfull for him to enter into the Oratory, Sed ſtantem præ foribus Congregationis miſſam præſtolari debere. i. that he ought, ſtanding without the dores, to waite for the miſſe of the congregation. And againe in the next Chapter following hee inferreth the ſame vocable Miſſa in like ſenſe: Contenti, inquit, ſomno qui nobis poſt vigiliarum miſſam uſque ad lucis indulgetur adventum: i. Contented, ſaith hee, with ſo much ſleep as ſerveth us for the miſſe, or breaking up of the night vigill, unto the comming of the day &c.

Beginning with the Reigne of Queene MARY.

The Preface to the READER.

FOrasmuch as we are come now to the time of Q. Mary, when as ſo many were put to death for the cauſe, eſpecially of the Maſſe, and the ſacrament of the Altar (as they call it) I thought it convenient upon the occaſion given, in the ingreſſe of this foreſaid ſtory, firſt to prefixe before, by the way of Preface, ſome declaration collected out of divers Writers and Authors, whereby to ſet forth to the Reader the great abſurdity, wicked abuſe, and perillous idolatry of the Popiſh Maſſe, declaring how and by whom it came in, and how it is clouted and patched up of divers additions, to the intent that the Reader ſeeing the vaine inſtitution thereof, and weighing the true cauſes why it is be exploded out of all Churches, may the better thereby iudge of their death which gave their lives for the teſtimony and the word of truth.

Firſt, concerning the originе of this word Miſſa, whether it came of Miſſath in Hebrew, Deut 16. or Mincha, Levit 6. which ſignifieth oblation; or whether it came of ſending away the Catechumeni, and perſons unworthy out of place of miniſtration, as certaine Writers ſuppoſe; or elſe, Ex miſſis donariis & ſymbolis quæ in offertorio proponebantur, that is, of gifts and oblations wont to be offered before the Communion; or whether Miſſa is derived of Remiſſa, which in the former Writers was uſed pro remiſſione: or whether Miſſa, pro licentia dimittendi populum, is taken of ſending away the congregation by the words of the Deacon, Ite miſſa eſt: or whether Miſſa hath his denomination of that the Grecians call ἄφεσις τοῦ λαοῦ, diſmiſſion of the people, alluding to the ſtory of the Hebrewes, licenſed of Pharao to depart out of captivitie after the eating of the Paſchal Lambe, as I read in an old Popiſh book intituled De Sacramentis Sacerdotalibus; or what terme ſoever it bee elſe, either Latin, Syrian, Dutch, or French: or howſoever elſe it taketh his appellation, as there is no certainty, amongſt themſelves that moſt magnifie the Maſſe, ſo it is no matter to us that ſtand againſt it. To my iudgement and conjecture this later expoſition of the word ſeemeth more probable, both for that it is ioyned with the word Ite, which ſignifieth departing; and alſo the time and order in ſpeaking the ſame agreeth wel thereunto. For as the old Hebrewes, after the ſupper of the Lamb, and not before, were ſet at liberty ſtraightway to depart out of captivity: ſo belike to declare our myſticall deliverance by Chriſt offered and ſlain for us, firſt goeth before the action of the holy ſupper: that done, then the Prieſt or Deacon ſaith, Ite miſſa eſt, meaning thereby the deliverance and liberty which is ſpiritually wrought in us, after that the bodie of Chriſt hath beene offered for us. Or elſe, if Miſſa otherwiſe ſhould ſignifie the celebration or the action of the ſupper, it would not be ſaid Ite, but Venite, miſſa eſt, &c. Moreover, beſides other arguments, there be certaine places in Caſſianus which ſeeme to declare that Miſſa ſignifieth dimiſſion of the congregation: as where he writeth of him which commeth not in time to the howers of prayer, ſaying it not to be lawfull for him to enter into the Oratory, Sed ſtantem præ foribus Congregationis miſſam præſtolari debere. i. that he ought, ſtanding without the dores, to waite for the miſſe of the congregation. And againe in the next Chapter following hee inferreth the ſame vocable Miſſa in like ſenſe: Contenti, inquit, ſomno qui nobis poſt vigiliarum miſſam uſque ad lucis indulgetur adventum: i. Contented, ſaith hee, with ſo much ſleep as ſerveth us for the miſſe, or breaking up of the night vigill, unto the comming of the day &c.

But to let paſſe theſe coniectures, this by the way I give the Reader to note and underſtand, that by the word Miſſa never yet entred into the Church nor uſage among the Greekes: ſo it is to be obſerved among our Latin Interpretors, ſuch as have tranſlated of old time the ancient Greek Authors, as Euſebius, and the Tripartite hiſtory and others, that were the Greeke Writers have theſe termes συνάγειν, συνάξεις ποιεῖν, and ἐκκλησιάζειν, that is, to call the congregation, to convent aſſemblies, and to frequent together. The old Tranſlators of Epiphanius, and other tranſlate upon the ſame Miſſas facere, collectas agere, miſſas celebrare, &c. whereby it is not obſcure to be ſeen, that this word Maſſe in the old time was not only and peculiarly applied to the action of conſecration, but as well to all Chriſtian aſſemblies collected, or congregations convented, according as in the Dutch language this name

Epiph. trip. hiſt. l.7.c.13. & apud ſeipſos miſſarum celebrare ſolemnia, &c. Item collectas agunt, &c. quod Socrates græce lib.5. c.22 inquit, τὰς δὲ συνάξεις & συνάξεις ποιοῦσιν, &c.

(Meſſe) ſignifieth any ſolemne frequency, or panagyrie, or gathering together of the people. But of the name enough and too much.

To expreſſe now the abſurdity of the ſaid Maſſe, and the irreligious application thereof, unſeemly and perillous for Chriſtians to uſe, I will bring two or three reaſons of the worthy ſervant and Martyr of God, John Bradford, to which many more may be alſo added out of others.

The Maſſe a double enemy againſt Chriſt. The Maſſe iniurious to the Prieſthood of Chriſt.

Firſt the Maſſe, ſaith he, is a moſt ſubtile and pernicious enemy againſt Chriſt, and that two wayes: namely againſt his Prieſthood, and againſt his ſacrifice: which he proveth by this way. For the prieſthood of Chriſt, ſaith he, is an everlaſting prieſthood, and ſuch an one that cannot go to another. But the Maſſe utterly putteth him out of place, as though he were dead for ever, and ſo God were a liar, which ſaid that Chriſt ſhould be a Prieſt for ever: which briefly commeth unto this Argument.

Feſ- That thing is not perpetuall, nor ſtandeth alone, which admitteth ſucceſſion of other to do the ſame thing that was done before.

ti- But the Maſſe Prieſts ſucceed after Chriſt, doing the ſame ſacrifice (as they ſay) which he did before.

no. Ergo, the maſſe prieſts make Chriſts Prieſthood not to be perpetuall.

Another Argument.

Major.

Ba- All Prieſts either be after the order of Aaron, or after the order of Melchiſedech, or after the order of the Apoſtles, or after that ſpirituall ſort whereof it is written, Vos eſtis ſpirituale ſacerdotium, &c.

Minor.

ro- But our Maſſe Prieſts neither be after the order of Aaron, for that is to reſume that which Chriſt hath aboliſhed; neither after the order of Melchiſedech, for that is peculiar only to Chriſt; neither after the order of the Apoſtles, for then ſhould they bee Miniſters not Maſters, not Prieſts but Preachers, and which of the Apoſtles was ever named by the title of a Prieſt? Again, neither are they after the generall ſort of the ſpirituall Prieſthood. For after that prerogative every true Chriſtian is a ſpirituall Prieſt as well as they, offering up ſpirituall not bodily ſacrifice, as prayers, thankſgiving, obedience, mortification of the body framed to the obedience of his commandements.

Concluſio.

co. Ergo, Our maſſe Prieſts are no Prieſts unleſſe it be after the order of the Prieſts of Baal.

The Maſſe iniurious to the ſacrifice or death of Chriſt

Secondly, concerning the ſacrifice of Chriſt above mentioned hee reaſoneth in like manner; which we have reduced in the way of Argument as followeth:

Major.

Da- To reiterate a thing once done, for the attaining or accompliſhing of the end wherefore it was begun, declareth the imperfection of the ſame thing before.

Minor.

ri- The maſſe prieſts do reiterate the ſacrifice of Chriſt once done for the end wherefore it was begun, that is, for propitiation and remiſſion à poena & culpa pro vivis & pro defunctis.

Concluſio.

i. Ergo, maſſe Prieſts make the ſacrifice of Chriſt to be unperfect, and ſo are they iniurious to the ſacrifice of Chriſt.

For confirmation of the premiſſes, marke here, Reader, I beſeech thee, the Rubrick here following, written before the Maſſe of the 5. wounds in the Maſſe book.

Boniface Biſhop of Rome lay ſicke, and was like to die, to whom our Lord ſent the Archangell Raphael with the office of the Maſſe of the five wounds, ſaying; Riſe and write this office, and ſay it five times, and thou ſhalt be reſtored to thy health immediately: and what Prieſt ſoever ſhall ſay this office for himſelfe, or for any other that is ſick, five times, the perſon for whom it is ſaid ſhall obtain health and grace, and in the world to come, if he continue in vertue, life everlaſting. And in whatſoever tribulation a man ſhall be in this life, if he procure this office to be ſaid five times for him of a Prieſt, without doubt he ſhall be delivered. And if it be ſaid for the ſoul of the dead, anone as it ſhall be ſaid and ended five times, his ſoule ſhall bee rid from paines. This hearing the Biſhop, he did erect himſelfe up in his bed, coniuring the Angell by the Name of Almighty God, to tell him what he was, and wherefore hee came, and that hee ſhould depart without doing him harme: who anſwered that he was Raphael the Archangell, ſent unto him of God; and that all the premiſſes were undoubtedly true. Then the ſaid Boniface confirmed the ſaid office of the five wounds by the Apoſtolike authority.

The Maſſe is an hinderance to the true ſervice of God, and to the godly life of men.

Another Argument againſt the Maſſe is, for that it is an hinderance to the true ſervice of God, and to the godly life of men: the declaration whereof is more at large by the ſaid Author ſet out; but briefly in forme of Argument it may thus be contracted.

Another Argument.

Major.

Da- Whatſoever cauſeth or occaſioneth a man to reſt in outward ſerving of God, whoſe ſervice ſhould be all inward in ſpirit and verity, that hindreth the true ſervice of God.

Minor.

ti- The Maſſe occaſioneth a man to reſt in outward ſerving, as in hearing, ſeeing, and ſaying Maſſe, which be but outward ſenſes of a man, and is as they ſay meritorious ex opere operato, etiam ſine bono motu intentionis.

Concluſio.

ſi. Ergo, the Maſſe hindreth the right and true ſervice of God.

Another Argument, proving that the Maſſe hindreth good ſife.

Major.

Di- Upon the maſſe riſeth falſe hope; and falſe remedie is promiſed to wicked livers. For evill men hearing maſſe in the morning, upon hope thereof take more ſecurity in doing all day what they liſt. And ſuch as have in bibbing, brauling, taverning, ſwearing, whoring, dicing, carding, committed wickedneſſe, to them the maſſe is ſet up, promiſing ſufficient propitiation, ſacrifice, remedy of body and ſoul, for man and beaſt, a poena & culpa, pro vivis & mortuis. Though they never heard preaching, never uſed praying, never repented, or how wicked ſoever they have been; yet if they come to the Church, take holy bread and holy water, and hear a maſſe, or find a ſoule Prieſt upon the remedy thereof, then they think themſelvs diſcharged, and good Catholike men:

The Maſſe hindereth good life.

Minor.

ſa- Upon what cauſe ſoever riſeth falſe hope, and falſe remedy is promiſed to wicked livers, that hindreth good life.

Concluſio.

mis. Ergo, the maſſe hindereth good life.

Another Argument.

Maior.

Da- Where one thing is ſufficient and ſerveth alone, there all other helps be needleſſe thereunto wherein it ſerveth.

Minor.

ti- The maſſe as they ſay, hath all, ſerveth for all: for by it commeth pardon for ſins, by it commeth deliverance from Hell and Purgatory, by it commeth health for man and beaſt: In ſumma, the Maſſe is Mare bonorum &c.

ſi. Ergo,

Anno 1552

Concluſio.

ſi, Ergo, all other helps els be nèedleſſe; hearing of Gods word, faith, praying in ſpirit, repenting, preaching, piety and other helps to good life, &c.

Another Argument, proving that the Maſſe is divers and contrary from the inſtitution of Chriſts Supper.

1. Chriſt ordained his Supper to be a memoriall of his death and paſſion, to be preached untill he come.

The Maſſe is no memoriall thing of Chriſt remembred in the Sacrament; but rather they make the Sacrament to be Chriſt himſelfe offered and ſacrificed for remiſſion of ſins, both for the quicke and the dead.

2 Chriſt ordained his Supper to bee celebrate and received of the congregation. And therefore Paul biddeth the Corinthians to tarry one for another. In the Maſſe there is no ſuch thing; chooſe the people whether they will come or no, Sir John is kinne to the tide, he will tarry for no man: if hee have a boy to ſay Amen, it is enough.

3 Chriſt received not, but hee diſtributed alſo the whole in every part. Sir John when he hath received all alone, he ſheweth the people the emptie chalice. And if he diſtribute to the people once a yèere, it is but in one kinde alone.

4 Chriſt ordained the Supper to bee a taking matter, an eating matter, a diſtributing and a remembring matter: Contrary, our Maſſe men make it a matter not of taking, but of gazing, pèeping, piring, boring, carrying, recarrying, worſhipping, ſtouping, knèeling, knocking, with ſtoupe downe before, hold up higher, I thanke God I ſèe my Maker to day &c. Chriſt ordained it a table matter, wee turne it to an altar matter; he for a memoriall, we for a ſacrifice; he ſate, our men ſtand, he in his common tongue, we in a forreine tongue. Whereby it is manifeſt to appeare how divers and repugnant the Maſſe is to the inſtitution of the Lords Supper.

Another Argument proving that the Maſſe is contrary to Gods commandements.

The doctrine of the Maſſebooke contrary to Gods commandements.

Major.

Item, where the firſt table of Gods bleſſed and ſacred commandements teacheth men to worſhip and ſerve him, and to direct the meditations of their hearts only unto him, and that in al places, at all times, both publikely and privately;

Minor.

The Maſſe booke doth point out ſervice for Saints and for creatures by name, to be ſerved at the leaſt 300. dayes and years, as appeareth by the Calendars, Maſſes, Collects, Martyrologues, &c.

Concluſio.

Ergo, the doctrine and inſtitution of the Maſſe booke tendeth contrary to Gods holy commandements.

Another reaſon againſt the Maſſe.

Item; where S. Paul in expreſſe words willeth all things to be done in an edifying tongue, the maſſe is celebrate in a tongue forreine, ſtrange, and unknown to the people; ſo that although the matter therein contained were wholeſome, and conſonant to Scripture (as it is much diſagrèeing from the ſame) yet for the ſtrangeneſſe of the tongue it giveth but a ſound, and worketh no edifying to the ignorant. Now both the tongue being ſtrange to the eares of the people, and the matter alſo in the maſſe contained being repugnant to Gods word, what defence can the maſſe have, but utterly it is to be reiected?

And forſomuch therefore as the maſſe ſo long uſed in a forreine language hath not hitherto come to the underſtanding of the ſimple and vulgar ſort, to the intent they may themſelves perceive the matter, and be their owne iudges, I have here ſet forth the chiefeſt part thereof, which is the Canon, in Engliſh, ſo as I found it in a certaine written copie, by maſter Coverdale tranſlated, adioyning withall the Rubricke and circumſtance of the ſame in every point, as it is in the maſſe booke contained.

The whole Canon of the Maſſe, with the Rubricke thereof, as it ſtandeth in the Maſſe booke, after Saliſbury uſe, Tranſlated word by word out of Latine into Engliſh.

The Rubricke.

After the Sanctus, the Prieſt immediately ioyning his hands together, and lifting up his eyes, beginneth theſe words, Te igitur clementiſſime &c. that is to ſay, Therefore moſt gracious father through Jeſus Chriſt thy Son our Lord, we humbly beſèech thèe.

Let him bow down his body, while he ſaith,
And we deſire

Here the Prieſt ſtanding upright muſt kiſſe the altar (a) on the right hand of the ſacrifice, ſaying:
that thou accept and bleſſe

a And why not on the left hand as well? or why any ſuch kiſſing at all?

Here let the Prieſt make thrèe croſſes upon the chalice and the bread ſaying:
theſe ✠ gifts, theſe ✠ (b) preſents, theſe ✠ holy and unſpotted ſacrifices.

b Precious no doubt & principall: or elſe are they too preſumptuous, that hath already offered it up for thy ſins, and for the ſalvation of others

When the ſignes are made upon the chalice, let him lift up his hands, ſaying thus;
Which firſt of all (c) we offer unto thee for thy holy Catholike Church; that thou vouchſafe to pacifie, kèep, unite, and governe it throughout the whole world, with thy ſervant our Pope N. and our Biſhop N.

c Who gave you that commiſſion? will you offer bread and wine for the Church of Chriſt, who of very love hath offered up himſelf for it already? Ephes 5.

That is (d) his own Biſhop only and our King N.
And they are expreſſed by name.
Then let there follow and all true believers, and ſuch as have the Catholike and Apoſtolike faith in due eſtimation.

Here let him pray for the living.
Remember Lord thy ſervants and handmaides N. and N.

d Charity would pray for others alſo.

In the which prayer a rule muſt be obſerved for the order of charity. Five times let the prieſt pray. (e) Firſt for himſelfe. Secondly for father and mother, carnall and ſpirituall, and for other parents. Thirdly, for ſpeciall friends, pariſhioners and others. Fourthly, for all that ſtand by. Fifthly, for all Chriſtian people. And here may the Prieſt commend all (f) his friends to God. But my counſell is, that none make over long tarrying there, partly for diſtraction of minde, partly becauſe of immiſſions which may chance through evill Angels: And all that ſtand here by round about, whoſe faith and devotion unto thèe is knowne and manifeſt; for whom we offer unto thèe, or which themſelves offer unto thèe, this ſacrifice (g) of praiſe for them and theirs: for the redemption of their ſoules, for the hope of their ſalvation and health, and render their vowes unto the eternall living and true God.

e So did not the Lord teach his Diſciples to pray Mat. 6. Luke 11.

f And why not his enemies alſo? Mat. 5.

g Why [illegible] them a [illegible] ctory ſacrifice of it?

Communicating and worſhipping the memoriall, firſt (h) of the glorious and ever Virgin.

Bowing down a little, let him ſay:

Mary the mother of our God and Lord Jeſu Chriſt, and alſo of thy bleſſed Apoſtles and Martyrs, Peter, Paul, Andrew, James, John, Thomas, Philip, Bartholomew, Matthew, Simon, and Thaddeus, Linus, Cletus, Clement, Sixtus, Cornelius, Cyprianus, Laurence, Chryſogonus, John and Paul, Coſme and Damian, h Here had the [illegible] matter [illegible], ye would doe it in remembrance of him.

and of all thy Saints: By whoſe (i) merits and prayers, grant thou, that in all things we may be defended with the helpe of thy protection, through the ſame Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

(i) Thus the merits & praiers of Chriſt are defaced.

Here let the Prieſt behold the hoſte (k) with great veneration, ſaying:

(k) And why? for within a little while he looketh to have it his God.

Therfore Lord we beſeech thee, that thou being pacified wilt receive this oblation of our bound ſervice, and of all thy houſhold: and order our dayes in thy peace, and command us to be delivered from eternall damnation, and to be numbred in the flock of thine elect, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Here againe let him (l) hold the hoſte, ſaying:

(l) That muſt he do with a ſower & frowning countenance, if he follow the cantels of the Maſſe.

Which oblation we beſeech thee O Almighty God in all things to make.

Here let him make (a) three croſſes upon both, when he ſaith,

(a) Yea three at the leaſt; for this geare muſt be conjured as well as other things: leſt when they think Chriſt to be naturally preſent, the Divell be there, and take up the lodging before.

✠ Bleſſed; ✠ appointed; ✠ ratified; reaſonoble and acceptable; that unto us it may be,

Here let him make a croſſe upon the bread, ſaying:

✠ The body,

Here upon the chalice.

And ✠ blood,

Here with hands ioyned together, let him ſay,

Of thy moſt dearly beloved Son our Lord Ieſu Chriſt:

Here let the Prieſt lift up his hands, and ioyn them together, and afterward wipe his fingers, and lift up the hoſte, ſaying:

Who (b) the next day afore he ſuffered took bread into his holy and reverent hands, and his eyes being lift up into heaven

(b) The Scripture ſaith: Ea nocte, the ſame night.

Here let him lift up his eyes.

Unto the God almighty his father,

Here let him bow downe, and afterward erect himſelfe up a little, ſaying:

Rendring thanks unto thee, he ✠ bleſſed, he brake.

Here let him touch the hoſte, ſaying:

And gave unto his diſciples, ſaying, (c) take ye, and (d) eat of this ye all (e) for this is my body.

(c) He ſaith not let one of you take and eat it himſelfe alone.
(d) He ſaith not hang it up, keep it, worſhip it, &c.

(e) Enim have they put in of their own, and left out quod pro vobis datur.

And theſe words muſt be pronounced with one breath, and under one prolation, without making of any pauſe betwéen. After theſe words, let him bow himſelf to the hoſte, and afterward lift up above his forehead, that it may be (f) ſéen of the people: and let him reverently lay it againe before the chalice, in manner of a croſſe made with the ſame, and then let him uncover the chalice, and hold it betwéene his hands, not putting his thumb and forefinger aſunder, ſave only when he bleſſeth, ſaying thus:

(f) If it were the true ſacramental bread of the body of the Lord, it ſhould be taken and eaten, & not lift up, to bee gazed upon.

Likewiſe after they had ſupped, he taking this excellent cup into his holy and reverent hands, rendring thanks alſo unto thee.

Here let him bow himſelfe, ſaying:

Bleſſed, and gave unto his diſciples, ſaying: take, and drink of this (g) ye all.

(g) Why takeſt thou it then alone? Or why ſhould not the lay people then drink of the cup alſo? be not they the Lords diſciples? ſchollars of his heavenly ſchoole?

Here let him lift up the chalice a little, ſaying thus:

For this is the cup of my blood, of the new and everlaſting teſtament (h) the myſtery of faith which for you and for many ſhall be ſhed to the remiſſion of ſinnes.

(h) Theſe words (myſterium fidei,) have ye here added, declaring the cup to be but a myſticall repreſentation of the bloud.

Here let him lift the chalice to his breaſt, or further than his head, ſaying:

As oft as ye doe theſe things, ye ſhall doe them (i) in remembrance of me.

(i) How ſtandeth this with the remembrance of ſaints or of the dead, In quorum memoria, &c.

Here let him ſet downe the chalice again, and rub his fingers (k) over the chalice. Then let him lift up his armes, and cover the chalice. Then let him lift up his armes croſſe wiſe, his fingers being ioyned together untill theſe words, De tuis donis, that is to ſay, of thine owne rewards.

(k) By theſe crummes may ye know what bread was wont to be uſed

Wherefore O Lord, we alſo thy ſervants, and thy holy people, being mindfull aſwell of the bleſſed paſſion and reſurrection, as of the glorious aſcenſion of the ſame Chriſt thy Sonne our Lord God, do offer unto thy excellent maieſty of thine owne rewards and gifts.

Here let there be made (l) five croſſes, Namely, the three firſt upon the hoſt and cup, ſaying: ✠ a pure hoſt; ✠ an holy hoſt; ✠ an undefiled hoſt.

(l) And may no fewer croſſes than five ſerve?

The fourth upon the (m) bread only, ſaying:

The holy ✠ (n) bread of eternall life,

The fifth upon the cup, ſaying:

And ✠ cup of eternall ſalvation. Vouchſafe thou alſo with a mercifull and pleaſant countenance to have reſpect hereunto, and to accept the ſame (o) as thou diddeſt vouchſafe to accept the gifts of thy righteous ſervant Abel, and the ſacrifice of our Patriarch Abraham, and the holy ſacrifice, the undefiled hoſt, that the high Prieſt Melchiſedech did offer unto thee.

(m) And why then be ye angry with us?
(n) The bread of eternall life, is Chriſt himſelfe: if this then be he, how dareſt thou preſume to offer him up unto his Father?
(o) Have ye the moſt precious body of Chriſt in ſo ſmall eſtimation that ye reſemble it to the beaſts which Abel and Abraham offered?

Here let the Prieſt with his body bowed downe, and his hands holden acroſſe, ſay, Supplices te rogamus, we humbly beſeech thee, untill theſe words, ex hac altaris participatione, of this partaking of the altar. And then let him ſtand up, kiſſing the altar on the right ſide of the ſacrifice; and (p) let him make a ſigne of the croſſe upon the hoſt, and in his owne face, when he ſaith; omni benedictione cœleſti, with all heavenly benediction.

(p) If the hoſt, as thou ſayeſt, be Chriſt himſelfe, is not he then moſt bleſſed already?

We (q) humbly beſeech thee O almighty God command thou theſe to be brought by the hands of thy holy Angell unto thy high altar in the preſence of thy divine maieſty; that as many of us as,

(q) How ſtandeth this with our faith, to deſire Chriſt to be brought up to the preſence of his Father, as though he were not there already?

Here erecting up himſelfe, let him kiſſe the altar on the right ſide of the ſacrifice, ſaying:

Of this participation of the altar ſhall receive thy ſonnes holy

Here let him make a ſigne of the croſſe (r) upon the hoſt, ſaying ✠ body.

(r) And is hee not yet bleſt enough?

Then upon the cup, ſaying:

and ✠ blood may be repleniſhed.

Then let him make a ſigne (ſ) in his owne face, ſaying, with all heavenly benediction and grace thorow the ſame Chriſt our Lord. Amen.

(ſ) Gods bleſſing on your good face.

Here let him pray for the dead.

Remember Lord alſo the ſoules of thy ſervants and handmaidens, N. and N. which are gone before us with the mark of faith, and reſt in the ſléep of peace. We beſéech thee, O Lord, that unto them, and unto (a) all ſuch as reſt in Chriſt, thou wilt grant a place of refreſhing, of light, and of peace, through the ſame Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

(a) Thus thou prayeſt for our Lady and all the Saints in heaven, declaring that they are in no ſuch painfull purgatory, as they dream ſo much of.

Here let him ſmite once (b) upon his breaſt, ſaying:

“ Unto us ſinners alſo thy ſervants, hoping of the multitude of thy mercies, vouchſafe to give ſome portion and fellowſhip with thy holy Apoſtles and Martyrs, with Iohn, Stephen, Matthias, Barnabas, Ignatius, Alexander, Marcellinus, Peter, Felicitas, Perpetua, Agatha, Lucia, Agnes, Cecilia, Anaſtacia, and with all thy Saints; within whoſe fellowſhip we beſéech thee admit us, not weighing our merit, but granting us forgiveneſſe through Chriſt our Lord.

(b) Down great heart.
“ Here he muſt lift up his voice ſignifying the Centurion which lift up his voice at the paſſion.

(c) here is not ſaid Amen.

(c) No, good reaſon why.

By whom O Lord, all theſe good things thou doſt ever create.

Here let him make a ſigne over the chalice (“) three times, ſaying:

Thou ✠ ſanctifieſt; thou ✠ quickneſt; thou ✠ bleſſeſt, and giveſt unto us.

“ If this were not a ſilly poore Chriſt, hee ſhould not need ſo many bleſſings of ſuch a god-father.

Here let him uncover the chalice, and make a ſigne of the croſſe with the hoſt five times:

(d) firſt beyond the chalice on every ſide; ſecondly, even with the chalice; thirdly, within the chalice; fourthly, like as at the firſt; fifthly, before the chalice.

Through ✠ him, and with ✠ him; and in him is unto thee God, Father ✠ almighty, in the unity of the ✠ holy Ghoſt, all honour and glory.

Here let the Prieſt cover the chalice, and hold his hands ſtill upon the altar till the Pater noſter be ſpoken, ſaying thus:

World without end, Amen. Let us pray. Being advertiſed by wholeſome precepts, and taught by (e) Gods inſtitution, wee are bold to ſay.

Here let the Deacon take the patten, and hold it uncovered on the right ſide of the Prieſt (f) his arme being ſtretched out on high untill da propitius. Here let the Prieſt lift up his hands, ſaying: Pater noſter, &c. The Queere muſt ſay, Sed libera nos, &c.

Deliver us we beſeech thee, O Lord, from all evill paſt, preſent, and for to come. and that (g) by the interceſſion of the bleſſed, glorious, and our Virgin Mary the mother of God, and thy bleſſed Apoſtles Peter, and Paul, and Andrew: with all Saints.

Here let the Deacon commit the patten to the Prieſt, kiſſing his hand: and let the Prieſt (h) kiſſe the patten. Afterward let him put it (i), to his left eie, and then to the right. After that let him make a croſſe with the patten (k) above upon his head, and ſo lay it downe again into his place, ſaying:

Give peace graciouſly in our dayes, that we being helped through the ſuccour of thy mercy, may both be alwaies free from ſin, and (l) ſafe from all trouble.

(m) Here let him uncover the chalice, and take the body doing reverence, ſhifting it over in the hollow roome of the chalice, holding it betweene his thumbs and fore-fingers: and let him break it into three parts: the firſt breaking, while there is ſaid:

Through the ſame our Lord Jeſus Chriſt thy Sonne,

The ſecond breaking;

Who with thee in the unity of the holy Ghoſt liveth and reigneth God,

Here let him hold two peeces in his left hand, & the third peece in the right hand upon the brink of the chalice, ſaying this with (n) open voice;

World without end.

Let the Queere anſwer, Amen. Here let him make three croſſes (o) within the chalice with the third part of the hoſt, ſaying:

The peace of the Lord (p) ✠ be alwaies ✠ with ✠ you,

Let the Queere anſwer:

And with thy ſpirit.

To ſay Agnus Dei, let the Deacon and Subdeacon approach neere unto the Prieſt, both being on the right hand, the Deacon neerer, the Subdeacon farther oft. And let them ſay (q) privately:

O Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the world, have mercy upon us: O Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the world, have mercy upon us: O Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſinnes of the world, grant us peace.

In Maſſes (r) for the dead it is ſaid thus:

O Lambe of God, that takeſt away the ſins of the world, give them (ſ) reſt,

With this addition in the third repitition, Everlaſting.

Here making a croſſe, let him put downe the ſaid third part of the hoſt into the Sacrament of the blood, ſaying;

This holy mingling together of the bodie and blood of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt (t) bee unto me, and to all that receive it, ſalvation of minde and body: an wholeſome preparation both to deſerve and to receive eternall life, through the ſame Chriſt our Lord.

Afore the Pare be given, let the Prieſt ſay, O Lord, holy Father, almighty eternall God: grant me ſo worthily to take this holy body and blood of thy Sonne our Lord Jeſu Chriſt, that (a) by this I may (b) merit to receive forgiveneſſe of all my ſinnes, and bee repleniſhed with thy holy ſpirit, and to have thy peace: for thou art God alone, (c) neither is there any other without thee, whoſe glorious Kingdome and Empire endureth continually world without end, Amen.

Here let the Prieſt (d) kiſſe the corporas on the right ſide, and the brinke of the chalice, and afterward let him ſay to the Deacon, Peace be unto thee, and to the Church of God.

Anſwer.

And with thy ſpirit.

On the right hand of the Prieſt let the Deacon receive the Pare of him, and reach it to the Subdeacon. Then to the ſteppe of the Queere let the Deacon himſelfe beare the Pare unto the Rectors of the Queere. And let them bring it to the Queere, either of them to his own ſide, beginning at the eldeſt. But in feaſts and feriall daies (e) when the Queere is not governed, the Pare is born from the Deacon unto the Queere by two of the loweſt of the ſecond fourme, like as afore.

After the Pare given, let the Prieſt ſay the prayers following, privately, before he communicate, holding the hoſte (f) with both his hands.

O God, Father, thou fountain and originall of all goodneſſe, who being moved with mercy, haſt willed thine only begotten Son for our ſake to deſcend into the lower parts of the whole world, and to be incarnate; whom I (g) unworthy hold in my hands.

Here let the Prieſt bowe (h) himſelfe to the hoſt, ſaying, I worſhip thee, I glorifie thee, I praiſe thee with whole intention of minde and heart: And I beſeech thee that thou (i) faile not us thy ſervants, but forgive our ſins, ſo as with pure heart and chaſte body we may be able to ſerve thee (k) the onely living and true God, through the ſame Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

O Lord Jeſu Chriſt, thou Son of the living God, who according to the will of the Father, the holy Ghoſt working withall, haſt quickned the world through thy death, Deliver me, I beſeech thee, through this thy holy body, and this thy blood, from all my iniquities, and from all evils. And make me alway obey thy commandements, and never ſuffer me to be ſeparated from thee for evermore, thou Saviour of the world, who with God the Father and the ſame holy Ghoſt, liveſt and reigneſt God world without end, Amen.

O Lord Jeſu Chriſt, let not the Sacrament of thy body and blood which I receive (though unworthy) be to my judgement and damnation; but through thy goodneſſe let it profit to the ſalvation of my body and ſoule, Amen.

To the body let him ſay with humiliation afore he receive, Haile for evermore, thou moſt holy (l) fleſh of Chriſt; unto me afore all things and above all things the higheſt ſweetneſſe. The body of our Lord Jeſu Chriſt be unto me ſinner the way and life, in the ✠ name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghoſt, Amen.

t Gods holy word teacheth that the offering of the body, and ſhedding of the moſt precious blood of Chriſt once upon the croſſe, is the ful perfect & only ſalvation of all mankind.

a Thus the death of the Lord is defaced.

b Oh ſinfull man, wilt thou merit that which is Chriſts only gift?

l That never was borne of our Lady.

(m) Benedicite a Gods name.

Here let him take the body, (m) a croſſe being firſt made with the ſame body afore his mouth, ſaying:

Haile for evermore, thou heavenly drinke; unto me before all things and above all things the higheſt ſweetneſſe. The body and blood of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt profit me ſinner for a remedy everlaſting into life eternall, Amen. In the ✠ name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghoſt, Amen.

Here let him take the blood, which when it is received, let him bow himſelfe, and ſay.

The Prayer.

I Render thanks to thee, O Lord, holy Father, almighty eternall God, which haſt refreſhed me out of the moſt holy body and blood of thy Sonne our Lord Ieſu Chriſt. And I beſeech thee, that this Sacrament of our ſalvation, which I unworthy ſinner have received, come not to my iudgment nor condemnation after my merits, but to the profit of my body, and to the ſalvation of my ſoule into life everlaſting, Amen.

Which prayer being ſaid (n) let the Prieſt go to the right ſide of the Altar, with the chalice betweene his hands, his fingers being yet ioyned together as afore, and let the Subdeacon approach neere, and powre out wine and water into the chalice. And let the Prieſt rinſe his hands (o) leſt any parcels of the body or blood be left behinde in his fingers or in the chalice (p.) But when any Prieſt muſt celebrate twice in one day, then at the firſt Maſſe he muſt not receive any ablution, but put it in the Sacriſty, or in a cleane veſſell, till the end of the other Maſſe; and then let both the ablutions be received.

(n) Here be ſuch tricks as S. Peter and Paul never wrote of.

(o) A dangerous matter I tell you.

(p) Magno conatu magnas nugas agunt.

After the firſt ablution, is ſaid this prayer:

That we have received with mouth, O Lord, let us take with a pure minde, and (q) out of a temporall gift let it be to us a remedy everlaſting.

(q) De munere temporali. Note well theſe words.

Here let him (r) waſh his fingers in the hollow roome of the chalice, with wine being powred in by the Subdeacon: which when it is drunk up, let the prayer follow:

(r) A token that he hath had ſome corrupt matter in hand.

Lord let this (a) communion purge us from ſin, and make us to be partakers of the heavenly remedy.

(a) What? dare ye call it a communion? doctor Weſton will be angry then.

After the receiving of the ablutions, let the Prieſt lay the chalice upon the patten, that if ought remaine behinde, it may drop. And afterward bowing himſelfe, let him ſay.

Let us (b) worſhip the ſigne of the croſſe, whereby we have received the Sacrament of ſalvation.

(b) What is it that theſe Idolaters will not worſhip? Very ſignes and tokens will not they ſtick at.

Afterward let him (c) waſh his hands. In the meane ſeaſon let the Deacon fold up the corporas. When his hands are waſhen, and the Prieſt returneth to the right end of the altar (d) let the Deacon reach the chalice to the prieſts mouth, that if ought of that which was powred in do remaine behinde, (e) he may receive it. After that, let him ſay (f) the communion with his miniſters. Then making a ſigne of the croſſe in his owne face, let the Prieſt turne himſelfe to the people; and (g) with his armes ſomewhat lifted up, and his hands ioyned together, let him ſay, Dominus vobiſcum; and, turning him againe to the altar, let him ſay: Oremus, let us pray.

Then let him ſay (h) the Poſtcommon, according to the number and order of the aforeſaid prayers. Before the Epiſtle, when the laſt Poſtcommon is ended, and the Prieſt hath made a ſigne of the croſſe in his forehead, let him turne him againe to the people, and ſay, Dominus vobiſcum. Then let the Deacon ſay, Benedicamus Domino. At another time is ſaid, Ite miſſa eſt. As oft as Ite miſſa eſt is ſaid, it is alwayes ſaid in turning to the people. And when Benedicamus Domino, or Requieſcant in pace muſt be ſaid, let it be ſaid in turning to the altar. When theſe things are ſpoken, let the Prieſt (with his body bowed downe, and his hands ioyned together) in the midſt before the altar ſay, (i) with a ſtill voice, this prayer.

(c) He had need I trow that hath dawbed ſuch a muddy wall.

(d) Is the prieſt then too proud to take it up himſelfe?

(e) For the poore Deacon is not worthy to receive it.

(f) By this is meant, theſe few words that are ſpoken next before the laſt collect.

(g) Oh what a vizour of holineſſe is here?

(h) That is, the laſt collect.

O holy Trinity, let the office of my (k) bondſervice pleaſe thee, and grant that this ſacrifice, which I unworthy have offered in the eys of thy maieſty, may be acceptable unto thee: and that unto me and all them for whom I have offered it (l) it may availe to obtaine remiſſion, thou being mercifull, who liveſt and reigneſt God, &c.

Which prayer being ended, let the Prieſt ſtand upright, (m) croſſing himſelfe in his face, ſaying, In nomine patris, &c. And ſo, when obeyſance is made, after the ſame order wherein they came afore to the altar at the beginning of the Maſſe, ſo having on their apparell with the cenſer-bearer, and other miniſters, let them (n) goe their way againe.

(i) And why not with a loud voice, if it be good? Becauſe it is not the Maſſe-mongers profeſſion to edifie the people.

(k) Bad ſervice is as fit a name for the Popiſh maſſe, as can be. For not onely cuſtome, but evill will alſo doth much, if maſter money help not.

(l) What? the maſſe, in the Divels name? for what intent then died Chriſt?

(m) That face hath much croſſing.

(n) Walk as ye came: ye have leave to be trudging.

The end of the Canon.

NOw it remaineth (as we have promiſed before) to intreat of the parts and parcels of the Maſſe, declaring likewiſe how and by whom this popiſh or rather apiſh Maſſe became ſo clampered and patched together with ſo many divers and ſundry additions: whereby it may the better appeare what hath been the continuance of the ſame.

Firſt, in the beginning of this Preface it was declared before, how this word Maſſe was never uſed nor knowne in the old Primitive Church among the firſt Chriſtians, nor among the Grecians. Therefore they that deduce and derive the origine of the Maſſe from Saint Iames and Baſilius, are farre deceived. As I thinke, that Saint Iames was once Biſhop at Ieruſalem, ſo I thinke not contrary, but ſometimes he miniſtred at the communion there in breaking of bread, and that not without the Lords prayer, and other prayers of thankſgiving: As we now in our Communion uſe like prayers, and theſe prayers make not the Communion to be a Maſſe. And the like is to be ſaid of S. Peter; who though he did celebrate the Communion at Rome, yet it followeth not that he ſaid Maſſe at Rome, as ſome report him to have done.

Neither is it hard to fetch out the origine, how this error firſt came up among the people, that Saint Iames ſaid Maſſe at Ieruſalem, if a man conſider well hiſtories and authors which have written. For in the hiſtory of Euſebius, Egeſippus thus writeth of Saint Iames, Eum ab Apoſtolis primum conſtitutum fuiſſe Epiſcopum & Liturgum, &c. Upon the which word Liturgus, it is not unlike, and divers ſuppoſe this error to come, that Saint Iames did firſt ſet and inſtitute the order of Maſſe. For ſo lightly the old Tranſlators, whereſoever they finde Liturgia, or Collecta, κοινωνία, they tranſlated it Miſſa; whereupon the greateſt occaſion of this error riſeth, to make the people beleeve the Maſſe to be ſo ancient as to proceed from the Apoſtles, and from Saint Iames. Notwithſtanding that error as it lightly came up, ſo it may be as lightly exploded. For how could Saint Iames ſay Maſſe then at Ieruſalem, or Saint Peter at Rome, when as yet neither the name of Maſſe was heard, nor the parts thereof invented? And although Sigibertus in his Chronicles report, that in the city of Vaſath, being delivered from the ſiege of the Huns, the Paſtor of that Church did celebrate maſſe with thankſgiving, about the yeere 453. yet Sigibert in ſo ſaying is to be taken, as ſpeaking rather after the uſe and manner of his time when hee wrote it, than of that time when it was done. For in all the works of S. Auguſtine, and of Chryſoſtome, and in all that age the name of Maſſe is not fonnd, but it is called either the Supper of the Lord, or the Lords Bord or Communion, Synaxis, ſacrifice, oblation, myſtery, celebration of the Sacrament, Euchariſtia, the myſticall Table, Miſtagogia, Cœna myſtica; or with ſome other like term they nominate it. The name of the Maſſe was not yet deviſed, nor the patches thereof compiled. Platina teſtifieth, that before Celeſtinus pope, only the Epiſtle and Goſpel were read at the Communion, which being done, the Communion ended. And Gregorie ſaith, that the Apoſtles afore the miniſtration or the ſacrament did uſe only the Lords prayer, that is, the Pater noſter. Let us heare what Walafridus Strabo writeth of that matter, lib, de rebus Eccleſiaſtic. cap. 22. Quod nunc agimus multiplici orationum, lectionum, cantilenarum, & conſecrationum officio, totum hoc Apoſtoli, & poſt ipſos proximi, (ut creditur) orationibus, & commemoratione paſſionis dominicæ, ſicut ipſe præcepit, agebant ſimpliciter. &c. i. That which now is done in the Church with ſuch a long circumſtance of ſo many oriſons, leſſons or readings, ſongs, and conſecrations; all that the Apoſtles, and they that next ſucceeded the Apoſtles (as it is thought) did accompliſh ſimply with prayer only, and with the commemoration of the Lords paſſion, &c. It followeth in the ſame author; And, as the report is, like as it is in the Romane Church upon good Friday, where the communion is wont to be taken without any Maſſe: ſo it was in the old time with them, &c.

Platina.

Greg. in Regiſt. lib. 7. cap. 63.

Now how this Maſſe hath grown up and increaſed ſince, let us ſearch out, by the Lords help, out of authors, ſo much as may be found.

The Introite.

Celeſtinus pope gave the firſt Introite, as Platina and Sigibertus write.

Platina. Sigibertus in vita Sergii.

The Pſalme. Iudica me Deus. &c.

And before the prieſt doe prepare himſelfe to his Maſſe, firſt with the Pſalme, Iudica me Deus, & diſcerne cauſam meam, &c. that was ordained by the ſaid Celeſtinus.

And where they aſcribe to Saint Ambroſe the two prayers which he uſed in the preparation to the Maſſe, and be added to the bookes of Ambroſe, Eraſmus iudgeth the ſame to be none of his, and that rightly as it ſeemeth: for therin are contained errors, not elſe to be found in the bookes of Ambroſe, both in giving adoration to the bread of the ſacrament, and making invocation to Saints, namely, to bleſſed Mary; as in the ſecond prayer, where he ſaith, Vt efficax hæc mea ſit deprecatio, beatæ Mariæ virginis ſuffragia peto, &c. i. And that this my prayer may be of efficacie, I deſire the ſuffrage and interceſſion of bleſſed Marie the Virgin, &c. Wherby it may appeare learned Ambroſe not to be the author of ſuch an error.

Sigibertus.

Chryſoſtome in the xi. Homily upon the Goſpell of Matthew, ſaith, that in his time (and afore his time) the uſe was to ſing whole Pſalmes, till they were entred and aſſembled together. And ſo belike Celeſtinus borrowed this cuſtome of the Greeks, and brought it into the Latine Church, as Rupertus writeth.

Chryſo. hom. 11. in Mat.

Gregorie the great (as ſome write) called a Synode at Rome, about the yeare of our Lord, 594. In which Synode he appointed that the Introite of the Maſſe ſhould bee taken out of ſome Pſalme.

Rupertus Tuitienſis l. 2. de divin. offic. cap. 21 Chro Chro. Faſci. temp.

The Confiteor.

The Confiteor pope Damaſus brought into the Maſſe, as it is written: albeit peradventure not this popiſh Confiteor, which in the later Church hath beene uſed, ſtuft full of idolatry and invocation of Saints, againſt the word of God.

Confiteor brought in by pope Damaſus

The Kyrie eleyſon.

The Kyrie eleyſon ix. times to bee repeated in ſuch a tongue, as few prieſts either underſtand, or doe rightly pronounce, Gregory did inſtitute, about 600. yeares after Chriſt, taking it out of the Greeks Church, and yet tranſpoſing it otherwiſe than there it was uſed. For among the Greekes this Kyrie eleyſon, which they called their Letanie, was ſung of all the people: The which Gregory ordained to be ſung only of the Quire, adding thereto alſo Chriſte eleyſon, which the Grecians uſed not, as Gregory himſelfe, writing to the biſhop of Syracuſe, doth teſtifie.

Greg. Ioanni. Epiſc. Syracuſ. lib. 7. epiſt. 63.

Walfridus c. 22.

Gloria in excelſis.

Next followeth Gloria in excelſis, &c. Which words were ſung of the Angels at the birth of our Saviour. Albeit theſe words alſo were corrupted, as many other things were in the Church. For where the words of the Angels Hymne were Hominibus bona voluntas, i. To men good will; the Maſſe ſaid, Hominibus bonæ voluntatis, i. To men of good will, &c. This Hymne was brought into the Maſſe by Pope Symmachus (and not by Teleſphorus, as ſome not truly write that hee ordained three Maſſes on Chriſtmas day; for in his time there was no Maſſe, Anno 140.) about the yeere of our Lord, 510. And after, the ſaid Hymne was augmented by Hylarius Pictavienſis, with thoſe words that follow; Laudamus te, &c. ſinging it firſt in his owne Church, which was, Anno 340. And afterward it was brought into other Churches by pope Symmachus, Anno 510. as is aforeſaid.

Hugo de S. Victor.

Dominus vobiſcum, with the anſwer Oremus, and the Collects.

Dominus vobiſcum, with the anſwer of the people, although wee have no certaine Author named by whom it came; yet this is certaine, that it was deduced out of the Greeke Church into the Latine: as may appeare by the liturgy of Chryſoſtome and Baſilius (if the Liturgy be rightly aſcribed unto them) alſo by Origen, and other ancient Writers; by whom, it may ſeeme that the Liturgie or Maſſe (as they call it) did firſt begin with Dominus vobiſcum, and then Surſum corda; after that Gratias agamus Domino Deo noſtro, and ſo following upon the ſame, Verè dignum & juſtum eſt, &c. To the which beginning of the Canon other additions after were put by others, as ye ſhall heare, by the Lords grace, hereafter more at large.

Ex Bea. Rhen. Tertul. de coro. milit.

Hugo de S. Victore writeth that this prayer was taken out of the ancient ſalutation of Booz ſaluting his harveſt folkes. And out of the booke of Paralip. Where the Prophet ſaluteth Azan the King with his company about him, ſaying, Dominus vobiſcum. Honorius writeth thus,

Hugo de S. Victore.

Honorius

Presbyter cum ſalutatione veteris Teſtamenti, & Epiſcopus cum ſalutatione novi Teſtamenti ſalutat populum, quia dignius eſt novum quàm vetus Teſtamentum, i. As the Prieſt ſaluteth the people with the words of the old Teſtament, Dominus vobiſcum; ſo the Biſhop uſeth the words of the new Teſtament, ſaying: Pax vobiſcum, &c.

Walafrid. Strabo.

Hugo de S. Victore.

Concerning the Collects Walafridus writeth, that as they bee divers and uncertain, ſo they were made of divers and ſundry Authors, as every of them thought it congrue. Hugo de S. victore affirmes that chiefly they were made by Gelaſius and Gregorius.

Guliel. Durand. in rationali. Microlog. de Eccleſiaſtic. obſerv.

Why they were called Collects, W. Durandus and Micrologus ſhew the cauſe, for that in the citie of Rome they ſaid them over the people collected together in the ſtation day, therefore they were called Collectæ.

The Gradual, with Alleluya, Tracte, and Sequencies.

Honorius lib. 2. cap. 88.

The Reſponſorie, which is called the Gradual (being wont to be ſung at the ſteps going up) with Alleluya, Honorius ſaith that Ambroſe made them, but Pope Gregorie ordained them to be received.

Abbas Nokkerus, autor ſequentiarum.

Upon feſtivall dayes the Sequencies, which were wont to be ſung, were chiefly compoſed by an Abbot called Nokkerus de S. Gallo, and by Pope Nicholas commanded to bee ſung in the Maſſe.

The Graduall the people were wont to ſing when the Biſhop was about to goe up to the pulpit, or ſome higher ſtanding, where the word of God might bee the better and more ſenſibly heard at his mouth, reading the Epiſtle and the Goſpell.

The Epiſtle and the Goſpel.

Hugo de S. Victore.

The reading of the Epiſtle and the Goſpell, although it was not uſed in the Apoſtles times, yet it ſeemeth to be of ancient continuance, as Hugo ſaith: Primis temporibus ab epiſtola Pauli miſſa incipiebatur, poſt quam ſequebatur Evangelium, ſicut nunc, i. In former time the Maſſe begun firſt with the Epiſtle of S. Paul, after which Epiſtle then followed the Goſpell, as alſo now, &c.

Walafrid. Strabo.

Walafridus ſaith, it is uncertaine who firſt ordered and diſpoſed them ſo to be.

Some attribute them to Hierome, ſome to Damaſus, ſome to Teleſphorus aforeſaid. This is certaine, that Pope Anaſtaſius ordained to ſtand up at the hearing of the Goſpel read; about the yéere of our Saviour, 406.

Pet. Cirvelus Docracenſis in expoſitione. lib. Miſſal. in epiſt. nuncupatoria.

Petrus Cirvelus writeth thus, Legimus & circa annos Chriſtianæ ſalutis 500. fere, jam inſtitutas Epiſtolas in officio miſſali, &c. About 500. yéeres ſince almoſt the Epiſtle, ſaith he, was firſt brought into the Maſſe.

Hono. in ſumma li. 1. ca. 88.

Honorius lib. 1. Epiſtolam & Evangelium Alexander Papa legi ad miſſam conſtituit. Hieronimus autem Presbyter lexionarium & evangeliarium, ut hodie habet Eccleſia, collegit; ſed Damaſus Papa, ut nunc moris eſt, legi cenſuit. Alexander, ſaith he, appointed the Epiſtle and Goſpell to be read at Maſſe. The tranſlation and the diſpoſition of them, in that order as they ſtand. Hierome the Prieſt collected; but Damaſus appointed them to be read in the Church, ſo as the uſe is now.

Hono. ibid.

Betwixt the Epiſtle and the Goſpel the old Canons of the Spaniards did forbid any Hymne or Canticle to be ſung in the order of the Maſſe, which now by the Romiſh order is broken.

The Creed.

Ex Honor.

The Créed was made by the Synod of Conſtantinople, but, by Damaſus the Pope ordained to be ſung at the Maſſe. And where ſome affirme, that it was brought in by Pope Marcus, about the yéere of our Lord 340. To reconcile theſe two together, peradventure thus it may be taken, that the one brought in the Créed, or Symbole of the Nicene Councell, the other appointed the Créed of Conſtantinople, as is ſaid.

Ex actis pontif. Rom.

The Offertory.

Ex Rabano lib. 1 cap. 3.

After this, oblations were wont to be offered of the people to the Prieſt; and the Offertorie to be ſung of the Quire.

De inſtit. cleric. Irenæus lib. 4. cap. 18.

Of theſe oblations ſpeaketh Irenæus. Pro diverſis ſacrificiorum ritibus, ſimplex oblatio panis & vini fidelibus ſufficiat, &c. In ſtead of the ſundry rites of ſacrifices, let the ſimple oblation of bread and wine ſuffice the faithfull.

Walafrid. in expoſit. ordinis Rom.

Item, Walafrid. Omnis populus intrans Eccleſiam debet ſacrificare, ſicut docet ordo inſtitutionis Eccleſiaſticæ, i. Every perſon entring in the Church muſt do ſacrifice, as the order of Eccleſiaſticall inſtitution doth teach: what order this was it is declared in ordine Romano by theſe words; Populus dat oblationes ſuas, id eſt, panem & vinum, primò maſculi, deinde fœminæ, noviſſime vero Sacerdotes & Diaconi offerunt, ſed ſolum panem, & hoc ante altare, i. The people give every one his oblations, that is, bread and wine, firſt the men, then the women, after them Prieſts and Deacons offer, but bread onely, &c.

Burchardus li. 5. cap. 31. Ex concil. Matiſcon. cap. 50.

Likewiſe Burcardus teſtifieth the ſame, In Synodo Matiſcon. decretum eſt, ut in omnibus dominicis diebus, aliiſque feſtivitatibus, oblatio ab omnibus qui ad Miſſam convenerint utriuſque ſexus offeratur in Eccleſia, ſingulas oblationes offerentes, finita Miſſa oblationes à Presbytero accipiant. i. In the Synod Matiſcon it was ordained, that every ſunday and feſtivall day oblation was made of all the people which came to the Maſſe, or Liturgie, both men and women, in the Church, every perſon bringing and offering his own oblation; the Liturgie being done, they receive the oblations of the Prieſt, &c.

Thus ye may ſée what were their oblations and ſacrifice in the ancient time, in their Liturgie. Whereof now remaineth nothing but the name onely with the ſong.

This Offertory ſome aſcribe to Eutichianus about the yéere of our Lord 280. but thereof no certaine evidence appeareth.

Orate pro me fratres, &c.

Nauclerus lib. generat. 5. Ex vetuſto quodam libro de officio miſſæ.

Nauclerus writeth, that Pope Leo brought in that which is ſaid in the Maſſe, Orate pro me fratres & ſorores, &c.

The preface of the Canon.

Cyprianus de oratione Dominica. Auguſt. Tho. Waldenſi. B. Rhenanus in Tertul. de corona militis.

The preface of the Canon from verè dignum & juſtum eſt, &c. to per Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum is given to Gelaſius: Surſum corda ſéemeth to be borrowed out of the old manner of the Gréek Church; S. Cyprian alſo maketh mention of the ſame, and S. Auſtin de vera religione cap. 3.

And therefore Thomas Waldenſis judgeth that this part of the preface cannot be attributed to Gelaſius.

After Chriſtum Dominum noſtrum, in the old Liturgie, then followed Qui pridie quam pateretur as Rhenanus ſuppoſeth, but then came Pope Gelaſius the firſt, about the yeere of our Lord, 497. which inſerted that which followeth, Te igitur clementiſſimè, &c.

Polyd. Virgil contraried.

Wherby it is to be noted, that Polydorus Virgilius (which aſcribeth Qui pridie to Pope Alexander) De invent, lib. 5. cap. 10. is deceived.

The like is alſo to be ſaid of Panormitanus, who referreth the ſame clauſe Qui pridie, &c. to the Apoſtles, lib. de celebratione miſſæ cap. cum Martha.

Panormitan deceived.

Furthermore note, good Reader, how this doth agree with the long Canon of Saint Ambroſe lib. 4. de Sacramentis cap. 5. Dicit Sacerdos; fac nobis hanc oblationem adſcriptam, rationalem, acceptabilem, quod eſt figura corporis & ſanguinis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti. Qui pridie quam pateretur in ſanctis manibus ſuis accepit panem, reſpexit ad cœlum ad te ſancte Pater omnipotens, & æterne Deus, gratias agens benedixit, fregit, &c. if it be true that either Panormitanus ſaith, or that Gelaſius made Qui pridie, &c. how can this Canon then be fathered upon S. Ambroſe? And by the ſame reaſon alſo his whole booke intituled de Sacramentis may be ſuſpected, as of divers learned men it is.

Rupert. ex pont. Damaſ. liturgia Baſilii.

Then came Pope Sixtus ten yeers after him, which brought into the Canon Sanctus, ſanctus, thrice to be ſung out of the booke of Eſay. And to annexe it together, ioyned alſo that which goeth before, Per quem majeſtatem tuam, &c.

He that writeth the Liturgie of Baſilius, aſcribeth it to his name: whether he doth it truly or no, I will not here contend. This is to be noted, that ſeeing in the ſaid Liturgie of Baſilius the ſame particle, Sanctus, ſanctus, ſanctus Dominus Deus Sabaoth: pleni ſunt cœli & terra gloria tua, oſanna in excelſis, is ſung; therefore it muſt needs follow, that either Leo which was about the yeere of our Lord, 460. borrowed this out of Baſilius Liturgie, or els the ſame is falſly attributed to Baſilius.

After this followeth Sanctum ſacrificium, immaculatam hoſtiam, till ye come to placatus accipias, which Leo the firſt did make and inſtitute.

Humbertus epiſc. contra libellum Nicetæ Monachi.

The words in the communion, Hoc quotieſcunque feceritis, in mei memoriam facietis, &c. were put in by Pope Alexander, i. as Humbertus writeth: Alexander Martyr & Papa 5. ab apoſt. Petro paſſionem Domini inſerens canoni miſſæ, ait, Hoc quotieſcunque feceritis, &c.

Ex actis Rom. Pontif.

Pope Gregory the third about the yeers of our Lord, 732. put to his piece, Et eorum quorum memoria, &c.

This Gregory the third called a Councell at Rome, wherein he decreed that Images ſhould not only be had in temples, but alſo worſhipped, and that all gaineſayers ſhould be counted as heretikes.

Innocent. 3.

Innocentius the third of that name affirmeth Pope Gelaſius, which was about 490. yeeres after Chriſt, to have made a great piece of that Canon, as he himſelfe did ſomething therein, about the yeere of our Lord, 1215.

Panor. de celebratione miſſæ.

Panormitanus affirmeth that Gregory did add to the Canon this clauſe, Dieſque noſtros in pace diſponas.

Briefly, Gregorius in regiſtro ſaith, that one Scholaſticus made the moſt part of the Canon, finding alſo fault with the ſame, that in compoſing the Canon he would put in his own prayers and leave out the Lords prayer, &c.

☞ Authors reconciled.

Where is to be noted, for the reconciling of theſe Writers together, of whom ſome impute the Canon to Gelaſius, ſome againe to Scholaſticus: In my coniecture it may be ſaid, that both theſe be one, and ſo the matter is reconciled. The reaſon that moveth me is this, for ſo I find In vetuſto quodam libro de officio miſſæ, after theſe words, Gelaſius Papa ex Scholaſtico effectus in ordine 48. fecit tractatus & hymnos, &c.

Ex vetuſto libro de officio miſſæ. Gelaſius & Scholaſticus both one.

The elevation and adoration.

The elevation and adoration of the Sacrament we cannot finde to come in by any other than by Honorius the third, about the yeere of our Lord 1222. which ordained that the people then ſhould kneele downe and worſhip the Sacrament.

Ex actis Rom. pont.

The Pater noſter.

Ioan. Diaconus in vita Gregorii.

Joannes Diaconus writing of Gregory ſaith; Orationem Dominicam mox poſt Canonem ſuper hoſtiam cenſuit recitari, i. that Gregory cauſed the Lords Prayer to be recited immediately after the Canon upon the hoſt, &c.

Although the Apoſtles ever uſed the Lords Prayer at the Supper of the Lord, as is ſaid before; yet Gregory belike placed it ſo in that order after the Canon, and brought it in with thoſe words, Præceptis ſalutaribus, &c.

Greg. lib. 9. Reg. ad Ioan. Syra.

Gregorius in Reg. Dominica Oratio apud Græcos ab omni populo; apud nos vero à ſolo Sacerdote cantatur, i. The Lords Prayer, ſaith he, amongſt the Grecians was wont to be ſung generally of all the people; with us it is ſung only of the Prieſt.

Agnus.

Expoſit. Rom. ordinis.

The Agnus, Pope Sergius about the yeere of our Lord 700. brought into the Maſſe, as witneſſeth Expoſit. R. ord. propter officium confractionis Dominici corporis, conſtitutum eſt à Papa Sergio ut Agnus Dei decantetur, &c.

The Pax.

Ex decretis Innocentii P. P. cap. 1.

Innocentius ordained the Pax to be given to the people. Pacis, ait, oſculum dandum poſt confecta myſteria, ut conſtet populum ad omnia quæ in myſteriis aguntur, præbuiſſe conſenſum, &c.

Peter Martyr in his Commentaries in Iud. ſaith, that it was brought in by Pope Leo the ſecond, as it is ſaid: and yet he ſuppoſeth the ſame not to be ſo, ſaying, that this was an ancient cuſtome in the Apoſtles time for Chriſtians to ſalute one another with the kiſſe of peace, &c.

Gabriel Biel in can. lect. 8.

To this of Peter Martyr agreeth alſo Gabriel Biel, writing in theſe words; Porrexit in primitiva Eccleſia Sacerdos oſculum pacis Miniſtro, cæteris impartiendum, ut per hoc ſignificaret, &c. i. In the primitive Church the Prieſt gave a kiſſe of peace to the Miniſter, to be given by him to the people.

The diſtribution and communion.

After this followeth the communion, wherein our Popiſh Maſſe and Miniſters thereof doe much alter and degenerate from ancient antiquity, two manner of wayes.

Anaclet. epiſt. 1. De conſecrat. diſt. 2. ca. peracti.

Firſt, in that they make no communion thereof, receiving only to themſelves, contrary both to their owne words, where they ſay after their receiving, Sacramenta quæ ſumpſimus, &c. and alſo to the ancient examples and decrees of the Apoſtles and others. And where it is decreed in the Epiſtle of Anacletus; Peracta autem conſecratione omnes communicent, qui noluerint Eccleſiaſticis carere liminibus. Sic enim & Apoſtoli ſtatuerunt, & S. Romana tenet Eccleſia, &c. i. The conſecration being done, let all communicate together; unleſſe they will be thruſt out of the Church doores, &c.

Cochleus contra Muſculum de officio miſſæ.
Gratianus & Cochleus taken in an untruth.

Here note by the way gentle Reader, how Gratianus the writer of the Popes decrées is overſéene, which in his booke De conſecrat. diſt. 2. referreth this ſaying of Anacletus to Pope Calixtus. And likewiſe alſo Cochleus, writing againſt Muſculus, followeth Gratianus in the ſame error.

Cano. apo. cap. 9
Cano. apo. cap. 8

Likewiſe in the Canons of the Apoſtles (if the Canons were theirs) we read πάντας τοὺς εἰσιόντας πιστοὺς, μὴ παραμένοντας δὲ τῇ προσευχῇ καὶ ἁγίᾳ μεταλήψει, &c. i. All the faithfull, which reſort to the Church, and tarrie not out the end of the ſervice, and receive not the holy communion, be ſuch as bringing in diſorder to the Church, ought to be diſſevered, &c. And againe, Si quis Epiſcopus, Presbyter, aut Diaconus, aut quicunque ex ſacerdotali conſortio, oblatione facta, non communicaverint, cauſam dicito, &c.

Micrologus de eccleſiaſtic. ſer.

For how can that be called a communion, which is not common but private to one? As Micrologus writeth, Nec enim propriè communio dici poteſt, niſi plures de eodem ſacrificio participent, &c. It cannot be called a communion, except moe than one do participate of one ſacrifice, &c.

Guliel. Durand. in ration. lib. 4. cap. 53.

And Durandus, In primitiva eccleſia omnes qui celebrationi miſſarum intererant ſingulis diebus communicare ſolebant, eo quod Apoſtoli omnes de calice biberunt, &c. i. In the primitive time all that were preſent at the miniſtration were wont every day to communicate, becauſe that the Apoſtles did altogether drinke of the cup, &c.

Gelaſ. Ioan. & Majorico epiſc. De conſecrat. diſt. [illegible] cap. Comperimus.

Secondly, they alter and degenerate therein from ancient antiquity, in that when they communicate alſo with the people, yet they deprive them of the holy cup: which deprivation was not in the Church before the Councell of Conſtance, about the yéere of our Lord, 1414. For before it was ſo authentikely received, that it was counted a ſacriledge to receive the one without the other, as appeareth by the words of Pope Gelaſius; Comperimus quod quidam ſumpta tantummodo corporis ſacri portione, &c. The whole in Engliſh is this; we underſtand that there be ſome, which receiving the one part onely of the holy body abſtaine from the cup of the ſacred blood: who becauſe they be taught ſo to doe (by what ſuperſtition I cannot tell) either let them receive the ſacrament whole together, or let them abſtaine from the whole ſacrament altogether, becauſe the diviſion of that one and whole ſacrament cannot be without great ſacriledge, &c.

Aug. ſermone feriæ, 2. paſch.

Hitherto alſo pertaineth the teſtimonie of Saint Auſten in theſe words; Et ibi vos eſtis in menſa, & in calice nobiſcum vos eſtis. Simul enim hoc ſumimus, ſimul bibimus, quia ſimul vivimus, &c. i. There be you at the table, and at the cup there alſo be you with us: for together we receive, and together we drinke, becauſe we live together.

Ex libro ſacramentorum Gregorii.

As alſo out of the booke of Gregory it is manifeſt, that not onely the people received them in both kinds; but alſo the words were preſcribed to the miniſter, that he ſhould ſay in giving the cup; Item Sacerdos calicem dando dicat; Sanguis Domini noſtri Ieſu Chriſti cuſtodiat te ad vitam æternam, i. Let the Prieſt ſay in giving the cup; The blood of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt keep thée to everlaſting life, Amen.

Thomas 3. part. quæſt. 76, art. 25

Further, in rendring the cauſe why it ſhould ſo be done, Thomas Aquine writeth, Nam hoc valet ad repræſentandam paſſionem Chriſti, in qua ſeorſum fuit ſanguis à corpore ſeparatus, &c. Secundò, hoc eſt conveniens uſui hujus ſacramenti, ut ſeorſim exhibeatur corpus Chriſti fidelibus in cibum, & ſanguis in potem, i. For that ſerveth to repreſent the paſſion of Chriſt, wherein his blood was parted ſeverally from the body, &c. Secondly, for that it is convenient to the uſe of the ſacrament, that the body ſhould ſeverally be given to the faithfull for meat, and the blood for drink.

Amb. lib. de omnibus divin. officiis.

And therfore ſerved the office of the Deacons as we read, ut oblata à populo ſuper altare conſecranda diſponant, & perfectis myſteriis calicem ſacroſaucti ſanguinis Domini fidelibus propinent, i. To lay the offerings of the people upon the altar to be hallowed, and when the myſteries be conſecrated, to diſtribute the cup of the ſacred blood of the Lord to the faithfull, &c.

Hieron. in epiſt. 1 Cor. cap. 11. Convenientib.

But among all other teſtimonies to prove that the ſacrament ought to be common to all people in both kindes, there is none more evident than that of Hierome. Cæterum Dominica cœna omnibus debet eſſe communis, quia ille omnibus Diſcipulis ſuis qui aderant æqualiter tradidit ſacramenta, i. The ſupper of the Lord ought to be indifferently common to all his Diſciples there preſent, &c.

Innocent. 3. de ſacro altaris myſterio lib. 3. ca. 1.

And thus have ye heard the Canon deſcribed, which otherwiſe is called ſecretum, i. the ſecret of the Maſſe, being ſo termed, becauſe the Prieſt was wont to read it in ſecret or in ſilence. The reaſon thereof Pope Innocentius the 3. declareth in his third booke, for that the holy words, ſaith he, of the Canon ſhould not grow in contempt with the people by the daily uſe and hearing thereof. And he bringeth in an example concerning the ſame of certaine ſhepheards, which in the fields uſing the ſame words of the Canon upon their bread and wine, the matter was turned, ſaith he, into fleſh and blood, and they plagued therefore from heaven; but with ſuch popiſh tales the Church hath béen long repleniſhed.

The Poſtcommon.

Old Collects.

After the Canon and Communion then followeth the Poſtcommon, with the Collects, which the Maſſe booke requireth alwayes to be uſed in an odde number, ſometime teaching to uſe but one, as in the ſundayes in Lent; and ſometime thrée, as in certain Maſſes from Low-ſunday till the Aſcenſion; but never to paſſe the number of ſeven.

Ite miſſa eſt.

Ex vetuſto lib. de divin. officiis.

Laſt of all commeth Ite miſſa eſt, whereby the Miniſter dimitteth and ſendeth away all the congregation there preſent to their buſineſſe: for, as you heard before, it was decréed in ancient time, that it was not lawfull to depart from the congregation in the time of holy miniſtration, before the end of the whole communion. And therefore all things being accompliſhed, the Miniſter turning to the aſſembly pronounceth, Ite miſſa eſt.

Where note that upon ſundayes and feſtivall dayes onely, when Gloria in excelſis was ſung, Ite miſſa eſt was wont to be ſaid: on the worke dayes Benedicamus Domino, ſometime Requieſcant in pace.

Albes and Corporaſſes.

Now concerning ſuch trinkets as were to the foreſaid Maſſe appertaining or circumſtant: Firſt, the linnen Albes and Corporaſſes were brought in by Pope Marcus Anno 340. if that be true which is thought of ſome: where note againe, that in the time of this Pope it was nothing offenſive for every honeſt Prieſt to have his owne proper wife. In the time alſo of this Marcus was Concilium Eliburtinum, which condemned all kindes of Images and Pictures in Temples.

Contrary to the which Councell Pope Gregory the third, about the yeere of our Lord, 732. calling a Councell at Rome, did not onely ſtabliſh the Images before condemned, but condemned the gainſayers for heretikes, as is aforeſaid.

Hallowing of altars.

By Sixtus the third it was ordained, that no Liturgie ſhould be done ſave onely upon altars hallowed, about the yeere of our Lord, 260. as ſome ſuppoſe. But as I ſee no firme probation upon the ſame; ſo have I probable coniecture the ſame not to be true.

Veſtments and Albes.

Some there be that ſhame not to ſay, that S. Clement brought in the Albe and veſtments to the Popiſh Maſſe.

Chalices of glaſſe.

Item, that the Sacrament of the blood of the Lord ſhould be conſecrate in chalices of glaſſe, and not of wood, as it was in time before, they ſay it was the ordinance of Pope Severinus.

Chalices of gold.

After this came in golden chalices, and a true Proverbe withall, That once they had wooden Chalices and golden Prieſts, now they have golden Chalices and wooden Prieſts.

Bels.
Lamps.
Organs.

Sevenianus ordained the ringing of bels and burning of lamps in Churches.

Vitalianus the playing on the Organs.

Gloria Patri.

Damaſus, by the inſtinct of Hierome, appointed Gloria Patri after the Pſalmes.

Memento for the dead.
Incenſe.
The offering.

Pelagius deviſed the Memento for the dead.

Leo brought in the Incenſe.

Eutichianus, as other ſay, brought in the Offertorie, which was then after a manner farre otherwiſe than it is, or hath beene uſed now a great while. For what time as many of the Heathen being greatly accuſtomed with offerings, were converted unto Chriſt, and could not be well brought from their old long uſe of offerings, the Pope thought to beare ſomewhat with the weake, and permitted them to bring meates into the Congregration or Church, that when the Biſhop had bleſſed them, they that brought them might diſtribute them to the poore or take them to their owne uſe. But afterward did Pope Gregory ſo helpe with this ſentence, Non apparebis in conſpectu Dei tui vacuus, &c. Thou ſhalt not appeare in the ſight of thy God empty, &c. that as he willed the people to lay their offerings upon the altar; ſo they did, and have not yet forgotten to do ſo ſtill.

Soule maſſes.

Soule Maſſes, and Maſſes applied for the dead, came in partly by Gregory, partly by Pelagius, which brought in the Memento, as is ſaid.

Application of maſſes for the dead.

Wherein note (good Reader) and marke how theſe two ſtand together, that which our Saviour ſaith in his Evangeliſt, Hoc facite in mei commemorationem, Doe this in remembrance of me; and that which they ſay, In quorum memoria corpus Chriſti ſumitur, &c. i. In whoſe commemoration the body of Chriſt is taken, &c. Chriſt would it to be done in his remembrance; and the Pope ſaith, do it in remembrance of the dead, &c. What can be more contrary?

Reſervation of the ſacrament.
Auricular confeſſion.
A policie for unity of popery.

Innocentius the third ordained that the ſacrament ſhould be reſerved in the Church. The ſame brought alſo in auricular confeſſion as a law: about the yeere of our Lord, 1215. he did alſo conſtitute that no Archbiſhop ſhould enioy the pall, unleſſe he were of his own religion; and therefore no great marvell if there be ſuch unity in Popery.

Vigilius ordained that the Prieſt ſhould ſay Maſſe having his face toward the Eaſt.

The firſt Latin maſſe ſung at Conſtantinople.
A coniecture probable that the Romane maſſe is of no great antiquity

Platina writeth how the firſt Latine Maſſe was ſung in the ſixth Councell of Canſtantinople, which was about the yeere of our Lord, 680. ſo that the ſaid Maſſe was there and then firſt allowed and not before. And yet they (I meane the Greeke Church) ſhould have knowne as ſoone the Maſſe, if it had proceeded from James or Baſilius, as the Latine Church did know it.

The feaſt of all ſoules.

The feaſt of Alhallowes.

The opinion to think the Maſſe to help ſoules in Purgatory, was confirmed by Pope Joannes the 19. by reaſon of a dreame, wherein he dreamed that he heard and ſaw the voices of divels lamenting and bewailing, that ſoules were delivered from them by the ſaying of Maſſes and Diriges. And therefore hee did approve and ratifie the feaſt of all Soules, brought in by Odilo; Moreover he adioyned alſo to the ſame the feaſt of Alhallowes, about the yeere of our Lord, 1003.

Lent faſt.

Three Maſſes on Chriſtmas day.

Concerning Lent faſt, ſome think that Teleſphorus, about the yeere of our Lord, 140. was the Author thereof. But that peradventure may be as true, as that which they alſo attribute to him, that he ordained three Maſſes of one Prieſt to be ſaid on Chriſtmas day. Or if he did ordaine that faſt, yet he did ordaine it but freely to be kept: for ſo I finde among the decrees, that Lent was commanded firſt to be faſted but onely of the Clergy or Church-men.

Cenſing of the Sacrament.
Covering of the Altars.

Pope Leo commanded the ſacrament to be cenſed.

Pope Boniface ſet in his foot for covering of the altars.

Cyprian. lib. 2. epiſt. 3.
Ex libro ordinis Rom. officii.

In S. Cyprians time it ſeemeth that water was then mingled with the wine, whereof we read mention in his ſecond booke of Epiſtles: which mixture is referred to Alexander the firſt in the order of the Romane Canon.

The breaking of the hoſt in three parts.
Ex Rom. ordine de officio Miſſæ.

As concerning the breaking of the body in three parts, we read alſo mention to be made in the ſame booke of order, but no certaine Author thereof to be named. The words of the booke be theſe; Tripliciter, inquit, corpus Domini intelligitur. Vnum quod reſurrexit à mortuis, quod ſignificat particula in ſanguinem miſſa; Aliud quod adhuc vivit in terra ſignificatum per particulam à Sacerdote conſumptam; Tertium, quod jam requieſcit in Chriſto, quod etiam à tertia particula in altari reſervata aptè figuratur, &c. i. Three wayes is the body of the Lord underſtanded; One which roſe againe from the dead, being ſignified by that part which is let fall to the blood in the chalice; The other is that which yet is living in the earth, which the part of the Prieſt eaten doth ſignifie; The third is that now reſteth in Chriſt, which alſo is figured by that particle that is reſerved upon the altar.

Dedication of Churches.

Dedication of Churches came in by Felix the third; and that Churches might not be hallowed but by a Biſhop, Anno 492.

The Canticle, Gloria, laus, &c. in the proceſſion before the Maſſe on Palmſunday, was inſtituted by Theodulphus Biſhop of Aurelia as Sigebertus writeth, about the yeere of our Lord, 483.

Honor in gemma. lib. 1. ca. 66.
Guliel. Durand. in Ration. lib. 4. caa. 53.

Giving of holy bread came in by this occaſion, as it is to be gathered, partly out of Honorius, partly out of Durandus, and others. The manner was in ancient time, that the Miniſters were wont to receive certaine meale of every houſe or family, wherewith a great loafe was made, called Panis Dominicus, able to ſerve in the Communion, and to be diſtributed unto the people, which then was wont every day to be preſent and to receive, eſpecially they that offered the meale: for whom it was wont therefore to be ſaid in the Canon, Omnium circumſtantium, qui tibi hoc ſacrificium laudis offerunt, &c. But afterward the number of the people increaſing, and piety decreaſing, as Durandus writeth, it was then ordained to communicate but onely upon ſundayes.

At length followed the third conſtitution, that thrice a yeere, at leaſt at Eaſter, every man ſhould communicate, it being thus provided, that inſtead of the daily Communion before uſed the Paxe did ſerve. And in ſtead of receiving upon the Sunday, bread was hallowed and ſundaily given and diſtributed unto the people, which alſo was called Eulogia; the conſtitution whereof ſeemeth to proceed from Pope Pius. For ſo we read in the decrees of the ſaid Pope Pius, Vt de oblationibus quæ offeruntur à populo, & conſecrationibus ſuperſunt, vel de panibus quos deferunt fideles ad Eccleſiam, vel certè de ſuis Presbyter convenienter partes inciſas habeat in vaſe nitido & convenienti, & poſt miſſarum ſolennia qui communicare non fuerint paràti Eulogias omni die Dominica, & in diebus feſtis, exinde accipiant. That is, That the Miniſter ſhall take of the oblations offered of the people, remaining of the conſecration, or elſe of the bread which the faithfull bring unto the Church, or els to take of their owne bread and cut it conveniently in portions in a cleane and a convenient veſſell; ſo that after the ſolemnity of the miniſtration being done, they that were not prepared and ready to communicate, may receive every Sunday or Feſtivall day Eulogies, or Benedictions with the ſame. Hæc ille.

Holy bread. Ex ſanctionibus Eccleſiaſticis. Claſſ. 3. decreta Pii Papæ.

As concerning holy water which they uſed to ſprinkle at the Church doore upon them that entred in, I will not ſay that it ſprung from the idolatrous uſe of the Gentiles.

This I ſay as I finde in hiſtoria Zozomeni. Erat autem Romanis vetuſta conſuetudo, ut quum limen Templi tranſeundum eſſet, Sacerdos ſecundum morem Ethnicum madidos quoſdam Olivæ ramuſculos manu tenens ingredientes aſpergebat, &c. i. It was an old cuſtome among the Romanes, that at the entring in at the Church doore the Prieſt after the uſuall manner of the Ethnicks, having in his hand moiſt branches of Olive, did ſprinkle with the ſame ſuch as entred in, &c.

Zozom. li. 6. ca. 6. Theodor. lib. 3. cap. 6.

To the which cuſtome this our manner of giving of holy water is ſo like, that it ſeemeth to proceed out of the ſame.

In the booke of the Popes decrees, and in the diſtinctions of Gratianus, there is a certaine decree fathered upon Alexander the firſt, about the yeere of our Lord, 121. Which decree may well ſeem to be a baſtard decree, neither agreeing to ſuch a father, nor ſuch a time, concerning the conjuring of holy water. The words of the decree be theſe, Aquam ſale conſperſam in populis benedicimus, ut ea cuncti aſperſi ſanctificentur, & purificentur, quod omnibus Sacerdotibus faciendum eſſe mandamus: Nam ſi cinis Vitulæ aſperſus populum ſanctificabat, atque mundabat, multò magis aqua ſale aſperſa, diviniſque precibus ſacrata, populum ſanctificat atque mundat. Et ſi ſale aſperſo per Heliſæum Prophetam ſterilitas aquæ ſanata eſt; quantò magis divinis precibus ſacratus ſal ſterilitatem rerum aufert humanarum, & coinquinatos ſanctificat & purgat, & cætera bona multiplicat, & inſidias Diaboli avertit, & à phantaſmatis verſutiis homines defendit? That is, We bleſſe water ſprinkled with ſalt among the people, that all ſuch as be ſprinkled with the ſame, may be ſanctified and purified; which thing we charge and command all Prieſts to doe: for if the aſhes of the Cow, in the old Law, being ſprinkled among the people, did ſanctifie and cleanſe them, much more water ſprinkled with ſalt, and hallowed with godly prayers, ſanctifieth and cleanſeth the people. And if that Heliſeus the Prophet by the ſprinkling of ſalt did heale and helpe the barrenneſſe of the water; how much more doth the ſalt, being hallowed by godly prayers, take away the barrenneſſe of humane things, and ſanctifie and purge them that be defiled; alſo multiply other things that be good, and turne away the ſnares of the divell, and defend men from the deceptions of phantaſie, &c.

Ex lib. concil. De conſecrat. diſt. 3. c. Aquam.

Thus ye have heard the author and father of holy water, which ſome alſo aſcribe to Pope Sixtus which ſucceeded Alexander. But as the Papiſts do not agree in the firſt author or inſtitutor of this hallowing of elements, ſo I think the ſame untruly to be aſcribed to either: but leaving the probation of this to further pleaſure, let us now heare in our owne tongue their owne words, which they uſe in this their conjuration.

The forme and words uſed of the Prieſt in conjuring ſalt.

I conjure thee thou creature of ſalt by the ✠ living God, by the ✠ true God, by the holy God, &c. That thou maiſt be made a conjured ſalt, to the ſalvation of them that beleeve; and that unto all ſuch as receive thee thou mayeſt be health of ſoule and body; and that from out of the place wherin thou ſhalt be ſprinkled, may flie away and depart all phantaſie, wickedneſſe, or craftineſſe of the divels ſubtilty, and every foule ſpirit, &c.

Salt conjured.

The forme of conjuring water.

I conjure thee thou creature of water, in the name of ✠ God the Father almighty, and in the name of ✠ Jeſu Chriſt his Son, our Lord, and in the vertue ✠ of the holy Ghoſt, that thou become a conjured water to expell all power of the enemy, &c.

Water conjured.

Who ſeeth not in theſe words blaſphemy intolerable, how that which is only due to the blood of Chriſt, and promiſed to faith only in him, is transferred to earthly and inſenſate creatures, to be ſalvation both to body and ſpirit, inwardly to give remiſſion of ſins, to give health and remedy againſt evils and devils, againſt all phantaſies, wickednes, and all foule ſpirits, and to expell the power of the enemy, &c. If this be true, whereto ſerveth the blood of Chriſt, and the vertue of Chriſtian faith?

Therefore judge thy ſelf, gentle Reader, whether thou thinke this trumpery rightly to be fathered upon thoſe ancient Fathers aforenamed, or els whether it may ſeeme more like truth that John Sleydan writeth, whoſe words in his ſecond booke de Monarchiis are theſe; Horum decreta ſunt in libris inſerta conciliorum, ſed ex his pleraque tam ſunt levicula, tam nugatoria, tam aliena prorſus à ſacris literis, ut credibile ſit ab aliis longo poſt tempore fuiſſe conficta, &c. That is, The decrees of theſe foreſaid Biſhops and Martyrs be inſerted in the booke of Councels, but of theſe decrees many be ſo childiſh, ſo trifling, and ſo farre diſagreeing from the holy Scripture, that it is very like that the ſame were fained and counterfeited of others long after their time, &c. Thus much ſaith Sleydan with moe words in that place. Unto whoſe teſtimony if I might be ſo bold alſo to add my conjecture, I would ſuppoſe the conjuration of this foreſaid water and ſalt to ſpring out of the ſame fountaine, from whence proceeded the conjuring of flowers and branches, becauſe I ſee the order and manner of them both to be ſo like and uniforme as may appeare.

Ioan. Sleid. lib. 2. de 4. Monarch.

Many decrees falſly imputed to the old Fathers which were none of theirs.

The manner of hallowing flowers and branches.

I conjure thee thou creature of flowers and branches, in the name of ✠ God the Father almighty, & in the name ✠ of Jeſu Chriſt his Son, our Lord; and in the vertue of the holy ✠ Ghoſt. Therfore be thou rooted out and diſplanted from this creature of flowers and branches, all thou ſtrength of the adverſary, all thou hoſt of the divell, and all the power of the enemy, even every aſſault of the divels, &c.

And thus much concerning the antiquity of holy bread and holy water; whereby thou mayeſt partly coniecture the ſame not to be ſo old as Steven Gardiner, in his letter againſt Maſter Ridley above mentioned, would have, being both deceived himſelfe, and alſo going about to ſeduce other.

Ex actis Rom. Pontif. in vita Greg. 3.

Furthermore, as touching the reſerving of reliques and the memoriall of Saints brought into the Maſſe, Gregory the third is the author thereof, who alſo added to the Canon therof this clauſe, Quorum ſolemnitates hodie in conſpectu divinæ majeſtatis tuæ celebrantur, &c.

Oyle & creame.

Finally, it were too long to recite every thing in order, deviſed and brought in particularly to the Maſſe, and to the Church. For after that mans braine was once ſet on deviſing, it never could make an end of heaping rite upon rite, and ceremony upon ceremony, till all religion was turned welnigh to ſuperſtition. Thereof commeth oyle and creame brought in by Pope Sylveſter, not wont to be hallowed but by a Biſhop. That the Corporas ſhould not be of ſilk, but only of fine linnen cloth. That the Pſalmes ſhould be ſung on ſides, the one ſide of the Quire ſinging one verſe, the other another, with Gloria patri, &c. That Baptiſm ſhould be miniſtred at no other time in the yeere but only at Eaſter and Whitſontide (ſave only to Infants, and ſuch as were in extreme infirmity) and that it ſhould be required 40. dayes before; ſo determined by Pope Siricius: and therfore was it that Fonts were hallowed onely at theſe two ſeaſons, the which hallowing they keep yet ſtill, but the ordinance they have reiected. Item, that Bels alſo were chriſtened. Item, no Prieſt ſhould weare a beard, or have long haire; ſo appointed by Pope Martin the firſt. Item, that auricular confeſſion ſhould be made, that the booke of decrees and decretals ſhould be ſtabliſhed, and tranſubſtantiation confirmed, in which three acts Pope Innocentius the third was the chiefeſt doer, about the yeere of our Lord, 1215.

And thus have ye in ſumme the gatherings of the Maſſe, with the Canon and all the appurtenance of the ſame: which, not much unlike to the Crow of Eſope, being patched with the feathers of ſo many birds, was ſo long a gathering, that the Temple of Salomon was not ſo long in building, as the Popes Maſſe was in making. Whereby iudge now thy ſelfe, good Reader, whether this Maſſe did proceed from James and other Apoſtles, or no. And yet this was one of the principall cauſes for which ſo much turmoile was made in the Church, with the blood-ſhed of ſo many godly men, ſuffering in ſo many quarters of this Realme; ſome conſumed by fire, ſome pined away with hunger, ſome hanged, ſome ſlaine, ſome racked, ſome tormented one way, ſome another, and that onely or chiefly for the cauſe of this aforeſaid Popiſh Maſſe; as by the reading of this ſtory following, by the grace of Chriſt our Lord, ſhall appeare more at large. In whom I wiſh thee to continue in health, and to perſevere in the truth.

The firſt entring of Queene Mary to the Crowne, with the alteration of Religion, and other perturbations happening the ſame time in this Realme of England.

Anno 1553.
The reigne of Q. Mary.

Marriage betweene the Lord Gilford and the Lady Jane.

What time King Edward by long ſickneſs began to appeare more feeble and weake, in the mean while during the time of this his ſickneſſe, a certaine marriage was provided, concluded, and ſhortly alſo upon the ſame ſolemnized in the moneth of May, betweene the Lord Gilford ſonne to the Duke of Northumberland, and the Lady Jane the Duke of Suffolks daughter; whoſe mother being then alive, was daughter to Mary King Henries ſecond ſiſter, who firſt was married to the French King, and afterward to Charles Duke of Suffolke. But to make no long tarriance hereupon, the marriage being ended, and the King waxing every day more ſicke than other, whereas indeed there ſeemed in him no hope of recovery, it was brought to paſſe by the conſent not onely of the Nobility, but alſo of the chiefe Lawyers of the Realme, that the King by his Teſtament did appoint the foreſaid Lady Jane, daughter to the Duke of Suffolke, to be inheretrix unto the Crowne of England, paſſing over his two ſiſters, Mary and Elizabeth.

Sir James Hales ſtandeth with Q. Mary.

To this order ſubſcribed all the Kings Councell, and the chief of the Nobility, the Mayor and City of London, and almoſt all the Judges and chiefe Lawyers of this Realme, ſaving onely Juſtice Hales of Kent, a man both favouring true Religion, and alſo an upright Judge, as any hath been noted in this Realme, who, giving his conſent unto Lady Mary, would in no caſe ſubſcribe to Lady Jane. Of this man (God willing) you ſhall heare more in the ſequele of this ſtory. The cauſes laid againſt Lady Mary, were as well for that it was feared ſhe would marry with a ſtranger, and thereby intangle the Crowne; as alſo that ſhe would cleane alter Religion, uſed both in King Henry her father, and alſo in King Edward her brothers dayes, and ſo bring in the Pope, to the utter deſtruction of the Realme, which indeed afterward came to paſſe, as by the courſe and ſequele of this ſtory may well appeare.

Two things feared in Q. Mary.

Much probable matter they had thus to coniecture of her, by reaſon of her great ſtubborneſſe ſhewed and declared in her brothers days, as in the letters before mentioned, paſſing betweene her and King Edward, and the Councell, may appeare. The matter being thus concluded, and after confirmed by every mans hand, King Edward an impe of ſo great hope, not long after this departed by the vehemency of his ſickneſſe, when he was ſixteen yeers of age; with whom alſo decayed in a manner the whole flouriſhing eſtate and honour of the Engliſh Nation.

When K. Edward was dead, this Jane was eſtabliſhed in the Kingdome by the Nobles conſent, and was forthwith publiſhed Queene by Proclamation at London, and in other Cities where was any great reſort, and was there ſo taken & named. Betweene this young damſel and K. Edward there was little difference in age, though in learning & knowledge of the tongues ſhe was not only equall, but alſo ſuperiour unto him, being inſtructed of a maſter right nobly learned. If her fortune had béen as good as was her bringing up, ioyned with fineneſſe of wit, undoubtedly ſhe might have ſéemed comparable not only to the houſe of Veſpaſians, Sempronians, and mother of the Gracchies, yea, to any other women beſide, that deſerved high praiſe for their ſingular learning; but alſo to the Univerſity-men, which have taken many degrées of the Schooles.

This inſtructor of the Lady Iane, was Maſt. Elmar.

In the meane time while theſe things were a working at London, Mary, which had knowledge of her brothers death, writeth to the Lords of the Councell in forme as followeth.

A letter of the Lady Mary, ſent to the Lords of the Councell, wherein ſhe claimeth the Crowne after the deceaſe of King Edward.

Lady Maries letter ſent to the Councell, wherein ſhe claimeth the Crowne.

MY Lords, we greet you well, and have received ſure advertiſement, that our deareſt brother the King, our late Soveraigne Lord, is departed to Gods mercy; which newes how wofull they be unto our heart, he onely knoweth, to whoſe will and pleaſure we muſt, and doe humbly ſubmit us and our wils. But in this ſo lamentable a caſe, that is to wit, now after his Majeſties departure and death, concerning the Crowne and Governance of this Realme of England, with the title of France, and all things thereto belonging, what hath beene provided by Act of Parliament, and the Teſtament and laſt Will of our deareſt Father, beſides other circumſtances advancing our right, you know, the Realme, and the whole world knoweth, the Rols and Records appeare by the authority of the King our ſaid Father, and the King our ſaid Brother, and the Subjects of this Realme; ſo that we verily truſt that there is no good true Subject, that is, can, or would pretend to be ignorant thereof: and of our part we have of our ſelves cauſed, and, as God ſhall aid and ſtrengthen us, ſhall cauſe our right and title in this behalfe to be publiſhed and proclaimed accordingly. And albeit this ſo weighty a matter ſeemeth ſtrange, that our ſaid brother dying upon Thurſday at night laſt paſt, we hitherto had no knowledge from you thereof, yet we conſider your wiſdomes and prudence to be ſuch, that having eftſoones amongſt you debated, pondered, and well weighed this preſent caſe with our eſtate, with your owne eſtate, the Common-wealth, and all our honours, we ſhall and may conceive great hope and truſt with much aſſurance in your loyalty and ſervice, and therefore for the time interpret and take things not to the worſt; and that ye will, like Noblemen, worke the beſt. Nevertheleſſe we are not ignorant of your conſultations to undoe the provisions made for our preferment, nor of the great bands and proviſions forcible wherewith ye be aſſembled and prepared, by whom, and to what end, God and you know, and nature can but feare ſome evill. But be it that ſome conſideration politike, or whatſoever thing elſe hath moved you thereto, yet doubt you not my Lords, but wee can take all theſe your doings in gracious part, being alſo right ready to remit and fully pardon the ſame, and that freely, to eſchew blood-ſhed and vengeance againſt all thoſe that can or will intend the ſame, truſting alſo aſſuredly you will take and accept this grace and vertue in good part as appertaineth, and that we ſhall not be inforced to uſe the ſervice of other our true ſubjects and friends, which in this our juſt and right cauſe, God, in whom our whole affiance is, ſhall ſend us. Wherefore my Lords, we require you and charge you, and every of you, that of your allegeance which you owe to God and us, and to none other, for our honour and the ſurety of our perſon onely imploy your ſelves, and forthwith upon receit hereof, cauſe our right and title to the Crowne and government of this Realme to be proclaimed in our City of London and other places, as to your wiſdomes ſhall ſeeme good, and as to this caſe appertaineth, not failing hereof as our very truſt is in you. And thus our letter, ſigned with our hand, ſhall be your ſufficient warrant in this behalfe.

To this letter of the Lady Mary, the Lords of the Councell make anſwer againe, as followeth.

Anſwer of the Lords unto the Lady Maries letter.

A letter of the Councell anſwering again to the Lady Mary.

MAdame, we have received your letters the ninth of this inſtant, declaring your ſuppoſed title, which you iudge your ſelf to have to the Imperiall Crowne of this Realme, and all the Dominions thereunto belonging. For anſwer whereof, this is to advertiſe you, that foraſmuch as our Soveraigne Lady Quéen Iane is, after the death of our Soveraigne Lord Edward the ſixth, a Prince of moſt noble memory, inveſted and poſſeſſed with the iuſt and right title in the Imperiall Crown of this Realme, not onely by good order of old ancient Lawes of this Realm, but alſo by our late Soveraigne Lords letters patents ſigned with his owne hand, and ſealed with the great ſeale of England in preſence of the moſt part of the Nobles, Counſellours, Iudges, with divers other grave and ſage perſonages, aſſenting and ſubſcribing to the ſame: We muſt therefore, as of moſt bound duty and allegeance, aſſent unto her ſaid Grace, and to none other, except we ſhould (which faithfull ſubiects cannot) fall into grievous and unſpeakable enormities. Wherefore we can no leſſe do, but for the quiet both of the realme and you alſo, to advertiſe you, that foraſmuch as the divorce, made betwéene the King of famous memory, King Henry the eight, and the Lady Katharine your mother, was neceſſary to be had both by the everlaſting Lawes of God, and alſo by the Eccleſiaſticall Lawes, and by the moſt part of the noble & learned Univerſities of Chriſtendome, and confirmed alſo by the ſundry acts of Parliaments remaining yet in their force, and thereby you iuſtly made illegitimate and unheritable to the Crowne Imperiall of this Realme, and the rules, and dominions, and poſſeſſions of the ſame, you will upon iuſt conſideration hereof, and of divers other cauſes lawfull to be alledged for the ſame, and for the iuſt inheritance of the right line and godly order taken by the late King our Soveraigne Lord King Edward the ſixth, and agréed upon by the Nobles and great perſonages aforeſaid, ſurceaſe by any pretence to vexe and moleſt any of our Soveraigne Lady Quéene Iane her ſubiects from their true faith and allegeance due unto her Grace: aſſuring you, that if you will for reſpect ſhew your ſelfe quiet and obedient (as you ought) you ſhall finde us all and ſeverall ready to doe you any ſervice that we with duty may, and glad with your quietneſſe to preſerve the common State of this Realm: wherein you may be otherwiſe grievous unto us, to your ſelf, and to them. And thus we bid you moſt heartily well to fare. From the Tower of London, this ninth of Iuly, 1553.

¶ All theſe aforeſaid, except only the Duke of Northumberland, and ſir Iohn Gates, afterward were either by ſpeciall favour, or ſpeciall or generall pardon diſcharged.

Lady Mary keepeth her ſelfe from the city of London.

After this anſwer received, and the minds of the Lords perceived, Lady Mary ſpeedeth her ſelfe ſecretly away farre off from the City, hoping chiefly upon the good will of the Commons, and yet perchance not deſtitute altogether of the ſecret advertiſements of ſome of the Nobles. When the Councell heard of her ſudden departure and perceived her ſtoutneſſe, and that all came not to paſſe as they ſuppoſed, they gathered ſpeedily a power of men together, appointing an army, and firſt aſſigned that the Duke of Suffolke ſhould take that enterpriſe in hand, and ſo have the leading of the band. But afterward altering their minds, they thought it beſt to ſend forth the Duke of Northumberland, with certaine other Lords and Gentlemen, and that the Duke of Suffolke ſhould keep the Tower, where the Lord Gilford and the Lady Iane the ſame time were lodged.

The Duke of Northumberland ſent forth againſt Lady Mary.

In the which expedition the Guard alſo, albeit they were much unwilling at the firſt thereunto, yet notwithſtanding, through the vehement perſwaſions of the Lord Treaſurer, maſter Chomley. and other they were induced to aſſiſt the Duke, and to ſet forward with him.

These things thus agreed upon, and the Duke now being ſet forward after the beſt array out of London, having notwithſtanding his times preſcribed, and his iourney appointed by the Councell, to the intent he might not ſeem to do any thing but upon warrant. Mary in the meane while toſſed with much travell up and downe, to worke the ſureſt way for her beſt advantage, withdrew herſelfe into the quarters of Northfolk and Suffolk, where ſhe underſtood the Dukes name to be had in much hatred for the ſervice that had been done there of late under King Edward, in ſubduing the rebels, & there gathering to her ſuch aide of the Commons in every ſide as ſhe might, keeping her ſelfe cloſe for a ſpace within Fremingham Caſtle. To whom firſt of all reſorted the Suffolke men; who being alwayes forward in promoting the proceedings of the Goſpell, promiſed her their aide and help, ſo that ſhe would not attempt the alteration of the Religion, which her brother King Edward had before eſtabliſhed, by lawes and orders publikely enacted, and received by the conſent of the whole Realme in that behalfe.

Policy of Lady Mary.

The Lady Mary taketh Fremingham Caſtle.

The Suffolke men gather to the Lady Maries ſide.

To make the matter ſhort, unto this condition ſhe eftſoones agreed, with ſuch promiſe made unto them that no innovation ſhould be made of Religion, as that no man would or could then have miſdoubted her. Which promiſe, if ſhe had as conſtantly kept, as they did willingly preſerve her with their bodies and weapons, ſhe had done a deed both worthy her blood, and had alſo made her Reigne more ſtable to her ſelfe through former tranquilitie. For though a man be never ſo puiſſant of power, yet breach of promiſe is an evill upholder of quietneſſe, feare is worſe, but crueltie is the worſt of all.

The L. Mary pr[illegible] that [illegible] would not [illegible] religion.

Breach of promiſe in Queen Mary.

Thus Mary being guarded with the power of the Goſpellers, did vanquiſh the Duke, and all thoſe that came with her. In conſideration whereof it was (me thinkes) an heavie word that ſhe anſwered to the Suffolke men afterwards, which did make ſupplication to her grace to performe her promiſe: Forſomuch (ſaith ſhee) as you being but members deſire to rule your head, you ſhall one day well perceive, that members muſt obey their head, and not looke to beare rule over the ſame. And not only that, but alſo to cauſe the more terror unto other, a certaine Gentleman named maſter Dobbe, dwelling about Wyndam ſide, for the ſame cauſe, that is, for advertiſing her by humble requeſt of her promiſe, was puniſhed, being three ſundry times ſet on the Pillory to bee a gazing ſtocke unto all men. Divers other delivered her bookes and ſupplications made out of the Scripture, to exhort her to continue in the true doctrine then ſtabliſhed; and for their good will were ſent to priſon. But ſuch is the condition of mans nature (as here you ſee) that we are for the moſt part more ready alwayes to ſeek friendſhip when we ſtand in need of helpe, than ready to requite a benefit once paſt and received. Howbeit againſt all this one ſhote-anker we have, which may bee a ſure comfort to all miſerable creatures, that equitie and fidelitie are ever perfect and certainly found with the Lord above, though the ſame, being ſhut out of the doores in this world, bee not to be found here among men. But ſeeing our intent is to write a ſtorie, not to treat of office, let us lay Suffolke men aſide for a while, whoſe deſerts, for their readineſſe and diligence with the Queen, I will not here ſtand upon. What ſhe performed on her part, the thing it ſelfe, and the whole ſtory of this perſecution doth teſtifie, as hereafter more plainly will appeare.

Queene Maries anſwer to the Suffolke men.

Maſter Dobbe puniſhed.

Perfect fidelity ſhut out of the doores, yet is to be found in heaven.

On the contrary ſide, the Duke of Northumberland having his warrant under the broad Seale, with all furniture in readineſſe, as he tooke his voyage, and was now forward in his way; what ado there was, what ſtirring on every ſide, what ſending, what riding and poſting, what letters, meſſages, and inſtructions went to and fro, what talking among the ſouldiers, what heart burning among the people, what faire pretences outwardly, inwardly what privie practices there were, what ſpeeding of Ordinance daily and hourely out of the Tower, what rumours and comming downe of ſouldiers from all quarters there was; a world it was to ſee, and a proceſſe to declare, enough to make a whole Ilias. The greateſt helpe that made for the Lady Mary was the ſhort iourneys of the Duke, which by commiſſion were aſſigned to him before, as is above mentioned. For the longer the Duke lingred in his voyage, the Lady Mary the more increaſed in puiſſance, the hearts of the people being mightily bent unto her. Which after the councell at London perceived, and underſtood how the common multitude did withdraw their hearts from them to ſtand with her, and that certaine noble men began to goe the other way, they turned their ſong, and proclaimed for Queene the Lady Mary, eldeſt daughter to King Henry the eight, and appointed by Parliament to ſucceed King Edward dying without iſſue.

Queene Mary proclaimed at London.

And ſo the Duke of Northumberland, being by counſell and advice ſent forth againſt her, was left deſtitute, and forſaken alone at Cambridge with ſome of his ſons, and a few other: among whom the Earle of Huntington was one:

The Duke of Northumberland overthrowne.

The Duke of Northumberland brought to the Tower as a traitor.

who there were arreſted and brought to the Tower of London, as traitors to the Crowne, notwithſtanding that he had there proclaimed her Queene before.

Queene Mary commeth up to London.

Thus have ye Mary now made a Queen, and the ſword of authoritie put into her hand, which how ſhe afterward did uſe, we may ſee in ſequele of this book. Therefore (as I ſay) when ſhe had been thus advanced by the Goſpellers, and ſaw all in quiet by meanes that her enemies were conquered, ſending the Duke captive to the Tower before (which was the 25. of July) ſhee followed not long after, being brought up the third day of Auguſt to London, with the great reioycing of many men, but with a greater fear of moe, and yet with flattery, peradventure moſt great, of fained hearts.

The La. Jane and the Lord Gilford priſoners in the Tower.
The Duke of Northumberland condemned to dye.
The Duke of Northumberland revoketh his religion.

Thus comming up to London, her firſt lodging ſhe took at the Tower, whereas the foreſaid Lady Jane with her husband the Lord Gilford, a little before her comming, were impriſoned; where they remained waiting her pleaſure almoſt five moneths. But the Duke, within a moneth after his comming to the Tower, being adiudged to death, was brought forth to the Scaffold, and there beheaded. Albeit he having a promiſe, and being put in hope of pardon (yea, though his head were upon the block) if he would recant and heare maſſe, conſented thereto, and denyed in words that true religion, which before time, as well in King Henry the eighths days, as in King Edwards, he had oft evidently declared himſelfe both to favour and further: exhorting alſo the people to returne to the Catholike faith, as he termed it. Whoſe recantation the Papiſts did forthwith publiſh and ſet abroad, reioycing not a little at his converſion, or rather ſubverſion, as then appeared.

The Duke of Northumberland beheaded. Sir Jo. Gates and Sir Thomas Palmer, confeſſing their faith, were beheaded.

Thus the Duke of Northumberland, with Sir John Gates, and Sir Thomas Palmer, (which Palmer on the other ſide confeſſed his faith that he had learned in the Goſpel, and lamented that he had not lived more Goſpell-like) being put to death; In the meane time Queen Mary entring thus her reigne with the blood of theſe men, beſides hearing Maſſe her ſelf in the Tower, gave a heavie ſhew and ſignification hereby, but eſpecially by the ſudden delivering of Steven Gardiner out of the Tower, that ſhe was not minded to ſtand to that which ſhe ſo deeply had promiſed to the Suffolke men before, concerning the not ſubverting or altering the ſtate of Religion, as in very deed the ſurmiſe of the people was therein nothing deceived.

The true preaching Biſhops diſplaced.

Beſides the premiſſes, other things alſo followed, which every day more and more diſcomforted the people, declaring the Queene to beare no good will to the preſent ſtate of Religion; as not only the releaſing of Gardiner being then made Lord Chancellour of England and Biſhop of Wincheſter, Doctor Poynet being put out; but alſo that Boner was reſtored to his Biſhopricke againe, and Doctor Ridley diſplaced. Item Doctor Day to the Biſhopricke of Chicheſter, J. Scory being put out. Item, Doctor Tonſtall to the Biſhoprick of Duriſme. Item, Doctor Heath to the Biſhoprick of Worceſter, and J. Hooper committed to the Fleet. Item Doctor Veſſe to Exceter, and Miles Coverdale put out. Theſe things being marked and perceived, great heavineſſe and diſcomfort grew more and more to all good mens hearts; but contrary, to the wicked, great reioycing. In which diſcord of mindes, and diverſitie of affections, was now to bee ſeene a miſerable face of things in the whole Common-wealth of England. They that could diſſemble took no greet care how the matter went. But ſuch, whoſe conſciences were ioyned with the truth, perceived already coales to be kindled, which after ſhould be the deſtruction of many a true Chriſtian man, as indeed it came to paſſe. In the meane while Queene Mary after theſe beginnings, removed from the Tower to Hampton Court, cauſed a Parliament to be ſummoned againſt the tenth day of October next enſuing, whereof more is to be ſaid hereafter.

A Parliament ſummoned.

Yee heard before how divers Biſhops were removed, and other placed in their roomes: amongſt whom was Doctor Ridley Biſhop of London, a worthy man both of fame and learning. This Doctor Ridley in the time of Queene Jane had made a Sermon at Pauls Croſſe, ſo commanded by the Councell; declaring there his mind to the people as touching the Lady Mary, and diſſwading them, alledging there the incommodities and inconveniences which might riſe by receiving her to bee their Queene, prophecying as it were before that which after came to paſſe, that ſhee would bring in forraine power to raigne over them; beſides the ſubverting alſo of Chriſtian Religion then already eſtabliſhed; ſhewing moreover that the ſame Mary being in his Dioceſſe, he according to his dutie being then her Ordinary, had travailed much with her to reduce her to this Religion, and notwithſtanding all other points of civility, ſhe ſhewed her ſelfe gentle and tractable, yet in matters that concerned true faith and doctrine, ſhe ſhewed her ſelfe ſo ſtiffe and obſtinate, that there was no other hope of her to be conceived, but to diſturbe and overturne all that which with ſo great labours had beene confirmed and planted by her brother afore. Shortly after this Sermon Queene Mary was proclaimed; whereupon hee ſpeedily repairing to Freiningham to ſalute the Queene, had ſuch cold welcome there, that being ſpoiled of all his dignitie, hee was ſent backe upon a lame halting horſe to the Tower.

Biſhop Ridley preacheth in Queene Maries time.

Maſter Rogers preacheth.

After him preached alſo Maſter Rogers the next Sunday, intreating very learnedly upon the Goſpell of the ſame day.

This ſo done, Queene Mary ſeeing all things yet not going ſo after her minde as ſhee deſired, deviſed with her Councell to bring to paſſe that thing by other meanes, which as yet by open law ſhe could not well accompliſh, directing forth an Inhibition by proclamation, that no man ſhould preach or read openly in Churches the Word of God, beſides other things alſo in the ſame Proclamation inhibited, the copie whereof here followeth.

An Inhibition of the Queene, for Preaching, Printing, &c.

Auguſt 18.

An Inhibition of the Queene for preaching and printing.

The Queens Highneſſe well remembring what great inconveniences and dangers have growne to this her Highneſſe Realme in times paſt, through the diverſitie of opinions in queſtion of Religion, and hearing alſo that now of late, ſince the beginning of her moſt gracious Reigne, the ſame contentions be againe much revived, through certaine falſe and untrue reports and rumours ſpread by ſome light and evill diſpoſed perſons, hath thought good to doe to underſtand, to all her Highneſſe moſt loving ſubiects, her moſt gracious pleaſure in manner following:

Firſt, her Maieſtie, being preſently by the only goodnes of God ſetled in her iuſt poſſeſſion of the Imperiall Crowne of this Realme, and other ther Dominions there unto belonging, cannot now hide that religion which God and the world knoweth ſhe hath ever profeſſed from her infancie hitherto. Which as her Maieſtie is minded to obſerve and maintaine for her ſelfe by Gods grace, during her time, ſo doth her Highneſſe much deſire, and would bee glad the ſame were of all her Subiects quietly and charitably embraced.

Termes of Papiſt and Heretike forbidden.

And yet ſhee doth ſignifie unto all her Maieſties loving Subiects, that of her moſt gracious diſpoſition and clemency, her Highneſſe mindeth not to compell any her ſaid Subiects thereunto, untill ſuch time as further order by common aſſent may be taken therein: forbidding neverthelesſe all her ſubiects of all degrees, at their perils, to move ſeditions, or ſtirre unquietnes in her people by interpreting the Lawes of this Realme after their braines and fantaſies, but quietly to continue for the time, till (as before is ſaid) further order may bee taken, and therefore willeth and ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all her ſaid good loving ſubiects to live together in quiet ſort and chriſtian charity, leaving thoſe new found devilliſh termes of Papiſt or Heretike, and ſuch like, and applying their whole care, ſtudie, and travaile to live in the feare of God, exerciſing their converſations in ſuch charitable and godly doing, as their lives may indeed expreſſe that great hunger and thirſt of Gods glory and holy Word, which by raſh talk and words many have pretended: and in ſo doing they ſhall beſt pleaſe God, and live without danger of the Lawes, and maintaine the tranquillitie of the Realme. Whereof as her Highneſſe ſhall be moſt glad, ſo if any man ſhall raſhly preſume to make any aſſemblies of people, or at any publike aſſemblies, or otherwiſe, ſhall goe about to ſtirre the people to diſorder or diſquiet, ſhe mindeth, according to her duety, to ſee the ſame moſt ſeverely reformed and puniſhed according to her Highneſſe lawes.

False ſurmiſes againſt true Preachers, Printers, and Players.

Here was the head of Wincheſter.

Preaching, Printing, Reading, and playing of Enterludes, reſtrained.

And furthermore, foraſmuch as it is alſo well knowne, that ſedition and falſe rumours have been nouriſhed and maintained in this Realme, by the ſubtiltie and malice of ſome evill diſpoſed perſons, which take upon them without ſufficient authoritie to preach and to interpret the Word of God after their owne braine in Churches, and other places both publike and private, and alſo by playing of enterludes, and printing of falſe fond bookes, ballads, rimes, and other lewd treatiſes in the Engliſh tongue, concerning doctrine, in matters now in queſtion and controverſie, touching the high points and myſteries of Chriſtian Religion; which bookes, ballads, rimes, and treatiſes, are chiefly by the Printers and Stationers ſet out to ſale to her Graces ſubiects, of an evill zeale, for lucre and covetouſnes of vile gaine: Her Highneſſe therfore ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth all and every of her ſaid Subiects, of whatſoever ſtate, condition, or degree they bee, that none of them preſume from henceforth to preach, or by way of reading in Churches, or other publike or private places, except in Schooles of the Univerſitie, to interpret or teach any Scriptures, or any manner of points of doctrine concerning Religion, neither, alſo to print any bookes, matter, ballade, rime, enterlude, proceſſe or treatiſe, nor to play any enterlude, except they have her Graces ſpeciall licence in writing for the ſame upon paine to incurre her Highnes indignation and diſpleaſure.

And her Highneſſe alſo further chargeth and commandeth all and every her ſaid Subiects, that none of them of their owne authoritie doe preſume to puniſh, or to riſe againſt any offender in the cauſes aboveſaid, or any other offender in words or deeds in the late rebellion committed or done by the Duke of Northumberland or his complices or to ceiſe any of their goods, or violently to uſe any ſuch offender by ſtriking, or impriſoning, or threatning the ſame, but wholly to referre the puniſhment of all ſuch offenders unto her Highneſſe and publike authoritie, whereof her Maieſtie mindeth to ſee due puniſhment according to the order of her Highnes Lawes.

Neverthelesſe, as her Highneſſe mindeth not hereby to reſtraine and diſcourage any of her loving Subiects, to give from time to time true information againſt any ſuch offenders in the cauſes aboveſaid, unto her Grace or her Councell, for the puniſhment of every ſuch offender, according to the effect of her Highneſſe Lawes provided in that part: ſo her ſaid Highneſſe exhorteth and ſtraitly chargeth her ſaid ſubiects to obſerve her commandement and pleaſure in every part aforeſaid, as they will avoid her Highnes ſaid indignation and moſt grievous diſpleaſure. The ſeverity and rigour whereof as her Highneſſe ſhall bee moſt ſorry to have cauſe to put in execution: ſo doth ſhe utterly determine not to permit ſuch unlawfull and rebellious doings of her ſubiects, whereof may enſue the danger of her royall eſtate, to remaine unpuniſhed, but to ſee her ſaid Laws touching theſe points to be throughly executed: which extremities ſhe truſteth all her ſaid ſubiects will foreſee, dread, and avoide accordingly: her ſaid Highneſſe ſtraitly charging and commanding all Maiors, Shiriffes Iuſtices of Peace, Bayliffes, Conſtables, and all other publike officers and miniſters, diligently to ſee to the obſerving and executing of her ſaid commandements and pleaſure, and to apprehend all ſuch as ſhall wilfully offend in this part, committing the ſame to the next Goale, there to remaine without baile or maineprize, till upon certificate made to her Highneſſe, or hee privie Councell, of their names and doings; and upon examination had of their offences, ſome further order ſhall bee taken for their puniſhment to the example of others, according to the effect and tenor of the Lawes aforeſaid. Yeoven at our Manor of Richmond, the 18. day of Auguſt in the firſt yeers of our moſt proſperous Reigne.

Maſter Bourne preaching at Pauls Croſſe,

M. Bournes Sermon at Pauls Croſſe. Auguſt 13.

No marvell if Boner were ſo foule fallen away in ſuch a vile dungeon in the Marſhalſey.

ABout this time or not long before, Boner Biſhop of London, being reſtored, appointed Maſter Bourne a Chanon of Pauls to preach at the Croſſe, who afterward was Biſhop of Bathe; he taking occaſion of the Goſpell of that day to ſpeake ſomewhat largely in iuſtifying of Boner being then preſent; which Boner, ſaid he, upon the ſame Text in that place, that day foure yeares had preached before, and was upon the ſame moſt cruelly and uniuſtly caſt into the moſt vile dungeon of the Marſhalſey, and there kept during the time of King Edward. His words ſounded ſo evill in the eares of the hearers, that they could not keepe ſilence, and began to murmure and to ſtirre in ſuch ſort, that the Mayor and Aldermen with other eſtates then preſent, feared much an uproare. But the truth is, that one hurled a dagger at the Preacher, but who it was it could not then be prooved, albeit afterward it was knowne.

In fine the ſtirre was ſuch, that the Preacher pluckt in his head, and durſt no more appeare in that place. The matter of his Sermon tended much to the derogation and diſpraiſe of King Edward, which thing the people in no caſe could abide, Then Maſter Bradford at the requeſt of the Preachers brother, and other then being in the Pulpit, ſtood forth and ſpake ſo mildly, chriſtianly, and effectually, that with few words he appeaſed all: and afterward hee and maſter Rogers conducted the Preacher betwixt them from the Pulpit to the Grammar ſchoole doore, where they left him ſafe, as further in the ſtory of maſter Bradford is declared. But ſhortly after they were both rewarded with long impriſonment, and laſt of all with fire in Smithfield.

Maſter John Bradford appeaſeth the people.

Bradford and Rogers garded the Preacher.

By reaſon of this tumult at Pauls Croſſe, an order was taken by the Lords of the Councell with the Mayor and Aldermen of London, that they, calling the next day following a common Councell of the Citie, ſhould thereby charge every Houſholder to cauſe their children apprentiſes, and other ſervants to keepe their owne Pariſh Churches upon the holy days and not to ſuffer them to attempt any thing to the violating of the common peace. Willing them alſo to ſignifie to the ſaid aſſembly the Queenes determination uttered unto them by her Highneſſe the 12. of Auguſt in the Tower. Which was, that albeit her Graces conſcience is ſtayed in matters of Religion; yet ſhee graciouſly meant not to compell or ſtraine other mens conſciences otherwiſe than God ſhall (as ſhee truſted) put in their hearts a perſwaſion of the truth that ſhee is in, through the opening of his word unto them, by godly, vertuous, and learned Preachers, &c.

Alſo it was then ordered, that every Alderman in his Ward ſhould forthwith ſend for the Curates of every Pariſh within their liberties, and warne them not only to forbeare to preach themſelves, but alſo not to ſuffer any other to preach, or make any opeen or ſolemne reading of Scripture in their Churches, unleſſe the ſaid Preachers were ſeverally licenced by the Queen.

After this Sermon at Pauls Croſſe aforenamed, the next day after it followed that the Queens guard was at the Croſſe with their weapons to guard the Preacher. And when men withdrew themſelvs from the ſermon, order was taken by the Maior, that the Ancients of all companies ſhould be preſent, leſt the Preacher ſhould be diſcouraged by his ſmall Auditory.

1. of Auguſt, an. 1553.

The 5. of Auguſt, Anno 1553. was one William Rutler committed (by the Councell) to the Marſhalſey, for uttering certaine words againſt M. Bourn Preacher, for his ſermon at Pauls Croſſe on Sunday laſt before.

The 16. of Auguſt was Humfrey Palden committed to the Counter for words againſt the ſaid Bournes ſermon at Pauls Croſſe.

Fiſher.

A letter ſent to the Shiriffes of Buckingham and Bedford, for the apprehending of one Fiſher, Parſon of Ammerſham, a Preacher.

Another letter to the Biſhop of Norwich, not to ſuffer any Preacher or other to preach or expound the Scripture openly without ſpeciall licence from the Queen.

The ſame day was M. Bradford, M. Vernon, and M. Beacon, Preachers, committed to the charge of the Lievtenant of the Tower.

The ſame day alſo was Maſter John Rogers Preacher, commanded to keep himſelfe priſoner in his owne houſe at Pauls, without having any conference with any other than thoſe of his owne houſhold.

The 22. of Auguſt there were two letters directed to M. Coverdale Biſhop of Exeter, and M. Hooper Biſhop of Gloceſter, for their undelayed repaire to the Court, and there to attend the Councels pleaſure.

Fiſher.

The ſame day Fiſher Parſon of Ammerſham made his appearance before the Councell, according to their letter the 16 of Auguſt, and was appointed the next day to bring in a note of his ſermon.

The 24. of Auguſt was one John Melvin, a Scot, and preacher, ſent to Newgate in London by the Councell.

Symonds.

The 26. of Auguſt there was a letter ſent to the Maior of Coventry and his Brethren, for the apprehenſion of one Symonds of Worceſter Preacher, and then Vicar of S. Michaels in Coventrey, and for the ſending of him up to the Councell, with his examinations and other matters they could charge him with; with a Commiſſion to them to puniſh all ſuch as had by meanes of his preaching uſed any talke againſt the Queens proceedings.

The 29. of Auguſt M. Hooper Biſhop of Worceſter made his perſonall appearance before the Councell, according to their letters the 22. of Auguſt.

The 31. of Auguſt M. Coverdale Biſhop of Exceter made his appearance before the Councell: according to their letters the 22. of Auguſt.

September. 1553.

The firſt of September M. Hooper and M. Coverdale appeared againe before the Councell, whence M. Hooper was committed to the Fleet, and maſter Coverdale commanded to attend the Lords pleaſure.

The 2. of September M. Hugh Saunders, Vicar of S. Michaels in Coventry, was before the Councell for a ſermon, and was commanded to appeare againe upon monday next after.

The 4. of September a letter was directed from the Councell to maſter Hugh Latimer for his appearance before them.

About the 5. day of September the ſame yeer, Peter Martyr came to London from Oxford, where for a time he had been commanded to keep his houſe, and found there the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, who offered to defend the doctrine of the booke of Common Prayer, both by ſcriptures and Doctors, aſſiſted by Peter Martyr and a few other, as hereafter ye ſhall heare. But whileſt they were in hope to come to diſputations, the Archbiſhop and other were impriſoned, but Peter Martyr was ſuffered to returne whence he came.

Symonds.

The ſame day there was a letter ſent to the Mayor of Coventrey to ſet Hugh Symonds at liberty, if he would recant his ſermon, or elſe to ſtay him, and to ſignifie ſo much to the Councell.

The 13. of September M. Hugh Latimer appeared before the Councell, according to their letter the 4. of September, and was committed to the Tower cloſe priſoner, having his ſervant Auſten to attend upon him.

The ſame day the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, appearing before the Councell, was commanded to appeare the next day at afternoone before them in the Star-chamber.

The 14. of September the archbiſhpo of Canterbury, according to their former dayes commandement, made his appearance before the Lords in the Star-chamber. Where, they charging him with treaſon, and ſpreading abroad of ſeditious bils to the diſquieting of the eſtate, they committed him from thence to the Tower of London, there to remaine till further iuſtice and order at the Queenes pleaſure.

The 15 of September there was a letter ſent to M. Horne Deane of Durham, for his appearance before them, and another was ſent to him the 7. of October next after, for his ſpeedy appearance.

The 16. of September there were letters ſent to the Mayors of Dover and Rie, to ſuffer all French Proteſtants to paſſe out of this Realme except ſuch, whoſe names ſhall be ſignified to them by the French Embaſſador.

October. 1553.

October. Queene Mary crowned. October 10. The Parliament beginneth with a Maſſe.

The firſt day of October Queene Marie was crowned at Weſtminſter, and the tenth day of the ſame moneth of October then following began the Parliament with a ſolemne Maſſe of the holy Ghoſt, after the Popiſh manner, celebrated with great pompe in the Palace of Weſtminſter. To the which Maſſe among the other Lords, according to the manner, ſhould come the Biſhops, which yet remained undepoſed, which were the Archbiſhop of Yorke, Doctor Taylor Biſhop of Lincolne, John Harley Biſhop of Hereford. Of the Biſhops. Doctor Taylor, and maſter Harley preſenting themſelves according to their dutie, and taking their place amongſt the Lords, after they ſaw the Maſſe begin, not abiding the ſight thereof, withdrew themſelvs from the company: for the which cauſe the biſhop of Lincolne being examined, and proteſting his faith, was upon the ſame commanded to attend; who not long after at Ankerwike by ſickneſſe departed. Maſter Harley, becauſe he was married, was excluded both from the Parliament and from his Biſhopricke.

Two Biſhops withdrew themſelves from the ſight of the Maſſe.

M. Harley Biſhop of Hereford put out of his Biſhoprick

Maſſe being done, the Queene accompanied with the Eſtates of the Realm was brought into the Parliament houſe, there according to the manner to enter and begin the conſultation. At which Conſultation or Parliament were repealed all Statutes made in the time of King Henrie the eight for Premunire, and Statutes made in King Edward the ſixths time for adminiſtration of Common prayer and the Sacrament in the Engliſh tongue: and further the attainder of the Duke of Northumberland was by this Parliament confirmed. In this meane while many men were forward in erecting of Altars and Maſſes in Churches. And ſuch as would ſticke to the lawes made in King Edwards time, till other ſhould be eſtabliſhed, ſome of them were marked, and ſome preſently apprehended. Among whom Sir James Hales, a Knight of Kent, and Juſtice of the Common place, was one; who notwithſtanding hee had ventured his life in Queene Maries cauſe, in that he would not ſubſcribe to the uninheriting of her by the Kings will, yet for that he did at a Quarter Seſſions give charge upon the Statutes made in the time of King Henry the eight and Edward the ſixth, for the Supremacy & Religion, he was impriſoned in the Marſhalſey, Counter, and Fleet, and ſo cruelly handled and put in feare by talke that the Warden of the Fleet uſed to have in his hearing, of ſuch torments as were in preparing for herettickes (or for what other cauſe God knoweth) that hee ſought to ridde himſelfe out of this life by wounding himſelfe with a knife; and afterward was contented to ſay as they willed him: whereupon he was diſcharged, but after that he never reſted till he had drowned himſelfe in a river, halfe a mile from his houſe in Kent. Of whom more is to be ſeen when you come to his ſtory.

Statutes of Premunire and other repealed.

Altars and Maſſes errected.

Sir James Hales Knight.

The trouble of Judge Hales.

A ſubtle policy.

During the time of this Parliament, the Clergy likewiſe after their wonted manner had a Convocation, with a diſputation alſo, appointed by the Queenes commandement, at Pauls Church in London the ſame time, which was about the 18. of October. In the which Convocation, firſt maſter John Harpsfield, Bachelor of Divinitie, made a Sermon ad Clerum, the 16. of October. After the Sermon done, it was aſſigned by the Biſhops, that they of the Clergie houſe, for avoiding confuſion of words ſhould chuſe them a Prolocutor. To the which roome and office by common aſſent was named Doctor Weſton Deane of Weſtminſter, and preſented to the Biſhops with an oration of Maſter Pie Deane of Chicheſter, and alſo of Maſter Wimbiſley Archdeadon of London. Which Doct. Weſton being choſen and brought unto the Biſhops, made his gratulatory Oration to the houſe, with the anſwer again of Biſhop Boner.

A Convocation begun.

Oration of M. Pie & Maſter Wimbiſley, of Doctor Weſton and of Biſhop Boner in the Convocation houſe.

After theſe things thus ſped in the Convocation houſe, they proceeded next to the Diſputation appointed, as is aboveſaid, by the Queenes commandement, about the matter of the Sacrament. Which diſputation continued ſixe dayes. Wherein Doctor Weſton was chiefe on the Popes part; who behaved himſelfe outragiouſly in taunting and checking. In concluſion, ſuch as diſputed on the contrary part were driven ſome to flee, ſome to deny, and ſome to dye, though to the moſt mens iudgements that heard the Diſputation they had the upper hand, as here may appeare by the report of the ſaid Diſputation, the copy whereof we thought fit here to annex, as followeth.

The true report of the Diſputation had and begun in the Convocation houſe at London, the 18, of October, Anno 1553.

A diſputation of Religion in Pauls Church in London the 18 of October.

WHereas divers and uncertaine rumours bee ſpread abroad of the Diſputation had in the Convocation houſe; to the intent that all men may know the certaintie of all things therein done and ſaid, as much as the memory of him that was preſent thereat can beare away, he hath thought good, at requeſt throughly to deſcribe what was ſaid therin on both parties of the matters argued and had in queſtion, and of the entrance thereof.

Act of the firſt day.

Doctor Weſton, Prolocutor, againſt the booke of Catechiſme ſet forth in King Edwards time.

FIrſt upon Wedneſday, being the 18. of October, at afternoone, Maſter Weſton the Prolocutor certified the houſe, that it was the Queenes pleaſure, that the company of the ſame Houſe, being learned men aſſembled, ſhould debate of matters of Religion, and conſtitute Lawes thereof, which her Grace and the Parliament would ratifie. And for that (ſaid he) there is a booke of late ſet forth, called the Catechiſme (which hee ſhewed forth) bearing the name of this honourable Synod, and yet put forth without your conſents as I have learned, being a booke very peſtiferous, and full of hereſies and likewiſe a booke of Common Prayer very abominable (as it pleaſed him to terme it) I thought it therefore beſt firſt to begin with the articles of the Catechiſme, concerning the ſacrament of the altar, to confirme the naturall preſence of Chriſt in the ſame, and alſo tranſubſtantiation. Wherefore (ſaid he) it ſhall be lawfull on Friday next enſuing for all men freely to ſpeake their conſcience in theſe matters, that all doubts may be removed, and they fully ſatisfied therein.

Act.

Act of the ſecond day.

October 20.

Two bils exhibited in the Convocation houſe by the Prolocutor.

The Friday comming, being the twentieth of October, when men had thought they ſhould have entred diſputations of the queſtions propoſed, the Prolocutor exhibited two ſeverall bils unto the Houſe; the one for the naturall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Altar; the other concerning the Catechiſme, that it was not of that Houſes agreement ſet forth, and that they did not agree thereunto: requiring all them to ſubſcribe to the ſame, as hee himſelfe had done. Whereunto the whole Houſe did immediately aſſent, except ſix, which were the Deane of Rocheſter, the Deane of Exceter, the Archdeacon of Wincheſter, the Archdeacon of Hereford, the Archdeacon of Stow, and one other. And whileſt the reſt were about to ſubſcribe theſe two Articles, John Philpot ſtood up and ſpake firſt concerning the Article of the Catechiſme, that he thought they were deceived in the title of the Catechiſme, in that it beareth the title of the Synod of London laſt before this, although many of them which then were preſent were never made privie thereof in ſetting it forth; for that this Houſe had granted the authoritie to make Eccleſiaſticall Lawes unto certaine perſons to be appointed by the Kings Maieſtie; and whatſoever Eccleſiaſticall Lawes they or the moſt part of them did ſet forth, according to a Statute in that behalfe provided, it might be well ſaid to be done in the Synod of London, although ſuch as bee of his Houſe now had no notice thereof before the promulgation. And in this point hee thought the ſetter forth thereof nothing to have ſlandered the Houſe, as they by their ſubſcription went about to perſwade the world, ſince they had our Synodall authority unto them committed to make ſuch ſpirituall Lawes as they thought convenient and neceſſarie.

M. Philips, M. Haddon, M. Philpot, M. Cheyney, M. Elmar, and one other refuſed to ſubſcribe to the bils. The booke of the Catechiſme defended by M. John Philpot.

Againſt the article of natural preſence.

And moreover he ſaid, as concerning the article of the naturall preſence in the Sacrament, that it was againſt reaſon and order of learning and alſo very preiudiciall to the truth, that men ſhould be mooved to ſubſcribe before the matter were throughly examined and diſcuſſed. But when hee ſaw that allegation might take no place, being as a man aſtonied at the multitude of ſo many learned men, as there were of purpoſe gathered together to maintaine old traditions more than the truth of Gods holy Word, he made this requeſt unto the Prolocutor, that whereas there were ſo many ancient learned men preſent on that ſide, as in the Realme the like again were not to be found in ſuch number; and that on the other ſide of them that had not ſubſcribed were not paſt five or ſixe, both in age and learning farre inferiour unto them: therefore, that equalitie might be had in this diſputation, he deſired that the Prolocutor would be a meane unto the Lords, that ſome of thoſe that were learned, and ſetters forth of the ſame Catechiſme, might bee brought into the Houſe to ſhew their learning that moved them to ſet forth the ſame, and that Doctor Ridley and Maſter Rogers, with two or three mee, might be licenced to be preſent at this diſputation, and to bee aſſociate with them.

M. Philpots requeſt to the Prolocutor.

Requeſt to have D. Ridley and M. Rogers at the diſputation.

Anſwer of the Biſhops unto the requeſt.

This requeſt was thought reaſonable, and was propoſed unto the Biſhops, who made this anſwer; that it was not in them to call ſuch perſons unto our Houſe, ſince ſome of them were priſoners. But they ſaid, they would be petitioners in this behalfe unto the Councell, and in caſe any were abſent that ought to bee of the Houſe, they willed them to bee taken in unto them if they liſted. After this they minding to have entred into diſputation, there came a Gentleman as meſſenger from the Lord great Maſter, ſignifying unto the Prolocutor, that the Lord great Maſter, and the Earle of Devonſhire would be preſent at the diſputations, and therefore he deferred the ſame unto munday, at one of the clock at afternoone.

The Act of the third day.

The 3. Seſſion October 23.

Upon Munday the 23. of October, at the time appointed, in the preſence of many Earles, Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, and divers other of the Court and of the Citie alſo, the Prolocutor made a Proteſtation, that they of the Houſe had appointed this diſputation, not to call the truth into doubt, to the which they had already all ſubſcribed, ſaving five or ſixe, but that thoſe gaineſayers might bee reſolved of their arguments in the which they ſtood, as it ſhall appeare unto you, not doubting but they will alſo condeſcend unto us.

M. Haddon, & M. Elmar refuſed to anſwer except their requeſt were granted.

Then he demanded of maſter Haddon, whether hee would reaſon againſt the queſtions propoſed or no. To whom he made anſwer, that he had certified him before in writing, that he would not, ſince the requeſt of ſuch learned men, as were demanded to be aſſiſtant with them, would not be granted. Maſter Elmar likewiſe was asked who made the Prolocutor the like anſwer; adding moreover this, that they had done too much preiudice already to the truth, to ſubſcribe before the matter was diſcuſſed: and little or nothing it might availe to reaſon for the truth, ſince all they were now determined to the contrary. After this he demanded of Maſter Cheyney, whom the Prolocutor ſaid allowed the preſence with them (but he denyed the tranſubſtantiation by the meanes of certaine authorities upon the which he ſtandeth, and deſireth to be reſolved, as you ſhall heare) whether he will propoſe his doubts concerning tranſubſtantiation or no. Yea, quoth he, I would gladly my doubts to be reſolved, which moove me not to believe tranſubſtantiation.

M. Cheyney the archdeacon of Hereford now Biſhop of Gloceſter.

M. Cheyneyes doubts about tranſubſtantiation.

The firſt is out of S. Paul, to the Corinthians, who ſpeaking of the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, calleth it oft times bread after the conſecration.

The ſecond is out of Origen, who, ſpeaking of this ſacrament ſaith, that the materiall part thereof goeth downe to the excrements.

The third is out of Theodoretus, who, making mention of the Sacramentall bread and wine after the conſecration, ſaith that they goe not out of their former ſubſtance, forme, and ſhape. Theſe be ſome of my doubts among many other, wherein I require to be anſwered.

Moremans anſwer to Saint Paul.

Then the Prolocutor aſſigned Doctor Moreman to anſwer him, who to S. Paul anſwered him thus; That the Sacrament is called by him bread indeed: but it is thus to be underſtood, that it is the ſacrament of bread, that is, the forme of bread.

M. Cheyney replyeth to Moremans anſwer.

Then Maſter Cheney inferred and alledged, that Heſychius called the Sacrament both bread and fleſh.

Moremans anſwer to Theodoretus.

Yea, quoth Moreman, Heſychius calleth it bread, becauſe it was bread, and not becauſe it is ſo. And paſſing over Origen, hee came to Theodoretus, and ſaid, that men miſtook his authority, by interpreting a generall into a ſpeciall, as Peter Martyr hath done in the place of Theodoret, interpreting οὐσία, for ſubſtance, which is a ſpeciall ſignification of the word, whereas οὐσία is a generall word, as well to accidents as to ſubſtance; and therefore I anſwer thus unto Theodoret, that the ſacramentall bread and wine do not go out of their former ſubſtance, form, and ſhape, that is to ſay, not out of their accidentall ſubſtance and ſhape.

M. Elmar argueth againſt D. Moremans anſwer.

After this maſter Cheyney ſate him downe, and by and by maſter Elmar ſtood up as one that could not abide to heare ſo fond an anſwer to ſo grave an authority, and reaſoned upon the authority of Theodoret alledged before by maſter Cheyney, and declared, that Moremans anſwer to Theodoret was no iuſt nor ſufficient anſwer, but an illuſion and a ſubtile evaſion, contrary to Theodorets meaning. For, ſaid hee, if οὐσία ſhould ſignifie an accident in the place alledged, as it is anſwered by maſter Moreman, then were it a word ſuperfluous ſet in Theodoret there, where do follow two other words which ſufficiently doe expound the accidents of the bread, that is, εἶδος καὶ σχῆμα, which ſignifie in Engliſh, ſhape and forme; and ſo he proved out of the ſame author by divers allegations, that οὐσία in Greeke could not be ſo generally taken in that place, as Moreman for a ſhift would have it. But Moreman, as a man having no other ſalve for that ſore, affirmeth ſtill, that οὐσία, which ſignifieth ſubſtance, muſt needs ſignifie an accidentall ſubſtance properly. To whoſe importunitie, ſince he could have no other anſwer, Elmar as a man wearied with his importunity, gave place.

Moremans ſhift is overthrowne.

Philpots replication to Moremans ſhift.

After this ſtood up John Philpot, and ſaid, that he could prove, that by the matter that Theodoret intreateth of in the place above alledged, and by the ſimilitude which he maketh to prove his purpoſe, by no meanes maſter Moremans interpretation of οὐσία might be taken for an accidentall ſubſtance, as he for a ſhift would interpret it to bee. For the matter which Theodoret intreateth of in that place, is againſt Eutiches an heretike, which denyed two natures of ſubſtance to remaine in Chriſt, being one perſon, and that his humanity after the accompliſhment of the myſterie of our ſalvation, aſcending into heaven, and being ioyned unto the divinitie, was abſorpt, or ſwallowed up of the ſame, ſo that Chriſt ſhould be no more but of one divine ſubſtance onely by his opinion. Againſt which opinion Theodoret writeth, and by the ſimilitude of the Sacrament prooveth the contrary againſt the Heretike: that like as in the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt, after the conſecration there is the ſubſtance of Chriſts humanitie, with the ſubſtance of bread remaining as it was before, not being abſorpt of the humanitie of Chriſt, but ioyned by the divine operation thereunto; even ſo in the perſon of Chriſt, being now in heaven, of whom this Sacrament is a repreſentation, there be two ſeverall ſubſtances, that is, his divinitie and humanity united in one hypoſtaſie or perſon, which is Chriſt, the humanity not beving abſorpt by the coniunction of the divinity, but remaining in his former ſubſtance.

The place of Theodoret opened.

The argument of Theodoret, a ſimilitude.

The place of Theodoret falſly taken of the Papiſts.

And this ſimilitude, quoth Philpot, brought in of Theodoret to confound Eutiches, ſhould prove nothing at all, if the very ſubſtance of the Sacramentall bread did not remaine, as it did before. But if Doctor Moremans interpretation might take place for tranſubſtantiation, then ſhould the hereticke have thereby a ſtrong argument by Theodorets authoritie, ſo taken to maintaine his hereſie, and to prove himſelfe a good Chriſtian man, and hee might well ſay thus unto Theodoret: Like as thou Theodoret, if thou wert of Doctor Moremans minde, doeſt ſay, that after the conſecration in the ſacrament, the ſubſtance of the bread is abſorpt or tranſubſtantiate into the humane body of Chriſt comming thereunto, ſo that in the Sacrament is now but one ſubſtance of the humanity alone, and not the ſubſtance of bread as it was before: even ſo likewiſe may I affirme, and conclude by thine owne ſimilitude, that the humanitie aſcending up by the power of God into heeven, and adioyned unto the deity, was by the might thereof abſorpt and turned into one ſubſtance with the deitie; ſo that now there remaineth but one divine ſubſtance in Chriſt no more than in the ſacramentall ſignes of the Lords Supper, after the conſecration, doth remaine any more than one ſubſtance, according to your beliefe and conſtruction.

The falſe expoſition of D. Moreman upon Theodoretus overthrowne.

In anſwering to this, Doctor Moreman ſtackered, whoſe defect Philpot perceiving, ſpake on this wiſe, Well maſter Moreman, if you have no anſwer at this preſent ready, I pray you deviſe one if you can conveniently, againſt our next meeting here again.

Weſton is offended.

With that his ſaying the Prolocutor was grievouſly offended, telling him that hee ſhould not bragge there, but that he ſhould be fully anſwered. Then ſaid Philpot it is the thing that I only deſire, to bee anſwered directly in this behalfe; and I deſire of you, and of all the houſe at this preſent, that I may be ſufficiently anſwered, which I am ſure you are not ableto doe, ſaving Theodoretus authority and ſimilitude upright, as he ought to be taken. None other anſwer then was made to Philpots reaſon, but that he was commanded to ſilence.

Philpots replication anſwered by commanding him to ſilence.

This man called M. Philips, continued Deane of Rocheſter all Q. Maries time, and yet ſtill ſo remaineth.

Then ſtood up the Deane of Rocheſter offering himſelfe to reaſon in the firſt queſtion againſt the naturall preſence, wiſhing that the ſcripture, and the ancient Doctors in this point might be weighed, believed, and followed. And againſt this naturall preſence hee thought the ſaying of Chriſt in ſaint Matthew to make ſufficiently enough, if men would credit and follow ſcripture, who ſaid there of himſelfe, That poore men wee ſhould have alway with us, but him we ſhould not have alwayes: which was ſpoken, quoth he, concerning the naturall preſence of Chriſts body, therefore we ought to beleeve as he hath taught, that Chriſt is not naturally preſent on earth in the ſacrament of the Altar.

Weſtons anſwer to the Deane.

To this was anſwered by the prolocutor, that we ſhould not have Chriſt preſent alwaies to exerciſe almes-deeds upon him, but upon the poore.

The Deanes replication.

But the Deane proſecuted his argument, and ſhewed it out of ſaint Auguſtine further, that the ſame interpretation of the ſcripture alledged, was no ſufficient anſwere, who writeth in the 50. treatiſe of ſaint John on this wiſe, on the ſame ſentence; When as hee ſaid (ſaith ſaint Auguſtine) mee ſhall yee not have alwaies with you; hee ſpake of the preſence of his body. For by his majeſty, by his providence, by his unſpeakable and inviſible grace, that is fulfilled which is ſaid of him; Behold I am with you untill the conſummation of the world. But in the fleſh which the Word tooke upon him, in that which was borne of the Virgin, in that which was apprehended of the Iewes, which was crucified on the Croſſe, which was let downe from the Croſſe, which was wrapped in clouts, which was hid in the Sepulchre, which was manifeſted in the reſurrection, You ſhall not have me alwayes with you. And why? For after a bodily preſence hee was converſant with his Diſciples forty dayes, and they accompanying him, ſeeing and not following him, he aſcended and is not here; for there hee ſitteth at the right hand of the Father; and yet here he is, becauſe he is not departed in the preſence of his Majeſtie. After another manner wee have Chriſt alwayes by the preſence of his majeſty, but after the preſence of his fleſh it is rightly ſaid, You ſhall not verily have me alwaies with you. For the Church had him in the preſence of his fleſh a few dayes, and now by faith it apprehendeth him, and ſeeth him not with eyes.

Auguſt. in Ioan. tract. 5

A notable authority out of S. Auguſtin

Watſons anſwer to S. Auguſtine.
Aug. in Ioan. tract. 70.

To this authoritie Doctor Watſon tooke upon him to anſwer, and ſaid, he would anſwer ſaint Auguſtine by ſaint Auguſtine, and having a certaine booke in his hand of notes, he alledged out of the 70. treatiſe upon ſaint John, that after that mortall condition and manner we have not now Chriſt on earth, as he was heretofore before his paſſion.

Philpot againſt Watſon

Againſt whoſe anſwer John Philpot replied and ſaid, that maſter Watſon had not fully anſwered ſaint Auguſtine by ſaint Auguſtine, as hee would ſeeme to have done, for that in the place above mentioned by maſter Deane of Rocheſter, he doth not only teach the mortall ſtate of Chriſts body before his paſſion, but alſo the immortall condition of the ſame after his reſurrection: in the which mortall body ſaint Auguſtine ſeemeth plainly to affirme, that Chriſt is not preſent upon the earth, neither in forme viſibly, neither in corporall ſubſtance inviſibly, as in few lines after the place above alledged, ſaint Auguſtine doth more plainly declare by theſe words, ſaying Now theſe two manners of Chriſts preſence declared, which is by his majeſtie, providence, and grace now preſent in the world, which before his aſcenſion was preſent in fleſh; and being now placed at the right hand of the father, is abſent in the ſame from the world, I thinke (ſaith ſaint Auguſtine) that there remaineth no other queſtion in this matter.

Now, quoth Philpot, if ſaint Auguſtine acknowledged no more preſence of Chriſt to bee now on earth, but only his divine preſence, and touching his humanity to be in heaven, we ought to confeſſe and believe the ſame. But if we put a third preſence of Chriſt, that is corporally to bee preſent alwaies in the Sacrament of the Altar inviſibly, according to your ſuppoſitions, whereof ſaint Auguſtine maketh no mention at all in all his workes; you ſhall ſeeme to iudge that which ſaint Auguſtine did never comprehend.

Watſon.

Why, quoth Watſon, S. Auguſtine in the place by me alledged, maketh he no mention how ſaint Steven, being in this world, ſaw Chriſt after his aſcenſion?

Philpot.

It is true, ſaid Philpot; but he ſaw Chriſt as the Scripture telleth, in the heavens being open, ſtanding at the right hand of God the Father. Further to this Watſon anſwered not.

D. Weſton.

Then the Prolocutor went about to furniſh up an anſwer to ſaint Auguſtine, ſaying, that he is not now in the world after the manner of bodily preſence, but yet preſent for all that in his bodie.

Philpot replyeth to Weſton.

To whom Philpot anſwered, that the Prolocutor did grate much upon this word ſecundum in Saint Auguſtine, which ſignifieth after the manner, or in forme: but hee doth not anſwer to id quod, which is that thing or ſubſtance of Chriſt, in the which Chriſt ſuffered, aroſe, and aſcended into heaven, in the which thing and ſubſtance he is in heaven, and not in earth. as ſaint Auguſtine in the place ſpecified moſt cleerly doth define.

The Deane of Rocheſter.

To this nothing elſe being anſwered, the Deane of Rocheſter proceeded in the maintenance of his argument, and read out of a booke of Annotations ſundry authorities for the confirmation thereof. To the which Moreman, who was appointed to anſwer him, made no direct anſwer, but bade him make an argument, ſaying, that maſter Deane had recited many words of Doctors, but he made not one argument.

Moreman.

Then ſaid the Deane, the authorities of the Doctors by me rehearſed, bee ſufficient arguments to prove mine intent, to the which my deſire is to be anſwered of you. But ſtill Moreman cryed, make an argument, to ſhift off the authority which he could not anſwer unto. After this the Deane made this argument out of the inſtitution of the Sacrament; Do this in remembrance of me: and thus ye ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death untill he come.

Argument.

The ſacrament is the remembrance of Chriſt: Ergo, the Sacrament is not very Chriſt; for yet he is not come. For theſe words, Untill he come, doe plainly ſignifie the abſence of Chriſts bodie. Then the Prolocutor went about to ſhew that theſe words, Untill he come, did not import any abſence of Chriſt on the earth, by other places of Scripture, where Donec, Untill, was uſed in like ſence; but directly to the purpoſe he anſwered nothing. In concluſion, the Deane fell to queſtioning with Moreman, whether Chriſt did eate the Paſchall Lambe with his Diſciples, or no? He anſwered, Yea. Further, he demanded whether he did eat likewiſe the ſacrament with them, as he did inſtitute it? Moreman anſwered, Yea. Then he aſked what he did eate, and whether he did eat his owne naturall bodie, as they imagine it to be, or no? Which when Moreman had affirmed; then ſaid the Deane, it is a great abſurditie by you granted, and ſo he ſate downe.

Weſton anſwereth to the argument.
Donec in Scripture.

M. Deanes queſtions.

Moreman affirmeth that Chriſt did eat his owne body.

Philpot.

Againſt this abſurdity Philpot ſtood up and argued; ſaying, he could prove it by good reaſon deduced out of the ſcripture, that Chriſt eat not his owne naturall body at the inſtitution of the ſacrament, and the reaſon is this.

Argument.

Ba- Receiving of Chriſt body hath a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins with it annexed.

ro- Chriſt eating the ſacrament, had no promiſe of remiſſion of ſin.

co. Ergo, Chriſt in the ſacrament did not eat his own body.

Moreman denieth the ſacrament to have a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins annexed to it.

To this reaſon Moreman anſwered, denying the former part of the argument, that the ſacrament had a promiſe of remiſſion of ſins annexed unto it.

Philpot.

Then Philpot ſhewed this to be the promiſe in the ſacrament; Which is given for you, which is ſhed for you, for the remiſſion of ſins. But Moreman would not acknowledge that to be any promiſe, ſo that he drave Philpot to the ſixth of ſaint John, to vouch his ſaying with theſe words; The bread which I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world.

Harpsfield affirmeth that which his fellow denyed.

Moreman anſwering nothing directly to this argument, Harpsfield ſtart up to ſupply that which wanted in his behalf; and thinking to have anſwered Philpot, confirmed more ſtrongly his argument, ſaying; Ye miſtake the promiſe which is annexed to the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament: for it pertained not to Chriſt, but to his Diſciples, to whom Chriſt ſaid, This is my body which is given for you, and not for Chriſt himſelfe.

Philpot.

You have ſaid well for me, quoth Philpot, for that is mine argument. The promiſe of the body of Chriſt took no effect in Chriſt: Ergo, Chriſt eat not his owne body.

Weſton alſo is contrary to Moreman.

Then the Prolocutor to ſhoulder out the matter, ſaid, the argument was naught. For by the like argument he might goe about to prove, that Chriſt was not baptiſed, becauſe the remiſſion of ſinne, which is annexed unto Baptiſme, took no effect in Chriſt. To the which Philpot replied, that like as Chriſt was baptiſed, ſo he eat the ſacrament; but he tooke on him Baptiſme, not that he had any need thereof; or that it tooke any effect in him, but as our maſter to give the Church an example to follow him in the miniſtration of the Sacrament, and therby to exhibit unto us himſelfe, and not to give himſelf to himſelfe.

M. Philpots argument not ſoluted.

No more was ſaid in this. But afterward the Prolocutor demanded of Philpot, whether hee would argue againſt the naturall preſence, or no? To whom he anſwered, Yea, if he would heare his argument without interruption, and aſſigne one to anſwer him, and not many, which is a confuſion to the Opponent, and ſpecially for him that was of an ill memory. By this time the night was come on; wherefore the Prolocutor brake up the diſputation for that time, and appointed Philpot to be the firſt that ſhould begin the diſputation the next day after, concerning the preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament.

The Convocation continued to the next day.

The Act of the fourth day.

M. Philpot not ſuffered by the Prolocutor to make his declaration.

ON the Wedneſday the 25. of October, John Philpot as it was before appointed, was ready to have entred the diſputation, minding firſt to have made a certaine Oration, and a true declaration in Latine of the matter of Chriſts preſence which was then in queſtion. Which thing the Prolocutor perceiving, by and by hee forbad Philpot to make any oration or declaration of any matter, commanding him alſo that he ſhould make no argument in Latine, but to conclude on his arguments in Engliſh.

D. Weſton contrary to his owne words.

Then ſaid Philpot, this is contrary to your order taken at the beginning of this diſputation. For then you appointed that all the arguments ſhould be made in Latine, and thereupon I have drawne and deviſed all mine arguments in Latine. And becauſe you maſter Prolocutor have ſaid heretofore openly in this houſe that I had no learning, I had thought to have ſhewed ſuch learning, as I have in a briefe Oration, and ſhort declaration of the queſtions now in controverſie, thinking it ſo moſt convenient alſo, that in caſe I ſhould ſpeake otherwiſe in my declaration than ſhould ſtand with learning, or than I were able to warrant, and iuſtifie by Gods Word, it might the better be reformed by ſuch as were learned of the houſe, ſo that the unlearned ſort being preſent, might take the leſſe offence thereat. But this allegation prevailed nothing with the prolocutor, who bad him ſtill forme an argument in Engliſh, or elſe to hold his peace.

Then ſaid Philpot, You have ſore diſappointed me, thus ſuddenly to goe from your former order: but I will accompliſh your commandement, leaving mine oration apart; and I will come to my arguments, the which aſwell as ſo ſudden a warning will ſerve, I will make in Engliſh. But before I bring forth any argument, I will in one word declare what manner of preſence I diſallow in the Sacrament, to the intent the hearers may the better underſtand to what end and effect mine arguments ſhall tend; not to deny utterly the preſence of Chriſt in his Sacrament, truly miniſtred according to his inſtitution, but only to deny that groſſe and carnall preſence, which you of this houſe have already ſubſcribed unto, to be in the ſacrament of the Altar, contrary to the true and manifeſt meaning of the Scriptures: that by tranſubſtantiation of the Sacramentall bread and wine, Chriſts naturall body ſhould, by yͤ vertue of the words pronounced by the prieſt, bee contained and included under the formes or accidents of bread and wine. This kind of preſence imagined by men I doe deny, quoth Philpot, and againſt this I will reaſon. But before he could make an end of that he would have ſaid, he was interrupted of the Prolocutor, and commanded to deſcend to his argument. At whoſe uniuſt importunitie Philpot being offended, and thinking to purchaſe him a remedy therfore, he fell down upon his knees before the Earles and Lords which were there preſent, being a great number; whereof ſome were of the Queenes Councell, beſeeching them that hee might have liberty to proſecute his arguments, without interruption of any man; the which was gently granted him of the Lords. But the Prolocutor, putting in ure a point of the practiſe of prelates, would not condeſcend thereunto, but ſtill cryed, Hold your peace, or elſe make a ſhort argument. I am about it, quoth Philpot, if you will let mee alone. But firſt, I muſt needs aſke a queſtion of my Reſpondent (who was Doctor Chedſey) concerning a word or twaine of your ſuppoſition, that is, of the Sacrament of the Altar, what hee meaneth thereby, and whether he taketh it as ſome of the ancient Writers do, terming the Lords ſupper the ſacrament of the altar partly becauſe it is a Sacrament of that lively ſacrifice which Chriſt offered for our ſinnes upon the altar of the Croſſe, and partly becauſe that Chriſts body, crucified for us, was that bloody ſacrifice, which the blood-ſhedding of all the beaſts offered upon the altar in the old Law, did prefigurate and ſignifie unto us: in ſignification whereof the old Writers ſometime doe call the Sacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, among other names which they aſcribe thereunto, the Sacrament of the Altar; or whether you take it otherwiſe; as for the ſacrament of the Altar, which is made of lime and ſtone, over the which the ſacrament hangeth, and to be all one with the ſacrament of the maſſe, as it is at this preſent in many places. This done, I will direct mine arguments according as your anſwer ſhall give me occaſion.

The preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament diſtinguiſhed.

The true preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament not denied.

The groſſe preſence of the Papiſts denied

Philpot craveth of the Lords to proſecute his arguments without interruption.

Philpot againe interrupted by the Prolocutor.

Altar diverſly taken.

Then made Doctor Chedſey this anſwer, that in their ſuppoſition they tooke the ſacrament of the Altar, and the ſacrament of the Maſſe, to be all one.

Chedſey.

Then, quoth Philpot, I will ſpeake plaine Engliſh as maſter prolocutor willeth me, and make a ſhort reſolution thereof; that the ſacrament of the altar, which ye reckon to be all one with the Maſſe, once iuſtly aboliſhed, and now put in full uſe againe, is no ſacrament at all, neither is Chriſt in any wiſe preſent in it; and this his ſaying hee offered to proove before the whole houſe, if they liſted to call him thereunto: and likewiſe he offered to vouch the ſame before the Queenes Grace, and her moſt honourable Councell, before the face of ſixe of the beſt learned men of the houſe of the contrary opinion, and refuſed none. And if I ſhall not be able quoth he, to maintain by Gods word that I have ſaid, and confound thoſe ſixe which ſhall take upon them to withſtand me in this point, let me be burned with as many fagots as be in London, before the Court gates. This he uttered with great vehemency of ſpirit.

Philpots offer in the Convocation houſe.

At this the prolocutor with divers other were very much offended demanding of him whether he wiſt what he ſaid, or no? Yea, quoth Philpot, I wot well what I ſay, deſiring no man to be offended with his ſaying, for that he ſpake no more than by Gods word hee was able to prove. And praiſed be God, quoth he, that the Queenes Grace hath granted us of this houſe (as our prolocutor hath informed us) that wee may freely utter our conſciences in theſe matters of controverſie in Religion: and therfore I will ſpeake here my conſcience freely, grounded upon Gods holy word, for the truth, albeit ſome of you here preſent miſlike the ſame.

The Prolocutor threatneth Philpot.

Argumentum à loco topico carceris.

Then divers of the houſe, beſide the Prolocutor, taunted and reprehended him for ſpeaking ſo unfaringly againſt the ſacrament of the Maſs: and the Prolocutor ſaid he was mad, and threatned him, that he would ſend him to priſon, if hee would not ceaſe his ſpeaking.

Philpot ſeeing himſelfe thus abuſed, and not permitted with free liberty to declare his mind, fell into an exclamation, caſting his eyes up towards the heaven, and ſaid, O Lord, what a world is this, that the truth of thy holy word may not be ſpoken and abidden by: and for very ſorrow and heavineſſe the teares trickled out of his eyes.

Philpot permitted to make a briefe argument.

After this, the Prolocutor being mooved by ſome that were about him, was content that hee ſhould make an argument, ſo that he would bee briefe therein. I will be as briefe, quoth Philpot, as I may conveniently bee in uttering all that I have to ſay. And firſt, I will begin to ground mine arguments upon the authoritie of Scriptures, whereupon all the building of our faith ought to be grounded; and after I ſhall confirme the ſame by ancient Doctors of the Church. And I take the occaſion of the firſt argument out of the 28. of Matthew, of the ſaying of the Angel to the three Maries ſeeing Chriſt at the Sepulchre, ſaying; He is riſen, hee is not here: and in ſaint Luke in the 23. Chapter, the Angell asketh them, why they ſought him that liveth among the dead. Likewiſe the Scripture teſtifieth, that Chriſt is riſen, aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of the Father: all the which is ſpoken of his naturall body: Ergo, it is not on earth included in the Sacrament.

Luke 23.

Argument of M. Philpot.

I will confirme this yet more effectually, by the ſaying of Chriſt in the 16. of ſaint John; I came (ſaith Chriſt) from my Father into the world, and now I leave the world and goe away to my Father. The which comming and going hee meant of his naturall body. Therefore we may affirme thereby, that it is not found in the world.

Iohn 16.

The blind diſtinction of the Papiſts of Viſibly, and Inviſibly.

But I looke here, quoth he, to bee anſwered with a blinde diſtinction of viſibly and inviſibly, that he is viſibly departed in his humanitie, but inviſibly hee remaineth notwithſtanding in the Sacrament. But that anſwer I prevent my ſelfe, that with more expedition I may deſcend to the pith of mine arguments, whereof I have a dozen to propoſe, and will proove that no ſuch diſtinction ought to take away the force of that argument, by the anſwer which Chriſts diſciples gave unto him, ſpeaking theſe words; Now thou ſpeakeſt plainly and uttereſt forth no proverb. Which words ſaint Cyril interpreting, ſaith; That Chriſt ſpake without any manner of ambiguity and obſcure ſpeech. And therefore I conclude hereby thus, that if Chriſt ſpake plainly, and without parable, ſaying; I leave the world now and goe away to my Father, then that obſcure, darke, and inperceptible preſence of Chriſts naturall body to remaine in the Sacrament upon earth inviſibly, contrary to the plaine words of Chriſt, ought not to be allowed. For nothing can be more uncertain or more parabolicall and unſenſible, than ſo to ſay. Here now will I attend what you will anſwer, and ſo deſcend to the confirmation of all that I have ſaid by ancient Writers.

Cyrillus.

Chedſeyes anſwer to Philpot.

Then Doctor Chedſey reciting his argument in ſuch order as it was made, tooke upon him to anſwer ſeverally to every part thereof on this wiſe. Firſt, to the ſaying of the Angell, That Chriſt is not here; And, why ſeeke yee the living among the dead? He anſwered, that theſe ſayings pertained nothing to the preſence of Chriſts naturall body in the Sacrament, but that they were ſpoken of Chriſts body being in the ſepulchre, when the three Maries thought him to have been in the grave ſtill. And therefore the Angell ſaid, Why doe yee ſeeke him that liveth among the dead? And to the authoritie of the 16. of John, where Chriſt ſaith, Now I leave the world and goe to my Father, hee meant that of his aſcenſion. And ſo likewiſe did Cyrill, interpreting the ſaying of the diſciples that knew plainly that Chriſt would viſibly aſcend into heaven, but that doth not exclude the inviſible preſence of his naturall body in the ſacrament. For S. Chryſoſtome writing to the people of Antioch, doth affirm the ſame, comparing Helias and Chriſt together, and Helias cloake and Chriſts fleſh: Helias (quoth he) when he was taken up in the fiery chariot, left his cloak behind him unto his diſciple Heliſæus. But Chriſt, aſcending into heaven tooke his fleſh with him, and left alſo his fleſh behinde him. Whereby we may right well gather, that Chriſts fleſh is viſibly aſcended into heaven, and inviſibly abideth ſtill in the Sacrament of the Altar.

Chryſoſt. ad pop. Antioc.

Philpots anſwer to Chedſey.

To this Philpot replyed, and ſaid, You have not directly anſwered to the ſaying of the Angel, Chriſt is riſen, and is not here, becauſe you have omitted that which was the chiefeſt point of all. For (ſaid he) I proceed further, as thus; He is riſen, aſcended, and ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father: Ergo, he is not remaining on the earth. Neither is your anſwer to Cyril, by me alledged, ſufficient. But by and by I will returne to your interpretation of Cyril, and more plainly declare the ſame, after that I have firſt refelled the authority of Chryſoſtome, which is one of your chief principles that you alledged, to make for your groſſe carnall preſence in the Sacrament; which being well weighed and underſtanded, pertaineth nothing thereunto.

Philpot again interrupted by the Prolocutor.

At that the Prolocutor ſtartled, that one of the chiefe pillars in this point ſhould bee overthrowne; and therefore recited the ſaid authority in Latine firſt, and afterward Engliſhed the ſame, willing all that were preſent to note that ſaying of Chryſoſtome, which he thought invincible on their ſide. But I will make it appeare (quoth Philpot) by and by that it doth make little for your purpoſe. And as he was about to declare his minde in that behalfe, the Prolocutor did interrupt him, as hee did almoſt continually. Wherewith Philpot not being content, ſaid; Maſter Prolocutor thinketh that he is in a Sophiſtry Schoole, where he knoweth right wel the manner is, that when the Reſpondent perceiveth, that he is like to be inforced with an argument, to the which he is not able to anſwer, thus he doth what he can with cavillation and interruption to drive him from the ſame. This ſaying of Philpot was ill taken of the Prolocutor and his adherents; and the Prolocutor ſaid, that Philpot could bring nothing to avoyde that authority, but his owne vaine imagination. Here quoth Philpot, and afterward iudge. For I will do this, as in all other authorities, wherwith you ſhall charge me in refelling any of my arguments that I have to proſecute, anſwering either unto the ſame by ſufficient authorities of Scripture, or elſe by ſome other teſtimony of like authority of yours, and not of mine owne imagination; the which if I doe, I will it to be of no credit. And concerning the ſaying of Chryſoſtome, I have two wayes to beate him from your purpoſe; the one out of Scripture, the other of Chryſoſtome himſelfe in the place here by you alledged.

The place of Chryſoſtome of Chriſt taking up his fleſh, and leaving his fleſh, anſwered to by Philpot.

Epheſ. 5.

Chryſoſtome expounded by Chryſoſtome.

Galat. 3.

Firſt, where hee ſeemeth to ſay, that Chriſt aſcending tooke his fleſh with him, and left alſo his fleſh behinde him, truth it is: for we all doe confeſſe and beleeve that Chriſt tooke on him our humane nature in the Virgin Maries wombe, and through his paſſion in the ſame hath united us to his fleſh, and thereby are wee become one fleſh with him, ſo that Chryſoſtome might therefore right well ſay, that Chriſt aſcending tooke his fleſh, which he received of the Virgin Mary, away with him; and alſo left his fleſh behind him, which are we that be his elect in this world, which are the members of Chriſt, and fleſh of his fleſh; as very aptly S. Paul to the Epheſians in the fifth Chapter doth teſtifie, ſaying; Wee are fleſh of his fleſh and bone of his bones. And if percaſe any man will reply, that hee intreateth there of the Sacrament, ſo that this interpretation cannot ſo aptly be applyed unto him in that place, then will I yet interpret Chryſoſtome another way by himſelfe. For in that place, a few lines before thoſe words which were here now lately read, are theſe words; That Chriſt, after he aſcended into heaven, left unto us, indued with his Sacraments, his fleſh in myſteries, that is, Sacramentally. And that myſticall fleſh Chriſt leaveth as well to his Church in the ſacrament of Baptiſme, as in the Sacramentall bread and wine. And that ſaint Paul iuſtly doth witneſſe, ſaying; As many of us as are baptiſed in Chriſt have put upon us Chriſt. And thus you may underſtand that ſaint Chryſoſtome maketh nothing for your carnall and groſſe preſence in the ſacrament, as you wrongfully take him.

Weſton.

Now in this meane while maſter Pie rounded the Prolocutor in the eare to put Philpot to ſilence, and to appoint ſome other, miſtruſting leſt hee would ſhrewdly ſhake their carnall preſence in concluſion, if he held on long, ſeeing in the beginning he gave one of their chief foundations ſuch a plucke. Then the Prolocutor ſaid to Philpot, that he had reaſoned ſufficiently enough, and that ſome other ſhould now ſupply his roome. Wherewith hee was not well content, ſaying: Why ſir, I have a dozen arguments concerning this matter to be propoſed, and I have yet ſcarce overgone my firſt argument; for I have not brought in any confirmation thereof out of any ancient Writer (whereof I have for the ſame purpoſe many) being hitherto ſtill letted by your oft interrupting of me.

A good ſolution for all his arguments.

Well, quoth the Prolocutor, you ſhall ſpeak no more now, and I command you to hold your peace. You perceive, quoth Philpot, that I have ſtuffe enough for you, and am able to withſtand your falſe ſuppoſition, and therefore you command me to ſilence. If you will not give place, quoſth the Prolocutor, I will ſend you to priſon. This is not, quoth Philpot, according to your promiſe made in this houſe, nor yet according to your bragge made at Pauls Croſſe, that men ſhould be anſwered in this diſputation to whatſoever they can ſay, ſince you will not ſuffer me of a dozen arguments to proſecute one.

Then maſter Pie tooke upon him to promiſe that he ſhould be anſwered another day. Philpot ſeeing he might not proceed in his purpoſe, being therewith iuſtly offended, ended, ſaying thus: A ſort of you here, which hitherto have lurked in corners, and diſſembled with God and the World, are now gathered together to ſuppreſſe the ſincere truth of Gods holy Word, and to ſet forth every falſe device, which by the Catholicke doctrine of the Scripture yee are not able to maintaine.

Maſter Elmar again ſteppeth forth. ȣσία.

Moreman deſireth a day to imagine ſome crafty ſhift.

Then ſtepped forth maſter Elmar, Chaplaine to the Duke of Suffolke, whom maſter Moreman tooke upon him to anſwer: Againſt whom maſter Elmar obiected divers and ſundry authorities for the confirming of the argument he tooke the day before in hand, to prove that ȣσία in the ſentence of Theodoret, brought in by maſter Cheyney muſt needs ſignifie ſubſtance, and not accidents. Whoſe reaſons and approbations, becauſe they were all grounded and brought out of the Greeke, I doe paſſe over, for that they want their grace in Engliſh, and alſo their proper underſtanding. But his allegations ſo incumbred M. Moreman, that he deſired a day to overview them, for at that inſtant he was without a convenient anſwer.

Watſon confounded by maſter Haddon.

Maſter Watſon for a bare ſhift putteth the fault in the Printer

Then did the Prolocutor call maſter Haddon Deane of Exceter, and Chaplaine to the Duke of Suffolke, who proſecuted Theodorets authoritie in confirming maſter Elmars argument. To whom Doctor Watſon tooke upon him to give anſwer; who after long talke was ſo confounded, that he was not able to anſwer to the word Myſterium. But foraſmuch as he ſeemed to doubt therein, maſter Haddon tooke out of his boſome a Latine Author to confirme his ſaying, and ſhewed the ſame to maſter Watſon, asking him whether hee thought that tranſlation to bee true, or that the Printer were in any fault. There may bee a fault in the Printer, quoth Watſon, for I am not remembred of this word. Then did maſter Haddon take out of his boſome a Greeke booke, wherein he ſhewed forth with his finger the ſame words, which maſter Watſon could not deny. His arguments further I omit to declare at large, becauſe they were for the moſt part in Greek, about the doulting of the true ſignification of ȣσία.

M. Perne againſt tranſubſtantiation.

D. Weſton praiſeth their learning to flatter them, but he anſwereth not their arguments.

Then ſtept forth maſter Perne, and in argument made declaration of his minde againſt tranſubſtantiation, and confirmed the ſayings and authorities alledged by maſter Elmar and maſter Haddon. To whom the Prolocutor anſwered, ſaying; I much marvell maſter Perne, that you will ſay thus, for ſo much as on Friday laſt you ſubſcribed to the contrary. Which his ſaying maſter Elmar did miſlike, ſaying to the Prolocutor, that he was too blame ſo to reprehend any man, partly for that this houſe, quoth hee, is an houſe of free libertie for every man to ſpeake his conſcience, and partly for that you promiſed yeſterday, that notwithſtanding any man had ſubſcribed, yet he ſhould have free libertie to ſpeake his minde. And for that the night did approach, and the time was ſpent, the Prolocutor, giving them praiſes for their learning, did yet notwithſtanding conclude, that all reaſoning ſet apart, the order of the holy Church muſt be received, and all things muſt be ordered thereby.

The act of the fifth day.

October 27.

Maſter Haddon Deane of Exceter diſputeth againſt M. Watſon, Morgan, and Harpsfiel

On Friday the 27. of October, Doctor Weſton the Prolocutor did firſt propound the matter, ſhewing that the Convocation hath ſpent two dayes in diſputation already about one only Doctor, which was Theodoret, and about one only word which was ȣσία. Yet were they come the third day to anſwer all things that could bee obiected, ſo that they would ſhortly put their arguments. So maſter Haddon Deane of Exceter deſired leave to oppoſe maſter Watſon, which with two other moe, that is, Morgan and Harpsfield, was appointed to anſwer, maſter Haddon demanded this of him, whether any ſubſtance of bread or wine did remaine after the conſecration. Then maſter Watſon asked of him againe, whether hee thought there to be a real preſence of Chriſts body or no? Maſter Haddon ſaid, it was not meet nor order like that he which was appointed to be Reſpondent ſhould be Opponent, and he whoſe dutie was to obiect ſhould anſwer. Yet maſter Watſon a long while would not agree to anſwer, but that thing firſt being granted him, at laſt an order was ſet, and Maſter Haddon had leave to goe forward with his argument.

The words of Theodoretus alledged.

A popiſh diſtinction betweene ſubſtance and eſſence.

Then he proved by Theodorets words a ſubſtance of bread and wine remaine. For theſe are his words; The ſame they were before the ſanctification, which they are after. Maſter Watſon ſaid, that Theodoret meant not the ſame ſubſtance, but the ſame eſſence. Whereupon they were driven again unto the diſcuſſing of the Greeke word οὐσία; and maſter Haddon proved it to meane a ſubſtance, both by the Etymology of the word, and by the words of the Doctor. For οὐσία, quoth he, commeth to the Participle ὢν, which deſcendeth to the Verb εἰμὶ, and ſo commeth the Noune οὐσία, which ſignifieth ſubſtance.

Then maſter Watſon anſwered that it had not that ſignification only. But maſter Haddon proved that it muſt needs ſo ſignifie in that place. Then he asked Watſon when the bread and wine became ſymboles? Whereunto he anſwered; after the conſecration, and not before. Then gathered maſter Haddon this reaſon out of his Author.

Argument of M. Haddon.

Da- The ſame thing, ſaith Theodoret, that the bread and wine were before they were Symboles, the ſame they remaine ſtill in nature and ſubſtance, after they are Symboles.
ti- Bread and wine they were before:
ſi. Therefore bread and wine they are after.

Watſon is driven to a ſhamefull ſhift, to deny the Author when he cannot anſwer.

M. Cheyney.

Then maſter Watſon fell to the denyall of the Author, and ſaid he was a Neſtorian; and he deſired that he might anſwer to maſter Cheyney which ſtood by, for that he was more meet to diſpute in the matter, becauſe he had granted and ſubſcribed unto the reall preſence. Maſter Cheyney deſired patience of the honourable men to heare him, truſting that hee ſhould ſo open the matter, that the veritie ſhould appeare: proteſting furthermore, that he was no obſtinate nor ſtubborne man, but would be conformable to all reaſon: and if they by their learning, which he acknowledged to bee much more than his, could anſwer his reaſons, then he would be ruled by them, and ſay as they ſaid; for he would be no author of ſchiſme, nor hold any thing contrary to the holy mother the Church, which is Chriſts Spouſe. Doctor Weſton liked this well, and commended him highly, ſaying that hee was a well learned and ſober man, and well exerciſed in all good learning, and in the Doctors, and finally, a man meet for his knowledge to diſpute in that place; I pray you heare him, quoth he. Then maſter Cheney deſired ſuch as there were preſent to pray two words with him unto God, and to ſay, Vincat veritas, Let the veritie take place, and have the victory; and all that were preſent cried with a loud voice, Vincat veritas, Vincat veritas.

Maſter Cheyneyes prayer.

Weſton.

Then ſaid Doctor Weſton to him, that it was hypocriticall. Men may better ſay, quoth he, Vicit veritas, Truth hath gotten the victory. Maſter Cheyney ſaid againe, if he would give him leave he would bring it to that point, that hee might well ſay ſo.

M. Cheyney and Watſon diſpute.

Then hee began with maſter Watſon after this ſort: You ſaid that maſter Haddon was unmeet to diſpute, becauſe he granteth not the naturall and reall preſence; but I ſay you are much more unmeet to anſwer, becauſe you take away the ſubſtance of the ſacrament.

M. Haddon challenged for ſubſcribing to the reall preſence.

Maſter Watſon ſaid, he had ſubſcribed to the reall preſence, and ſhould not goe away from that. So ſaid Weſton alſo, and the reſt of the prieſts, in ſo much that for a great while he could have no leave to ſay any more, till the Lords ſpake, and willed that he ſhould be heard.

Then he told them what he meant by his ſubſcribing to the reall preſence, farre otherwiſe than they ſuppoſed. So then he went forward, and proſecuted maſter Haddons argument in proving that οὐσία was a ſubſtance, uſing the ſame reaſon that maſter Haddon did before him, and when he had received the ſame anſwer alſo that was made to maſter Haddon, hee ſaid it was but a lewd refuge when they could not anſwer, to deny the Author, and proved the Author to be a Catholike Doctor; and that being proved, hee confirmed that which was ſaid of the nature and ſubſtance further. The ſimilitude of Theodoret is this quoth he; As the tokens of Chriſts body and blood, after the invocation of the Prieſt, doe change their names, and yet continue the ſame ſubſtance; ſo the body of Chriſt after his aſcenſion changed his name, and was called immortall, yet had it his former faſhion, figure, and circumſcription, and to ſpeak at one word, the ſame ſubſtance of his body. Therfore ſaid maſter Cheyney, if in the former part of the ſimilitude you deny the ſame ſubſtance to continue, then in the latter part of the ſimilitude, which agreeth with it, I will deny the body of Chriſt after his aſcenſion to have the former nature and ſubſtance. But that were a great hereſie; therefore it is alſo a great hereſie to take away the ſubſtance of bread and wine after the ſanctification.

The argument of Theodoret renued by maſter Cheyney.

Then was maſter Watſon inforced to ſay, that the ſubſtance of the body, in the former part of the ſimilitude brought in by him, did ſignifie quantitie, and other accidents of the ſacramentall tokens which be ſeene, and not the very ſubſtance of the ſame; and therefore Theodoret ſaith, Quæ videntur, &c. that is, thoſe things which bee ſeene. For according to Philoſophy, the accidents of things be ſeene, and not the ſubſtances.

M. Cheyney appealed to the Lords.

Then maſter Cheyney appealed to the honourable men, and deſired that they ſhould give no credit to them in ſo ſaying: for if they ſhould ſo think as they would teach, after their Lordſhips had ridden forty miles on horſe backe (as their buſineſſe doth ſometime require) they ſhould not be able to ſay at night, that they ſaw their horſes all the day, but only the colour of their horſes; and by this reaſon Chriſt muſt goe to ſchoole, and learne of Ariſtotle to ſpeake. For when hee ſaw Nathaniel under the figge-tree, if Ariſtotle had ſtood by, he would have ſaid, No Chriſt, thou ſaweſt not him, but the colour of him. After this, Watſon ſaid, What if it were granted that Theodoret was on the other ſide? Whereas they had one of that opinion, there were an hundred on the other ſide,

Morgan is called for to help at a pinch.

Then the Prolocutor called for maſter Morgan to helpe, and ſaid, that Theodoret did no more than he might lawfully doe. For firſt he granted the truth, and then, for feare of ſuch as were not fully inſtructed in the faith, hee ſpake, αἰνιγματικῶς, that is, covertly, and in a myſtery; and this was lawfull for him to doe: for firſt he granted the truth, and called them the body of Chriſt, and blood of Chriſt. Then afterwards he ſeemed to give ſomewhat to the ſenſes, and to reaſon: but that Theodoret is of the ſame minde that they were of, the words following, quoth he, doe declare. For that which followeth is a cauſe of that which went before, and therefore he ſaith, The immortality, &c. Whereby it doth appeare, that he meant the divine nature, and not the humane. Then was Morgan taken with miſalledging of the text. For the booke had not this word (for.) For the Greeke word did rather ſignifie (truly) and not (for,) ſo that it might manifeſtly appeare, that it was the beginning of a new matter, and not a ſentence rendring a cauſe of that he had ſaid before.

Morgan is taken with falſe alledging of the text.

Then it was ſaid by Watſon againe; Suppoſe that Theodoret be with you, which is one that we never heard of printed, but two or three yeeres ago; yet is he but one, and what is one againſt the whole conſent of the Church? After this Maſter Cheyney inferred, that not onely Theodoret was of that mind, that the ſubſtance of bread and wine do remaine, but divers other alſo, and ſpecially Ireneus, who, making mention of this Sacrament, ſaith thus; When the cup which is mingled with wine, and the bread that is broken, do receive the Word of God, it is made the Euchariſt of the body and blood of Chriſt, by the which the ſubſtance of our fleſh is nouriſhed, and doth conſiſt. If the thankſgiving do nouriſh our body, then there is ſome ſubſtance beſides Chriſts body.

Iren. lib. 5. contra Valent.

Watſon.

To the which reaſon both Watſon and Morgan anſwered, that Ex quibus, By the which, in the ſentence of Ireneus, was referred to the next antecedent, that is, to the body and blood of Chriſt: and not to the wine which is in the cup, and the bread that is broken.

M. Cheyney.

Maſter Cheyney replied, that it was not the body of Chriſt which nouriſhed our bodies. And let it be that Chriſts fleſh nouriſheth to immortality, yet it doth not anſwer to that argument, although it be true, no more than that anſwer which was made to my allegation out of Saint Paul, The bread which we breake, &c. with certaine other like: whereunto you anſwered, that bread wes not taken there in his proper ſignification, but for that it had been; no more than the rod of Aaron was taken for the ſerpent, becauſe it had been a ſerpent. After this Maſter Cheyney brought in Heſychius, and uſed the ſame reaſon that he did of burning of Symboles; and he aſked them what was burnt. Maſter Watſon ſaid, we muſt not enquire nor aſk, but if there were any fault, impute it to Chriſt. Then ſaid maſter Cheyney, whereof came thoſe aſhes? not of ſubſtance? or can any ſubſtance ariſe of accidents?

Harpsfield called in to help Watſon.

Then was maſter Harpsfield called in to ſee what he could ſay in the matter. Who told a faire tale of the omnipotency of God, and of the imbecillity and weakneſſe of mans reaſon, not able to attaine to godly things. And he ſaid, that it was convenient whatſoever we ſaw, felt, or taſted, not to truſt our ſenſes. And he told a tale out of ſaint Cyprian, how a woman ſaw the Sacrament burning in her coffer, and that which burned there, quoth Harpsfield, burneth here, and becommeth aſhes. But what that was that burnt he could not tell. But M. Cheyney continued ſtill, and forced them with this queſtion, what it was that was burnt? It was either, ſaid he, the ſubſtance of bread, or els the ſubſtance of the body of Chriſt, which were too much abſurdity to grant. At length they anſwered, that it was a miracle, whereat maſter Cheyney ſmiled, and ſaid, that he could then ſay no more.

Here is good ſtuffe, as if it were out of the Legend of lies.

Weſton would know whether they were ſufficiently anſwered when he and his had anſwered no argument.

Then Doctor Weſton aſked of the company there, whether thoſe men were ſufficiently anſwered, or no: Certaine Prieſts cried yea, but they were not heard at all for the great multitude which cried no, no. Which cry was heard and noiſed almoſt to the end of Pauls. Whereat Doctor Weſton being much moved, anſwered bitterly, that he aſked not the iudgement of the rude multitude; and unlearned people, but of them which were of the houſe. Then aſked he of Maſter Haddon and his fellowes, whether they would anſwer them other three dayes? Haddon, Cheyney, and Elmar ſaid no. But the Archdeacon of Wincheſter ſtood up and ſaid, that they ſhould not ſay, but they ſhould be anſwered, and though all other did refuſe to anſwer, yet he would not, but offered to anſwer them all one after another: with whoſe proffer the Prolocutor was not contented, but railed on him, and ſaid, that he ſhould go to Bedlam; to whom the Archdeacon ſoberly made this anſwer, that he was more worthy to be ſent thither, who uſed himſelf ſo ragingly in that diſputation, without any indifferent equality. Then roſe doctor Weſton up, and ſaid:

M. Philpot.

Marke Weſtons impudencie.

All the company hath ſubſcribed to our Article, ſaving only theſe men which you ſee. What their reaſons are, you have heard. We have anſwered them three dayes, upon promiſe (as it pleaſed him to deſcant, without truth, for no ſuch promiſe was made) that they ſhould anſwer us againe as long, as the order of diſputation doth require, and if they be able to defend their doctrine, let them ſo do.

A ſtrong argument of Weſton, where he is not able to anſwer, he would outface.

Then maſter Elmar ſtood up and proved how vaine a man Weſton was; for he affirmed that they never promiſed to diſpute, but only to open and teſtifie to the world their conſciences. For when they were required to ſubſcribe, they refuſed, and ſaid that they would ſhew good reaſons which moved them, that they could not with their conſciences ſubſcribe, as they had partly already done, and were able to doe more ſufficiently: therefore, quoth he, it hath been ill called a diſputation, and they were worthy to be blamed that were the authors of that name. For we meant not to diſpute, nor now meane to anſwer, before our arguments, quoth he, which we have to propound, be ſoluted, according as it was appointed. For by anſwering we ſhould but incumber our ſelves, and profit nothing, ſince the matter is already decreed upon and determined, whatſoever we ſhall prove, or diſpute to the contrary.

M. Elmars reaſon why they would not anſwer.

The Act of the ſixth day.

ON Munday following, being the 30. of October, the Prolocutor demanded of John Philpot, Archdeacon of Wincheſter, whether he would anſwer in the queſtions before propounded to their obiections, or no? To whom he made this anſwer, that he would willingly ſo doe, if according to their former determination, they would firſt anſwer ſufficiently to ſome of his arguments, as they had promiſed to doe, whereof he had a dozen, not halfe of the firſt being yet decided: And if they would anſwer fully and ſufficiently but to one of his arguments, he promiſed that he would anſwer to all the obiections that they ſhould bring.

The firſt Act or Seſſion.

Then the Prolocutor bade him propound his argument, and it ſhould be reſolutely anſwered by one of them; whereunto maſter Morgan was appointed. Upon Wedneſday laſt, quoth he, I was inforced to ſilence before I had proſecuted halfe mine argument; the ſumme whereof was this (as was gathered by the iuſt context of the Scripture) that the humane body of Chriſt was aſcended into heaven, and placed on the right hand of God the Father: wherefore it could not be ſituate upon earth in the Sacrament of the Altar, inviſible after the imagination of man. The argument was denied by Morgan. For the proofe whereof Philpot ſaid, that this was it

Philpot.

wherewith

Anno 1553

wherewith he had to confirme his firſt argument, if they would have ſuffered him the other day, as now he truſted they would.

Argument.

Fe- One ſelfe and ſame nature, quoth he, receiveth not in it ſelfe any thing that is contrary to it ſelfe.

ri- But the body of Chriſt is an humane nature, diſtinct from the Deity, and is a proper of nature it ſelfe.

o. Ergo, it cannot receive any thing that is contrary to that nature, and that varieth from it ſelfe.

But bodily to be preſent, and bodily to be abſent, to be on earth, and to be in heaven, and all at one preſent time, be things contrary to the nature of an humane body: Ergo, it cannot be ſaid of the humane body of Chriſt, that the ſelfe ſame body is both in heaven, and alſo in earth at one inſtant, either viſibly or inviſibly.

Morgan.

Here is a new evaſion invented by Morgan, who dare not plainly denie Vigilius authority, but under a colour.

Morgan denied the Major, that is, the firſt part of the argument. The which Philpot vouched out of Vigilius an ancient writer. But Morgan cavilled that it was no Scripture, and bade him prove the ſame out of Scripture.

Philpot ſaid, he could alſo ſo do, and right well deduce the ſame out of S. Paul, who ſaith, that Chriſt is like unto us in all points, except ſin: and therefore, like as one of our bodies cannot receive in it ſelfe any thing contrary to the nature of a body, as to be in Pauls Church, and at Weſtminſter at one inſtant, or to be at London viſibly, and at Lincolne inviſibly at one time; for that is contrary to the nature of a body, and of all creatures (as Didimus and Baſilius affirme) that an inviſible creature, as an Angell, cannot be at one time in divers places: wherefore he concluded that the body of Chriſt might not be in moe places than in one, which is in heaven, and ſo conſequently not to be contained in the Sacrament of the Altar.

One body cannot be at once in divers places.

Weſton.

To this the Prolocutor tooke upon him to anſwer, ſaying, that it was not true that Chriſt was like unto us in all points, as Philpot tooke it, except ſin. For that Chriſt was not conceived by the ſeed of man, as we be.

Chriſt, after his incarnation was in all points like man, ſin onely except.

Whereunto Philpot againe replied, that Chriſts conception was propheſied before by the Angell to be ſupernaturall, but after he had received our nature by the operation of the Holy Ghoſt in the Virgins wombe, he became in all points like unto us, except ſin.

Morgan.

Then Morgan inferred that this ſaying of Paul did not plainly prove his purpoſe.

Philpot.

Well, quoth Philpot, I perceive that you do anſwer but by cavillation, yet am I not deſtitute of other Scriptures to confirm my firſt argument, although you refuſe the probation of ſo ancient and catholike a doctor as Vigilius is. S. Peter in the ſermon that he made in the third of the Acts, making mention of Chriſt, ſaith theſe words, Whom heaven muſt receive untill the conſummation of all things, &c. Which words are ſpoken of his humanity. If heaven muſt hold Chriſt, then can he not be here on earth in the Sacrament, as is pretended.

Acts 3.

Harpsfield ſteppeth in.

Then Morgan laughing at this, and giving no direct anſwer at all, Harpsfield ſtood up, being one of the Biſhop of Londons Chaplaines, and took upon him to anſwer to the ſaying of S. Peter, and demanded of Philpot, whether he would, ex neceſſitate, that is, of neceſſity force Chriſt to any place, or no.

Philpot.

Philpot ſaid, that he would no otherwiſe force Chriſt of neceſſity to any place, than he is taught by the words of the Holy Ghoſt, which ſound thus; that Chriſts humane body muſt abide in heaven untill the day of judgement, as I rehearſed out of the Chapter before mentioned.

Harpsfield.

Why, quoth Harpsfield, do ye not know that Chriſt is God omnipotent? Yes, ſaid Philpot, I know that right well, neither doubt I any thing at all of his omnipotency. But of Chriſts omnipotency what he may do, is not our queſtion, but rather what he doth. I know he may make a ſtone in the wall a man, if he liſt, and alſo that he may make moe worlds, but doth he therefore ſo? It were no good conſequent ſo to conclude; he may do this or that, therefore he doth it.

Ba- Only ſo much is to be beleeved of Cods omnipotency, as is in the word expreſſed.

ro- That Chriſts body is both in heaven, and here alſo really in the Sacrament, is not expreſſed in the word.

co. Ergo, it is not to be believed, that the body of Chriſt, being in heaven, is here alſo really in the Sacrament.

If Weſton charge them for priſoning Chriſt in heaven, how may they charge the Papiſts for priſoning Chriſt in a boxe.

Why, quoth the Prolocutor, then you will put Chriſt in priſon in heaven. To the which Philpot anſwered, do you reckon heaven to be a priſon? God grant us all to come to that priſon.

After this, Harpsfield inferred that this word Oportet in S. Peter, which ſignifieth in Engliſh muſt, did not import ſo much as I would inferre, of neceſſity, as by other places of Scripture it may appeare, as in the firſt to Timothy, where Paul ſaith, Oportet Epiſcopum eſſe unius uxoris virum, A Biſhop muſt be the huſband of one wife. Here, quoth he, Oportet doth not import ſuch a neceſſity, but that he that never was married may be a Biſhop.

M. Philpot.

To this Philpot ſaid againe, that the places were not like which he went about to compare, and that in comparing of the Scriptures we muſt not conſider the naked words, but the meaning rather of the Scriptures, for that in ye place by him alledged, S. Paul doth declare of what quality a Biſhop ought to be. But in the other, Saint Peter teacheth us the place where Chriſt muſt neceſſarily be untill the end of the world: which we ought to believe to be true. And this compariſon of this word Oportet doth no more anſwer mine argument, than if I ſhould ſay of you now being here, Oportet te hic eſſe, You muſt needs be here, which importeth ſuch a neceſſity for the time, that you can no otherwiſe be but here, and yet you would go about in words to avoid this neceſſity with another Oportet in another ſenſe, as this, Oportet te eſſe virum bonum, You muſt be a good man, where Oportet doth not in very deed conclude any ſuch neceſſity, but that you may be an evill man. Thus you may ſee that your anſwer is not ſufficient, and as it were no anſwer to my argument.

Oportet, how it is taken diverſly in Scripture.

Weſton.

Then the Prolocutor brought in another Oportet, to help this matter (if it might be) ſaying, what ſay you to this, Oportet hæreſes eſſe; muſt hereſies needs be therefore becauſe of this word Oportet?

Philpot.

Yea, truly, quoth Philpot, it cannot otherwiſe be, if you will add that which followeth immediatly upon theſe words of Paul, that is, Vt qui electi ſunt manifeſtentur, that is, That ſuch as be the elect of God may bee manifeſted and knowne.

Weſton.

Why, quoth the Prolocutor, the time hath been that no hereſies were.

Philpot.

I know no ſuch time quoth Philpot. For ſince the time of Abel and Caine hereſies have beene, and then began they.

Weſton.

Then ſaid the Prolocutor, will you now anſwer Morgan an argument or two?

Philpot.

I will, quoth Philpot, if I may firſt be anſwered to my argument any thing according to truth and learning. What, quoth the Prolocutor, you will never be anſwered. How I am anſwered, quoth Philpot, let all men that are here preſent iudge; and eſpecially ſuch as be learned, and with what cavillations you have dallyed with mee.

Firſt, to the ancient authority of Vigilius you have anſwered nothing at all, but only denying it to be Scripture that he ſaith. Secondly, to the ſaying of S. Peter in the Acts, ye have anſwered thus, demanding of me whether I would keepe Chriſt in priſon, or no: let men now iudge if this be a ſufficient anſwer, or no.

Morgan.

Then ſtood Morgan up againe, and asked Philpot whether he would be ruled by the univerſall Church, or no?

Philpot.

Yes, quoth he, if it be the true catholike Church. And ſith you ſpeake ſo much of the Church, I would faine that you would declare what the Church is.

Morgan.
Philpot.

The Church, quoth Morgan, is diffuſed and diſperſed throughout the whole world. That is a diffuſe definition, quoth Philpot, for I am yet as uncertaine as I was before what you meane by the Church: but I knowledge no Church, but that which is grounded and founded on Gods Word, as S. Paul ſaith, Vpon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, and upon the Scriptures of God.

Moreman.
Whether the Church was before the Scripture.

What, quoth Moreman, was the Scripture before the Church? Yea, quoth Philpot. But I will prove nay, quoth Moreman, and I will begin at Chriſts time. The Church of Chriſt was before any Scripture written. For Matthew was the firſt that wrote the Goſpell, about a dozen yeeres after Chriſt: Ergo, the Church was before the Scripture.

To whom Philpot anſwering, denied his argument. Which when Moreman could not prove, Philpot ſhewed that his argument was Elenchus, or a fallacy, that is, a deceiveable argument. For he tooke the Scripture onely to be that, which is written by men in letters, whereas in very deed, all Prophecie uttered by the Spirit of God, was counted to be Scripture before it was written in paper and ink, for that it was written in the hearts, and graven in the mindes, yea, and inſpired in the mouthes of good men, and of Chriſts Apoſtles by the Spirit of Chriſt: As the ſalutation of the Angell was the Scripture of Chriſt, and the Word of God before it was written. At that Moreman cried, Fie, fie, wondring that the Scripture of God ſhould bee counted Scripture, before it was written, and affirmed, that he had no knowledge that ſaid ſo.

Scripture conſiſteth not only in letters, but is that which is inſpired in the hearts of good men by the holy Ghoſt.

Philpot.

To whom Philpot anſwered, that concerning knowledge in this behalfe, for the triall of the truth about the queſtions in controverſie, he would wiſh himſelf no worſe matched than with Moreman.

Weſton.

At the which ſaying the prolocutor was grievouſly offended, ſaying, that it was arrogantly ſpoken of him, that would compare with ſuch a worſhipfull learned man as Moreman was, being himſelfe a man unlearned, yea a mad man, meeter to be ſent to Bedlem, than to be among ſuch a ſort of learned and grave men as there were, and a man that never would be anſwered, and one that troubled the whole houſe: and therefore he did command him that he ſhould come no more into the houſe, demanding of the houſe, whether they would agree thereupon, or no. To whom a great company anſwered yea. Then ſaid Philpot againe, that he might thinke himſelf happy that was out of that company.

Weſton raileth againſt Philpot to be a mad man.

After this Morgan roſe up, and rounded the Prolocutor in the eare. And then againe the Prolocutor ſpake to Philpot, and ſaid, Leſt you ſhould ſlander the houſe, and ſay that we will not ſuffer you to declare your minde, we are content you ſhall come into the houſe as you have done before, ſo that you be apparelled with a long gowne and a tippet as we be, and that you ſhall not ſpeake, but when I command you. Then, quoth Philpot, I had rather be abſent altogether.

Philpot commanded to come in a long gowne and a tippet, or els to come no more to the Convocation.

December 13.

Thus they reaſoning to and fro, at length about the 13. of December, Q. Mary, to take up the matter, ſendeth her commandement to Boner Biſhop of London, that he ſhould diſſolve and breake up the Convocation. The copie of which commandement here followeth.

The Precept of the Queene to Boner, Biſhop of London, for the diſſolving of the foreſaid Convocation.

Q. Mary breaketh up the Convocation.

MAria, &c. Reverendo in Chriſto Patri & Domino, Domino Edmundo London. Epiſcopo, ſalutem. Cum præſens Convocatio Cleri Cantuarienſis provinciæ apud Sanctum Paulum London, jam modo tenta & inſtans exiſtit, certis tamen urgentibus cauſis & conſiderationibus nos ſpecialiter moventibus, de adviſamento Concilii noſtri ipſam præſentem Convocationem duximus diſſolvendam. Et ideo vobis mandamus quòd eandem præſentem Convocationem apud ſanctum Paulum prædictum debito modo abſque aliqua dilatione diſſolvatis, diſſolvive faciatis prout convenit, ſignificantes ex parte noſtra univerſis & ſingulis Epiſcopis, nec non Archidiaconis, Decanis, & omnibus aliis perſonis Eccleſiaſticis quibuſcunq; dictæ Cantuarienſis Provinciæ quorum intereſt, vel intereſſe poterit, quòd ipſi & eorum quilibet huic mandato noſtro exequendo intendentes ſint & obedientes prout decet. Teſte meipſa apud Weſtmonaſterium 13. die Decembris, Anno regni noſtri primo.

During the time of this diſputation, the twentieth day of November, the Maior of Coventry ſent up unto the Lords of the Councell Baldwine Clarke, J. Careleſſe, Thomas Wilcockes and Richard Eſtelin, for their behaviour upon Alhallow day laſt before. Whereupon Careleſſe and Wilcocks were committed to the Gatehouſe, and Clarke and Aſtelin to the Marſhalſey.

The ſame day there was a letter directed to Sir Chriſtopher Heydon, and Sir William Farmer knights, for the apprehenſion of John Huntingdon Preacher, for making a rime againſt Doctor Stokes and the Sacrament. Who appearing before the Councell the third of December next after, was, upon his humble ſubmiſſion and promiſe to amend as well in doctrine as living, againe ſuffered to depart.

This Lord Courtney was ſonne to the Marqueſſe of Exceter.

In the dayes of King Henry, and alſo King Edward reigning after him, divers Noble men, Biſhops, and other, were caſt into the Tower, ſome charged with treaſon, as Lord Courtney, and the Duke of Northfolke (whoſe ſonne Lord Henry, Earle of Surrey had beene the ſame time beheaded, a worthy and ingenuous Gentleman, for what cauſe, or by whom, I have not here to deale: this is certaine, that not many yeeres after his death followed the beheading of both the Lord Semers, and at laſt of the Duke of Northumberland alſo) ſome for the Popes ſupremacy, and ſuſpicious letters tending to ſedition, as Tonſtall Biſhop of Durham, and other for other things, all which continued there priſoners till Queene Maries comming in. Unto whom the ſaid Queene eftſoones granted their pardon, and reſtored them to their former dignities ties. Amongſt whom alſo was Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, whom ſhe not only freed out of captivity, but alſo advanced him to be high Chancellour of England. Furthermore, to the Lord Courtney ſhe ſhewed ſuch favour; that ſhe made him Earle of Devonſhire, inſomuch that there was a ſuſpicion amongſt many that ſhe would marrie him, but that proved otherwiſe.

Good Biſhops diſplaced.

Popiſh Prelats intruded by Q. Mary.

The ſame time Boner alſo had been priſoner in the Marſhalſey; whom likewiſe Queen Mary delivered, and reſtored to the Biſhopricke of London againe, diſplacing Doctor Ridley, with divers other good Biſhops mo, as is above mentioned: as Cranmer from Canterbury, the Archbiſhop of Yorke likewiſe, Poynet from Wincheſter, John Hooper from Worceſter, Barlow from Bathe, Harley from Hereford, Taylor from Lincolne, Ferrar from S. Davids, Coverdale from Exceter, Scorie from Chicheſter, &c. with a great number of Archdeacons, Deanes, and briefly all ſuch beneficed men, which either were married, or would conſtantly adhere to their profeſſion. All which were removed from their livings, and other of the contrary ſect ſet in the ſame, as cardinall Poole, (who was then ſent for) Gardiner, Heath, White, Day, Troublefield, &c.

Falſe report.

Cranmer with Peter Martyr and others, offered to defend the cauſe of their doctrine againſt all men.

And as touching Cranmer, of whom mention was made before, forſomuch as there was rumour ſpread of him the ſame time at London, that he had recanted, and cauſed Maſſe to be ſaid at Canterbury, for purging of himſelfe he publiſhed abroad a declaration of his truth and conſtancy in that behalfe, proteſting that he neither had ſo done, nor minded ſo to do: adding moreover, that if it would ſo pleaſe the Queen, he with Peter Martyr, and certain other whom he would chuſe, would in open diſputation ſuſtaine the cauſe of the doctrine, taught and ſet forth before in the time of King Edward, againſt all perſons whomſoever. But while he was in expectation to have this diſputation obtained, he with other Biſhops were laid faſt in the Tower, and Peter Martyr permitted to depart the realme, and ſo went he to Argentine.

D. Cranmer with Lady Jane arraigned of treaſon in the Guildhall. Archbiſhop Cranmer quit of treaſon.

After this, in the moneth of November the Archbiſhop Cranmer, notwithſtanding he had earneſtly refuſed to ſubſcribe to the Kings will in diſinheriting his ſiſter Mary, alledging many grave and pithie reaſons for her legitimation, was in Guildhall of London arraigned and attainted of treaſon, with the Lady Jane, and three of the Duke of Northumberlands ſonnes, which at the intreaty of certaine perſons were had againe to the Tower, and there kept for a time. All which notwithſtanding, Cranmer being pardoned of treaſon, ſtood only in the action and caſe of doctrine, which they called hereſie, whereof he was right glad and ioyfull.

Going about of S. Katharine, & S. Nicolas.

This being done in November, the people, and eſpecially the Churchmen, perceiving the Queen ſo eagerly ſet upon her old religion, they likewiſe for their parts, to ſhew themſelves no leſſe forward to ſerve the Queens appetite (as the manner is of the multitude, commonly to frame themſelves after the humour of the Prince and time preſent) began in their Quires to ſet up the pageant of ſaint Katharine, and of ſaint Nicolas, and of their proceſſions in Latine, after all their old ſolemnity with their gay gardeviance, and gray amices.

And when the month of December was come, the Parliament brake up, but firſt of all ſuch ſtatutes were repealed which were made either of Præmunire, or touched any alteration of religion and adminiſtration of Sacraments under King Edward. In the which Parliament alſo communication was moved of the Queens marriage with King Philip the Emperours ſonne.

Cardinall Poole ſent for.

In this meane while cardinall Poole being ſent for by Queene Mary, was by the Emperour requeſted to ſtay with him, to the intent (as ſome think) that his preſence in England ſhould not be a let to the marriage which he intended betweene Philip his ſonne and Queene Mary. For the making whereof he ſent a moſt ample Ambaſſade, with full power to make up the marriage betwixt them; which took ſuch ſucceſſe, that after they had communed of the matters a few dayes, they knit up the knot.

Marriage between Philip and Mary concluded.

Anno 1554.

Anno 1554.

The 13. of January, 1554. Doctor Crome, for his preaching upon Chriſtmas day without licence, was committed to the Fleet.

The 21. of January, maſter Thomas Wotten Eſquire, was for matters of Religion committed to the Fleet cloſe priſoner.

This mention of marriage was about the beginning of January, and was very evill taken of the people, and of many of the Nobility, who for this, and for Religion, conſpiring among themſelves, made a rebellion, whereof ſir Thomas Wyat Knight was one of the chief beginners: who being in Kent, ſaid (as many elſe perceived) that the Queene and the Councell would by forraigne marriage bring upon this Realme moſt miſerable ſervitude, and eſtabliſh Popiſh Religion. About the 25. of January newes came to London of this ſtirre in Kent, and ſhortly after of the Duke of Suffolke, who was fled into Warwickſhire and Leiceſterſhire there to gather a power. The Queene therefore cauſed them both with the Carewes of Devonſhire to be proclaimed Traitors, and ſent into Kent againſt Wyat, Thomas Duke of Norfolke, who being about Rocheſter bridge forſaken of them that went with him, returned ſafe to London without any more harme done to him, and without bloodſhed on either party.

January 25.

The Duke of Northfolk ſent againſt Wyat.

The Duke of Suffolk apprehended.

Furthermore, to apprehend the Duke of Suffolke, being fled into Warwickſhire, was ſent the Earle of Huntingdon in poſt, who, entring the city of Coventry before the Duke, diſappointed him of his purpoſe. Wherefore the Duke in great diſtreſſe committed himſelfe to the keeping of a ſervant of his named Underwood in Aſtley parke, who like a falſe Traitor bewrayed him. And ſo he was brought up to the Tower of London.

Q. Mary commeth to the Guildhall.

In the meane while ſir Peter Carew hearing of that was done, fled into France, but the other were taken, and Wyat came towards London in the beginning of February. The Queene hearing of Wyats comming, came into the city to the Guildhall, where ſhe made vehement Oration againſt Wyat; the contents, at leaſt the effect, whereof here followeth, as neere as out of her own mouth could be penned.

The Oration of Queene Mary in the Guildhall.

Q. Maries Oration to the Londoners.

I Am come unto you in mine owne perſon, to tell you, that which already you ſee and know, that is, how traiterouſly and rebelliouſly a number of Kentiſhmen have aſſembled themſelves againſt both us and you. Their pretence (as they ſaid at the firſt) was for a marriage determined for us: to the which, and to all the articles thereof ye have beene made privie. But ſince we have cauſed certaine of our privie Councell to goe againe

Anno 1554

Demands pretended to be ſent from Maſter Wyat and his company to Q. Mary.

againe unto them, and to demand the cauſe of this their rebellion, and it appeared then unto our ſaid Councell, that the matter of the marriage ſeemed to be but a Spaniſh cloake to cover their pretenced purpoſe againſt our Religion, for that they arrogantly and traiterouſly demanded to have the governance of our perſon, the keeping of the Tower, and the placing of our Councellours.

Now loving Subjects, what I am ye right well know. I am your Queene, to whom at my Coronation when I was wedded to the Realme, and Lawes of the ſame (the Spouſall Ring whereof I have on my finger, which never hitherto was, nor hereafter ſhall be left off) you promiſed your allegeance and obedience unto me. And that I am the right and true Inheritor of the Crowne of this Realme of England, I take all Chriſtendome to witneſſe. My father, as ye all know, poſſeſſed the ſame regall ſtate, which now rightly is deſcended unto me: and to him alwayes yee ſhewed your ſelves moſt faithfull and loving Subjects, and therefore I doubt not, but ye will ſhew your ſelves likewiſe to me, and that ye will not ſuffer a vile Traitor to have the order and governance of our perſon, and to occupie our eſtate, eſpecially being ſo vile a Traitor as Wyat is. Who moſt certainly, as he hath abuſed mine ignorant Subjects which be on his ſide, ſo doth he intend and purpoſe the deſtruction of you and ſpoile of your goods. And I ſay to you in the word of a Prince, I cannot tell how naturally the mother loveth the childe, for I was never the mother of any; but certainly, if a Prince and Governour may as naturally and earneſtly love her Subjects, as the mother doth the childe, then aſſure your ſelves, that I being your Lady and Miſtris, doe as earneſtly and as tenderly love and favour you. And I thus loving you, cannot but thinke that yee as heartily and faithfully love me, and then I doubt not, but we ſhall give theſe Rebels a ſhort and ſpeedy overthrow.

How he intended the ſpoile of their goods it appeareth, in that he comming to Southwark, did hurt neither man, woman, nor child, neither in body, nor in a penny of their goods.

As concerning the Marriage, ye ſhall underſtand, that I enterprized not the doing thereof without advice, and that by the advice of all our privie Councell, who ſo conſidered and weighed the great commodities that might enſue thereof, that they not onely thought it very honourable, but alſo expedient, both for the wealth of the Realme, and alſo of you our Subjects. And as touching my ſelfe, I aſſure you, I am not ſo bent to my will, neither ſo preciſe nor affectionate, that either for mine owne pleaſure I would chuſe where I luſt, or that I am ſo deſirous, as needs I would have one. For God, I thank him, to whom be the praiſe therefore, I have hitherto lived a virgin, and doubt nothing, but with Gods grace I am able ſo to live ſtill. But if as my Progenitors have done before, it may pleaſe God that I might leave ſome fruit of my body behinde mee, to bee your governour, I truſt you would not onely rejoyce thereat, but alſo I know it would be to your great comfort. And certainly, if I either did think or know, that this Marriage were to the hurt of any of you my Commons, or to the impeachment of any part or parcell of the royall ſtate of this Realme of England, I would never conſent thereunto, neither would I ever marry while I lived. And in the word of a Queene I promiſe you, that if it ſhall not probably appeare to all the Nobility and Commons in the high Court of Parliament, that this marriage ſhall be for the high benefit and commodity of all the whole Realme, then I will abſtaine from marriage while I live.

Q. Mary excuſeth her marriage.

The promiſe of Q. Mary touching her marriage.

And now good Subjects plucke up your hearts, and like true men, ſtand faſt againſt theſe Rebels, both our enemies and yours, and feare them not; for I aſſure you I feare them nothing at all. And I will leave with you my Lord Howard, and my Lord Treaſurer, who ſhall be aſſiſtants with the Mayor for your defence.

Here is to be noted, that at the comming of Q. Mary to the Guildhall, it being bruited before, that ſhe was comming with harneſſed men, ſuch a feare came among them, that a number of the Londoners, fearing leſt they ſhould be there intrapped and put to death, made out of the gate before her entring in. Furthermore note, that when ſhe had ended her Oration (which ſhe ſeemed to have perfectly conned without booke) Wincheſter ſtanding by her, when the Oration was done, with great admiration cried to the people; O how happy are we, to whom God hath given ſuch a wiſe and learned Prince, &c.

February 3.

M. Wyat in Southwarke.

Two dayes after, which was the third of February, the Lord Cobham was committed to the Tower, and Maſter Wyat entred into Southwarke. Who, forſomuch as he could not enter that way into London, returning another way by Kingſtone with his army, came up through the ſtreets to Ludgate, and returning thence, he was reſiſted at Temple-Barre, and there yeelded himſelf to Sir Clement Parſon, and ſo was brought by him to the Court, and with him the reſidue of his army (for before, Sir George Harpar and almoſt halfe of his men ran away from him at Kingſtone bridge) were alſo taken, and about an hundred killed, and they that were taken were had to priſon, and a great many of them were hanged, and he himſelf afterward executed at the Tower hill, and then quartered; whoſe head after being ſet up upon Haihill, was thence ſtolne away, and great ſearch made for the ſame. Of which ſtory ye ſhall heare more (the Lord willing) hereafter.

M. Wyat came to Ludgate.

M. Wyat apprehended at Temple Bar.

M. Wyat executed.

February 22.

The 12. day of February was beheaded the Lady Iane, to whom was ſent Maſter Fecknam, alias Howman, from the Queene, two dayes before her death, to commune with her, and to reduce her from the doctrine of Chriſt to Q. Maries religion. The effect of which communication here followeth.

The communication had betweene the Lady Iane and Fecknam.

Talk between the Lady Iane and Fecknam.

Fecknam. Madam, I lament your heavy caſe, and yet I doubt not, but that you beare out this ſorrow of yours with a conſtant and patient minde.

Iane. You are welcome unto me Sir, if your comming be to give Chriſtian exhortation. And as for my heavy caſe (I thank God) I do ſo little lament it, that rather I account the ſame for a more manifeſt declaration of Gods favour toward me, than ever he ſhewed me at any time before. And therfore there is no cauſe why either you, or other which beare me good will, ſhould lament or be grieved with this my caſe, being a thing ſo profitable for my ſoules health.

Lady Iane comfortably taketh her trouble.

Feck. I am here come to you at this preſent ſent from the Queene and her Councell, to inſtruct you in the true doctrine of the right faith: although I have ſo great confidence in you, that I ſhall have, I truſt, little need to travaile with you much therein.

Iane. Forſooth, I heartily thank the Queenes Highneſſe, which is not unmindfull of her humble ſubiect: and I hope likewiſe that you no leſſe will doe your duty therein both truly and faithfully, according to that you were ſent for.

Fec. What is then required of a Chriſtian man?

Iane. That he ſhould beleeve in God the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoſt, three perſons and one God.

Feck. What? is there nothing elſe to be required or looked for in a Chriſtian, but to beleeve in him?

Iane. Yes, we muſt love him with all our heart, with all our ſoul, and with all our mind, and our neighbour as our ſelfe.

Feck. Why? then faith iuſtifieth not, nor ſaveth not.

Faith onely iuſtifieth.

Iane. Yes verily, faith (as Paul ſaith) onely iuſtifieth.

Feck. Why? S. Paul ſaith, If I have all faith without love, it is nothing.

Iane. True it is; for how can I love him whom I truſt not? or how can I truſt him whom I love not? Faith and love goe both together, and yet love is comprehended in faith.

Feck. How ſhall we love our neighbour?

Iane. To love our neighbour is to feed the hungry, to cloath the naked, and give drink to the thirſty, and to doe to him as we would do to our ſelves.

Feck. Why? then it is neceſſary unto ſalvation to do good works alſo, and it is not ſufficient only to believe.

Good works neceſſary in a Chriſtian, yet do they not profit to ſalvation.

Iane. I deny that, and I affirm that faith onely ſaveth: but it is meet for a Chriſtian, in token that he followeth his Maſter Chriſt, to do good workes, yet may we not ſay that they profit to our ſalvation. For when we have done all, yet we be unprofitable ſervants, and faith onely in Chriſts blood ſaveth us.

Two Sacraments.

Feck. How many Sacraments are there?

Iane. Two. The one the Sacrament of Baptiſme, and the other the Sacrament of the Lords Supper.

Feck. No, there are ſeven.

Iane. By what Scripture finde you that?

Feck. Well, we will talke of that hereafter. But what is ſignified by your two Sacraments?

The Sacrament of Baptiſme what it ſignifieth. The Sacrament of the Lords Supper what it ſignifieth.

Iane. By the Sacrament of Baptiſme I am waſhed with water and regenerated by the ſpirit, and that waſhing is a token to me that I am the child of God. The Sacrament of the Lords Supper offered unto me, is a ſure ſeale and teſtimony that I am, by the blood of Chriſt, which he ſhed for me on the Croſſe, made partaker of the everlaſting Kingdome.

Feck. Why? what doe you receive in that Sacrament? Do you not receive the very body and blood of Chriſt?

What we receive with the Sacrament.

Iane. No ſurely, I doe not ſo beleeve. I think that at the Supper I neither receive fleſh nor blood, but bread and wine: Which bread when it is broken, and the wine when it is drunken, putteth me in remembrance how that for my ſins the body of Chriſt was broken, and his blood ſhed on the Croſſe, and with that bread and wine I receive the benefits that come by the breaking of his body, and ſhedding of his blood for our ſins on the Croſſe.

Feck. Why? Doth not Chriſt ſpeake theſe words, Take, eat, this is my body? Require you any plainer words? doth he not ſay it is his body?

Rom. 4.

Iane. I grant he ſaith ſo; and ſo he ſaith, I am the Vine, I am the Doore, but he is never the more for the doore nor the vine. Doth not S. Paul ſay, He calleth things rhat are not as though they were? God forbid that I ſhould ſay, that I eat the very naturall body and blood of Chriſt: for then either I ſhould pluck away my redemption, or els there were two bodies, or two Chriſts. One body was tormented on the Croſſe; and if they did eat another body, then had he two bodies: or if his body were eaten, then was it not broken upon the Croſſe, or if it were broken upon the Croſſe, it was not eaten of his Diſciples.

Feck. Why? is it not as poſſible that Chriſt by his power could make his body both to be eaten and broken, and to be borne of a woman without ſeed of man, as to walk upon the ſea having a body, and other ſuch like miracles as he wrought by his power onely?

Chriſt had power to turne the bread into his body, but that is no argument to prove that he did ſo.

Iane. Yes verily; if God would have done at his Supper any miracle, he might have done ſo: but I ſay that then he minded no worke nor miracle, but onely to break his body, and ſhed his blood on the Croſſe for our ſins. But I pray you to anſwer me to this one queſtion: where was Chriſt, when he ſaid, Take, eat, this is my body? Was he not at the table when he ſaid ſo? he was at that time alive, and ſuffered not till the next day. What took he but bread, what brake he but bread? And what gave he but bread? Look what he took, he brake: and look what he brake, he gave: and look what he gave, they did eat: and yet all this while he himſelfe was alive; and at ſupper before his Diſciples, or els they were deceived.

Fecknam goeth from the Word to the Church.

Feck. You ground your faith upon ſuch Authors as ſay and unſay both with a breath, and not upon the Church; to whom ye ought to give credit.

Faith to be grounded upon the Word, and not upon the Church.

Iane. No, I ground my faith on Gods Word, and not upon the Church. For if the Church be a good Church, the faith of the Church muſt be tried by Gods Word, and not Gods Word by the Church, either yet my faith. Shall I beleeve the Church becauſe of antiquity? or ſhall I give credit to the Church that taketh away from me the half part of the Lords Supper, and will not let any man receive it in both kindes? Which thing if they deny to us, then deny they to us part of our ſalvation. And I ſay that it is an evill church, and not the Spouſe of Chriſt, but the ſpouſe of the divell, that altereth the Lords Supper, and both taketh from it, and addeth to it. To that church (ſay I) God will add plagues, and from that church will he take their part out of the book of life. Do they learn that of S. Paul when he miniſtred to the Corinthians in both kinds? ſhall I beleeve this church? God forbid.

A note of the falſe Church.

Feck. That was done for a good intent of the Church, to avoid an hereſie that ſprang on it.

Gods Word not to be altered for good intents.

Iane. Why? ſhall the Church alter Gods will and ordinance for good intent? How did King Saul? The Lord God defend.

With theſe and ſuch like perſwaſions he would have had her leane to the Church, but it would not be. There were many more things whereof they reaſoned, but theſe were the chiefeſt.

After this, Fecknam took his leave, ſaying, that he was ſorry for her: For I am ſure, quoth he, that we two ſhall never meet.

The words were ſpoken openly.

Iane. True it is (ſaid ſhe) that we ſhall never meet, except God turne your heart. For I am aſſured, unleſſe you repent and turne to God, you are in an evill caſe; and I pray God, in the bowels of his mercy, to ſend you his holy ſpirit: for he hath given you his great gift of utterance, if it pleaſed him alſo to open the eyes of your heart.

A letter of the Lady Iane ſent unto her Father.

Lady Janes letter ſent to her father.

Father, although it hath pleaſed God to haſten my death by you, by whom my life ſhould rather have been lengthened: yet can I ſo patiently take it, as I yeeld God more hearty thanks for ſhortning my wofull dayes, than if all the world had beene given unto my poſſeſſions with life lengthened at my owne will. And albeit I am well aſſured of your impatient dolors, redoubled manifold wayes, both in bewailing your owne woe, and eſpecially (as I heare) my unfortunate ſtate, yet my deare father (if I may without offence reioyce in my owne miſhaps) me ſeems in this I may account my ſelfe bleſſed, that waſhing my hands with the innocency of my fact, my guiltleſſe blood may crie before the Lord, mercy to the innocent. And yet though I muſt needs acknowledge, that being conſtrained, and, as you wot well enough, continually aſſayed, in taking upon me I ſeemed to conſent, and therein grievouſly offended the Queene and her lawes: yet do I aſſuredly truſt that this my offence towards God is ſo much the leſſe, in that being in ſo royal eſtate as I was, mine inforced honour blended never with mine innocent heart. And thus, good father, I have opened unto you the ſtate wherein I preſently ſtand. Whoſe death at hand, although to you perhaps it may ſeeme right wofull, to me there is nothing that can be more welcome, than from this vale of miſery to aſpire to that heavenly throne of all ioy and pleaſure with Chriſt our Saviour. In whoſe ſtedfaſt faith (if it may be lawfull for the daughter ſo to write to the father) the Lord that hitherto hath ſtrengthened you, ſo continue you, that at the laſt we may meet in heaven with the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt.

This parentheſis includeth with a prayer, a privy admonition to her father, that he fall not from his religion.

At what time her father was flouriſhing in freedome and proſperity in the time of K. Edward, there belonged unto him a certain learned man, ſtudent and graduate of the Univerſity of Oxford: who then being Chaplaine to the ſaid Duke, and a ſincere Preacher (as he appeared) of the Goſpell according to the doctrine of that time ſet forth and received, ſhortly after that the ſtate of Religion began to alter by Q. Mary, altered alſo in his profeſſion with the time, and of a Proteſtant became a friend and defender of the Popes proceedings. At whoſe ſudden mutation and inconſtant mutability, this Chriſtian Lady being not a little aggrieved, and moſt of all lamenting the dangerous ſtate of his ſoule, in ſliding ſo away for feare from the way of truth, writeth her minde unto him in a ſharp and vehement letter: which (as it appeareth to proceed of an earneſt and zealous heart, ſo) would God it might take ſuch effect with him, as to reduce him to repentance, and to take better hold again for the health and wealth of his own ſouls. The copie of the letter is this as followeth.

Another letter of the Lady Iane to maſter Harding, late Chaplaine to the Duke of Suffolke her father, and then fallen from the truth of Gods moſt holy Word.

Luke 9.

A ſharp letter or exhortation of the L. Iane to M. Harding

SO oft as I call to minde the dreadfull and fearfull ſaying of God, That he which layeth hold upon the plough and looketh back, is not meet for the kingdome of heaven: and on the other ſide, the comfortable words of our Saviour Chriſt to all thoſe that forſaking themſelves, do follow him: I cannot but marvell at thee, and lament thy caſe, which ſeemed ſometime to be the lively member of Chriſt, but now the deformed imp of the divell; ſomtime the beautifull temple of God, but now the ſtinking and filthy kenell of Sathan; ſometime the unſpotted Spouſe of Chriſt, but now the unſhamefaſt Paramour of Antichriſt; ſomtime my faithfull brother, but now a ſtranger and Apoſtata; ſometime a ſtout Chriſtian ſouldier, but now a cowardly Runaway. Yea, when I conſider theſe things, I cannot but ſpeake to thee, and cry out upon thee, thou ſeed of Sathan, and not of Iudah, whom the divell hath deceived, the world hath beguiled, and the deſire of life ſubverted, and made thee of a Chriſtian an Infidell: wherefore haſt thou taken the Teſtament of the Lord in thy mouth? Wherfore haſt thou preached ye law and the will of God to others? Wherfore haſt thou inſtructed other to be ſtrong in Chriſt, when thou thy ſelfe doeſt now ſo ſhamefully ſhrink, and ſo horribly abuſe the Teſtament and Law of the Lord? When thou thy ſelfe preacheſt, not to ſteale, yet moſt abominably ſtealeſt, not from men, but from God, and committing moſt hainous ſacriledge, robbeſt Chriſt thy Lord of his right members, thy body and ſoul, and chooſeſt rather to live miſerably with ſhame to the world, than to die, and gloriouſly with honour reigne with Chriſt, in whom even in death is life? Why doeſt thou now ſhew thy ſelf moſt weake, when indeed thou oughteſt to be moſt ſtrong? The ſtrength of a fort is unknowne before the aſſault, but thou yeeldeſt thy hold before any battery be made.

This man a little before king Edward died, was heard openly in his ſermons in London to exhort the people with great vehemency after this ſort: that if trouble came, they ſhould never ſhrink from the true doctrine of the Goſpell which they had received, but ſhould take it rather for a triall of God to prove them, whether they would abide by it or no. All which to be true they can teſtifie that heard him, and be yet alive: who alſo foreſeeing the plague to come, were then much confirmed by his words.

Oh wretched and unhappy man, what art thou but duſt and aſhes? and wilt thou reſiſt thy Maker that faſhioned thee and framed thee? Wilt thou now forſake him that called thee from the cuſtome gathering among the Romiſh Antichriſtians, to be an Ambaſſadour and meſſenger of his eternall word? He that firſt framed thee, and ſince thy firſt creation and birth preſerved thee, nouriſhed and kept thee, yea, and inſpired thee with the ſpirit of knowledge (I cannot ſay of grace) ſhall he not now poſſeſſe thee? Dareſt thou deliver up thy ſelfe to another, being not thine owne, but his? How canſt thou having knowledge, or how dareſt thou neglect the Law of the Lord, and follow the vaine traditions of men: and whereas thou haſt beene a publike profeſſor of his name, become now a defacer of his glory? Wilt thou refuſe the true God, and worſhip the invention of man, the golden calf, the Whore of Babylon, the Romiſh Religion, the abominable Idoll, the moſt wicked Maſſe? Wilt thou torment againe, rent, and teare the moſt precious body of our Saviour Chriſt, with thy bodily and fleſhly teeth? Wilt thou take upon thee to offer up any ſacrifice unto God for our ſinnes, conſidering that Chriſt offered up himſelfe (as Paul ſaith) upon the Croſſe a lively ſacrifice once for all? Can neither the puniſhment of the Iſraelites, (which for their idolatry they ſo oft received) nor the terrible threatnings of the Prophets, nor the curſes of Gods own mouth, feare thee to honour any other God than him? Doeſt thou ſo regard him that ſpared not his deare and only Son for thee, ſo diminiſhing, yea, utterly extinguiſhing his glory, that thou wilt attribute the praiſe and honour due unto him to the Idols, wich have mouthes and ſpeak not, eyes and ſee not, eares and heare not: which ſhall periſh with them that made them?

February.

What ſaith the Prophet Baruch, where he recited the Epiſtle of Ieremy written to the captive Iewes? Did he not forewarne them that in Babylon they ſhould ſee gods of gold, ſilver, wood, and ſtone borne upon mens ſhoulders, to caſt a feare before the Heathen? But be not ye afraid of them (ſaith Ieremy) nor do as other do. But when you ſee other worſhip them, ſay you in your hearts; It is thou (O Lord) that oughteſt only to be worſhipped: for as for thoſe gods, the Carpenter framed them and poliſhed them, yea, gilded be they, and laid over with ſilver and vaine things, and cannot ſpeak. He ſheweth moreover the abuſe of their dealings, how the prieſts took off their ornaments, and apparelled their women withal: how one holdeth a ſcepter, another a ſword in his hand, and yet can they iudge in no matter, nor defend themſelvs, much leſſe any other from either battell or morther, nor yet from gnawing of wormes, nor any other evill thing. Theſe and ſuch like words ſpeaketh Ieremy unto them whereby he proveth them to be but vaine things, and no gods. And at laſt hee concludeth thus thus, Confounded be all they that worſhip them. They were warned by Jeremie, and thou as Jeremie haſt warned other, and art warned thy ſelfe by many Scriptures in many places. God ſaith, he is a jealous God, which will have all honour, glory, and worſhip given to him onely. And Chriſt ſaith in the fourth of Luke to Satan which tempted him: even to the ſame Satan, the ſame Belzebub, the ſame Divell, which hath prevailed againſt thee: It is written (ſaith he) thou ſhalt honour the Lord thy God, and him only ſhalt thou ſerve.

Matth. 4.

These and ſuch like doe prohibit thee and all Chriſtians to worſhip any other God than which was before all worlds, and laid the foundations both of heaven and earth: and wilt thou honour a deteſtable idoll, invented by Romiſh Popes, and the abominable Colledge of crafty Cardinals? Chriſt offered himſelfe up once for all, and wilt thou offer him up againe daily at thy pleaſure? But thou wilt ſay, thou doeſt it for a good intent. Oh ſinke of ſin! Oh child of perdition! Doeſt thou dreame therein of a good intent, where thy conſcience beareth thee witneſſe of Gods threatned wrath againſt thee? How did Saul? who for that he diſobeyed the word of the Lord for a good intent, was throwne from his worldly and temporall kingdome. Shalt thou then that doeſt deface Gods honour, and rob him of his right, inherit the eternall and heavenly kingdome? Wilt thou for a good intent diſhonour God, offend thy brother, and danger thy ſoule, wherefore Chriſt hath ſhed his moſt precious blood? Wilt thou for a good intent pluck Chriſt out of heaven, and make his death void, and deface the triumph of his Croſſe by offering him up daily? Wilt thou either for feare of death or hope of life, deny and refuſe thy God, who enriched thy poverty, healed thy infirmity, and yeelded to thee his victory, if thou couldeſt have kept it? Doeſt thou not conſider that the threed of thy life hangeth upon him that made thee, who can (as his will is) either twine it harder to laſt the longer, or untwine it againe to breake the ſooner? Doeſt thou not then remember the ſaying of David a notable King, to teach thee a miſerable wretch, in his 104. Pſalme, where he ſaith thus: When thou takeſt away thy Spirit (O Lord) from men, they die and are turned againe to their duſt, but when thou letteſt thy breath goe forth, they ſhall be made, and thou ſhalt renew the face of the earth. Remember the ſaying of Chriſt in his Goſpell: Whoſoever ſeeketh to ſave his life, ſhall loſe it: But whoſoever will loſe his life for my ſake, ſhall finde it. And in the ſame place, Whoſoever loveth father or mother above me, is not meet for me. He that will follow me, let him forſake himſelfe, and take up his croſſe, and follow me. What croſſe? the croſſe of infamy and ſhame, of miſery and poverty, of affliction and perſecution for his Names ſake. Let the oft falling of thoſe heavenly ſhowers pierce thy ſtony heart. Let the two edged ſword of Gods holy word ſheere aſunder the ſinewes of worldly reſpects, even to the very marrow of thy carnall heart, that thou mayeſt once againe forſake thy ſelfe, and embrace Chriſt. And like as good ſubjects will not refuſe to hazard all in the defence of their earthly and temporall governour, ſo flie not like a white-livered milkſop from the ſtanding wherein thy chiefe Captaine Chriſt hath ſet thee in array of this life. Viriliter age, confortetur cor tuum, ſuſtine Dominum. Fight manfully, come life, come death: the quarrell is Gods, and undoubtedly the victory is ours.

Good intent.

ſalme 16.

But thou wilt ſay; I will not breake unity. What? not the unity of Satan and his members? not the unity of darknes, the agreement of antichriſt and his adherents? Nay, thou deceiveſt thy ſelfe with the fond imagination of ſuch an unity as is among the enemies of Chriſt. Were not the falſe prophets in an unity? Were not Joſephs brethren and Jacobs ſons in an unity? Were not the Heathen, as the Amalekites, the Pereſites and Jebuſites in an unity? Were not the Scribes and Phariſies in an unity? Doth not King David teſtifie, Convenerunt in unum adverſus Dominum? Yea, theeves, murderers, conſpirators have their unity. But what unity? Tully ſaith of amity: Amicitia non eſt, niſi inter bonos. But marke my friend, yea, friend, if thou be not Gods enemy: there is no unity but where Chriſt knitteth the knot among ſuch as be his. Yea, be well aſſured, that where his truth is reſident, there it is verified that he himſelf ſaith: Non veni mittere pacem in terram, ſed gladium, &c. but to ſet one againſt another, the ſonne againſt the father, and the daughter againſt the mother in law. Deceive not thy ſelfe therefore with the glittering and glorious name of unity; for Antichriſt hath his unity, not yet in deed, but in name. The agreement of ill men is not an unity, but a conſpiracy. Thou haſt heard ſome threatnings, ſome curſings, and ſome admonitions out of the Scripture to thoſe that love themſelves above Chriſt. Thou haſt heard alſo the ſharpe and biting words to thoſe that deny him for love of life: Saith he not, He that denieth me before men, I will deny him before my Father in heaven? And to the ſame effect writeth Paul, Heb. 6. It is impoſſible (ſaith he) that they which were once lightened, and have taſted of the heavenly gift, and were partakers of the Holy Ghoſt, and have taſted of the good Word of God, if they fall and ſlide away, crucifying to themſelves the Sonne of God afreſh, and making of him a mockingſtocke, ſhould be renewed againe by repentance. And againe, ſaith he: If we ſhall willingly ſinne after we have received the knowledge of his truth, there is no oblation left for ſinne, but the terrible expectation of judgement, and fire which ſhall devoure the adverſaries. Thus S. Paul writeth, and this thou readeſt, and doeſt thou not quake and tremble?

Antichriſt alſo hath his unity, which is not to be kept.

The agreement of evill men is no unity, but a conſpiracy.

Well, if theſe terrible and thundring threatnings cannot ſtirre thee to cleave unto Chriſt, and forſake the world: yet let the ſweet conſolations and promiſes of the Scriptures, let the example of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, holy Martyrs and Confeſſours incourage thee to take faſter hold by Chriſt. Hearken what he ſaith: Bleſſed are you when men revile you, and perſecute you for my ſake: rejoyce and be glad, for great is your reward in heaven; for ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you. Heare what Eſay the Prophet ſaith: Feare not the curſe of men, be not afraid of their blaſphemies, for wormes and moths ſhall eat them up like cloth and wooll, but my righteouſneſſe ſhall endure for ever, and my ſaving health from generation to generation. What art thou then (ſaith he) that feareſt a mortall man, the childe of man, which fadeth away like the flower, and forgetteſt the Lord that made thee, that ſpread out the heavens, and laid the foundation of the earth? I am the Lord thy God, that make the ſea to rage, and be ſtill, whoſe name is the Lord of hoſts: I ſhall put my word in thy mouth, and defend thee with the turning of an hand. And our Saviour Chriſt ſaith to his Diſciples: They ſhall accuſe you, and bring you before Princes and Rulers for my names ſake, and ſome of you they ſhall perſecute and kill; but feare you not (ſaith he) nor care you what you ſhall ſay: for it is the ſpirit of your father that ſpeaketh within you. Even the very haires of your head are all numbred. Lay up treaſure for your ſelves (ſaith he) where no theef commeth, nor moth corrupteth. Feare not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the ſoule, but feare him that hath power to deſtroy both ſoule and body. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but becauſe ye are not of the world, but I have choſen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you.

Let theſe and ſuch like conſolations taken out of the Scriptures, ſtrengthen you to Godward: Let not the examples of holy men and women goe out of your minde, as Daniel and the reſt of the Prophets, of the three children, of Eleazarus that conſtant father, of the ſeven of the Machabees children, of Peter, Paul, Stephen, and other Apoſtles and holy Martyrs in the beginning of the Church. As of good Simeon Archbiſhop of Seloma, and Zetrophone, with infinite other under Sapores the King of the Perſians and Indians, who contemned all torments deviſed by the Tyrants for their Saviours ſake. Returne, returne againe into Chriſts warre, and as becommeth a faithfull warriour, put on that armour that S. Paul teacheth to be moſt neceſſary for a Chriſtian man. And above all things take to you the ſhield of faith, and be you provoked by Chriſts own example to withſtand the divell, to forſake the world, and to become a true and faithfull member of his myſticall body, who ſpared not his own body for our ſins.

Epheſ. 6.

Throw down your ſelfe with the feare of his threatned vengeance for this ſo great and hainous an offence of apoſtaſie: and comfort your ſelfe on the other part with the mercy, blood, and promiſe of him that is ready to turne unto you whenſoever you turne unto him. Diſdain not to come againe with the loſt ſonne, ſeeing you have ſo wandred with him. Be not aſhamed to turne againe with him from the ſwill of ſtrangers, to the delicates of your moſt benigne and loving father, acknowledging that you have ſinned againſt heaven and earth: Againſt heaven, by ſtayning the glorious Name of God, and cauſing his moſt ſincere and pure word to be evill ſpoken of through you. Againſt earth, by offending ſo many of your weake brethren, to whom you have beene a ſtumbling blocke through your ſodaine ſliding. Be not abaſhed to come home againe with Mary, and weep bitterly with Peter, not only with ſhedding the teares of your bodily eyes, but alſo powring out the ſtreames of your heart, to waſh away out of the ſight of God the filth and mire of your offenſive fall. Be not abaſhed to ſay with the Publicane, Lord be mercifull unto me a ſinner. Remember the horrible hiſtory of Iulian of old, and the lamentable caſe of Spyra of late, whoſe caſe (me thinks) ſhould be yet ſo greene in your remembrance, that being a thing of our time, you ſhould feare the like inconvenience, ſeeing you are fallen into the like offence.

Luke 18.

Laſt of all, let the lively remembrance of the laſt day be alwayes afore your eyes, remembring the terror that ſuch ſhall be in at that time, with the runnagates and fugitives from Chriſt, which ſetting more by the world than by heaven, more by their life, than by him that gave them life, did ſhrink, yea did cleane fall away from him that forſook not them: and contrariwiſe, the ineſtimable ioyes prepared for them, that fearing no perill, nor dreading death, have manfully fought, and victoriouſly triumphed over all power of darkneſſe, over hell, death, and damnation, through their moſt redoubted captaine Chriſt, who now ſtretcheth out his arms to receive you, ready to fall upon your neck and kiſſe you, and laſt of all to feaſt you with the dainties and delicates of his owne precious blood: which undoubtedly, if it might ſtand with his determinate purpoſe, he would not let to ſhed againe, rather than you ſhould be loſt. To whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour praiſe, and glory everlaſting, Amen.

Be conſtant, be conſtant, feare not for any pain,
Chriſt hath redeemed thee, and heaven is thy gain.

A Letter written by the Lady Iane in the end of the New Teſtament in Greek, the which ſhe ſent unto her ſiſter Lady Katherine, the night before ſhe ſuffered.

A faithfull exhortation of the Lady Iane to the Lady Katherine her ſiſter, to reade Gods word.

I Have here ſent you (good ſiſter Katherine) a book, which although it be not outwardly trimmed with gold, yet inwardly it is more worth than precious ſtones. It is the booke (deare ſiſter) of the Law of the Lord. It is his teſtament and laſt will which hee bequeathed unto us wretches: which ſhall leade you to the path of eternall joy, and if you with a good mind read it, and with an earneſt mind doe purpoſe to follow it, it ſhall bring you to an immortall and everlaſting life. It ſhall teach you to live, and learne you to dye. It ſhall winne you more than you ſhould have gained by the poſſeſſion of your wofull fathers lands. For, as if God had proſpered him, you ſhould have inherited his lands; ſo if you apply diligently this book, ſeeking to direct your life after it, you ſhall be an inheritor of ſuch riches, as neither the covetous ſhall withdraw from you, neither thiefe ſhall ſteale, neither yet the mothes corrupt. Deſire with David, good ſiſter, to underſtand the Law of the Lord God. Live ſtill to dye, that you by death may purchaſe eternall life. And truſt not that the tenderneſſe of your age ſhall lengthen your life; for as ſoone (if God call) goeth the young as the old, and labour alwaies to learn to dye. Defie the world, deny the divell, and deſpiſe the fleſh, and delight your ſelfe only in the Lord. Be penitent for your ſinnes, and yet deſpaire not; bee ſtrong in faith, and yet preſume not; and deſire with S. Paul to be diſſolved and to bee with Chriſt, with whom even in death there is life. Be like the good ſervant, and even at midnight be waking, leſt when death commeth and ſtealeth upon you as a thiefe in the night, you bee with the evill ſervant found ſleeping, and leſt for lacke of oile, you be found like the five fooliſh women: and like him that had not on the wedding garment, and then ye be caſt out from the mariage. Rejoyce in Chriſt, as I doe. Follow the ſteps of your maſter Chriſt, and take up your croſſe: lay your ſinnes on his backe, and alwaies embrace him. And as touching my death, rejoyce as I doe (good ſiſter) that I ſhall be delivered of this corruption, and put on incorruption. For I am aſſured, that I ſhall for looſing of a mortall life, winne an immortall life, the which I pray God grant you, and ſend you of his grace to live in his feare, and to dye in the true Chriſtian faith, from the which (in Gods name) I exhort you that you never ſwarve, neither for hope of life, nor for feare of death. For if you will deny his truth for to lengthen your life, God will deny you, and yet ſhorten your dayes. And if you will cleave unto him, hee will prolong your daies to your comfort and his glory: to the which glory God bring me now, and you hereafter when is pleaſeth him to call you. Fare you well, good ſiſter, and put your only truſt in God, who only muſt help you.

So live to dye that by death you may live.

Here followeth a certaine effectuall prayer made by the Lady Iane in the time of her trouble.

A prayer of the Lady Iane.

O Lord, thou God and Father of my life, heare me poore and deſolate woman, which flyeth unto thee onely, in all troubles and miſeries. Thou O Lord art the onely defender and deliverer of thoſe that put their truſt in thee: and therefore I being defiled with ſinne, encumbred with affliction, unquieted with troubles, wrapped in cares, overwhelmed with miſeries, vexed with temptations, and grievouſly tormented with the long impriſonment of this vile maſſe of clay my ſinnefull body: doe come unto thee (O mercifull Saviour) craving thy mercy and helpe; without the which ſo little hope of deliverance is left, that I may utterly deſpaire of any liberty. Albeit it is expedient, that ſeeing our life ſtandeth upon trying, we ſhould be viſited ſometime with ſome adverſity, whereby wee might both be tried whether we be of thy flocke or no, and alſo know thee and our ſelves the better: yet thou that ſaideſt thou wouldeſt not ſuffer us to be tempted above our power, bee mercifull unto me now a miſerable wretch I beſeech thee: which with Solomon doe cry unto thee, humbly deſiring thee, that I may neither be too much puffed up with proſperity, neither too much preſſed downe with adverſity: leſt I being too full, ſhould deny thee my God, or being too low brought ſhould deſpaire, and blaſpheme thee my Lord and Saviour. O mercifull God, conſider my miſery beſt knowne unto thee, and be thou now unto me a ſtrong tower of defence I humbly require thee. Suffer me not to be tempted above my power, but either be thou a deliverer unto me out of this great miſery, either elſe give me grace patiently to beare thy heavie hand and ſharpe correction. It was thy right hand that delivered the people of Iſrael out of the hands of Pharaoh, which for the ſpace of foure hundred yeeres did oppreſſe them, and keep them in bondage. Let it therefore likewiſe ſeeme good to thy fatherly goodneſſe, to deliver me ſorrowfull wretch (for whom thy Sonne Chriſt ſhed his precious bloud on the Croſſe) out of this miſerable captivity and bondage, wherein I am now. How long wilt thou be abſent? for ever? Oh Lord, haſt thou forgotten to be gracious, and haſt thou ſhut up thy loving kindneſſe in diſpleaſure? Wilt thou be no more intreated? Is thy mercy cleane gone for ever, and thy promiſe come utterly to an end for evermore? Why doeſt thou make ſo long tarrying? ſhall I deſpaire of thy mercy O God? Farre be that from me. I am thy workmanſhip created in Chriſt Ieſus: give me grace therefore to tarry thy leiſure, and patiently to beare thy works; aſſuredly knowing, that as thou canſt, ſo thou wilt deliver me, when it ſhall pleaſe thee, nothing doubting or miſtruſting thy goodneſſe towards me: for thou knoweſt better what is good for me than I do: Therefore do with me in all things what thou wilt, and plague me what way thou wilt. Onely in the meane time arme me I beſeech thee with thy armour, that I may ſtand faſt, my loynes being girded about with verity, having on the breſtplate of righteouſneſſe, and ſhod with the ſhooes prepared by the Goſpell of peace; above all things taking to me the ſhield of faith, wherewith I may be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked, and taking the helmet of ſalvation, and the ſword of the Spirit, which is thy moſt holy Word: praying alwayes with all manner of prayer and ſupplication, that I may referre my ſelfe wholly to thy will, abiding thy pleaſure, and comforting my ſelfe in thoſe troubles that it ſhall pleaſe thee to ſend me: ſeeing ſuch troubles be profitable for me, and ſeeing I am aſſuredly perſwaded that it cannot be but well all that thou doeſt. Heare me O mercifull father for his ſake, whom thou wouldeſt ſhould be a ſacrifice for my ſinnes: to whom with thee and the holy Ghoſt, be all honour and glory. Amen.

Epheſ. 6.

After theſe things thus declared, it remaineth now, comming to the end of this vertuous Lady, next to inferre the manner of her execution, with the words and behaviour of her at the time of her death.

These are the words that the Lady Iane ſpake upon the ſcaffold at the houre of her death.

The words and behaviour of the Lady Iane upon the ſcaffold.

First when ſhe mounted upon the ſcaffold, ſhe ſaid to the people ſtanding thereabout: Good people, I am come hither to die, and by a law I am condemned to the ſame. The fact againſt the Queenes Highneſſe was unlawfull, and the conſenting thereunto by me: but touching the procurement and deſire thereof by me or on my behalfe, I do waſh my hands thereof in innocency before God, and the face of you, good Chriſtian people, this day: and therewith ſhe wrung her hands, wherein ſhe had her book. Then ſaid ſhe, I pray you all good Chriſtian people, to beare me witneſſe that I die a true Chriſtian woman, and that I do look to be ſaved by no other meane, but only by the mercy of God in the blood of his only Sonne Jeſus Chriſt: and I confeſſe, that when I did know the word of God, I neglected the ſame, loved my ſelfe and the world, and therefore this plague and puniſhment is happily and worthily happened unto me for my ſins: and yet I thank God of his goodneſſe, that he hath thus given me a time and reſpite to repent: and now, good people, while I am alive, I pray you aſſiſt me with your prayers. And then kneeling down, ſhe turned her to Fecknam, ſaying: ſhall I ſay this Pſalme? and he ſaid, Yea. Then ſaid ſhe the Pſalme of Miſerere mei Deus in Engliſh, in moſt devout manner throughout to the end, and then ſhe ſtood up, and gave her maiden miſtris Ellen her gloves and handkercher, and her book to maſter Bruges, and then ſhe untied her gown, and the hangman preſſed upon her to help her off with it, but ſhe deſiring him to let her alone, turned towards her two Gentlewomen, who helped her off therewith, and alſo with her frowes, paaſt and neckerchiefe, giving to her a faire handkercher to knit about her eyes.

Then the hangman kneeled downe and aſked her forgiveneſſe, whom ſhe forgave moſt willingly. Then he willed her to ſtand upon the ſtraw: which doing, ſhe ſaw the block. Then ſhe ſaid, I pray you diſpatch me quickly. Then ſhe kneeled down, ſaying: Will you take it off before I lay me down? and the Hangman ſaid, no Madam. Then tied ſhe the handkercher about her eys, and feeling for the block ſhe ſaid: What ſhall I do? Where is it? Where is it? One of the ſtanders by guiding her thereunto, ſhe laid her head down upon the block, and then ſtretched forth her body, and ſaid: Lord, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit, and ſo finiſhed her life in the yeere of our Lord God, 1554. the 12. day of February.

February 12. Lady Jane and Lord Gilford Dudley beheaded.

Thus the twelfth day of February (as I ſaid) was beheaded the Lady Jane, and with her alſo the Lord Gilford her huſband, one of the Duke of Northumberlands ſonnes, two innocents in compariſon of them that ſate upon them. For they did but ignorantly accept that which the others had willingly deviſed, and by open Proclamation conſented to take from others, and give to them.

A wonderfull example upon Morgan the Judge, who gave ſentence againſt Lady Jane.

Touching the condemnation of this Lady Jane, here is to be noted, that the Judge Morgan, who gave the ſentence of condemnation againſt her, ſhortly after he had condemned her, fell mad, and in his raving cried out continually to have the Lady Jane taken away from him, and ſo ended his life.

February 21. Henry Duke of Suffolke beheaded.

And not long after the death of the Lady Jane upon the xxi. of the ſame moneth, was Henry Duke of Suffolk her father alſo beheaded at the Tower Hill, the fourth day after his condemnation: about which time alſo were condemned for this conſpiracy many Gentlemen and Yeomen, whereof ſome were executed at London, and ſome in the Countrey. In the number of whom was alſo Lord Thomas Gray, brother to the ſaid Duke, being apprehended not long after in Northwales, and executed for the ſame. Sir Nicolas Throgmorton very hardly eſcaped, as ye ſhall heare (the Lord willing) in another place.

Lord Thomas Gray apprehended and executed.

February 24.

The 24. of the ſame moneth, the yéere of our Lord 1554. Boner Biſhop of London ſent down a commiſſion, directed to all the Curats and Paſtors of his Dioceſſe, for the taking of the names of ſuch as would not come the Lent following to auricular confeſſion, and to the receiving at Eaſter: the copie of which monition here followeth.

A monition of Boner Biſhop of London, ſent downe to all and ſingular Curates of his Dioceſſe, for the certifying of the names of ſuch as would not come in Lent to Confeſſion, and receiving at Eaſter.

A monition of Boner Biſhop of London to all Miniſters of his Dioceſſe

EDmund by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop of London, to all Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and Miniſters of the Church, within the City and Dioceſſe of London, ſendeth grace, peace, and mercy, in our Lord everlaſting. Foraſmuch as by the order of the Eccleſiaſticall lawes and conſtitutions of this Realme, and the laudable uſage and cuſtome of the whole Catholike Church, by many hundred yeeres agone, duly and devoutly obſerved and kept, all faithfull people being of lawfull age and diſcretion, are bound once in the yeere at leaſt (except reaſonable cauſe excuſe them) to be confeſſed to their owne proper Curate, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar, with due preparation and devotion: and foraſmuch alſo as we be credibly informed, that ſundry evill diſpoſed and undevout perſons, given to cenſuall pleaſures, and carnall appetites, following the luſts of their body, and neglecting utterly the health of their ſoules, do forbeare to come to confeſſion according to the ſaid uſage, and to receive the Sacrament of the Altar accordingly, giving thereby pernicious and evill example to the younger ſort, to neglect and contemne the ſame: we minding the reformation hereof for our owne diſcharge, and deſirous of good order to be kept, and good example to be given: do will and command you by vertue hereof, that immediately upon the receipt of this our commandement, ye and every each of you within your cure and charge, do uſe all your diligence and dexterity to declare the ſame, ſtraitly charging and commanding all your Pariſhioners, being of lawfull age and diſcretion to come before Eaſter next comming, to confeſſion, according to the ſaid ordinance and uſage, with due preparation and devotion to receive the ſaid Sacrament of the Altar, and that ye do note the names of all ſuch as be not confeſſed unto you, and do not receive of you the ſaid Sacrament, certifying us or our Chancellour or Commiſſary thereof before the ſixth day of Aprill next enſuing the date hereof: that ſo we, knowing thereby who did not come to Confeſſion, and receiving the Sacrament accordingly, may proceed againſt them, as being perſons culpable, and tranſgreſſors of the ſaid Eccleſiaſticall law and uſage: Further alſo certifying us, our ſaid Chancellour or Commiſſary, before the day aforeſaid, whether you have your Altars ſet up, Chalice-booke, Veſtments, and all things neceſſary for Maſſe, and the adminiſtration of Sacraments and Sacramentals, with Proceſſion, and all other divine ſervice prepared and in readineſſe, according to the order of the Catholike Church, and the vertuous and godly example of the Queenes Majeſty: and if ye ſo have not, ye then with the Church-wardens cauſe the ſame to be provided for, ſignifying by whoſe fault and negligence the ſame want or fault hath proceeded, and generally of the not comming of your Pariſhioners to Church, undue walking, talking, or uſing of themſelves there unreverently in the time of divine Service, and of all other open faults and miſdemeanours, not omitting thus to do, and certifie as before, as you will anſwer upon your perill for the contrary. Given at London the 23. of February, in the yeere of our Lord, 1554.

Comming to Confeſſion. Receiving the Sacrament of the Altar.

The next moneth following, which was the moneth of March, and the fourth day of the ſaid moneth, there was a letter ſent from the Quéen to Boner Biſhop of London, with certaine articles alſo annexed, to be put in ſpéedy execution, containing as here followeth.

Articles ſent from the Queene to the Biſhop of London, by him and his Officers at her commandement to be put in ſpeedy execution, with her letter to the ſaid Biſhop before prefixed.

A letter of Q. Mary to B. Boner. Cauſes declared. March 3.

RIght reverend Father in God, right truſty and welbeloved, we gréet you well. And whereas heretofore in the time of the late reign of our moſt deareſt brother King Edward the ſixth, whoſe ſoule God pardon, divers notable crimes, exceſſes, and faults, with ſundry kindes of hereſies, ſimonie, adultery, and other enormities have béen committed withing this our Realme, and other our dominions, the ſame continuing yet hitherto in like diſorder ſince ỷ beginning of our reign, without any correction or reformation at all, and the people both of the Laitie and alſo of the Clergie, and chiefly of the Clergie, have beene given to much inſolency, & ungodly rule, greatly to the diſpleaſure of Almighty God, and very much to our regret and evill contentation, and to no little ſlander of other Chriſtian Realmes, and in a manner to the ſubverſion and cleane defacing of this our Realme, and remembring our duty to Almighty God, to be to foreſee (as much as in us may bee) that all vertue and godly living ſhould be imbraced, flouriſh and increaſe, and therewith alſo, that all vice and ungodly behaviour ſhould bee baniſhed and put away, or at the leaſtwiſe (ſo nigh as might be) ſo bridled and kept under, that godlineſſe and honeſtie might have the upper hand, underſtanding by very credible report and publike fame, to our no ſmall heavineſſe and diſcomfort, that within your Dioceſſe, as well in not exempted as exempted places, the like diſorder and evill behaviour hath been done and uſed, like alſo to continue and increaſe, unleſſe due proviſion be had and made to reform the ſame, which earneſtly in very deed we doe minde and intend to the uttermoſt, all the wayes we can poſſible, truſting of Gods furtherance and helpe in that behalfe: For theſe cauſes and other moſt iuſt conſiderations us moving, we ſend unto you certaine Articles of ſuch ſpeciall matter, as among other things be moſt neceſſary now to be put in execution by you and your officers, extending to the end by us deſired, and the reformation aforeſaid: wherein ye ſhall be charged with our ſpeciall commandement, by theſe our letters, to the intent you and your officers may the more earneſtly and boldly proceed thereunto, without feare of any preſumption to be noted on your part, or danger to be incurred of any ſuch our Lawes, as by our doings of that is in the ſaid Articles contained, might any wiſe grieve you whatſoever be threatned in any ſuch caſe. And therefore we ſtraitly charge and command you, and your ſaid officers, to proceed to the execution of the ſaid Articles, without all tract and delay, as ye will anſwer to the contrary. Given under our ſignet, at our Palace of Weſtminſter, the third day of March, the firſt yeere of our Reigne.

Articles ſent from the Queene unto the Ordinary, and by him and his officers by her commandement to be put in execution in the whole Dioceſſe.

Articles of Q. Mary.

Eccleſiaſticall lawes of king Henry renued.

First, that every Biſhop and his Officers, with all other having Eccleſiaſticall iuriſdiction, ſhall with all ſpeed and diligence, and all manner of wayes to them poſſible, put in execution all ſuch Canons and Eccleſiaſticall lawes, heretofore in the time of King Henry the eighth uſed within this Realm of England, & the dominions of the ſame, not being directly and expreſly contrary to the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

The Kings authority giveth place to the Popes authority.

Item, that no Biſhop, or any of his Officers, or other perſon aforeſaid, hereafter in any of their Eccleſiaſticall writings, in proceſſe or other extraiudiciall acts, do uſe to put in this clauſe or ſentence, Regia authoritate fulcitus.

The ſupremacie of the King repealed.

Item, that no Biſhop, or any of his Officers, or other perſon aforeſaid, doe hereafter exact or demand in the admiſſion of any perſon to any Eccleſiaſticall promotion, order, or office, any oath touching the primacy or ſucceſſion, as of late in few yeeres paſſed hath beene accuſtomed and uſed.

Anno 1554.

Item, that every Biſhop and his Officers with all other perſons aforeſaid, have a vigilant eye, and uſe ſpeciall diligence and foreſight, that no perſon be admitted or received to any Eccleſiaſticall function, benefice, or office, being a Sacramentary, infected or defamed with any notable kind of hereſie, or other great crime, and that the ſaid Biſhop do ſtay and cauſe to be ſtayed, as much as lieth in him, that Benefices and Eccleſiaſticall promotions do not notably decay, or take hinderance by paſſing or confirming of unreaſonable leaſes.

For puniſhing of hereſies, as they call them.

Item, that every Biſhop, and all other perſons aforeſaid, doe diligently travaile for the repreſſing of hereſies and notable crimes, eſpecially in the Clergie, duly correcting and puniſhing the ſame.

Item, that every Biſhop, and all the other perſons aforeſaid, doe likewiſe travaile for the condemning and repreſſing of corrupt and naughty opinions, unlawfull bookes, ballads, and other pernicious and hurtfull devices, ingendring hatred amongſt the people, and diſcord among the ſame. And that Schoolemaſters, Preachers and Teachers do exerciſe and uſe their offices and duties without teaching, preaching, or ſetting forth any evill and corrupt doctrine, and that doing the contrary, they may be by the Biſhop and his ſaid Officers puniſhed and removed.

Againſt prieſts marriage.

Item, that every Biſhop, and all other perſons aforeſaid, proceeding ſummarily, and with all celerity and ſpeed, may and ſhall deprive, or declare deprived, and amove, according to their learning and diſcretion, all ſuch perſons from their Benefices and Eccleſiaſticall promotions, who contrary to the ſtate of their order, and the laudable cuſtome of the Church, have married and uſed women as their wives, or otherwiſe notably and ſlanderouſly diſordered or abuſed themſelves: ſequeſtring alſo, during the ſaid proceſſe, the fruits and profits of the ſaid Benefices and Eccleſiaſticall promotions.

Proviſion for prieſts which renounce their wives.

Item, that the ſaid Biſhop, and all other perſons aforeſaid, do uſe more lenity and clemency with ſuch as have married, whoſe wives be dead, than with other whoſe women doe yet remaine alive. And likewiſe ſuch Prieſts, as with the conſent of their wives or women openly in the preſence of the Biſhop do profeſſe to abſtain; to be uſed more favourably. In which caſe, after the penance effectually done, the Biſhop according to his diſcretion and wiſdome, may upon iuſt conſideration receive, and admit them again to their former adminiſtration, ſo it be not in the ſame place, appointing them ſuch a portion to live upon, to be paid out of their Benefice, whereof they be deprived, by diſcretion of the ſaid Biſhop or his Officer, as he ſhall think may be ſpared of the ſaid Benefice.

Married prieſts divorced both from wife and benefice.

Item, that every Biſhop, and all other perſons aforeſaid, do foreſee that they ſuffer not any religious man, having ſolemnly profeſſed chaſtity, to continue with his woman or wife, but that all ſuch perſons after deprivation of their Benefice or Eccleſiaſticall promotion, be alſo divorced every one from his ſaid woman, and due puniſhment otherwiſe taken for the offence therein.

Proviſion for want of prieſts.

Item, that every Biſhop, and all other perſons aforeſaid, do take order and direction with the Pariſhioners of every Benefice, where Prieſts doe want, to repaire to the next Pariſh for divine ſervice, or to appoint for a convenient time, till other better proviſion may be made, one Curate to ſerve, Alienis vicibus, in divers Pariſhes, and to allot to the Curate for his labour ſome portion of the Benefice that he ſo ſerveth.

Proceſſions in Latine.

Item, that all and all manner of proceſſions of the Church be uſed and frequented, and continued after the old order of the Church, in the Latine tongue.

Item,

Anno 1554

Holy dayes and faſting dayes. Ceremonies reſtored.

Item, that all ſuch holy days and faſting days be obſerved and kept, as were obſerved and kept in the latter time of King Henry the eighth.

Item, that the laudable and honeſt ceremonies which were wont to be uſed, frequented, and obſerved in the Church, be alſo hereafter frequented, uſed, and obſerved.

Item, that children be chriſtned by the prieſt, and confirmed by the Biſhop, as heretofore hath beene accuſtomed and uſed.

Orders.

Item, touching ſuch perſons as were heretofore promoted to any orders, after the new ſort and faſhion of orders: conſidering they were not ordered in very deed, the Biſhop of the Dioceſſe finding otherwiſe ſufficiency and ability in thoſe men, may ſupply that thing which wanted in them before, and then according to his diſcretion admit them to miniſter.

Comming to divine ſervice.

Item, that by the Biſhop of the Dioceſſe an uniforme doctrine be ſet forth by homilies, or otherwiſe. for the good inſtruction and teaching of all people: And that the ſaid Biſhop and other perſons aforeſaid, do compell the pariſhioners to come to their ſeverall Churches, and there devoutly to heare divine ſervice, as of reaſon they ought.

Proviſion for Catholike Schoolemaſters.

Item, that they examine all Schoolemaſters and teachers of children, and finding them ſuſpect in any wiſe to remove them, and place Catholike men in their roomes, with a ſpeciall commandement to inſtruct their children, ſo as they may be able to anſwer the prieſt at the Maſſe, and ſo helpe the prieſt to Maſſe, as hath been accuſtomed.

Item that the ſaid Biſhop, and all other the perſons aforeſaid, have ſuch regard, reſpect, and conſideration of and for the ſetting forth of the premiſſes, with all kinde of vertue, godly living, and good example, with repreſſing alſo and keeping under of vice. and unthriftines, as they and every of them may be ſeen to favor the reſtitution of true religion; and alſo to make an honeſt account and reckoning of their office and cure, to the honour of God, our good contentation and profit of this our realm, and the dominions of the ſame.

March 4.

A like preſcript alſo with articles, was ſent from the ſaid Queene Mary, to the Lord Mayor of London, the fourth day of March, in the yeere abovesaid, which Lord Mayor upon the ſame directed his commandement to the Aldermen, every one ſeverally in his Ward, containing as followeth.

By the Lord Mayor.

A preſcript of the L. Mayor to the Aldermen.

ON the Queene our moſt gracious and moſt benigne Soveraigne Ladies behalfe, wee moſt ſtraitly charge and command you, that yee the ſaid Aldermen, faile not perſonally to call before your owne perſon in ſuch place within your ſaid Ward, as to you ſhall ſeeme moſt convenient and meete, upon Wedneſday next comming, which ſhall be the 7. day of this preſent moneth, at 7. of the clock in the morning of the ſame day, all and every the houſholders both poore and rich of your ſaid Ward, and then and there openly and plainly for your own diſcharge, and for the eſchewing of the perils that to you might otherwiſe bee juſtly imputed and laid, doe not onely ſtreightly admoniſh, charge, and command, in the Queen our ſaid Soveraign Ladies name and behalf, all and every the ſaid houſholders, that both in their own perſons, and alſo their wives, children and ſervants, being of the age of xii. yeeres and upwards, and every of them, do at all and every time and times from henceforth, and namely at the holy time of Eaſter, now approaching, honeſtly, quietly, obediently, and catholikely, uſe and behave themſelves like good and faithfull Chriſtian people, in all & every thing and things touching and concerning the true faith, profeſſion, and religion of his Catholike Church, both according to the lawes and precepts of almighty God, and alſo their bounden duty of obedience towards our Soveraigne Lady the Queene her Lawes and Statutes, and her highneſſe moſt good example and gracious proceeding according to the ſame, and according alſo to the right wholeſome, charitable, and godly admonition, charge and exhortation, late ſet forth and given by the right reverend father in God, the Biſhop of London, our Dioceſan and Ordinary to all the Parſons, Vicars, and Curates, within this Dioceſſe: but alſo that they and every of them do truly, without delay, advertiſe you of the names and ſurnames of all and every perſon and perſons, that they or any of them, can or may at any time hereafter know, perceive or underſtand, to tranſgreſſe or offend in any point or article concerning the premiſſes at their uttermoſt perils. That ye immediately after ſuch notice thereof to you given, do forthwith advertiſe us thereof, faile ye not thus to doe with all circumſpection and diligence, as ye will anſwer to our ſaid moſt dread Soveraigne Lady the Queen for the contrary at your like perill. Given at the Guildhall of the City of London, the fifth day of March in the firſt yeere of the Reign of our ſaid ſovereign Lady and Queen.

Blackwell.

And likewiſe do you give to every of the ſaid houſholders ſtraitly in commandement that they or their wives depart not out of the ſaid City, untill this holy time of Eaſter be paſt.

ABout the ſame yeere and time, when Doctor Boner ſet forth this preſcript or monitory, there came from the Queen another Proclamation againſt ſtrangers and forrainers within this Realm. The purpoſe and intent of which proclamation, becauſe it chiefly and moſt ſpecially concerned religion and doctrine, and the true profeſſors thereof, I thought here to annexe the tenor and manner of the ſame.

A copie of the Queenes Proclamation for the driving out of the Realme ſtrangers and forrainers.

Q. Maries Proclamation for driving out of ſtrangers.

THe Queene our Soveraigne Lady underſtanding that a multitude of evill diſpoſed perſons, being borne out of her Highneſſe Dominions in other ſundry nations, flying from the obeyſance of the Princes and Rulers under whom they bee borne, ſome for hereſie, ſome for murther, treaſon, robbery, and ſome for other horrible crimes, bee reſorted into this her Majeſties realme, and here have made their demurre, and yet bee commorant and lingring, partly to eſchew ſuch condigne puniſhment as their ſaid horrible crimes deſerve, and partly to dilate, plant, and ſow the ſeeds of their malicious doctrine and lewd converſation among the good Subjects of this her ſaid Realme, of purpoſe to infect her good Subjects with the like, inſomuch as (beſides innumerable hereſies, which divers of the ſame being heretikes have preached and taught within her Highneſſe ſaid Realme) it is aſſuredly knowne unto her Majeſty, that not only their ſecret practices have not failed to ſtirre, comfort and aide divers her Highneſſe Subjects to this moſt unnaturall rebellion againſt God and her Grace, but alſo ſome other of them deſiſt not ſtill to practiſe with her people eftſoones to rebell: her Majeſty therefore having (as afore is ſaid) knowledge and intelligence hereof, hath for remedy herein determined, and moſt ſtraitly chargeth and commandeth, that all and every ſuch perſon or perſons borne out of her highneſſe dominions, now commorant or reſident within this Realme, of whatſoever Nation or Countrey, being either Preacher, Printer, Bookeſeller, or other Artificer, or of whatſoever calling elſe, not being Denizen or Merchant knowne uſing the trade of Merchandize, or ſervant to ſuch Ambaſſadors as bee Liegers here from the Princes and States joyned in league with herGrace, ſhall within 24. dayes of this Proclamation, avoide the Realm upon paine of moſt grievous puniſhment by impriſonment, and forfeiture and confiſcation of all their goods and moveables, and alſo to be delivered unto their naturall Princes or Rulers, againſt whoſe perſons or lawes they have offended. Giving to all Majors, Shiriffes, Bailiffes, Conſtables, and all other her miniſters, officers, and good ſubiects, ſtraitly alſo in charge, if they know any ſuch perſon not borne in the Queenes Highneſſe dominions (except before excepted) that ſhall after the time and day limited in the Proclamation, tarry within this Realm, that they ſhall apprehend the ſame perſon or perſons, and commit him or them to Ward, there to remaine without baile or mainprize, till her Graces pleaſure or her Councels be ſignified unto them, for the further ordering of the ſaid perſon or perſons. And that if any of her ſaid officers, after the ſaid 24. dayes, apprehend, take, or know of any ſuch, they ſhall with diligence immediately certifie her ſaid Councell thereof, to the intent order may forthwith be given for their puniſhment according.

Cauſes laid againſt ſtrangers.

Peter Martyr and Joannes Alaſco baniſhed the realme. Engliſhmen fled out of the realme for religion.

¶ In the mean while, upon the Proclamation before mentioned, not only the ſtrangers in king Edwards time received into the Realm for Religion, among whom was Peter Martyr, and John Alaſco Uncle to the king of Poland, but many Engliſhmen fled, ſome to Freezland, ſome to Cleveland, ſome to high Germany, where they were diverſly ſcattered into divers companies and congregations, at Weſel, at Frankford Emden, Markpurgh, Stranſborough, Baſil, Arow, Zurich, Geneva, and other places: where by the providence of God they were all ſuſtained, and there entertained with greater favour amonſt ſtrangers abroad, than they could bee in their owne countrey at home, well neere to the number of 800. perſons, ſtudents and others together.

The number of Engliſh exiles well neere 800. perſons, March 15. Lady Elizabeth and Lord Courtney upon ſuſpition of Sir Thomas Wyats riſing committed to the Tower.

In the ſaid moneth of March, the Lord Courtney Earle of Devonſhire, whom the Queene at her firſt entring delivered out of the Tower, and Ladie Elizabeth alſo the Queenes ſiſter, were both in ſuſpicion to have conſented to Wyats conſpiracy, and for the ſame, this March were apprehended and committed to the Tower.

Touching the impriſonment of which Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, thou ſhalt note here for thy learning (good reader) a politike point of practice in Steven Gardiner biſhop of Wincheſter, not unworthy to be conſidered. This Gardiner being alwaies a capitall enemy to the Lady Elizabeth, and thinking now by the occaſion of maſter Wyat, to picke out ſome matter againſt the Lord Courtney, and ſo in the end to entangle the Lady Elizabeth, deviſed a peſtilent practice of conveyance, as in the ſtory here following may appeare.

A point of practice of Steven Gardiner againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

The ſtory is this. The ſame day that Sir Thomas Wyat dyed, hee deſired the Lievtenant to bring him to the preſence of the Lord Courtney. Who there before the Lievtenant & the Shirifes kneeling downe upon his knees, beſought the L. Courtney to forgive him, for that he had falſly accuſed both the Lady Elizabeth and him, and ſo being brought from thence unto the Scaffold to ſuffer, there openly in the hearing of all the people, cleared the Lady Elizabeth, and the Lord Courtney, to be free and innocent from all ſuſpicion of that commotion. At which confeſſion, Doctor Weſton there ſtanding by, cried to the people, ſaying: Believe him not good people, for he confeſſed otherwiſe before unto the Councell.

Doctor Weſton againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

After the execution done of ſir Thomas Wyat, which was the 11. day of Aprill, word was brought immediately unto the Lord Maior Sir Thomas White, a little before dinner, how maſter Wyat had cleered the Lady Elizabeth and Lord Courtney, and the words alſo which doctor Weſton ſpake unto the people, whereunto the Lord Maior anſwering: Is this true, quoth he: ſaid Weſton ſo: In ſooth, I never tooke him otherwiſe but for a knave. Upon this the Lord Maior ſitting downe to dinner (who dined the ſame day at the Bridgehouſe) commeth in Sir Martin Bowes with the Recorder newly come from the Parliament houſe, who hearing of the Maior and Shiriffes this report of Wyats confeſſion, both upon the Scaffold and alſo in the Tower, marvelled thereat, declaring how there was another tale contrary to this, told the ſame day in the Parliament houſe, which was, that ſir Thomas Wyat ſhould deſire the Lord Courtney to confeſſe the truth, ſo as he had done before.

The Lord Maiors iudgement of Doctor Weſton.

Upon this it followed not long after, that a certaine Prentice dwelling in ſaint Laurence Lane, named Cut, as he was drinking with one Denham a Plaſterer, being one of Queene Maries ſervants, amongſt other talke made mention how ſir Thomas Wyat had cleered the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, to be no conſenters to his riſing. Which words being brought to Gardiner (by what meanes I know not) incontinent upon the ſame, ſir Andrew Judde was ſent by the ſaid biſhop unto the Lord Maior, commanding him to bring the ſaid Prentice to the ſtarre-chamber, which was accuſed of theſe words, that he ſhould ſay that Wyat was conſtrained by the Councell to accuſe the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney. Which fellow when he was come to the ſtar-chamber, the aforeſaid Gardiner letting paſſe other matters that were in hand, began to declare to the whole multitude, how miraculouſly Almighty God had brought the Queenes Maieſty to the Crown, the whole Realm in a manner being againſt her, and that he had brought this to paſſe for this ſingular intent and purpoſe, that this Realm being overwhelmed with hereſies, ſhe might reduce againe the ſame unto the true Catholike faith. And wher ſhe took the Lady Elizabeth into her favour, and loved her ſo tenderly, and alſo the Lord Courtny who of long time had been detained in priſon, and by her was ſet at liberty, and received great benefits at her hands, and notwithſtanding all this they had conſpired moſt unnaturally and traiterouſly againſt her with that hainous Traitor Wyat, as by the confeſſion of Wyat (ſaid hee) and the letters ſent to and fro may plainly appeare: Yet there was ſome in the City of London which reported that Wyat was conſtrained by the Councell to accuſe the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney, and yet you my Lord Maior quoth he, have not ſeene the ſame puniſhed.

Cut, Prentiſe in London brought before Steven Gardiner.

Steven Gardiners tale in the Star-chamber againſt the Lady Elizabeth.

The party is here, ſaid the Lord Maior. Take him with you, ſaid Gardiner, and puniſh him according to his deſert, and ſaid further, My Lord, take heed to your charge, the City of London is a whirle-poole and ſinke of all evill rumours, there they be bred, and from thence ſpread into all parts of this Realme.

The L. Shandois falſe report in the Star-chamber againſt Lady Elizabeth and L. Courtney.

There ſtood by the ſame time the Lord Shandois, who being then Lievtenant of the Tower, and now hearing the Biſhop thus ſpeak, to ſooth his tale, came in with theſe words as followeth:

My Lords (quoth he) this is a truth that I ſhall tell you, I being Lievtenant of the Tower when Wyat ſuffered, he deſired me to bring him to the Lord Courtney, which when I had done, he fell down upon his knees before him in my preſence, and deſired him to confeſſe the truth of himſelfe as he had done before, and to ſubmit himſelf unto the Queens Maieſties mercy.

And thus much I thought of this matter to declare, to the intent that the Reader perceiving the proceedings of the Biſhops in the premiſſes and comparing the ſame with the true teſtimony of Wyat himſelfe, and with the teſtimonie of the Sheriffs which were preſent the ſame time when ſir Thomas Wyat aſked the Lord Courtney forgiveneſſe, may the better iudge of the whole caſe and matter for the which the Lady Elizabeth and the Lord Courtney were ſo long in trouble. Of which her Graces trouble, hereafter (God willing) more ſhall be ſaid in the ſtory of her life. In the mean time to let this matter ſtay, let us now paſſe further in our hiſtory.

Q. Mary not favouring the Londoners.

A Parliament holden pretended to be kept at Oxford.

Not long after this, Queene Mary partly fearing the Londoners by occaſion of Wyats conſpiracy, partly perceiving moſt part of the City for Religions ſake not greatly to favour her proceedings, to their diſpleaſure and hinderance ſummoned a Parliament to bee holden at Oxford: as it were to gratifie that City, where both the Vniverſity, Towne, and Countrey had ſhewed themſelves very obedient and forward, eſpecially in reſtoring Popiſh religion. For this purpoſe great proviſion was made, as well by the Queenes officers as by the towneſmen and inhabitants of Oxford, and the countrey about.

A Parliament holden at Weſtminſter. Mention of the Queens mariage in the Parliament.

But the Queens mind in ſhort ſpace changed, and the ſame Parliament was holden at Weſtminſter in Aprill following. Then the Queene, beſide other things, propoſed concerning her mariage to King Philip, and reſtoring of the Popes ſupremacy: as touching her mariage it was agreed upon; but the other requeſt could not as then be obtained.

Boner made Vicegerent & Preſident in the Convocation.

The ſame time when this Parliament was ſummoned, ſhe alſo ſummoned a Convocation of Biſhops, and of the Clergy, writing unto Boner (whom ſhe had made Vicegerent in the ſtead of Cranmer being then in the Tower) after the tenor and form of a new ſtile, differing from the old ſtile of king Henry, and king Edward, as followeth.

The ſtile of Queene Mary altered, writing to Boner for the ſummoning of a Convocation.

Maria Dei gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ, Hiberniæ Regina, fidei defenſor, Reverendo in Chriſto patri Edmundo London. Epiſc. ſalutem. Licet nuper quibuſdam arduis & urgentibus negotiis nos ſecuritatem & defenſionem Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ, ac pacem & tranquillitatem, &c.

Supremum caput in the Queens ſtile taken away.

Legitime ſuffultus in the Biſhops title taken away.

Where note, good Reader, concerning the altering and changing the Queens ſtile, the latter part therof to be left out of her ſtile, which is: Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ & Hiberniæ ſupremum caput, becauſe in this preſent Parliament the ſupremacy being given away from the Crowne of England to the Pope, thereupon this parcell of the title was alſo taken away. Likewiſe the ſaid Boner giving his Certificate upon the ſame, leaves out autoritate illuſtriſſimæ, &c. legitimè ſuffultus: which parcell alſo in the ſame Parliament was reprived and taken away the ſame time.

The dignity of Prieſts extolled by Biſhop Boner.

Boner ſpeaketh for the honour of Prieſthood.

In this aforeſaid Convocation, Boner biſhop of London being Vicegerent and Preſident, as is ſaid, made a certaine exhortation or oration to the Clergy (which was in this Convocation, or much about the ſaid time) wherein he ſeemeth to ſhew a great peece of profound and deep learning, in ſetting forth the moſt incomparable and ſuperangelicall order of Prieſthood, as may appeare by this parcell or fragment of his foreſaid oration, being collected and gathered by ſome that ſtood by: which as it came to our hands, ſo I thought to impart it to the Reader, both for that the author of ſo worthy a worke ſhould not paſſe unknown, and partly alſo, for that the eſtimation of this bleſſed order ſhould loſe nothing of his preeminence, but might be known in moſt ample perfection, ſo as it ſtandeth above Angels and Kings, if it be true that Boner ſaith.

¶ A peece or fragment of the exhortation made by Boner Biſhop of London, to them of the Convocation houſe, copied out by them that ſtood by and heard him.

The profound exhortation of B. Boner in the Convocation.

Prieſts compared to the Virgin Mary in three points.

Wherefore it is to be known that Prieſts and Elders be worthy of all men to bee worſhipped for the dignity ſake which they have of God, as in Matthew 16. Whatſoever ye ſhall looſe upon earth, &c. And whatſoever yee ſhall binde, &c. For a Prieſt by ſome meanes is like Mary the Virgin, and is ſhewed by three points; As the bleſſed Virgin by five words did conceive Chriſt, as it is ſaid: Luke 1. Fiat mihi ſecundum verbum tuum: that is to ſay, Be it unto me according to thy word: ſo the Prieſt by five words doth make the very body of Chriſt. Even as immediately after the conſent of Mary, Chriſt was all whole in her wombe: ſo immediately after the ſpeaking of the words of conſecration; the bread is tranſubſtantiated into the very body of Chriſt. Secondly, as the Virgin carried Chriſt in her armes, and laid him in an Oxe-ſtall after his birth; even ſo the Prieſt after the conſecration, doth lift up the body of Chriſt, and placeth it, and carrieth it, and handleth it with his hands. Thirdly, as the bleſſed Virgin was ſanctified before ſhe was conceived; ſo the prieſt being ordained and annointed before hee doth conſecrate, becauſe without orders hee could conſecrate nothing: therefore the Lay-man cannot doe that thing, although hee be never ſo holy, and doe ſpeake the ſelfe ſame words of conſecration. Therfore here is to be knowne, that the dignity of Prieſts by ſome meanes paſſeth the dignity of Angels, becauſe there is no power given to any of the Angels to make the body of Chriſt. Wherby the leaſt Prieſt may doe in earth, that which the greateſt and higheſt Angell in heaven cannot do, as ſaint Bernard ſaith: O worſhipfull dignity of Prieſts, in whoſe hands the Son of God is, as in the wombe of the Virgin he was incarnate. S. Auguſtine ſaith, that Angels in the conſecration of the ſacred hoſt doe ſerve him, and the Lord of heaven deſcendeth to him. Whereupon S. Ambroſe upon ſaint Luke ſaith; Doubt thou not the Angels to bee where Chriſt is preſent upon the Altar. Wherfore Prieſts are to be honoured before all Kings of the earth, Princes, and Nobles. For a Prieſt is higher than a King, happier than an Angell, maker of his Creator, Therfore, &c.

Prieſthood compared and preferred before the ſtate of Angels.

Blaſphemy.

It was declared a little before, how Doctor Ridley was had from Fremingham to the Tower; where being in durance, and invited to the Lievtenants table, he had certaine talke or conference with Secretary Bourne, maſter Fecknam, and other, concerning the controverſies in religion: the ſumme whereof, as it was penned with his owne hand, hereafter inſueth.

Here followeth the ſumme and effect of the communication betweene Doctor Ridley, and Secretary Bourne, with others, at the Lievtenants table in the Tower.

Sir Thomas Abridges.

Who is an heretike.

MAſter Thomas of Bridges ſaid at his brother Maſter Lievtenants boord, I pray you maſter Doctors, for my learning tell me what an heretike is. Maſter Secretary Bourne ſaid, I will tell you who is an heretike: who ſo ſtubbornly and ſtiffely maintaineth an untruth, he is an heretike. You meane Sir, ſaid I, an untruth in matters of religion, and concerning our faith. Yea; that is true, ſaid he; and in this we are ſoon agreed. Then ſaid maſter Fecknam, whom they called maſter Deane of Pauls, ſitting at the upper end of the table, I will tell you by ſaint Auguſtine who is an heretike; Qui adulandi principibus vel lucri gratia falſas opiniones gignit vel ſequitur, hereticus eſt, ſaith S. Auguſtine. And then he engliſhed the ſame. Sir, ſaid I, I weene S. Auguſtine addeth the third number, which is vel vanæ gloriæ cauſa. You ſay even true maſter Doctor, ſaid he, and thus farre we did agree all three.

An heretike defined by ſaint Auguſtine.

Fecknam provoking maſter Ridley.

Unity, antiquity, univerſality.

Maſter Fecknam began again to ſay, Who ſo doth not believe what the ſcripture affirmeth, but will obſtinately maintaine the contrary, hee is Hæreticus: As in the ſacrament of the Altar Matthew doth affirme there to be Chriſts body, Marke doth affirme it, Luke affirmeth it, Paul affirmeth it, and none denieth it: therfore to hold the contrary is hereſie. It is the ſame body and fleſh that was borne of the Virgin; and this is confirmed by unity, antiquity, and univerſality. For none before Berengarius did ever doubt of this, and he was an heretike, as maſter Doctor there knoweth full well; I do take to witneſſe his owne conſcience, ſaid he.

Marry ſir, ſaid maſter Secretary, maſter Fecknam hath ſpoken wel. Theſe be great matters, unity, antiquity, and univerſality. Doe you not think ſo, maſter Doctor, ſaid he to me?

Here, while I ſtrained curteſie, and pretended no willingneſſe to talk, ſaid one of the Commiſſioners, Peradventure maſter Ridley doth agree with maſter Fecknam, and then there needs not much debating of the matter.

Sir, ſaid I, in ſome things I do and ſhall agree with him, and in ſome things which he hath ſpoken, to be plaine, I do not agree with him at all. Maſters, ſaid I, ye bee (as I underſtand) the Queenes Commiſſioners here, and if yee have commiſſion to examine me in theſe matters, I ſhall declare unto you plainly my faith; if ye have not, then I ſhall pray you either give mee leave to ſpeak my mind freely, or elſe to hold my peace.

There is none here, ſaid maſter Secretary, that doth not favour you: and then every man ſhewed what favour they bare towards me, and how glad they would be of an agreement.

But as I ſtrained to have licence of them in plaine words to ſpeake my mind, ſome thought they granted me it for vix or ægrè. Well, at the laſt I was content to take it for licenſed, and ſo began to talke.

Biſhop Ridley anſwering to Fecknam.

Truth in Scripture goeth not by number of affirmation, where one is ſufficient.

To maſter Fecknams arguments of the manifold affirmation where no deniall was, I anſwered; where is a multitude of affirmations in Scripture, and where is one affirmation, all is one concerning the truth of the matter: for that which any one of the Evangeliſts ſpake inſpired by the holy Ghoſt, was as true as that which is ſpoken of them all. It is as true that John ſaith of Chriſt, Ego ſum oſtium ovium, i. I am the doore of the ſheep, as if all had ſaid it. For it is not in Scripture as in witneſſe of men, where the number is credited more then one, becauſe it is uncertain with what ſpirit he doth ſpeak. And where maſter Fecknam ſpake of ſo many, affirming without any negation, &c. Sir, ſaid I, all they do affirm the thing which they meant. Now if ye take their words, to leave their meaning, then do they affirm what ye take, but not what they meant. Sir, ſaid I, if in talke with you, I ſhould ſo utter my mind in words, that ye by the ſame do, and may plainly perceive my meaning, and could, if ye would be captious, cavill at my words, and writhe them to another ſenſe, I would think ye were no gentle companions to talk with except ye would take my words as ye did perceive I did meane.

Words in ſcripture muſt be taken with their meaning.

Marry, quoth maſter Secretary, we ſhould els do you plaine injury and wrong.

Maſter Fecknam perceiving whereunto my talke went: Why, quoth he, what circumſtances can ye ſhew me that ſhould move to think of any other ſenſe, than as the words plainly ſay, Hoc eſt corpus meum, quod pro vobis tradetur, i. This is my body which ſhall be betraied for you?

Hoc eſt corpus meum expounded.

Reaſons why theſe words ought to be taken not literally.

Sir, ſaid I, even the next ſentence that followeth, viz. Hoc facite in meam commemorationem, i. Do this in my remembrance. And alſo by what reaſon yee ſay the bread is turned into Chriſts carnall body, by the ſame I may ſay, that it is turned into his myſticall body. For as that ſaith of it, Hoc eſt corpus, quod pro vobis tradetur: ſo Paul which ſpake by Chriſts ſpirit, ſaith, Vnus panis & unum corpus multi ſumus omnes, qui de uno pane participamus, i. We being many are all but one bread, and one body, inaſmuch as we are partakers of one bread.

Here he calleth one bread, one loafe, ſaid maſter Secretary.

Yea, ſaid I, one loafe, one bread, all is one with me.

But what ſay ye, quoth maſter Secretary, of the univerſality, antiquity and unity, that maſter Fecknam did ſpeak of?

Unity with verity to be allowed.

Antiquity.

I enſure you, ſaid I, I thinke them matters weightie, and to be conſidered well. As for unity the truth is before God, I doe believe it, and embrace it, ſo it be with verity, and joyned to our head Chriſt, and ſuch one as Paul ſpeaketh of, ſaying; Vna Fides, unus Deus, unum Baptiſma, i. One Faith, one God, one Baptiſme. And for antiquity, I am alſo perſwaded that to bee true which Ireneus ſaith, Quod primum verum, i. That which is firſt is true. In our Religion Chriſts faith was firſt truly taught by Chriſt himſelfe, by his Apoſtles, and by many good men, that from the beginning did ſucceed next unto them: and for this controverſie of the ſacrament, I am perſwaded that thoſe old writers, which wrote before the controverſie and the uſurping of the ſea of Rome, do all agree, if they be well underſtanded in this truth.

I am glad to heare ſaid maſter Secretary, that you doe ſo well eſteeme the Doctors of the Church.

Univerſality hath a double underſtanding.

Now as for univerſality, it may have two meanings; one to underſtand that to be univerſall, which from the beginning in all ages hath been allowed; another to underſtand univerſality for the multitude of our age, or of any other ſingular age.

No,

Anno 1554

No, no, ſaith maſter Secretary, theſe three do alwaies agree, and where there is one, there is all the reſt: and here hee and I changed many words. And finally, to be ſhort, in this matter we did not agree.

There was none, quoth maſter Fecknam, before Berengarius, Wickliffe, and Hus, and now in our dayes Caroloſtadius, Oecolampadius, And Caroloſtadius ſaith, Chriſt pointed to his owne body, and not to the Sacrament, and ſaid, Hoc eſt corpus meum. And Melancthon writeth to one Miconius (Miconius ſaid I) theſe or like words; Nullam ſatis gravem rationem invenire poſſum, propter quam à fide majorum in hac materia diſſentiam, i. I can find no grounded reaſon to cauſe me to diſſent from the beliefe of our fore-elders.

Melanct. ad Miconium.

Thus when he had ſpoken at length, with many other words mo; ſir, ſaid I, it is certaine that other before theſe have written of this matter: Not by the way only, and obiter, as doe for the moſt all the old Writers, but even ex profeſſo; and their whole books intreat of it alone, as Bertram.

The doctrine of the Sacrament not new.

Bertram ſaid the Secretary, what man was he? and who was he? and how do you know, &c. with many queſtions.

Sir, quoth I, I have read his book; He proponeth the ſame which is now in controverſie, and anſwereth ſo directly, that no man may doubt but that he affirmeth, that the ſubſtance of bread remaineth ſtill in the ſacrament, and he wrote unto Carolus Magnus..

Marry, quoth he, marke, for there is a matter. He wrote, quoth he, ad Henricum, and not ad Carolum; for no Author maketh any ſuch mention of Bertramus.

Yes, quoth I, Trithemius in Catalago illuſtrium Scriptorum ſpeaketh of him. Trithemius was but of late time; but he ſpeaketh, quoth I, of them that were of antiquity. Here, after much talke of Bertram, what Authors have ye, quoth maſter Secretary, to make of the Sacrament a figure?

Doctors that make the Sacrament but a figure.
Tertullianus.
Gelaſius.
Origen.

Sir, quoth I, yee know (I think) that Tertullian in plain words ſpeaketh thus; Hoc eſt corpus meum, id eſt, figura corporis mei, i. This is my body, that is to ſay, a figure of my body. And Gelaſius ſaith plainly, that Subſtantia panis manet, i. The ſubſtance of bread remaineth. And Origen ſaith likewiſe, Quod ſanctificatur ſecundum materiam, ingreditur ſtomachum, & vadit in ſeceſſum, i. That which is ſanctified, as touching the matter or ſubſtance, paſſeth away into the draught. This when I had engliſhed, maſter Secretary ſaid to me, you know very well as any man &c. and here, if I would I might have been ſet in a fooliſh Paradiſe of his commendation of my learning, and quod eſſem vir multæ lectionis, i. A man of much reading. But this I would not take at his hand. He ſet me not up ſo high, but I brought my ſelfe as low again; and here was much adoe.

As for Melancthon (quoth I) whom maſter Fecknam ſpake of, I marvell that yee will alledge him, for we are more nigh an agreement here in England, than the opinion of Melancthon is to you: for in this point we all agree here, that there is in the ſacrament but one materiall ſubſtance; and Melancthon, as I weene, ſaith there are two.

Ye ſay truth, quoth maſter Secretary; Melancthons opinion is ſo. But I pray you, ye have heard that the ſacrament was in old time ſo reverenced, that many were then forbidden to bee preſent at the miniſtration thereof; Catechumini, quoth he, and many moe.

Catechumeni and others went out at the miniſtration.

Truth ſir, quoth I, there were ſome called Audientes, ſome Pœnitentes, ſome Catechumeni, and ſome Energumeni, which were commanded to depart.

Now, quoth he, then, And how can yee then make but a figure or a ſigne of the ſacrament, as that booke doth which is ſet forth in my Lord of Canterburies name? I wiſſe, ye can tell who made it, did not ye make it? and here was much murmuring of the reſt, as though they would have given mee the glory of the writing of that booke; which yet was ſaid of ſome there to containe the moſt haynous hereſie that ever was.

The book of Catechiſme.

Maſter Secretary, quoth I, that booke was made of a great learned man, and him which is able to do the like againe: as for me I enſure you (be not deceived in me) I was never able to do or write any ſuch like thing; he paſſeth me no leſſe than the learned maſter his young ſcholler.

Now, here every man would have his ſaying, which I paſſe over, not much materiall for to tell. But ſir, quoth I, me thinkes it is not charitably done, to beare the people in hand that any man doth ſo lightly eſteem the ſacrament, at to make of it a figure. For that (but) maketh is a bare figure without any more profit, which that booke doth often deny, as appeareth to the Reader moſt plainly.

Yes, quoth he, that they doe.

Sir, no quoth I, of a truth; and as for me, I enſure you I make no leſſe of the ſacrament than thus: I ſay whoſoever receiveth the ſacrament, he receiveth therewith either life or death.

No, quoth maſter Secretary, ſcripture ſaith not ſo.

Sir, quoth I, although not in the ſame ſound of words, yet it doth in the ſame ſenſe, and ſaint Auguſtine ſaith, in the ſound of words alſo: for Paul ſaith; The bread which we break, is it not the partaking or fellowſhip of the body of Chriſt? And ſaint Auguſtine, Manduca vitam, bibe vitam, i. eat life, drink life.

Then ſaid maſter Pope, what can ye make of it when ye ſay, there is not the real body of Chriſt which I do believe, &c. and I pray God I may never believe other. How can it bring (as ye ſay) either life or death, when Chriſts body is not there?

The Sacrament may bring life without tranſubſtantiation.

Sir, quoth I, when you heare Gods word truly preached, if you doe believe it, and abide in it, ye ſhall and do receive life withall; and if ye do not believe it, it doth bring unto you death: and yet Chriſts body is ſtill in heaven, and not carnall in every Preachers mouth.

I pray you tell me, quoth he, how can you anſwer to this, Quod pro vobis tradetur, which ſhall be given for you: Was the figure of Chriſts body given for us?

No ſir, quoth I, but the very body it ſelfe, whereof the ſacrament is a ſacramentall figure.

How ſay you then, quoth he, to Quod pro vobis tradetur, which ſhall be given for you?

Tertullianus.

Forſooth, quoth I, Tertullianus expoſition maketh it plain, for he ſaith, Corpus eſt figura corporis, i. The body is a figure of the body. Now put to quod pro vobis tradetur, Which ſhall be given for you, and it agreeth exceeding well.

In faith, quoth he, I would give forty pound that yee were of a good opinion. For I enſure you, I have heard you, and had an affection to you.

I thank you maſter Pope, for your heart and minde, and ye know, quoth I, I were a very foole if I would in this matter diſſent from you, if that in my conſcience the truth did not inforce me ſo to do. For I wis (as ye do perceive I trow) it is ſomewhat out of my way, if I would eſteem worldly gain.

Cyprian.

What ſay ye, quoth he, to Cyprian? Doth he not ſay plainly, Panis quem dedit Dominus non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, omnipotentia verbi factus.

factus eſt caro, i. The bread which the Lord did deliver being changed, not according to the forme, but according to the nature therof, by the omnipotent word is made fleſh Doctor Ridley falſly reported of, for a Sermon of his at Pauls.

True ſir, ſo he doth ſay, and I anſwer even the ſame which once by chance I preached at Pauls Croſſe in a Sermon, for the which I have beene as unjuſtly and as untruly reported of, as any poore man hath been. For there I ſpeaking of the Sacrament, and inveighing againſt them that eſteemed it no better than a peece of bread: told even the ſame thing of Pœnitentes, Audientes, Catechumeni, Energumeni, that I ſpake of before: and I bade them depart as unworthy to heare the myſtery; and then I ſaid to thoſe that be Sancti, Cyprian the martyr ſhall tell you how it is that Chriſt calleth it, ſaying, Panis eſt corpus, cibus, potus, caro, &c. i. Bread is the body, meat, drink, fleſh, becauſe that unto this materiall ſubſtance is given the property of the thing whereof it beareth the name: and this place then took I to utter as the time would then ſuffer, that the materiall ſubſtance of bread doth remaine. M. Fecknam (which, as is reported to me, did belie me openly in the ſame matter at Pauls Croſſe) heard all this my talke, as red as ſkarlet in his face, and herein anſwered me never one word.

The place of S. Cyprian expounded.

You do know well, quoth maſter Secretary, that Origen and Tertullian were not Catholike but erred.

None of all the Doctors holden in all points.

Sir, quoth I, there is none of all the Doctors that are holden in all points, but are thought to have erred in ſome things. But yet I never heard that it was either laid to Origens charge or to Tertullian, that ever they were thought to have erred in this matter of the ſacrament.

What, quoth maſter Chomley late chiefe Juſtice, doth not Chriſt ſay plainly, that it is his very fleſh, and his very blood, and we muſt needs eat him, or elſe we can have no life? Sir, quoth I, if you will heare how ſaint Auguſtine expoundeth that place, you ſhall perceive that you are in a wrong boxe. And then I began to tell ſaint Auguſtines minde in his booke de Doctrina Chriſtiana; Yea, yea, quoth maſter Secretary, that is true, ſaint Auguſtine doth take it figuratively indeed.

S. Auguſtine taketh the words of the Sacrament figuratively by Bournes owne confeſſion.

Forty yeeres agoe, quoth maſter Fecknam, all were of one opinion in this matter.

Forty yeeres agoe, quoth I, all held that the biſhop of Rome was ſupreme head of the univerſall Church.

What then? was maſter Fecknam beginning to ſay, &c, but maſter Secretary took the tale, and ſaid, that was but a poſitive law.

A poſitive law, quoth I; No ſir, he would not have it ſo: for it is in his decrees, that he challenged it by Chriſts owne word. For his decree ſaith: Nullis Synodicis conſtitutis, neque Conciliis, ſed viva voce Domini prælata eſt Eccleſia Romana omnibus Eccleſiis in toto mundo; dicente Domino Petro, tu es Petrus, &c. The Church of Rome was advanced above all other Churches in the world, not by any Synodicall conſtitutions, nor yet any Councels, but by the lively voice of the Lord, according as the Lord ſaid to Peter; Thou art Peter, &c. And in another place he intreateth, Tu es Cephas, id eſt, caput. i. Thou art Cephas, that is to ſay, the head.

Diſt. 21. Quamvis.

Tuſh, it was not counted an article (quoth maſter Secretary) of our faith.

Yes, ſaid I, if yee call that an article of our faith, which is to be beleeved under pain of damnation. For he ſaith, Omninò definimus, declaramus, pronunciamus, omnem creaturam ſubeſſe Romano Pontifici, de neceſſitate ſalutis, i. We do abſolutely determine, declare, and pronounce, that every creature is ſubject to the obedience of the Biſhop of Rome upon neceſſity of ſalvation.

And here when we ſpake of laws and decrees maſter Roger Chomley thought himſelfe much wronged, that he could not be ſuffered to ſpeake, the reſt were ſo ready to interrupt him: and then he up and told a long tale what lawes were of Kings in England made againſt the Biſhop of Rome, and was vehement to tell how they alway of the clergie did fly to him. And here, becauſe, he ſeemed to ſpeak of many things beſide our purpoſe, whereof we ſpake before, he was anſwered of his own fellows, and I let them talk.

Finally, we departed in peace, and M. Secretary promiſed in the end, that of their talk there ſhould come to me no harme. And after I had made my moane for lack of my bookes, hee ſaid they were all once given him: but ſith I know (ſaid he) who hath them now, write me the names of ſuch as ye would have, and I will ſpeak for you the beſt I can.

Doctor Ridleys bookes given away.

Upon the Articles above mentioned, and inquiſition made upon the ſame, divers miniſters were divorced from their wives. Amongſt whom was one John Draper, and Joane Gold his wife, in the dioceſſe of London, troubled and vexed for the ſame by Boner Biſhop of London, who ſent forth a Commiſſion with a proceſſe to ſequeſter and ſeparate them, injoyning alſo penance to the poore woman.

Miniſters divorced from their wives.

Beſides this John Draper, divers other alſo were divorced the ſame time againſt their wils; and ſome were contented of their owne unconſtant accord, to be ſeparated from their wives: as of Chicheſter one (who, becauſe he ſoone recovered againe, ſhall be here nameleſſe) another named Edmund Alſtone, another Alexander Bull, amongſt whom alſo was Doctor Standiſh, with many other; whoſe names together in the end of this ſtory of Queen Mary, we may peradventure by Gods grace in a generall Catalogue together comprehend.

March, 1554.

The 10. of March a letter was ſent to the Lieutenant of the Tower to deliver the bodies of maſter Doctor Cranmer the archbiſhop of Canterbury, M. Doctor Ridley, and M. Latimer, to ſir John Williams, to be conveied by him unto Oxford.

The 26. of March there was a letter directed to ſir Henry Doell, and one Foſter, to attach the bodies of Doctor Taylor Parſon of Hadley, and of Henry Askew, and to ſend them up to the Councell.

How Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop, Biſhop Ridley, and maſter Latimer, were ſent downe to Oxford to diſpute, with the order and manner, and all other circumſtances unto the ſaid diſputation, and alſo to their condemnation, appertaining.

About the tenth, of Aprill, Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Ridley Biſhop of London, and Hugh Latimer Biſhop alſo ſometime of Worceſter, were conveyed as priſoners from the Tower to Windſor; and after from thence to the Univerſitie of Oxford, there to diſpute with the Divines and learned men of both the Univerſities, Oxford and Cambridge, about the preſence, ſubſtance, and ſacrifice of the Sacrament. The names of the Univerſity Doctors and Graduates appointed to diſpute againſt them, were theſe; of Oxford, Doctor Weſton Prolocutor, Doctor Treſham, Doctor Cole, Doctor Oglethorpe, Doctor Pie, maſter Harpsfield, maſter Fecknam. Of Cambridge, Doctor Yong Vicechancellour, Aprill 10. D. Cranmer D. Ridley, and M. Latimer, ſent downe to Oxford to diſpute.

The Univerſity Doctors appointed to diſpute againſt the Archbiſhop and his fellows chancellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Seaton, Doctor Watſon, Doctor Sedgewicke, Doctor Atkinſon, &c. The articles or queſtions whereupon they ſhould diſpute were theſe:

Three queſtions.

1 Whether the naturall body of Chriſt be really in the Sacrament, after the words ſpoken by the Prieſt, or no?

2 Whether in the Sacrament, after the words of conſecration, any other ſubſtance doe remaine, than the ſubſtance of the body and blood of Chriſt?

3 Whether in the Maſſe be a ſacrifice propitiatory for the ſins of the quick and the dead?

Letters ſent downe from Steven Gardiner to Cambridge.

A grace for articles.

Touching the order and manner of all which things there done, with the notes, arguments, & all circumſtances thereunto pertaining, to deduce the matter from the beginning, leaving out nothing (as neere as we may) that ſhall ſeeme neceſſary to be added: Firſt here is to be underſtood, that upon Saturday the 7. day of April, the heads of the Colledges in Cambridge being congregate together, letters comming downe from Steven Gardiner Lord Chancellor, were read with Articles therewith annexed, that ſhould be diſputed upon at Oxford: the contents of which three Articles are ſufficiently expreſſed before. Whereupon in the ſaid congregation of the aforeſaid Univerſity of Cambridge, there was granted firſt a grace in this form propoſed by the Senior Proctor; Placet vobis ut inſtrumentum fiat, quod horum jam prælectorum articulorum doctrina ſana ſit & catholica, atque cum veritate orthodoxæ fidei conſentiens, & veſtro conſenſu, & ſuffragiis comprobetur? that is, May it pleaſe you to have an inſtrument made, that the doctrine of theſe foreſaid articles may be ſound and catholike, and conſonant with the verity of the right meaning faith, and that the ſame may be approoved by your conſent and voices: Secondly, in the ſaid congregation, another grace was given and granted that Doctor Yong being Vicechancellor, Doctor Glin, Doctor Atkinſon, Doctor Scot, and Maſter Sedgewicke, ſhould goe to Oxford to defend the ſaid Articles againſt Canterbury, London, and Latimer: Alſo to have letters to the Oxford men, ſealed with their common ſeal. Item, another grace granted to maſter Sedgewicke to be actuall Doctor, being thereupon immediately admitted. The foreſaid letters being then drawn out, the third day after (which was the 11. day of April) were read in the foreſaid congregation houſe, and there ſealed.

A grace for the Cambrigge Doctors to diſpute againſt Cranmer, Ridley, & Latimer.

The comming of the Cambridge men to Oxford.

Whereupon the next day after (the 12. of the ſaid moneth) the foreſaid Doctors, with the full grace of that Univerſity, ſet forward to Oxford: and comming thither the next day after (being Friday, the 13. of April) were lodged all at the Croſſe Inne, with one Wakecline, being ſometime ſervant to Biſhop Boner.

Their welcoming to Oxford.

The Cambridge Doctors repaire to Doctor Weſton.

Anon after their comming, D. Croke preſented them with wine for their welcome; & ſhortly after, two of the Bedles came from ye Vicechancellor of Oxford, and preſented ye Vicechancellor of Cambridge with a diſh of apples and a gallon of wine. After whom, next came maſter Pie and Fecknam to welcome them. Then after conſultation concerning the delivery of their letters & inſtrument of grace (which was in Doctor Seaton & Doctor Watſons keeping) they went all to Lincoln Colledge to D. Weſton ye Prolocutor, and to the Vicechancellor D. Treſham: & there they delivered their letters, & declared what they had done touching the articles, letters, and graces. Half an houre after eight they returned to their Inne againe: but firſt they concluded of a Proceſſion, ſermon, & Convocation to be had the morrow following, and that the Doctors of Cambridge ſhould be incorporate in the Univerſity of Oxford; and likewiſe that the Doctors of Oxford ſhould be incorporate in the Univerſity of Cambridge. The ſame day the forenamed priſoners were diſſevered, as was ſaid afore; Doctor Ridley to Alderman Iriſhes houſe, maſter Latimer to another, and Doctor Cranmer remained ſtill in Bocardo.

The three priſoners, Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, diſſevered.

Conſultation.

The Doctors in their ſkarlet robes.

On Saturday being the fourteenth of April, at eight of the clock, the foreſaid Vicechancellor of Cambridge with the other Doctors of the ſame Univerſity, repaired to Lincoln Colledge againe, and found the Prolocutor above in a Chappell, with the company of the houſe ſinging Requiem Maſſe, and tarried there untill the end. Then they, conſulting all together in the Maſters lodging, about nine of the clock came all to the Univerſity Church called ſaint Maries: and there, after ſhort conſultation in a Chappell, the Vicechancellor, the Prolocutor, &c. of Oxford, cauſed the Vicechancellor of Cambridge, and the reſt of the Doctors of that Univerſity, to ſend for their ſkarlet robes, brought from Cambridge, ſave that Doctor Seaton & Watſon borrowed of the Oxford men. And in this time, the Regents in the congregation houſe had granted all the Cambridge Doctors their graces, to be incorporate there; and ſo they went up, and were admitted immediately, Doctor Oglethorpe preſenting them, and the Proctor reading the ſtatute and giving them their oathes.

Maſſe in pikeſauce, in prickſong I would ſay.

The cauſes of their aſſembly declared.

Cambridge letters read. Three Notaries aſſigned.

Subſcribing to the articles.

That done, they came all into the Quire, and there held the Convocation of the Univerſity. They had Maſſe of the holy Ghoſt ſolemnly ſung in prick-ſong by the Quire-men of Chriſts Church. But firſt the cauſe of the Convocation was opened in Engliſh, partly by the Vicechancellor, and partly by the Prolocutor, declaring that they were ſent by the Queen, and therefore they were ſent, and cauſed maſter Say the Regiſter openly to read the commiſſion. That done, the Vicechancellor read Cambridge letters openly, and then concluded, that three Notaries, maſter Say for the Convocation, a Bedle of Cambridge for that Univerſitie, and one maſter White for Oxford, ſhould teſtifie of their doing, and then willed the ſaid Notaries to provide parchment, that the whole aſſembly might ſubſcribe to the Articles, ſave thoſe that had ſubſcribed before in the Convocation houſe at London and Cambridge; and ſo the Vicechancellor began firſt, after him the reſt of the Oxford men as many as could in the Maſſe time.

Proceſſion in Oxford. The array of the ſolemne Proceſſion.

Another conſultation of the Doctors and Prieſts.

The Maſſe being done, they went in proceſſion: Firſt, the Quire in their ſurplices followed the Croſſe; then the firſt yeer Regents and Proctors; then the Doctors of Law, and their Bedle before them; then the Doctors of Divinity of both Univerſities intermingled, ye Divinity and Art Bedles going before them, the Vicechancellor and Prolocutor going together. After them Bachelors of Divinity, Regentes, & non Regentes, in their array; and laſt of all, ye Bachelors of Law & Art. After whom followed a great company of ſchollers and ſtudents not graduate. And thus they proceeded through the ſtreet to Chriſts Church, and there the Quire ſung a Pſalme, and after that a Collect was read. This done, departed the Commiſſioners, Doctors, and many other to Lincolne Colledge, where they dined with the Maior of the town, one Alderman, foure Bedles, maſter Say and the Cambridge Notary. After dinner they went all again to S. Maries Church; & there after a ſhort conſultation in a Chappel, all the Commiſſioners came into the Quire, & ſate all on ſeats before the altar, to ye number of 33. perſons: And firſt they ſent to the Maior, that he ſhould bring in Doctor Cranmer, which within a while was brought to them with a number of ruſty bilmen.

chbiſhop Cranmer brought before the Doctors & high Prieſts at S. Maries Church. The reverend humility and behaviour of the Archbiſhop before them.

Thus the reverend Archbiſhop, when he was brought before the Commiſſioners, reverenced them with much humility, and ſtood with his ſtaffe in his hand, who notwithſtanding, having a ſtoole offered him, refuſed to ſit. Then the Prolocutor ſitting in the middeſt in a ſkarlet gown, began with a ſhort Preface or Oration in praiſe of unity, and eſpecially in the Church of Chriſt; declaring withall his bringing up, and taking degrees in Cambridge, and alſo how he was promoted by king Henry, and had been his Counſellor and a Catholike man, one of the ſame unity, and a member thereof in times paſt, but of late yeeres did ſeparate and cut off himſelfe from it, by teaching and ſetting forth of erroneous doctrine, making every yeere a new faith: and therfore it pleaſed the Queens Grace, to ſend them of the Convocation and other learned men, to bring him to this unity again, if it might bee. Then ſhewed he him how they of the Convocation houſe had agreed upon certain Articles, whereunto they willed him to ſubſcribe.

The anſwer of the Archbiſhop to D. Weſton.

The Archbiſhop anſwered to the preface very wittily, modeſtly, and learnedly, ſhewing that he was very glad of an unity, foraſmuch as it was Conſervatrix omnium rerum publicarum, tam Ethnicorum quàm Chriſtianorum, i. The preſerver of all common-wealths, as well of the Heathen as of the Chriſtians; and ſo he dilated the matter with one or two ſtories of the Romanes Commonwealth. Which thing when he had done, he ſaid, that hee was very glad to come to an unity, ſo that it were in Chriſt, and agreeable to his holy word.

The articles denyed by the Archbiſhop.

Scarborough warning given to Cranmer to diſpute.

When he had thus ſpoken his full minde, the Prolocutor cauſed the Articles to be read unto him, and aſked if he would grant and ſubſcribe unto them. Then the Biſhop of Canterbury did read them over three or foure times, and touching the firſt Article, he aſked what they meant by by theſe terms, verum & naturale, i. true and naturall. Do you not mean, ſaith he, Corpus organicum, i. a ſenſible body? Some anſwered, Idem quod natum eſt ex Virgine, i. The ſame that was born of the Virgin; and ſo confuſedly, ſome ſaid one thing, ſome another. Then the B. of Canterbury denied it utterly, and when he had looked upon the other two, he ſaid they were all falſe, and againſt Gods holy word: And therfore he would not agree, he ſaid, in that unity with them. Which done, the Prolocutor, firſt willing him to write his mind of them that night, ſaid moreover that he ſhould diſpute in them, and cauſed a copy of ẏ articles to be delivered him, aſſigning him to anſwer thereunto on Munday next, and ſo charged the Maior with him again, to be had to Bocardo, where he was kept before; offering moreover unto him, to name what books hee would occupy, and ſhould have them brought unto him. The Archbiſhop was greatly commended of every body for his modeſty: inſomuch, that ſome Maſters of Art were ſeene to weep for him, which in judgement were contrary to him.

Doctor Ridley brought in. Anſwer of Biſhop Ridley to the Articles.

B. Ridley falſly reported for his Sermon.

Then was D. Ridley brought in, who, hearing the articles read unto him, anſwered without any delay, ſaying, they were all falſe; and ſaid further, that they ſprang out of a bitter and ſowre roote. His anſwers were ſharpe, witty, and very earneſt. Then did they lay to his charge a Sermon that he made when he was biſhop of Rocheſter, wherin (they ſaid) he ſpake with tranſubſtantiation. He denied it utterly, and aſked whether they could bring out any that heard him, which would ſay and affirm with them the ſame. They could bring no proof of it at all. After that, he was aſked of one whether he deſired not my lord Chancellor that now is, to ſticke to the Maſſe, and other things? He ſaid, that my Lord would ſay no ſuch things or words of him; for if he did, he reported not the truth of him.

B. Ridley appointed to diſpute next day after the Archbiſhop.

Then he was aſked whether he would diſpute or no? He anſwered, ẏ as long as God gave him life, he ſhould not only have his heart, but alſo his mouth and pen to defend his truth; but he required time and books. They ſaid he could not, and that he ſhould diſpute on Thurſday, and till that time he ſhould have books. He ſaid it was not reaſon that he might not have his own books, & time alſo to look for his diſputations. Then gave they him the Articles, and bade him write his mind of them that night, & ſo did they command the Maior to have him from whence he came.

M. Latimer brought in.

M. Latimer could not finde the Maſſe in all the new Teſtament. What he meaneth by the marrowbones of the Maſſe, reade after in his proteſtation given in writing to the Prolocutor.

Laſt of al came in M. Latimer in like ſort, with a kerchief, and two or three caps on his head, his ſpectacles hanging by a ſtring at his breſt, and a ſtaffe in his hand, & was ſet in a chaire; for ſo was he ſuffered by the Prolocutor. And after his deniall of the Articles, when he had Wedneſday appointed for diſputation, he alledged age, ſicknes, diſuſe, and lack of books, ſaying, that he was almoſt meet to diſpute as to be a captain of Calice: but he would he ſaid, declare his mind either by writing or by word, and would ſtand to all that they could lay upon his back; complaining moreover, that he was permitted to have neither pen nor ink, nor yet any book but only the new Teſtament there in his hand, which hee ſaid he had read over ſeven times deliberately, and yet could not find the Maſſe in it, neither the marrowbones nor ſinnewes of the ſame. At which words the Commiſſioners were not a little offended; and D. Weſton ſaid, that he would make him grant that it had both marrowbones and ſinnewes in the new Teſtament. To whom M. Latimer ſaid again, That you will never do M. Doctor, and ſo forthwith they put him to ſilence; ſo that where he was deſirous to tell what he meant by thoſe terms, he could not be ſuffered: there was a very great preſſe and throng of people, and one of the Bedles ſwouned by reaſon thereof, and was carried into the Veſtry. After this bringing home the Prolocutor firſt, the Cambridge men, viz. Doctor Young Vicechancellor, Seton, Glin, Atkinſon, Scot, Watſon, and Sedgewicke, went to the Croſſe Inne to ſupper. And this was on Saturday being the 14. day of Aprill.

Aprill 14.

On Sunday after, M. Harpsfield preached at S. Maries the Univerſity Church, at nine of the clock, where were divers of the Doctors of the Univerſity in their robes, and placed accordingly. After the Sermon they went all to dinner to Magdalen Colledge, and there had a great dinner. They ſupped at Lincoln Colledge with the Prolocutor, whither Doctor Cranmer ſent anſwer of his mind upon the Articles in writing.

Cranmer ſet in the Reſpondents place. D. Cranmer cloſed in by the Maior and Aldermen for running away. Diſputers againſt the Archbiſhop.

On munday, being the 16, of April, M. Say, and M. White, Notaries, went about in ẏ morning to the Colledges, to get ſubſcriptions to the Articles. And about 8. of the clock the Prolocutor with all the Doctors and the Vicechancellor met together at Exceter Colledge, and ſo they went into the ſchools, and when the Vicechancellor, the Prolocutor, and Doctors were placed, and foure appointed to be Exceptores Argumentorum, ſet at a table in the middeſt, and foure Notaries ſitting with them, D. Cranmer came to ẏ Anſwerers place, the Maior and Aldermen ſitting by him, & ſo the diſputation began to be ſet a work by the Prolocutor with a ſhort Præludium. D. Chedſey began to argue firſt, & ere he left, the Prolocutor divers times, Doctor Treſham, Oglethorpe, Marſhall, Vicechancellor, Pye, Cole, & Harpeſfield did interrupt & preſſe him with their Arguments, ſo that every man ſaid ſomewhat, as the

The Archbiſhop offered drinke.

Prolocutor would ſuffer diſorderly, ſometime in Latin, ſometime in Engliſh, ſo that thrée houres of the time was ſpent, ere the Vicechancellor of Cambridge began; who alſo was interrupted as before. He began with thrée or foure queſtions ſubtilly. Here the Bedles had provided drinke, and offered the Anſwerer; but hee refuſed with thankes. The Prolocutor aſſered him, if he would make water, or otherwiſe eaſe himſelf, he ſhould. Thus the diſputation continued untill almoſt two of the clocke, with this applauſicn Audientium; vicit veritas. Then were all the arguments written by the foure appointed, delivered into the hand of Maſter Say, Regiſter. And as for the priſoner, he was had away by the Maior; And the Doctors dined together at the Univerſity Colledge.

D. Cranmer after diſputation returned againe to Bocardo.

And thus much concerning the generall order and manner of theſe diſputations, with ſuch circumſtances as there happened, and things there done, as well before the diſputation, and in the preparation thereof, as alſo in the time of their diſputing. Now followeth to inferre and declare the orations, arguments, and anſwers, uſed and brought forth in the ſaid diſputations on both parts.

The arguments, reaſons, and allegations uſed in this Diſputation,

Aprill.16.

On Munday, Doctor Weſton, with all the reſidue of the Viſitors, Cenſors, & Opponents, repairing to the Divinity Schoole, each one enſtalled themſelves in their places. Doctor Cranmer with a rout of ruſty bils was brought thither, and ſet in the anſwerers place, with the Maior and Aldermen ſetting by him. Where doctor Weſton Prolocutor, apparelled in a ſkarlet gowne, after the cuſtome of the Univerſity, began the diſputation with this Oration. His words in latine as he ſpake them were theſe.

D. Weſton ſpeaketh truer than he wiſt.

Conveniſtis hodie, fratres, profligaturi de teſtandam illam hæreſin de veritate corporis Chriſti in Sacramento, &c. that is, Ye are aſſembled hither brethren this day, to confound the deteſtable hereſie of the verity of the body of Chriſt in the ſacrament, &c. At which words thus pronounced of the Prolocutor unawares, divers of the learned men there preſent, conſidering & well weighing the words by him uttered, burſt out into a great laughter, as though even in the entrance of the diſputations, he had bewrayed himſelfe and his Religion, that termed the opinion of the verity of Chriſts body in the ſacrament a deteſtable hereſie. The reſt of his Oration tended all to this effect, that it was not lawfull by Gods word to call theſe queſtions into controverſie: for ſuch as doubted of the words of Chriſt, might well bee thought to doubt both of the truth and power of God. Whereunto Doctor Cranmer deſiring licenſe, anſwered in this wiſe.

D. Cranmers anſwer to the Preface.

We are aſſembled, ſaith he, to diſcuſſe theſe doubtfull controverſies, and to lay them open before the eyes of the world; whereof ye thinke it unlawfull to diſpute. It is indeed no reaſon, ſaith he, that we ſhould diſpute of that which is determined upon, before the truth be tried. But if theſe queſtions be not called in controverſie, ſurely mine anſwer then is looked for in vain. This was the ſumm and effect of his anſwer; and this done he prepared himſelfe to diſputation.

D. Chedſey.

Then Chedſey the firſt Opponent began in this wiſe to diſpute.

Reverend M. Doctor, theſe thrée concluſions are put forth unto us at this preſent to diſpute upon, Articles.

1. In the Sacrament of the Altar is the naturall body of Chriſt, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and alſo his blood preſent really under the formes of bread and wine, by vertue of Gods word pronounced by the Prieſt.

2. There remaineth no ſubſtance of bread and wine after the conſecration, nor any other ſubſtance, but the ſubſtance of God and man.

3. The lively ſacrifice of the Church is in the Maſſe propitiatory as well for the qnicke as the dead.

These be the concluſions propounded, whereupon this our preſent controverſie doth reſt. Now to the end wee might not doubt how you take the ſame, you have already given up unto us your opinion thereof. I terme it your opinion, in that it diſagréeth from the Catholicke. Wherefore thus I argue.

Argument.

Ched. Your opinion differeth from the Scripture.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Cran. I deny the antecedent.

Ched. Chriſt when he inſtituted his laſt ſupper, ſpake to his Diſciples, Take, eat, this is my body which ſhall be giveu for you.

But his true body was given for us:

Ergo, his true body is in the ſacrament.

The right forme of this Argument is thus to be framed.

Argument.

Da- The ſame which was given for us is in the ſacrament.

ri- But his true body was given for us:

i. Ergo, his true body is in the ſacrament.

Anſwer. How Chriſts body is preſent in the Sacrament.

Cran. His true body is truly preſent to them that truly receive him; but ſpiritually. And ſo it is taken after a ſpirituall ſort. For when he ſaid, This is my body, it is all one as if he had ſaid, This is the breaking of my body, This is the ſhedding of my blood. As oft as you ſhall doe this, it ſhall put you in remembrance of the breaking of my body, and the ſhedding of my blood; that as truly as you receive this ſacrament, ſo truly ſhall you receive the benefit promiſed by receiving the ſame worthily.

Argument of the authority of the Church.

Ched. Your opinion differeth from the Church, which ſaith that the true body is in the ſacrament

Ergo, Your opinion therein is falſe.

Anſwer.

Cran. I ſay and agrée with the Church, that the body of Chriſt is in the ſacrament effectually, becauſe the paſſion of Chriſt is effectuall.

Ched. Chriſt when he ſpake theſe words, This is my body, ſpake of the ſubſtance, but not of the effect.

Chriſts body effectually, not ſubſtantially in the ſacrament.

Cran. I grant he ſpake of the ſubſtance, and not of the effect after a ſort: and yet it is moſt true that the body of Chriſt is effectually in the ſacrament. But I deny that he is there truly preſent in bread, or that under the bread is his organicall body. And becauſe it ſhould be too teadious (he ſaid) to make diſcourſe of the whole, he delivered up there his opinion thereof to Doctor Weſton written at large, with anſwers to every one of their thrée propoſitions: which he deſired doctor Weſton ſitting there on high, to read openly to the people; which he promiſed to doe. But it was not the firſt promiſe that ſuch Papiſts have broken.

Papiſts falſe of promiſe.

The copy of this writing although it were not there read, yet the contents thereof we have drawne out as followeth.

An explication of Cranmer upon the foreſaid concluſions exhibited in writing.

The contents of Cranmers explication given up in writing.

Cranmer. In the aſſertions of the Church and of Religion, trifling and new fangled novelties of words, ſo much as may be, are to bee eſchewed, whereof riſeth nothing but contention and brawling about words, and we muſt follow, ſo much as we may, the manner of ſpeaking of the ſcripture.

How Chriſt is really preſent.

In the firſt concluſion if ye underſtand by this word (really) re ipſa, i. in very déed and effectually, ſo Chriſt by the grace and efficacy of his paſſion, is in deed and truly preſent to all his true and holy members.

But if ye underſtand by this word (really) Corporaliter, i. Corporally, ſo that by the body of Chriſt is underſtanded a naturall body and organicall; ſo the firſt propoſition doth vary, not only from the uſuall ſpeech and phraſe of ſcripture, but alſo is cleane contrary to the holy word of God, and Chriſtian profeſſion: when as both the Scripture doth teſtifie by theſe words, and alſo the Catholike Church hath profeſſed from the beginning, Chriſt to have left the world, and to ſit at the right hand of yͤ Father till he come to iudgment.

Organicall, is called that which is a perfect body, having all the the members and parts complete belonging unto the ſame.

Anſwer to the ſecond concluſion.

And likewiſe I anſwer to the ſecond queſtion; that is, that it ſwarveth from the accuſtomed manner and ſpeech of Scripture,

Anſwer to the third concluſion.

The third concluſion contumelious againſt Chriſt.

The third concluſion, as it is intricate and wrapped in all doubtfull and ambiguous words, and differing alſo much from the true ſpeech of the Scripture, ſo as the words thereof ſeeme to import no open ſenſe, is moſt contumelious againſt onr only Lord and Saviour Chriſt Jeſus, and a violating of his precious blood, which upon the altar of the Croſſe is the only ſacrifice and oblation for the ſins of all mankind.

Ched. By this your interpretation which you have made upon the firſt concluſion, this I underſtand, the body of Chriſt to be in the Sacrament onely by the way of participation: inſomuch as we communicating thereof, do participate the grace of Chriſt, ſo that you mean hereby only the effect thereof But our concluſion ſtandeth upon the ſubſtance, and not the efficacy only, which ſhall appeare by the teſtimony both of Scriptures, and of all the Fathers a thouſand yeeres after Chriſt.

Mat. 26.

Luk. 22.

And firſt to begin with the Scripture, let us conſider what is written in Matt. 26. Marke 14. Luk. 22. and 1 Cor. 11. Matthew ſaith, As they ſate at ſupper, Ieſus took bread, &c. In Marke there is the ſame ſenſe, although not the ſame words, who alſo for one part of the Sacrament ſpeaketh more plainly, Ieſus taking bread, &c, After the ſame ſenſe alſo writeth Luke 22. And when Ieſus had taken bread, &c. In the mouth of two or three witneſſes, ſaith the Scripture, ſtandeth all truth. Here we have three witneſſes together, that Chriſt ſaid that to be his body which was given for many; and that to bee his blood which ſhould be ſhed for many; whereby is declared the ſubſtance, and not only the efficacy alone thereof. Ergo, it is not true that you ſay, there to be not the ſubſtance of his body, but the efficacy alone thereof.

Subſtance and efficacy both, granted in the Sacrament.

Cran. Thus you gather upon mine anſwer, as though I did mean of the efficacy, and not of the ſubſtance of the body; but I mean of them both, as well of the efficacy as of the ſubſtance. And forſomuch as all things come not readily to memorie, to a man that ſhall ſpeake extempore, therfore for the more ample, and fuller anſwer in this matter, this writing here I do exhibite.

An explication exhibited by Cranmer.

Another explication for anſwer exhibited in writing by the Archbiſhop

The finall cauſe why the Supper was ordained.

OUr Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, at the time of his Maundy, preparing himſelfe to dye for our cauſe, that he might redeeme us from eternall death, to forgive us all our ſinnes, and to cancell out the handwriting that was againſt us; that wee through gratefull oblivion ſhould not forget his death, therefore at the time of his holy Supper did inſtitute a perpetuall memory of this his death, to be celebrated among Chriſtians in bread and wine, according as it is ſaid: Doe this in remembrance of mee. And ſo often as you ſhall eate this bread and drinke this cup, you ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death till hee come. And this remembrance or ſacrament of his holy paſſion, that is, of his body ſlain, and blood ſhed, hee would all Chriſtians to frequent and celebrate in bread and wine, according as he ſaid, Take eat, and drink ye all of this. Therefore whoſoever for mans tradition denieth the cup of Chriſts blood to Lay men, they manifeſtly repugne againſt Chriſt, forbidding that which Chriſt commandeth to be done, & be like to thoſe Scribes and Phariſees of whom the Lord ſpake; Yee hypocrites, yee have rejected the commandements of God for your traditions. Well did Eſay propheſie of you, ſaying, This people honoureth me with their lips, but their heart is far from me. Without cauſe doe they worſhip me, teaching the doctrines and precepts of men. The Sacrament and myſticall bread being broken and diſtributed after the inſtitution of Chriſt, and the myſticall wine being likewiſe taken and received, be not only ſacraments of the fleſh of Chriſt wounded for us, and of his blood ſhedding, but alſo be moſt certaine ſacraments for us, and (as a man would ſay) ſeales of Gods promiſes and gifts, and alſo of that holy fellowſhip which wee have with Chriſt and all his members. Moreover, they bee to us memorials of that heavenly food and nouriſhment, wherwith we are nouriſhed unto eternall life, and the thirſt of our boyling conſcience quenched, and finally, whereby the hearts of the faithfull be repleniſhed with unſpeakable ioy, and be corroborated and ſtrengthened unto all works of godlineſſe. We are many (ſaith ſaint Paul) one bread, and one body, all we which doe participate of one bread, and one cup. And Chriſt ſaith: Eat ye, this is my body. And, Drinke ye, this is my blood. And, I am the living bread which came down from heaven. He that eateth me, ſhall alſo live for ever. Not as your fathers did eat Manna in the deſart, and are dead: He that eateth me, ſhall alſo live for ever.

Mat. 25.

Luk. 7.

Sacraments ſeales of Gods promiſes.

1 Cor. 11.

Mat. 26.

Iohn 6.

Bread & wine remain ſtill in the Euchariſt, & be ſeales to us annexed with Gods promiſes.

Thus therefore true bread and true wine remaine ſtill in the Euchariſt, untill they be conſumed of the faithfull, to be ſigns, and as ſeals unto us annexed unto Gods promiſes, making us certaine of Gods gifts towards us. Alſo Chriſt remaineth in them, and they in Chriſt, which eat his fleſh, and drink his blood, as Chriſt himſelfe hath promiſed: They that eat my fleſh and drink my blood abide in me, and I in them. Moreover, he abideth alſo in them which worthily receive the outward ſacrament, neither doth he depart ſo ſoone as the ſacrament is conſumed, but continually abideth, feeding and nouriſhing us ſo long as we remain bodies of that head, and members of the ſame. I acknowledge not here the naturall body of Chriſt, which is only ſpirituall, intelligible, and unſenſible, having no diſtinction of members and parts in it: but that body only I acknowledge and worſhip, which was borne of the Virgin, which ſuffered for us, which is viſible, palpable, and hath all the forme and ſhape and parts of the true naturall body of man. Chriſt ſpake not theſe words of any uncertaine ſubſtance, but of the certaine ſubſtance of bread, which he then held in his hands, and ſhewed his Diſciples when he ſaid, Eat yee, this is my body: and likewiſe of the cup, when he ſaid, Drink yee, this is my blood: meaning verily of that bread which by nature is uſuall and common with us, which is taken of the fruit of the ground, compacting by the uniting of many graines together made by man, and by mans hand brought to that viſible ſhape, being of round compaſſe, and without all ſenſe or life, which nouriſheth the body, and ſtrengtheneth the heart of man: Of this ſame bread (I ſay) and not of any uncertaine and wandring ſubſtance the old Fathers ſay that Chriſt ſpake theſe

Chriſts words are ſpoken not of an uncertain ſubſtance, but of a certain ſubſtanc of bread, which he had in his hands.

How the Doctors do take the ſpeech of Chriſt. Tropicall, Figurative, Anagogicall, Allegoricall. Bread called by the name of the body.

In the Sacrament is to be conſidered not what it is in nature, but what it ſignifieth in myſtery.

The Sacrament is a memoriall, a pledge, a token, a Sacrament, and a ſeale.

theſe wordes, Eat ye, this is my body. And likewiſe alſo of the wine, which is the creature and fruit of the vine preſſed out of many cluſters of grapes, and maketh mans heart merry, of the very ſame wine (I ſay) Chriſt ſpake, Drinke ye, this is my blood. And ſo the old Doctors doe call this ſpeaking of Chriſt tropicall, figurative, anagogicall, allegoricall, which they do interpret after this ſort, that although the ſubſtance of bread and wine doe remaine, and bee received of the faithfull yet notwithſtanding Chriſt changed the appellation thereof, and called the bread by the name of his fleſh, and the wine by the name of his blood, non rei veritate, ſed ſignificante myſterio, i, not that it is ſo in very deed, but ſignified in a myſtery. So that we ſhould conſider, not what they be in their own nature, but what them import to us and ſignifie, and ſhould underſtand the Sacrament not carnally, but ſpiritually, and ſhould attend not to the viſible nature of the Sacraments, neither have reſpect only to the outward bread and cup, thinking to ſee there with our eyes no other things but only bread and wine but that lifting up our minds we ſhould looke up to the blood of Chriſt with our faith, ſhould touch him with our minde, and receive him with our inward man, and that, being like Eagles in this life, we would flie up into heaven in our hearts, where that Lambe is reſident at the right hand of his Father, which taketh away the ſinnes of the world, by whoſe ſtripes we are made whole; by whoſe paſſion we are filled at his table, and whoſe blood we receiving out of his holy ſide, doe live for ever, being made the gueſts of Chriſt, having him dwelling in us through the grace of his true nature, and through the vertue and efficacy of his whole paſſion, being no leſſe aſſured and certified, that we are fed ſpiritually unto eternall life by Chriſts fleſh crucified, and by his blood ſhed, the true food of our minds, than that our bodies be fed with meat and drinke in this life: and hereof this ſaid myſticall bread on the table of Chriſt, and the myſticall wine, being adminiſtred and received after the inſtitution of Chriſt, be to us a memoriall, a pledge, a token, a Sacrament, and a ſeale.

What is meant by eating the myſticall bread

What the crucified body of Chriſt doth to our ſoules.

And thereof is it that Chriſt ſaith not thus; This is my body, eat ye: but after he had bidden them eat, then he ſaid, This is my body which ſhall be given for you. Which is to meane; as though hee ſhould ſay; In eating of this bread, conſider you that this bread is no common thing but a myſticall matter, neither doe you attend that which is ſet before your bodily eyes, but what feedeth you within. Conſider and behold my body crucified for you, that eat and digeſt in your mindes. Chew you upon my paſſion, be fed with my death, this is the true meate, this is the drinke that moiſteneth, wherewith you being truly fed, and inebriate, ſhall live for ever. The bread and the wine which be ſet before your eies are only declarations of me, but I my ſelfe am the eternall food. Wherefore whenſoever at this my table you ſhall behold the ſacraments, have not regard ſo much to them, as conſider ye what I promiſe to you by them, which is my ſelfe to be meat for you of eternall life.

The ſacrifice of Chriſts body once ſufficient for all.

Eſay 53.

Heb. 9.

Heb. 9.27.

No ſacrifice now for ſin but one.

Chriſt ſacrificed once for ſin, we ſacrifice daily by thankſgiving, & thankfull words of charity.

The only oblation of Chriſt (wherewith he offered himſelf to God the Father once to death upon the altar of the croſſe for our redemption) was of ſuch efficacy, that there is no more need of any ſacrifice for the redemption of the whole world, but all the ſacrifices of the old law he took away, performing that in very deed, which they did ſignifie and promiſe. Whoſoever therfore ſhall fixe the hope of his ſalvation in any other ſacrifice, he falleth from the grace of Chriſt, and is contumelious againſt the blood of Chriſt. For hee was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, and was broken for our iniqnities. All wee like ſheepe have wandred aſtray. Every man hath turned after his owne way, and the Lord hath laid all our iniquities upon him. For hee hath entred once for all into the holy place by the blood, not of Goates or Calves, but by his owne blood, finding eternall redemption: And hath entred into heaven, to appeare now in the ſight of God for us, not to offer himſelfe oftentimes (for ſo ſhould he have ſuffered many times) but now hath hee appeared once to put away ſinne, through his owne oblation. And as it is appointed to all men once to dye, ſo alſo Chriſt once was offered: Who offering up one oblation for ſinnes, ſitteth now for ever on the right hand of God. For by one oblation hath hee made perfect for ever thoſe that be ſanctified. For where is remiſſion of ſinnes, there is now no oblation for ſinne, but this only ſacrifice of Chriſt; whoſoever ſhall ſeeke any other ſacrifice propitiatory for ſinne, maketh the ſacrifice of Chriſt of no volidity, force, or efficacy. For if it be ſufficient to remit ſinnes, what need is there of any other? For the neceſſity of another argueth and declareth this to be inſufficient. Almighty God grant that we may truly leane to one ſacrifice of Chriſt and that we to him againe may repay our ſacrifices of thankſgiving, of praiſe, of confeſſing his name, of true amendment, of repentance, of mercifulnes towards our neighbours, and of all other good works of charity. For by ſuch ſacrifices we ſhall declare our ſelves neither ingratefull to God, nor altogether unworthy of this holy ſacrifice of Chriſt. And thus you have out of the teſtimonies of holy Scripture, and of the ancient Doctors of the Church, the true and ſincere uſe of the Lords holy Supper, and the fruit of the true Sacrifice of Chriſt. Which whoſoever through captious or wreſted interpretations, or by mens traditions, ſhall goe about, otherwiſe than Chriſt ordained them, to altar or tranſubſtantiate, hee ſhall anſwer to Chriſt in the latter day, when he ſhall underſtand (but then too late) that he hath no participation with the body and blood of Chriſt, but that out of the ſupper of eternall life he hath eaten and drunken eternall damnation to himſelfe.

West. Becauſe wee will not conſume and ſpend the time in waſte, this your writing which you exhibit, hereafter ſhall be read in this place. In the meane ſeaſon let us now fall to the arguments.

Argument.

Ched. The Scriptures in many places do affirme, that Chriſt gave his naturall body, Matthew 26. Marke 14. Luke 22.

Ergo, I do conclude, that the naturall body is in the ſacrament.

Anſwer.

Cran. To your argument I anſwer; If you underſtand by the body, naturall (organicum) that is, having ſuch proportion and members as hee had living here, then I anſwer negatively.

Furthermore. concerning the Evangeliſts, thus I ſay and grant, that Chriſt took bread, and called it his body.

Ched. The text of the ſcripture maketh againſt you; for the circumſtance thereto annexed doth teach us, not only there to be the body, but alſo teacheth us what manner of body it is, and ſaith The ſame body which ſhall be given.

Argument.

Ba- That thing is here contained, that is given for us.

ro- But the ſubſtance of bread is not given for us.

co. Ergo, the ſubſtance of bread is not here contained.

Anſwer. This word (Contained) diſtinguiſhed. The body of Chriſt contained not really, but ſacramentally.

Cran. I underſtand not yet what you meane by this word contained: If ye meane really, then I deny your Maior.

Ched. The Maior is the text of Scripture. He that denieth the Maior, denieth the Scripture. For the ſcripture ſaith, This is my body which ſhall be given for you.

Chriſt ſaith not, this is my body which is here contained, but this is my body which ſhall be given for you.

Cran. I grant, hee ſaid it was his body that ſhould be given, but he ſaid it was not his body which is here contained; but the body (ſaith hee) that ſhall be given for you. As though he ſhould ſay: This bread is the breaking of my body, and this cup is the ſhedding of my blood. What will ye ſay then? is the bread the breaking of his body, and the cup the ſhedding of his blood really? if you ſay ſo, I deny it.

Ched. If you aſke what is the thing therein contained: becauſe his Apoſtles ſhould not doubt what body it was that ſhould be given, he ſaith; This is my body which ſhall be given for you, and my blood which ſhall be ſhed for many. Ergo, here is the ſame ſubſtance of the body, which the day after was given, and the ſame blood which was ſhed. And here I urge the ſcripture, which teacheth that it was no phantaſticall, no fained, no ſpirituall body, nor body in faith, but the ſubſtance of the body.

Cran. You muſt proove that it is contained, but Chriſt ſaid not which is contained. He gave bread, and called that his body. I ſtick not in the words of the ſcripture, but in your word, which is fained and imagined of your ſelfe.

Ched. When Chriſt tooke bread and brake it, what gave he?

Cran. He gave bread. The bread ſacramentally, and his body ſpiritually, and the bread there he called his body.

Ched. This anſwer is againſt the ſcripture, which ſaith, that he gave his body.

Cran. It did ſignifie that which he did eat.

Ched. They did not eat the body as the Capernaites did underſtand it, but the ſelfe ſame body which was given for the ſins of the world. Ergo, it was his body which ſhould be given, and his blood which ſhould be ſhed.

In ſome other copies I finde this argument to bee be made by Chedſey.

Argument.

Ba- The ſame body is in the ſacrament, which was given for us on the Croſſe.
ro- But bread was not given on the Croſſe for us:
co. Ergo, Bread is not given in the ſacrament.

Anſwer.

Cran. I deny the Maior, which is, that the ſame naturall body is given in the ſacrament, which was given on the Croſſe, except you underſtand it ſpiritually. And after he denied alſo the argument as utterly naught, as he might well do, the Maior in the ſecond figure being not univerſall.

When maſter Chedſey had put forth his argument, and proſecuted the ſame, and Doctor Cranmer anſwered as before is ſhewed, Doctor Oglethorpe, one of thoſe Doctors which the Prolocutor called Cenſores (belike to be Arbiters to order the diſputations) ſaid on this wiſe.

D. Oglethorpe breaketh Priſcians head, and ſpeaketh falſe latine.

D. Ogle. You come in ſtill with one evaſion or ſtarting hole to flee to. He urgeth the ſcriptures, ſaying that Chriſt gave his very body, You ſay that he gave his body in bread. Quomodo prædicatur corpus? qualis eſt corpus? qualis eſt prædicatio? panis eſt corpus.

Cranmer anſwereth to Oglethorpe.

D. Cranmer might have found fault with this argument as well as with his latine, being made in no mood or figure

Cran. You ſhould ſay, Quale corpus. I anſwer to the queſtion: it is the ſame body which was borne of the Virgin, was crucified, aſcended; but tropically, and by a figure. And ſo I ſay, Panis eſt corpus, is a figurative ſpeech, ſpeaking ſacramentally, for it is a ſacrament of his body.

Ogle. This word body, being prædicatum, doth ſignifie ſubſtance.

Anno 1554.

But ſubſtantia is not predicated denominatively.

Ergo, it is an eſſentiall predication, and ſo it is his true body, and not the figure of his body.

Cran. Subſtantia may bee predicated denominatively in an allegory, or in a metaphor, or in a figurative locution.

Ogle. It is not a likely thing that Chriſt hath leſſe care for his ſpouſe the Church, than a wiſe houſholder hath for his family in making his wil or teſtament.

Cran. Your reaſon is drawn out of the affaires of men, and not taken out of the holy ſcriptures.

Ogle. But no houſholder maketh his teſtament after that ſort.

Tropes may be uſed in mens teſtaments, why not?

Cran. Yes, there are many that ſo do. For what matter is it, ſo it be underſtood and perceived? I ſay Chriſt did uſe figurative ſpeech in no place more than in his Sacraments, and ſpecially in this his Supper.

Ogle. No man of purpoſe doth uſe tropes in his teſtament, for if he do, he deceiveth them that he comprehendeth in his teſtament: therefore Chriſt uſeth none here.

Cran. Yes, he may uſe them well enough. You know not what tropes are.

Ogle. The good man of the houſe hath a reſpect that his heires, after his departure, may live in quiet, and without brabling.

But they cannot be in quiet if he do uſe tropes:

Therefore (I ſay) he uſeth no tropes.

Cran. I deny your Minor.

Aug. de unitate Eccleſiæ.

Weſt. Auguſtine in his book intituled De unitate Eccleſiæ, the tenth Chapter, hath theſe words following.

A place of Auguſtine recited by the Prolocutor.

Quid hoc eſt rogo, cum verba noviſſima hominis morientis audiantur ituri ad inferos, nemo eum dicit eſſe mentitum, & illius non judicatur hæres qui fortè ea contempſerat. Quomodo ergo effugiemus iram Dei, ſi vel non credentes, vel contemnentes, expulerimus verba noviſſima, & vnici filii Dei & Domini noſtri Salvatoris, & ituri in cœlum & inde proſpecturi, quis ea negligat, quis non obſervet, & inde venturi ut de omnibus judicet?

That is to ſay.

What a thing is this I pray you? when the laſt words of one lying upon his death bed are heard which is ready to goe to his grave, no man ſaith that he hath made a lye, and he is not accounted his heire, which regardeth not thoſe words. How ſhall we then eſcape Gods wrath, if either not beliveing or not regarding wee ſhall reiect the laſt words both of the only Son of God, and alſo of our Lord and Saviour, both aſcending into heaven, and beholding from thence who deſpiſeth, who obſerveth them not, and ſo ſhall come from thence to iudge all men.

The argument is thus formed,

Argument.

Bar- Whoſoever ſaith that the Teſtator lyeth, is a wicked heire, ba- But whoſoever ſaith that Chriſt ſpake by figures, ſaith that he did lye.
ra. Ergo, Whoſoever ſaith that Chriſt here ſpeak by figures, is a wicked heire.

Anſwer.

Cran. I deny the Minor. As who ſay it is neceſſary that hee which uſeth to ſpeake by tropes and figures ſhould lye in ſo doing.

Ogle. Your iudgement is diſagreeing with all Churches.

Cran. Nay, I diſagree with the Papiſticall Church.

Ogle. This you do through the ignorance of Logicke.

Cran. Nay, this you ſay through the ignorance of the Doctors.

Weſton. I will go plainly to work by Scriptures. What took he?

Cran. Bread.

Weſt. What gave he?

Cran. Bread.

Weſt. What brake he?

Cran. Bread.

Argument.

Weſt. What did he eat?

Cran. Bread.

Weſt. He gave bread, therefore he gave not his body.

He gave not his body, therefore it is not his body verily, in deed and in truth.

Cran. I deny the argument.

Diſparata is a ſchoole terme, meaning diverſe ſubſtances, being ſo ſundred in nature, that one can never be ſaid to be the other.

Cole. This argument holdeth à diſparatis: It is bread, Ergo it is not the body; and it is ſuch an argument or reaſon, as cannot be diſſolved.

Cran. The like argument may be made. He is a rock, Ergo, he is not Chriſt.

Cole. It is not alike.

Weſt. He gave not his body indeed: Ergo, it was not his body indeed.

The Sacrament ſetting the figure aſide formally is not Chriſts body.

Cran. He gave his death, his paſſion, and the Sacrament of his paſſion. And in very deed, ſetting the figure aſide, formally it is not his body.

Weſt. Why? then the Scripture is falſe.

Cran. Nay, the Scripture is moſt true.

Chryſ. hom. 61.

Weſt. This ſaith Chryſoſtome, Homil. 61. ad Pop. Antioch. Neceſſarium eſt, dilectiſſimi, myſteriorum dicere miraculum quid tandem ſit, & quare ſit datum, & quæ rei utilitas, &c.

That is to ſay.

Needfull it is (deare friends) to tell you what the miracle of the myſteries is, and wherefore it is given, and what profit there is of the thing. We are one body, and members of his fleſh, and of his bones. We that be in the myſterie, let us follow the thing which was ſpoken. Wherefore that we may become this thing, not only by love, but alſo that we may become one with that fleſh indeed, that is brought to paſſe by this food, which he gave unto us, minding to ſhew his great good will that he hath towards us: and therefore he mixed himſelfe with us, and united his own body with us, that we ſhould be made all as one thing together, as a body ioyned and annexed to the head, for this is a token of moſt ardent and perfect love. And the ſame thing Job alſo inſinuating, ſaid of his ſervants, of whom he was deſired above meaſure, inſomuch that they, ſhewing their great deſire toward him, ſaid, who ſhall give unto us to be filled with his fleſh? Therefore alſo Chriſt did the ſame, who, to induce us into a great love toward him, and to declare his deſire towards us, did not only give himſelfe to be ſeen of them that would, but alſo to be handled and eaten, and ſuffered us to faſten our teeth in his fleſh, and to be united together, and ſo to fill all our deſire. Like Lions therefore, as breathing fire, let us go from that table, being made terrible to the Divell, remembring our head in our minde, and his charity which he ſhewed unto us. For Parents many times give their children to other to be fed, but I do not ſo (ſaith he) but feed you with mine own fleſh, and ſet my ſelf before you, deſiring to make you all iolly people, and pretending to you great hope and expectation to looke for things to come, who here give my ſelfe to you, but much more in the world to come. I am become your brother, I took fleſh and blood for you. Againe, my fleſh and blood by the which I am made your kinſman, I deliver unto you.

Thus much out of Chryſoſtome. Out of which words I make this argument.

D. Weſtons argument without true forme or figure

The ſame fleſh, whereby Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman, is given of Chriſt to us to be eaten.

Chriſt is made our brother and kinſman, by his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh.

Ergo, His true, naturall, and organicall fleſh, is given to us to be eaten.

Cran. I grant the conſequence, and the conſequent.

D. Weſtons argument denied: we are the true body of Chriſt: Ergo; we eat it with our mouth.
A figureleſſe argument.

Weſt. Therefore we eat it with our mouth.

Cran. I deny it. We eat it through faith.

Weſt. He gave us the ſame fleſh to eat, whereby he became our brother and kinſman.

But he became our brother and kinſman by his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh.

Therefore he gave his true, naturall, and organicall fleſh to be eaten.

Cran. I grant he took and gave the ſame true, naturall, and organicall fleſh wherein he ſuffered, and yet he feedeth us ſpiritually, and that fleſh is received ſpiritually.

Fallaci a dicto ſecundum quid ad ſimpliciter.

Weſt. He gave us the ſame fleſh which he took of the Virgin.

But he took not the true fleſh of the Virgin ſpiritually or in a figure.

Ergo, He gave his true naturall fleſh, not ſpiritually.

Cran. Chriſt gave to us his owne naturall fleſh, the ſame wherein he ſuffered, but feedeth us ſpiritually.

Anſwer.
Chryſoſtome alledged by D. Weſton. Hom. 83. in 26. cap. Mat.

Weſt. Chryſoſtome is againſt you, Hom. 83. in 26. cap. Matth. where he ſaith; Veniat tibi in mentem quo ſis honore honoratus, qua menſa fruaris. Ea namque re nos alimur, quam Angeli, &c.

That is to ſay.

Let it come into thy remembrance with what honour thou art honoured, and what table thou ſitteſt at: for with the ſame thing we are nouriſhed, which the Angels do behold and tremble at: neither are they able to behold it without great feare, for the brightneſſe which commeth thereof; and we be brought and compact into one heape or maſſe with him, being together one body of Chriſt, and one fleſh with him. Who ſhall ſpeak the powers of the Lord, and ſhall declare forth all his praiſes? What paſtor hath ever nouriſhed his ſheep with his own members? many mothers have put forth their infants after their birth to other nurſes: which he would not do, but feedeth us with his own body, and conioyneth and uniteth us to himſelf.

Whereupon I gather this argument.

Another falſe argument, wherein the third figure the Minor is a negative.

Like as mothers nurſe their children with milk, ſo Chriſt nouriſhed us with his body.

But mothers do not nouriſh their infants ſpiritually with their milk:

Therefore Chriſt doth not nouriſh thoſe that be his ſpiritually with his blood.

Anſwer.

Cran. He gave us the wine for his blood.

Argument.

Weſt. If he gave the wine for his blood (as you ſay) then he gave leſſe than mothers do give.

But Chryſoſtome affirmeth that he gave more than mothers give.

Therefore he gave not the wine for his blood.

Chriſt nouriſheth us both with bread and with his body: with bread our bodies, with his body our ſoules.

Cran. You pervert mine anſwer. He gave wine, yet the blood is conſidered therein. As for example: When he giveth Baptiſm, we conſider not the water, but the holy Ghoſt, and remiſſion of ſins. We receive with the mouth the Sacrament; but the thing and the matter of the Sacrament we receive by faith.

Weſt. When Chriſt ſaid, Eat ye, whether meant he by the mouth or by faith?

Cran. He meant that we ſhould receive the body by faith, the bread by the mouth.

A groſſe ſaying

Weſt. Nay, the body by the mouth.

Cran. That I deny.

Chryſ. alledged by D. Weſton. Chryſ. in Pſ. 50. Item Hom. 83. in 26. cap. Mat.

Weſt. I prove it out of Chryſoſtome, writing upon the 50. Pſalme.

Erubeſcit fieri nutrix, quæ facta eſt mater. Chriſtus autem non ita ipſe nutritor eſt noſter: ideo pro cibo carne propria nos paſcit, & pro potu ſuum ſanguinem nobis propinavit. Item in 26. Matthæi, Homil. 83. Non enim ſufficit ipſi hominem fieri, flagellis interim cædi: ſed nos ſecum in unam, ut ita dicam, maſſam reducit, neque id fide ſolùm, ſed re ipſa nos corpus ſuum efficit.

That is to ſay.

She that is a mother, ſhameth ſomtime to play the nurſe. But Chriſt our Nurſe doth not ſo play with us. Therefore in ſtead of meat he feedeth us with his owne fleſh, and in ſtead of drinke he feedeth us with his owne blood. Likewiſe, upon the 26. chapter of Matthew, the 83. Homily, he ſaith: for it ſhall not be enough for him to become man, and in the meane while to be whipped; but he doth bring us into one maſſe or lump with himſelfe (as I may ſo call it) and maketh us his body, not by faith alone, but alſo in very deed.

Cran. I grant, we make one nature with Chriſt. But that to be done with mouth I deny.

Chryſoſtome alledged by D. Weſton. Hom. 29. in Epiſt. 2 Cor. cap. 13.

Weſt. Chryſoſt. 2 Cor. cap. 13. Hom. 29. hath theſe words. Non vulgarem honorem conſequutum eſt os noſtrum, accipiens corpus Dominicum, i. No little honour is given to our mouth, receiving the body of the Lord.

Cran. This I ſay, that Chriſt entreth into us both by our eares and by our eyes. With our mouth we receive the body of Chriſt, and teare it with our teeth, that is to ſay, the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt. Wherefore I ſay and affime, that the vertue of the Sacrament is much: and therefore Chryſoſtome many times ſpeaketh of Sacraments no otherwiſe, than of Chriſt himſelfe, as I could prove, if I might have liberty to ſpeake, by many places of Chryſoſtome, where he ſpeaketh of the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt.

The words of Chryſoſtome expounded.

With the which word of the Sacrament of the body, &c. D. Cole being highly offended, denied it to be the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, ſave onely of the myſticall body which is the Church.

D. Cole denieth the Sacrament to be a Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, but only a Sacrament of the congregation, that is, of the myſticall body of Chriſt.

Cran. And why ſhould we doubt to call it the Sacrament of the body of Chriſt, offered upon the Croſſe, ſeeing both Chriſt and the ancient Fathers do ſo call it?

Cole. How gather you that of Chryſoſtome?

Chryſoſtome alledged by D. Cranmer. Chryſ. lib. 3. de ſacerd. cap. 3.

Cran. Chryſoſtome declareth himſelfe, Lib. 3. de ſacerdotio, cap. 3. O miraculum, O Dei in nos benevolentia, qui ſurſum ſedet ad dextram Patris, ſacrificii tamen tempore hominum manibus continetur, traditurque lambere cupientibus eum. Fit autem id nullis præſtigiis, ſed apertis & circumſpicientibus circumſtantium omnium oculis.

That is to ſay.

O miracle, O the good will of God towards us, which ſitteth above at the right hand of the Father, and is holden in mens hands at the ſacrifice time, and is given to feed upon, to them that are deſirous of him. And that is brought to paſſe by no ſubtilty or craft, but with the open and beholding eyes of all the ſtanders by.

Thus you heare Chriſt is ſeen here in earth every day, is touched, is torne with the teeth, that our tongue is red with his blood; which no man having any iudgement will ſay or think to be ſpoken without trope or figure.

Weſt. What miracle is it if it be not his body, and if he ſpake only of the Sacrament, as though it were his body.

Chryſoſtome alledged by D. Weſton. Chryſ. hom. 34.

But hearken what Chryſoſtome ſaith, Hom. 34. Quod ſummo honore dignum eſt, id tibi in terra oſtendo. Nam quemadmodum in regiis non parietes, non lectus aureus, ſed regium corpus in throno ſedens omnium præſtantiſſimum eſt: ita quoque in cœlis regium corpus, quod nunc in terra proponitur. Non Angelos, non Archangelos, non cœlos cœlorum, ſed ipſum horum omnium Dominum tibi oſtendo. Animadvertis quonam pacto quod omnium maximum eſt, atque præcipuum in terra, non conſpicaris tantum, ſed tangis, neque ſolum tangis, ſed comedis, atque eo accepto domum redis. Abſterge igitur ab omni ſorde animam tuam.

That is to ſay.

I ſhew forth that thing on the earth unto thee, which is worthy the greateſt honour. For like as in the palace of kings, neither the wals, nor the ſumptuous bed, but the body of kings ſitting under the cloth of eſtate, and royall ſeat of Maieſty, is of all things elſe the moſt excellent: ſo is in like manner the Kings body in heaven, which is now ſet before us on earth. I ſhew thee neither Angels nor Archangels, nor the heaven of heavens, but the very Lord and maſter of all theſe things. Thou perceiveſt after what ſort thou doeſt not only behold, but toucheſt, and not only toucheſt, but eateſt that which on the earth is the greateſt and chiefeſt thing of all other, and when thou haſt received the ſame, thou goeſt home; wherefore cleanſe thy ſoule from all uncleanneſſe.

Upon this, I conclude that the body of Chriſt is ſhewed us upon the earth.

How the body of Chriſt is ſhewed us upon the earth.

Cran. What? upon the earth? no man ſeeth Chriſt upon the earth: He is ſeen with the eyes of our minde, with faith and ſpirit.

Weſt. I pray you what is it that ſeemeth worthy higheſt honour on the earth? is it the Sacrament, or elſe the body of Chriſt?

Cran. Chryſoſtome ſpeaketh of the Sacrament, and the body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth in the Sacrament.

Weſt. Ergo, Then the Sacrament is worthy greateſt honour.

Cran. I deny the argument.

Weſt. That thing is ſhewed forth, and is now in the earth (oſtenditur) & (a) (eſt) which is worthy higheſt honour.

But only the body of Chriſt is worthy higheſt honour.

Ergo, The body of Chriſt is now on the earth.

(a) This word (eſt) is not in Chryſoſtome. This argument of Weſton, ſtanding only upon affirmatives in the ſecond figure, hath no perfect forme in Logick.

Cran. I anſwer, the body of Chriſt to be on the earth, but ſo as in a Sacrament, and as the holy Ghoſt is in the water of Baptiſme.

Weſt. Chryſoſtome ſaith (oſtendo) I ſhew forth, which noteth a ſubſtance to be preſent.

Cran. That is to be underſtood Sacramentally.

Weſt. He ſaith (oſtendo in terra) I ſhew forth on earth, declaring alſo the place where.

Cran. That is to be underſtood figuratively.

Weſt. He is ſhewed forth, and is now on the earth, &c. as before.

Cranmer anſwereth to the place of Chryſoſtome, how Chriſt is ſhewed forth on the earth, not bodily, but in a Sacrament, that is, ſacramentally and figuratively.

Cran. Your maior and concluſion are all one.

Weſt. But the maior is true: Ergo, the concluſion alſo is true.

That thing is on the earth which is worthy of moſt high honour.

But no figure is worthy of higheſt honour.

Ergo, that which is on the earth is no figure.

Cran. I anſwer that is true ſacramentally.

Weſton falſifieth the words of Chryſoſtome.

Here Weſton crieth to him that he ſhould anſwer to one part, bidding him repeat his words. Which when he went about to do, ſuch was the noiſe and crying out in the Schoole, that his mild voice could not be heard. For when he went about to declare to the people how the Prolocutor did not well engliſh the words of Chryſoſtome, uſing for oſtenditur in terra, he is ſhewed forth on the earth, eſt in terra, he is on the earth, whereas Chryſoſtome hath not (eſt) nor any ſuch word of being on the earth, but only of ſhewing, as the grace of the holy Ghoſt, in Baptiſmo oſtenditur, i. is ſhewed forth in Baptiſme: and oftentimes he did inculcate this word oſtenditur. Then the Prolocutor, ſtretching forth his hand, ſet on the rude people people to cry out at him, filling all the Schoole with hiſſing, clapping of hands, and noiſe, calling him indoctum, imperitum, impudentem, i. unlearned, unſkilfull, impudent. Which impudent and reproachfull words this reverend man moſt patiently and meekly did abide, as one that had been inured with the ſuffering of ſuch like reproaches. And when the Prolocutor, not yet ſatiſfied with this rude and unſeemely demeanour, did urge and call upon him to anſwer the argument: Then he bade the Notarie repeat his words againe.

Unreverend words uſed in the Schoole againſt Doctor Cranmer.

Notary. That which is worthy moſt high honour, here I ſhew forth to thee in earth.

The body of Chriſt is worthy higheſt honour.

Ergo, he ſheweth forth the body of Chriſt here in earth.

The body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth to us here in earth divers waies: as in reading of the Scriptures, ſometimes in hearing Sermons, and alſo in Sacraments, and yet neither the Scriptures, nor Sermons, nor Sacraments are to be worſhipped.

Cran. That is ſhewed forth here on the earth which may be ſeene, which may be touched, and which may be eaten, but theſe things be not true of the body.

Cole. Why ſhould not theſe things be true of the body of Chriſt?

Cran. The Maior out of Chryſoſtome is true, meaning of the Sacrament. For in the Sacrament the true body of Chriſt, and not the figurative body is ſet forth.

Weſt. Shew me ſomewhat in earth worthy greateſt honour.

Cran. I cannot, but in the Sacrament onely.

Weſt. Ergo, the Sacrament is worthy greateſt honour.

Cran. So it is.

Iudges. Let it be written.

Cran. I pray you let my anſwer be written likewiſe: I affirme, that the body of Chriſt is ſhewed forth unto us. It is our faith that ſeeth Chriſt.

Weſt. Oſtendo tibi, i. I ſhew it to thee, ſaith Chryſoſtome, not to thy faith.

Cran. He ſpeaketh ſacramentally.

Weſt. Ergo, Chryſoſtome lieth. For he ſpeaking of ſhewing, ſaith: Ego Chryſoſtomus oſtendo, i. I Chryſoſtome do ſhew. But he can ſhew nothing ſacramentally.

Ched. By force of argument we are brought to this point, that the body of Chriſt is proved to be on earth, not only ſacramentally, but in very deed alſo, by this reaſon, that it is worthy higheſt honour. The reaſon is indiſſoluble.

Cran. I never heard a more vaine argument, and it is moſt vaine: alſo it hath mine anſwer unto it.

Ched. Will you affirm, that it is abſurd which Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the body of Chriſt is touched?

I touch the body of Chriſt in the Sacrament, as Thomas touched Chriſt.

Thomas touched Chriſt, and ſaid, Dominus meus, Deus meus, my Lord, my God.

Ergo, that which he touched, was the Lord the God.

The argument of Chedſey is not formall.

¶ This argument, as I received it out of the Notaries booke, is not formall; but rather he ſhould conclude in the third figure thus:

Da- As Thomas touched the body of Chriſt, ſo we touch it in the Sacrament.
ti- Thomas touched the body of Chriſt corporally.
ſi. Ergo, we touch the body of Chriſt corporally in the Sacrament.

God cannot be touched.

Cran. I deny your argument. He touched not God, but him which was God. Neither is it ſound doctrine to affirm, that God is touched.

Ched. This is becauſe of the union: ſo that God is ſaid to be touched, when Chriſt, which is both God and man, is touched.

Tertul. de reſurrectione carnis. Quod ſymbolorum eſt, rei attribuitur.

Tertullian de carnis reſurrectione ſaith, Videamus de propria Chriſtiani hominis forma, quanta huic ſubſtantiæ frivolæ & ſordidæ apud Deum prærogativa ſit. Etſi ſufficeret illi quòd nulla omnino anima ſalutem poſſet adipiſci niſi dum eſt in carne, crediderit: adeò caro ſalutis cardo eſt, de qua cum anima Deo alligatur, ipſa eſt quæ efficit ut anima alligari poſſit; ſed & caro abluitur, ut anima emaculetur; caro ungitur, ut anima conſecretur; ſignatur, ut anima muniatur; caro manus impoſitione adumbratur, ut anima Spiritu illuminetur; caro corpore & ſanguine Chriſti veſcitur, ut anima de Deo ſaginetur.

That is to ſay.

Let us conſider as concerning the proper form of the Chriſtian man, what great prerogative this vain and foule ſubſtance of ours hath with God. Although it were ſufficient to it, that no ſoule could ever get ſalvation, unleſſe it beleeve while it is in the fleſh: ſo much the fleſh availeth to ſalvation, by the which fleſh it commeth, that whereas the ſoule ſo is linked unto God, it is the ſaid fleſh that cauſeth the ſoule to be linked: yet the fleſh moreover is waſhed that the ſoule may be cleanſed; the fleſh is anointed that the ſoule may be conſecrated; the fleſh is ſigned, that the ſoule may be defended; the fleſh is ſhadowed by the impoſition of hands, that the ſoule may be illuminated with the ſpirit; the fleſh doth eat the body and blood of Chriſt, that the ſoule may be fed of God. Whereupon I gather this argument.

Argument.

The fleſh eateth the body of Chriſt.

Ergo, the body of Chriſt is eaten with the mouth.

Phoceus 1 Cor. cap. 11

Phoceus alledged by Chedſey.

Item Phoceus 1. ad Cor. cap. 11. upon theſe words, Reus erit corporis & ſanguinis, &c.

Ὁ ἔνοχος τοῦ σώματος καὶ τοῦ αἵματος, τοῦτο δηλοῖ, ὅτι καθάπερ παρέδωκε μὲν αὐτὸν ὁ ἰούδας, παρῴνησαν εἰς αὐτὸν οἱ ἰουδαῖοι, οὕτως ἀτιμάζουσι ἀκαθάρτοις δεχόμενοι, ὡς ἰουδαῖοι κρατοῦντες αὐτὸν τότε καὶ καταράτῳ προσφέροντες στόματι· διὰ δὲ τὸ εἰπεῖν πολλάκις τοῦ σώματος καὶ αἵματος τοῦ κυρίου, δηλοῖ ὅτι ἄνθρωπος ψιλὸς ὁ θυόμενος, ἀλλὰ αὐτὸς ὁ κύριος ὁ ποιητὴς πάντων, ὡς δῆθεν διὰ τούτων ἐκφοβῶν αὐτούς, i. Quod ait, reus corporis & ſanguinis, iſtud declarat quod ſicuti Iudas ipſum quidem tradidit, Iudæi contumelioſè in ipſum inſaniebant: ſic ipſum inhonorant qui ſanctiſſimum ipſius corpus impuris manibus ſuſcipiunt, & tanquam Iudæi ipſi tenent & execrabili ore recipiunt. Quod crebro mentionem facit corporis & ſanguinis Domini, manifeſtat quòd non ſit ſimplex homo qui ſacrificatur, ſed ipſe Dominus omnium factor, tanquam per hæc quidem ipſos perterrefaciens.

That is to ſay.

Whereas he ſaith, Is guilty of the body and blood, this he declareth, that like as Iudas betrayed him, and the Iews were fierce and ſpitefull againſt him; ſo do they diſhonour him, which receive his holy body with their impure hands, and as the Iewes did hold him then, do now receive him with impure mouths. And whereas he often maketh mention of the body and blood of the Lord, he declareth that it is not ſimply man that is ſacrificed, but even the Lord himſelf, being the maker of all things, hereby (as it were) making them afraid.

Ergo, (as it is hereby gathered) the body of Chriſt is touched with the hands.

Cran. You vouch two Authors againſt me upon ſundry things. Firſt, I muſt anſwer Tertullian, and then the other.

Ched. They tend both to one meaning.

Anſwer to Tertullianus.

Cran. Unto Tertullian I anſwer (becauſe our diſputation is wandring and uncertaine) that he calleth that ỹ fleſh which is the Sacrament. For although God worke all things in us inviſibly beyond mans reach, yet they are ſo manifeſt, that they may be ſeene, and perceived of every ſenſe.

Therefore

Therfore he ſetteth forth Baptiſm, Unction, and laſt of all the Supper of the Lord unto us, which he gave to ſignifie his operation in us. The fleſh liveth by the bread, but the ſoule is inwardly fed by Chriſt.

D. Weſton urgeth him with the words of Tertullian.

Weſt. Stick to thoſe words of Tertullian, Corpus veſcitur, ut anima ſaginetur, id eſt, The body eateth, that the ſoule may be fed.

Ched. The fleſh eateth the body of Chriſt, that the ſoule may be fed therewith.

Weſt. Here you ſee two kinds of food, of the ſoule and of the body.

Ched. He ſaith, that not onely the ſoule, but the fleſh is alſo fed.

Cran. The ſoule is fed with the body of Chriſt, the body with the Sacrament.

Ched. Is the ſoule fed with the body of Chriſt, and not with the Sacrament?

Inwardly we eat the body, outwardly the Sacrament.

Cran. Read that which followeth, and you ſhall perceive that by things externall, an operation internall is underſtood. Inwardly we eat Chriſts body, and outwardly we eat the Sacrament. So one thing is done outwardly, another inwardly. Like as in Baptiſm the externall element whereby the body is waſhed, is one; the internall thing whereby the ſoule is cleanſed, is another.

Ched. The ſoule is fed by that which the body eateth.

But the ſoule is fed by the fleſh of Chriſt.

Ergo, the body eateth the fleſh of Chriſt.

Cran. We eat not one thing outwardly and inwardly. Inwardly we eat Chriſts body: Outwardly we eat the Sacrament.

(a) The forme of this argument which he repeateth, ſtood better before: for the forme of this connexion anſwereth to none of the three figures of Syllogiſmes.

Ched. I will repeat the argument.

(a) The fleſh eateth Chriſts body, that the ſoul may be fed therewith.

The ſoule is not fed with the Sacrament, but with Chriſts body.

Ergo, The fleſh eateth the body of Chriſt.

Cran. The ſacrament is one thing, the matter of the ſacrament is another. Outwardly we receive the ſacrament. Inwardly we eat the body of Chriſt.

Ched. I prove that we receive that outwardly wherewith the ſoule is fed.

Conſequence. The ſoule is fed with the body of Chriſt.

Ergo, We eat the body of Chriſt outwardly.

Conſequence. The fleſh eateth Chriſt his body.

Ergo, the ſoule is fed therewith.

Anſwer. Cran. The fleſh (I ſay) eateth the ſacrament; it eateth not Chriſts body. For Tertullian ſpeaketh of the ſacrament; and the place hath not (inde) thereof, but (de Deo) of God.

Ched. What ſay you to Phoceus ſaying? They which receive the body with impure hands, are guilty of the Lords bloud, as Iudas was.

Weſt. That which followeth in Tertullian doth take away your ſhift, whereas he ſaith, Non poſſunt ergo ſeparari in mercede, quos opera conjungit, i. They cannot be ſeparated in reward, whom one work joyneth together.

But manducation is the work or labour, Ergo, &c.

The forme of this argument may be thus collected.

Da- One work or labour joyneth body and ſoule together.
ri- Manducation is a work or labour.
i. Ergo, one manducation joyneth together both body and ſoule.

(a) As the body and ſoule are joyned in the work of Baptiſme, ſo are they joyned in the communion of the Lords Supper. For as the fleſh is waſhed with water, that the ſoule may be purged ſpiritually: ſo our body eateth the outward Sacrament, that the ſoule may be fed of God.

(a) To the maior of which argument, thus it may be anſwered, expounding the ſaying of Tertullian, una opera conjungit, ſed non idem operandi modus. Againe, opera here in Tertullian may be taken for temptations and afflictions.

(b) Anſwer to Tertullian de reſurrect.

(b) Cran. Your authority (I ſuppoſe) is taken out of the booke De reſurrectione carnis, i. of the reſurrection of the fleſh: and the meaning therof is this. Tertullian goeth about there to prove, that the fleſh ſhall riſe again, becauſe it is joyned together in one work with the ſoule. Through Baptiſme in this world the body is waſhed, and the ſoule is waſhed: the body outwardly, the ſoule inwardly, the work is one. In this work they are joyned. And he ſpeaketh of ſignes.

Weſt. He ſpeaketh of eating in a ſigne.

Ergo, the reward is in a ſigne.

Cran. They are coupled in one work, namely, in the ſacrament.

Weſt. There are two works.

Ergo, There are two rewards.

If the work be in a figure.

Ergo, The reward is in a figure.

Cran. He ſpeaketh not of two works. Two works are but one work. And yet he ſaith not, Quos una opera conjungit, i. Whom one work joyneth together, but Opera, i. A work: As in Baptiſm the ſoule and the body are joyned in underſtanding.

Weſt. The fleſh and ſoule ſhall have one and the ſelfe ſame reward, becauſe they have one worke.

Cran. Becauſe they be joyned together in one worke.

D. Treſham diſputeth.

Treſ. Foraſmuch as the reverend doctors here have impugned, and overthrowne your aſſertion and your anſwers ſufficiently: I will fall to another matter, not altogether impertinent to the purpoſe, and that in few words, againſt a certaine ſequele of your opinion. The ſequele is this; that between us and Chriſt there is no further conjunction, whiles we receive the Euchariſt, than a conjunction of the mind, or a ſpirituall conjunction, whereby we are united and knit unto Chriſt through faith and love. As for the preſence of Chriſt concerning the ſubſtance, that you utterly deny. Whereupon in very deed you leave but a ſpirituall union and joyning together of minde. Howbeit you would ſeem to think otherwiſe by your ſubtill anſwers. But I will declare by manifeſt teſtimonies of the Fathers, that this your ſequele, which you account ſo ſure, is farre wide from the truth. And I will begin with S. Hilary, who is both an ancient and learned Author. For diſputing againſt the Arrians, octavo de Trinitate, he ſaith that this was their opinion; That the Father and the Son are conjoyned only through unity of will. Whereupon Arrius himſelfe, when Scripture was alledged againſt him, did (as you do now) elude the right meaning of it by his falſe interpretations. But the catholike Church hath alwayes beleeved and ever maintained, that Chriſt is one with the Father in nature, and not by conſent of will onely. To the proofe whereof, when the Catholikes vouched this teſtimony of John, Pater & Ego unum ſumus, i. The Father and I are one: The Arrians anſwered, that (unum ſumus) was to be underſtood by the aſſent of their wils, and agreement of their minds, not by unity of their natures. Thus it happeneth now adayes, where men doe doubt of the ſacrament. But Hillary going on, and proving the naturall conjunction betweene the Father and the Sonne à fortiori, queſtioneth with his adverſaries after this manner. I demand of them now which will needs have the unity of will onely between the Father and the Son, whether Chriſt be now in us truly by nature, or only by the agreement of wils? If (ſaith he) the word be incarnate in very deed, and we receive at the Lords table the word made fleſh, how then is he to be thought not to dwell in us naturally, who being borne man, hath both taken the nature of our fleſh upon him that is now inſeparable, and hath alſo mingled that nature of his owne

Hillary.

Coniunction betweene Chriſt and us.

own fleſh unto the nature of eternity under the Sacrament of his fleſh, to be communicated unto us? Thus much hath Hilary. Whereupon I aſke of you this queſtion, How Chriſt dwelleth now in us? according to faith, or according to nature?

Anſwer to Hilary.

Cran. I ſay that Chriſt dwelleth verily in us carnally and naturally, for that he hath taken of the Virgin our fleſh upon him, and becauſe he hath communicated his nature unto us.

Bucer contra Abrincenſem alledged by Treſham.

Treſh. Bucer contra Abrincenſem, referreth theſe words only to the Euchariſt, ſaying, Chriſt doth exhibit all this unto us in his holy Supper, and according to the holy Fathers (ſaith he) Chriſt liveth therby in us, not only by faith and love, as abſent, but naturally, corporally, and carnally. Wherfore he is not abſent, neither are we ioyned to Chriſt onely by a ſpirituall union (as you ſuppoſe) but alſo by a corporall and carnall union.

Cran. I know that Maſter Bucer was a learned man. But your faith is in good caſe, which leaneth upon Bucer.

Treſh. I doe not bring Bucer as a Patron of our faith, but becauſe he is a man of your ſort, and yet bringeth this place of Hilary for that union which we have by the Sacrament, and confeſſeth, that by it we are carnally united to Chriſt, whereas you think that we are ioyned by it only through faith and love.

Chriſt communicated and united to us by birth, by unity of the Church, by the communion, by baptiſme, by faith.

Cran. I ſay that Chriſt was communicated unto us, not onely by faith, but in very deed alſo when he was borne of the Virgin. We have fellowſhip with Chriſt, when we are united in yͤ unity of the Church, when we are made fleſh of his fleſh, and bones of his bones, and ſo we are united in the communion, in baptiſm, and in faith.

Treſh. I pray you what fellowſhip have we with Chriſt, in that he is made man? Are not the Turkes and Iewes therein ioyned with him? For they are men as we are, and are ioyned with him in mans nature, in that he was borne of a woman. I ſpeake now of a more neere unity. We are made one with Chriſt by the communion in a perfect unity.

“We are united to Chriſt by communion, ſo as we are by baptiſme.

Cran. “We are made ſo, I grant: but we are made ſo alſo by Baptiſm; and the unity in Baptiſme is perfect.

Treſh. We are not made one by Baptiſm in a perfect unity, as Hilary there ſpeaketh, but by the communion, by which we are carnally made one, but not likewiſe by Baptiſm: wherefore you underſtand not Hilary. You ſhall heare his words, which are theſe:

Obiection of Hilary.

He had now declared afore the Sacrament of his perfect union, ſaying; As the living Father ſent me, ſo doe I alſo live by the Father. And he that eateth my fleſh, ſhall alſo live through me. And a little after that he writeth thus: This truly is the cauſe of our life, that we have Chriſt dwelling by his fleſh in us that are fleſhly, which alſo by him ſhall live in ſuch ſort as he liveth by his father. Wherefore of theſe words it is manifeſt, that we obtaine this perfect unity by means of the Sacrament, and that Chriſt by it is carnally united unto us.

Anſwer to the place of Hilary.

Cran. Nay, Hilary in that ſame place doth teach, that it is done by Baptiſm: & that doctrine is not to be ſuffered in yͤ Church, which teacheth, that we are not ioyned to Chriſt by Baptiſme.

Weſt. Repeat the argument.

Cran. You muſt firſt make an argument.

Treſh. It is made already, but it ſhall be made againe in this forme.

Argument.

Da- As Chriſt liveth by his Father, ſo they that eat Chriſts fleſh live by the ſame fleſh.

ti- But Chriſt liveth by the Father, not onely by faith and love, but naturally.

ſi. Ergo, We live not through the eating of Chriſts fleſh, by faith and love only, but naturally.

Cran. We live by Chriſt, not only by faith and love, but eternally indeed.

Treſh. Nay (b) naturally I prove it thus.

As Chriſt liveth by the Father, ſo live we by his fleſh eaten of us.

But Chriſt liveth not by his Father only, by faith and love, but naturally.

Therefore we do not live by eating of Chriſts fleſh onely by faith and love (as you ſuppoſe) but naturally.

(b) The Papiſts by this one word Naturally, confound themſelves. For if the naturall body of Chriſt were eaten, and went naturally into our bodies, then ſhould it follow, that the nature of his body being immaculate, and now alſo immortall, our bodies united in nature to his pure and immortall body, naturally ſhould never ſin nor die. Wherefore it remaineth, that the naturall uniting to Chriſts body, commeth not by the bodily eating of the Sacrament, unto our body, but to our ſoule, and ſo ſhall redound at length unto our bodies. If that union of the ſubſtance of fleſh ſhould be granted unto our bodies, then ſhould our bodies never die, nor ſee corruption.

Cran. The Minor is not true.

Treſh. This is the opinion of Arrius, that Chriſt is united to his Father by coniunction of minde, and not naturally.

Cran. I ſay not ſo yet, neither doe I thinke ſo. But I will tell you what I like not in your Minor. You ſay, that Chriſt doth not live by his Father onely by faith and love: but I ſay, that Chriſt liveth not at all by his faith.

Weſt. Mark and conſider well this word (by Faith) leſt any occaſion of cavilling be given.

Treſh. Let that word (by Faith) be omitted. Neither did I meane, that Chriſt liveth by his Father through faith. Yet the ſtrength of the argument remaineth in force. For els Hilary doth not confute the Arrians, except there be a greater coniunction betweene us and Chriſt, when he is eaten of us, than only a ſpirituall coniunction. You do only grant an union. As for a carnall or naturall union of the ſubſtance of fleſh, by which we are ioyned more than ſpiritually, you do not grant. But our Lord Ieſus give you a better mind, and ſhew you the light of his truth, that you may return into the way of righteouſneſſe.

Weſt. We came hither to diſpute, and not to pray.

Treſ. Is it not lawfull to pray for them yͤ erre?

Weſt. It is not lawfull yet. But proceed.

The ſame argument againe repeated.

Treſ. Againe, I reaſon thus; As Chriſt liveth by his Father, after the ſame manner do we live by the eating of his fleſh.

But Chriſt liveth not by his Father onely, in unity of will, but naturally.

Ergo, we do not live when we eat the fleſh of Chriſt, onely by faith and unity of will, but naturally.

Anſwer.

Cran. This is my faith, and it agreeth with the Scripture, Chriſt liveth by his Father naturally, and maketh us to live by himſelf indeed naturally, and that not onely in the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, but alſo in Baptiſme. For infants, when they are baptized, do eat the fleſh of Chriſt.

Weſt. Anſwer either to the whole argument, or to the parts therof. For this argument is ſtrong, and cannot be diſſolved.

Cran. This is the argument.

The Archbiſhop repeateth the argument.

As Chriſt liveth by his Father, after the ſame manner do we live by his fleſh, being eaten of us.

But Chriſt liveth not by his Father onely in unity of will, but naturally.

Ergo, We eating his fleſh do not live only by faith and love, but naturally.

But the maior is falſe; namely, that by the ſame maner we live by Chriſt, as he liveth by his father.

Weſt. (a) Hilary ſaith, After the ſame manner

(a) Chriſt not after his manhood, but after his divine nature, liveth naturally by his Father, which divine nature of his worketh alſo in his manhood an immortality: So our ſpirit and ſoule, receiving the naturall body of Chriſt in the myſteries, by faith doe receive alſo the nature of his body, that is, his pureneſſe, iuſtification, and life: the operation whereof redounding likewiſe unto our bodies, doth make the ſame alſo capable of the ſame glory and immortality. And thus it is true, that as Chriſt liveth naturally by his Father, ſo we live naturally by the body of Chriſt eaten in the myſteries, having reſpect both to the manhood of him and us. For as the fleſh of Chriſt in reſpect of bare fleſh, liveth not naturally by the Father, but for that it is ioyned to his divinity: So our fleſh liveth not naturally by Chriſts body eaten in the Sacrament (for then every wicked man eating the Sacrament ſhould live naturally by him) but for that our fleſh is ioyned to the ſpirit and ſoule, which truly eateth the body of Chriſt by faith: and ſo onely the bodies of the faithfull do live by eating the body of Chriſt naturally, in participating the naturall properties of the body of Chriſt.

upon theſe words, He that eateth my fleſh ſhall live by me: Ergo, Chriſt liveth by his Father, and as he liveth by his Father, after the ſame maner we ſhall live by his fleſh. Here you ſee, that Hilarie ſaith, After the ſame manner.

Cran. After the ſame manner, doth not ſignifie like in all things, but in deed and eternally: for ſo do we live by Chriſt, and Chriſt liveth by his Father. For in other reſpects Chriſt liveth otherwiſe by his Father, than we live by Chriſt.

Weſt. He liveth by his Father naturally and eternally.

Ergo, We live by Chriſt naturally and eternally.

Cran. We do not live naturally, but by grace, if you take naturally for the manner of nature; As Chriſt hath eternall life of his Father, ſo have we of him.

Weſt. I ſtick to this word Naturally.

Cran. I mean it touching the truth of nature. For Chriſt liveth otherwiſe by his Father, than we live by Chriſt.

Weſt. Hilarie in his eighth book De Trinitate, denieth it when he ſaith: He liveth therefore by his Father, and as he liveth by his Father, after the ſame manner we ſhall live by his fleſh.

Naturall expounded.

Cran. We ſhall live after the ſame manner, as concerning the nature of the fleſh of Chriſt: for as he hath of his Father the nature of eternity, ſo ſhall we have of him.

Weſt. Anſwer unto the parts of the argument.

The argument the third time repeated.

As Chriſt liveth by his Father, after the ſame manner ſhall we live by his fleſh.

But Chriſt doth not live by his Father onely in unity of will, but naturally.

Ergo, We eating of his fleſh, do not live onely by faith and love, but naturally.

Cran. I grant (as I ſaid) we live by Chriſt naturally: but I never heard that Chriſt liveth with his Father in unity of will only.

Weſt. Becauſe it ſeemeth a marvell unto you, heare what Hilary ſaith; Theſe things are recited of us to this end, becauſe the Heretikes, feigning an unity of will onely betweene the Father and the Sonne, did uſe the example of our unity with God, as though we being united to the Sonne, and by the Sonne to the Father onely by obedience and will of Religion, had no propriety of the naturall communion by the Sacrament of the body and blood.

But anſwer to the argument. Chriſt liveth by his Father naturally and eternally: therefore do we live by Chriſt naturally and eternally.

Ex exemplari manu Cranmeri deſcripto.

Cran. Cyrill and Hilary do ſay, that Chriſt is united to us not only by will, but alſo by nature: he doth communicate to us his own nature, and ſo is Chriſt made one with us carnally and corporally, becauſe he tooke our nature of the Virgin Mary. And Hilary doth not ſay only that Chriſt is naturally in us, but that we alſo are naturally in him, and in the Father; that is, that we are partakers of their nature, which is eternity, or everlaſtingnes. For as the Word, receiving our nature, did ioyne it in unity of perſon, and did communicate unto that our nature the nature of his eternity, that like as he, being the everlaſting Word of the Father, had everlaſting life of the Father; even ſo he gave the ſame nature to his fleſh. Likewiſe alſo did he communicate with us the ſame nature of eternity, which he and the Father have, and that we ſhould be one with them, not only in will and love, but that we ſhould be alſo partakers of the nature of everlaſting life.

Naturally expounded, that is, our bodies to participate the nature and properties of Chriſts holy immortall bodie.

Weſt. Hilary, where he ſaith, Chriſt communicated to us his nature, meaneth that not by his nativity, but by the Sacrament.

Cran. He hath communicated to us his fleſh by his nativity.

Weſt. We have communicated to him (b) our fleſh when he was borne.

(b) Then had Chriſt a ſinful fleſh.

Cran. Nay, he communicated to us his fleſh when he was borne, and that I will ſhew you out of Cyrill upon this place; Et homo factus eſt.

Weſt. Ergo, Chriſt being borne gave us his fleſh.

Cran. In his nativity he made us (c) partakers of his fleſh.

(c) That is, made us partakers of the properties, life, innocency, and reſurrection of his body.

Weſt. Write ſirs.

Cran. Yea, write.

D. Chedſey again diſputeth.

Ched. This place of Hilary is ſo darke, that you were compelled to falſifie it in your book, becauſe you could not draw it to confirme your purpoſe.

Hilar. 8. de Trinit.

If Chriſt have taken verily the fleſh of our body, and the man that was verily borne of the Virgin Mary is Chriſt, and alſo we receive under the true myſterie the fleſh of his body, by meanes whereof wee ſhall bee one (for the Father is in Chriſt, and Chriſt in us) how ſhall that be called the unity of will, when the naturall property, brought to paſſe by the Sacrament, is the Sacrament of unity: We muſt not ſpeake in the ſenſe of man, or of the world in matters concerning God: neither muſt we perverſly wreſt any ſtrange or wicked ſenſe out of the wholſome meaning of the holy Scripture, through impudent and vile contention. Let us read thoſe things that are written, and let us underſtand thoſe things that we read, and then we ſhall performe the duty of perfect faith. For as touching that naturall and true being of Chriſt in us, except we learne of him, we ſpeak fooliſhly and ungodly that thing that we do ſpeak. For he ſaith, My fleſh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed: He that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, abideth in me, and I in him. As touching the verity of his fleſh and blood, there is left no place of doubt: for now, both by the teſtimony of the Lord, and alſo by our faith, it is verily fleſh, and verily blood.

Here you have falſified Hilary, for you have ſet vero ſub myſterio, for verè ſub myſterio, we receive truly under a myſtery. Hilary thrice reporteth verè ſub myſterio, and you interpret it twice verè ſub myſterio, but the third time you have vero for verè.

Thus far was their talk in Engliſh. Seeing maſter Cranmer had twice vere, and but once vero, they had no cauſe to be grieved, but that they were diſpoſed to find a knot in a ruſh.

Cran. Aſſuredly, I am not guilty of any deceit herein. It may be that the copie which I followed had ſub vero myſterio, i. under a true myſtery: although touching the ſenſe it differeth little. God I call to witneſſe, I have alway hated falſifying, and if you had leaſure and luſt to heare falſe citations, I could recite unto you ſix hundred.

Weſt. Here ſhall be ſhewed you two copies of Hilary, the one printed at Baſil, the other at Paris.

Cran. I ſuppoſe that Doctor Smiths booke hath vero.

Weſt. Here is Doctor Smith; let him anſwer for himſelfe.

M. Smith, M. Doctor, what ſay you for your ſelf? ſpeak if you know it.

¶ Here Doctor Smith, either for the truth in his book alledged, or els aſtoniſhed with Doctor Weſtons haſty calling, ſtaid to anſwer. For he only put off his cap, and kept ſilence.

Weſt. But your owne book, printed by Wolfe your own Printer, hath vero.

Cran. That book is taken from me, which eaſily might have ended this controverſie. I am ſure the book of Decrees hath vero.

Here D. Cole beginneth to carpe.

Cole. Now you admit the book of Decrees, when it maketh for you.

Cran. Touching the ſenſe of the matter there is little difference. The change of one letter for another, is but a ſmall matter.

Weſt.

Anno 1554.

Weſt. No is? Paſtor (as you know) ſignifieth a Biſhop, and Piſtor ſignifieth a Baker. But Paſtor ſhall be Piſtor, a Biſhop ſhall be a Baker by this your change of one letter, if verè and vero do nothing change the ſenſe.

Cran. Let it be ſo that in Piſtor and Paſtor one letter maketh ſome difference: Yet let Piſtor be either a Baker or maker of bread, ye ſee here the change of a letter, and yet no great difference to be in the ſenſe.

D. Yong commeth in with his Socraticall interrogations.

Yong. This Diſputation is taken in hand, that the truth might appeare. I perceive that I muſt goe another way to worke than I had thought. It is a common ſaying; againſt him that denieth principles wee muſt not diſpute. Therefore that we may agree of the principles, I demand, whether there be any other body of Chriſt than his inſtrumentall body?

Cran. There is no naturall body of Chriſt, but his organicall body.

Yong. Againe, I demand, whether ſenſe and reaſon ought to give place to faith?

Cran. They ought.

Yong. Thirdly, whether Chriſt be true in all his words?

Cran. Yea, hee is moſt true, and truth it ſelfe.

Yong. Fourthly, Whether Chriſt at his Supper minded to doe that which hee ſpake or no?

Cran. Dicendo dixit, non fecit dicendo; ſed fecit Diſcipulis Sacramentum, i. In ſaying hee ſpake, but in ſaying he made not, but made the Sacrament to his Diſciples.

D. Yongs ſophiſticall interrogatories.

Yong. Anſwer according to the truth; whether did Chriſt that as God and man which hee ſpake, when he ſaid, This is my body?

Cran. This is a ſophiſticall cavillation: goe plainly to worke. There is ſome deceit in theſe queſtions. You ſeeke ſubtilneſſe, leave your crafty fetches.

Yong. I demand whether Chriſt by theſe words wrought any thing or no?

Cran. He did inſtitute the Sacrament.

Yong. But anſwer, whether did he worke any thing?

Cran. He did work in inſtituting the Sacrament.

This Syllogiſme, ſpeaking of a figure, hath no perfect forme nor figure.

Yong. Now I have you; for before you ſaid it was a figurative ſpeech.

But a figure worketh nothing.

Ergo, It is not a figurative ſpeech. A lyer ought to have a good memory.

Cran. I underſtood your Sophiſtry before. You by working underſtand converting into the body of Chriſt: but Chriſt wrought the Sacrament, not in converting, but in inſtituting.

Yong. Woe be to them that make Chriſt a deceiver. Did he worke any other thing than he ſpake, or the ſelfe ſame thing?

Cran. He wrought the Sacrament, and by theſe words he ſignified the effect.

Fes- Yong. A figurative ſpeech is no working thing.
ti- But the ſpeech of Chriſt is working:
no. Ergo, It is not figurative.

Cran. It worketh by inſtituting, not by converting.

Yong. The thing ſignified in the Sacrament, is it not that Sacrament?

Anſwer to D. Yong by S. Auſtin.

Cran. It is. For the thing is miniſtred in a ſigne. He followeth the letter that taketh the thing for a ſigne. Auguſtine ſeparateth the ſacrament from the thing. The ſacrament (ſaith he) is one, & the thing of the ſacrament another.

Weſt. Stick to this argument.
It is a figurative ſpeech.
Ergo, It worketh nothing.

Yong. But the ſpeech of Chriſt is a working thing.
Ergo, It is not figurative.

Cran. Oh how many crafts are in this argument? they are meere fallacies, I ſaid not, that the words of Chriſt do work, but Chriſt himſelfe; and he worketh by a figurative ſpeech.

Weſt. If a figure worke, it maketh of bread the body of Chriſt.

Cran. A figurative ſpeech worketh not.

Weſt. A figurative ſpeech, by your owne confeſſion, worketh nothing.
But the ſpeech of Chriſt in the Supper (as you grant) wrought ſomewhat.
Ergo, the ſpeech of Chriſt in the ſupper was not figurative.

The figurative ſpeech worketh not, but Chriſt by the figurative ſpeech worketh the Sacrament.

Cran. I anſwer, theſe are meere Sophiſmes: the ſpeech doth not work, but Chriſt by the ſpeech doth work the ſacrament. I look for Scriptures at your hands, for they are the foundation of diſputations.

Yong. Are not theſe words of Scripture, This is my body? The word of Chriſt is of ſtrength; and by the Lords words the heavens were made. He ſaid, This is my body: Ergo, he made it.

Cran. He made the ſacrament, and I deny your argument.

Yong. If he wrought nothing, nothing is left there. He ſaid, This is my body. You ſay contrary to the Scriptures, it is not the body of Chriſt, and fall from the faith.

Cran. You interpret the Scriptures contrary to all the old Writers, and feigne a ſtrange ſenſe.

Amb. de iis qui initiantur, &c. cap. 9.

Yong. Ambroſe, De iis qui initiantur ſacris, cap. 9. ſaith: De totius mundi operibus legiſti, quia ipſe dixit, & facta ſunt, ipſe mandavit & creata ſunt. Sermo Chriſti qui potuit ex nihilo facere quod non erat, non poteſt ea quæ ſunt in id mutare quæ non erant? Non enim minus eſt novas res dare, quàm mutare naturas. Sed quid argumentis utimur? ſuis utamur exemplis, incarnationiſque exemplo aſtruamus myſterii veritatem. Nunquid naturæ viſus præceſſit cum Dominus Ieſus ex Maria naſceretur? Si ordinem quærimus, viro mixta fœmina generare conſuevit; Liquet igitur quod præter naturæ ordinem virgo generavit: & hoc quod confitimus corpus ex virgine eſt. Quid hic quæris naturæ ordinem in Chriſti corpore, cum præter naturam ſit ipſe Dominus Ieſus partus ex virgine? Vera utique caro Chriſti quæ crucifixa eſt, quæ ſepulta eſt: verè ergo illius Sacramentum eſt. Clamat Dominus Ieſus; Hoc eſt corpus meum. Ante benedictionem verborum cœleſtium alia ſpecies nominatur, poſt conſecrationem corpus ſignificatur. Ipſe dicit ſanguinem ſuum. Ante conſecrationem aliud dicitur: poſt conſecrationem ſanguis nuncupatur. Et tu dicis, Amen, hoc eſt, verum eſt. Quod os loquitur, mens interna fateatur: quod ſermo ſonat, affectus ſentiat.

That is.

Thou haſt read of the works of all the world; that he ſpake the word and they were made; he commanded and they were created. Cannot the word of Chriſt, which made of nothing that which was not, change thoſe things that are into that they were not? For it is no leſſe matter to give new things than to change natures. But what uſe we arguments? let us uſe his owne examples, and let us confirm the verity of the myſtery by example of his incarnation. Did the uſe of nature goe before when the Lord Jeſus was borne of Mary? If you ſeeke the order of nature, conception is wont to be made by a woman ioyned to a man. It is manifeſt therefore, that contrary to the " order of nature, a Virgin

" As Chriſt Jeſus was conceived againſt the order of nature; ſo in the inſtituting of this Sacrament the order of nature is not to bee ſought.

did conceive: and this body that we make, is of the Virgin. What ſeekeſt thou here the order of nature in the body of Chriſt, when againſt the order of nature the Lord Jeſus was conceived of a Virgin? It was the true fleſh of Chriſt which was crucified, and which was buried: therefore it is truly the Sacrament of him. The Lord Jeſus himſelfe crieth; This is my body. Before the bleſſing of the heavenly words, it is named another kinde: but after the conſecration the body of Chriſt is ſignified. He calleth it his blood. Before conſecration it is called another thing: after conſecration it is called blood: and thou ſaiſt, Amen; that is, it is true. That the mouth ſpeaketh let the inward minde confeſſe; that the word ſoundeth, let the heart perceive.

Amb. lib. de ſacram. cap. 4

The ſame Ambroſe in his fourth booke of Sacraments the fourth chap. ſaith thus; Panis iſte panis eſt ante verba Sacramentorum; ubi acceſſerit conſecratio, de pane fit caro Chriſti. Hoc igitur aſtruamus; quomodo poteſt, qui panis eſt, corpus eſſe Chriſti conſecratione? conſecratio igitur quibus verbis eſt, & cujus ſermonibus? Domini Ieſu. Nam ad reliqua omnia quæ dicuntur, laus Deo defertur, oratione petitur pro populo, pro regibus, pro cæteris; ubi venitur ut conficiatur venerabile ſacramentum, jam non ſuis ſermonibus Sacerdos utitur, ſed ſermonibus Chriſti. Ergo ſermo Chriſti hoc conficit Sacramentum. Quis ſermo? Nempe is quo facta ſunt omnia. Iuſſit Dominus & factum eſt cœlum; juſſit Dominus & facta eſt terra; juſſit Dominus & facta ſunt maria, &c. Vides ergo quàm operatorius ſit ſermo Chriſti. Si ergo tanta vis eſt in ſermone Domini, ut inciperent eſſe quæ non erant, quanto magis operatorius eſt, ut ſint quæ erant, & in aliud commutentur.

That is to ſay.

The words of Ambroſe in Engliſh.

This bread is bread before the words of the Sacraments; when the conſecration commeth to it, of bread it is made the fleſh of Chriſt. Let us confirme this therefore; how can that which is bread, by conſecration be the body of Chriſt? by what words then is the conſecration made, and by whoſe words? by the words of our Lord Jeſus. For touching all other things that are ſaid, praiſe is given to God, prayer is made for the people, for kings, and for the reſt: When it commeth that the reverend ſacrament muſt be made, then the Prieſt uſeth not his own words, but the words of Chriſt: therefore the word of Chriſt maketh this ſacrament. What word? That word, by which all things were made: The Lord "commanded, and heaven was made; the Lord commanded, and the earth was made; the Lord commanded, and the ſeas were made; the Lord commanded, and all creatures were made. Doſt thou not ſee then how ſtrong in working the word of Chriſt is? If therefore ſo great ſtrength be in the Lords word, that thoſe things ſhould begin to be which were not before, how much the rather is it of ſtrength to worke, that theſe things which were ſhould be changed into another thing? Ambroſe ſaith that the words are of ſtrength to work.

"But the Lord Jeſus here uſed not ſuch words of commanding in the ſacrament as in the creation: for we read not fiat hoc corpus meum, as we read, fiat lux, &c.

Weſton. You omit thoſe words which follow, which maketh the ſenſe of Ambroſe plain. Read them.

Amb. de ſacram. cap. 5.

"Alloioſis rerum & ſymbolorum.

Yong. Cœlum non erat, mare non erat, terra non erat. Sed audi dicentem, ipſe dixit & facta ſunt; ipſe mandavit & creata ſunt. Ergo tibi ut reſpondeam, non erat corpus Chriſti ante conſecrationem, ſed poſt conſecrationem dico tibi quòd jam "corpus Chriſti eſt. That is, Heaven was not, the ſea was not, the earth was not, but heare him that ſaid: he ſpake the word and they were made; hee commanded, and they were created. Therefore to anſwer thee, it was not the body of Chriſt before conſecration, but after the conſecration, I ſay to thee, that now it is the body of Chriſt.

Cran. All theſe things are common. I ſay, that God doth chiefly work in the ſacraments.

Young. How doth he work?

Cran. By his power, as he doth in Baptiſme.

Young. Nay, by the word he changeth the bread into his body. This is the truth, acknowledge the truth, give place to the truth.

Cran. O glorious words, you are too full of words.

Young. Nay, O glorious truth, you make no change at all.

Cran. Not ſo, but I make a great change; as in them that are baptized, is there not a great change, when the child of the bondſlave of the Divell is made the ſon of God? So it is alſo in the ſacrament of the Supper, when he receiveth us into his protection and favour.

Young. If he worke in the ſacraments, he worketh in this ſacrament.

Cran. God worketh in his faithfull, not in the ſacraments.

Weſt. In the Supper the words are directed to the bread; in Baptiſme to the ſpirit. He ſaid not, the water is the ſpirit, but of the bread he ſaid, This is my body.

As the Dove is called the ſpirit, ſo the bread is called the body.

Cran. He called the ſpirit a Dove, when the ſpirit deſcended in likeneſſe of a Dove.

Weſt. He doth not call the ſpirit a Dove; but he ſaith, that he deſcended as a Dove. He was ſeene in the likeneſſe of a Dove. As in Baptiſme, the words are directed to him that is baptized, ſo in the Supper the words are directed unto the bread.

John 1.
Auguſt. in John cap. 1.

Cran. Nay it is written, Vpon whomſoever thou ſhalt ſee the ſpirit deſcending. He calleth that which deſcended the holy ſpirit. And Auguſtine calleth ỹ Dove the ſpirit. Heare what Auguſtine ſaith in 1. Joh. Quid voluit per Columbam, id eſt, per Spiritum ſanctum? docere, qui miſerat eũm. That is, What meant he by the Dove, that is, by the holy Ghoſt? forſooth to teach who ſent him.

Ambroſe again repeated. de ſacram. cap. 4.

Young. He underſtandeth of the ſpirit deſcending as a Dove: the ſpirit is inviſible. If you minde to have the truth heard, let us proceed. Heare what Ambroſe ſaith, Vides quàm operatorius ſit ſermo Chriſti. Si ergo tanta vis in ſermone Domini, &c. ut ſupra. That is, You ſee what a working power the word of Chriſt hath. Therefore if there bee ſo great power in the Lords word, that thoſe things which were not, begin to be, how much more of ſtrength is it to work, that thoſe things that were ſhould be changed into another thing?

Idem cap. 5.

And in the fifth chapt. Antequam conſecretur, panis eſt: ubi autem verba Chriſti acceſſerint, corpus eſt Chriſti, i. Before it is conſecrated, it is bread: but when the words of Chriſt come to it, it is the body of Chriſt.

But heare what he ſaith more, Accipite, edite, hoc eſt corpus meum; Take ye, eat ye, this is my body. Ante verba Chriſti calix eſt vini & aquæ plenus: ubi verba Chriſti operata fuerint, ibi ſanguis efficitur, qui redemit plebem, i. Before the words of Chriſt, the cup is full of wine and water; when the words of Chriſt have wrought, there is made the blood of Chriſt which redeemed the people. What can be more plaine?

Anſwer to Ambroſe.

Cran. Nay, what can be leſſe to the purpoſe? The words are of ſtrength to worke in this ſacrament, as they are in Baptiſme.

Pie. The words of Chriſt (as Ambroſe ſaith) are of ſtrength to worke. What do they worke? Ambroſe ſaith, they make the blood which redeemed the people.

Ergo, the naturall blood is made.

Anno 1554

Cran. The Sacrament of his blood is made. The words make the blood to them that receive it: not that the blood is in the cup, but in the receiver.

Pie. There is made the blood which redeemed the people.

Cran. The blood is made, that is, the Sacrament of the blood, by which he redeemed the people. (Fit) it is made, that is to ſay, (oſtenditur) it is ſhewed forth there. And Ambroſe ſaith, we receive in a ſimilitude. As thou haſt received the ſimilitude of his death, ſo alſo thou drinkeſt the ſimilitude of his precious bloud.

Marke how D. Weſton expoundeth to eat in a ſimilitude.

West. He ſaith, in a ſimilitude, becauſe it is miniſtred under another likeneſſe. And this is the argument:

"There is made the blood which redeemed the people.

But the naturall blood redeemed the people:

Ergo, There is the naturall blood of Chriſt.

"If this Syllogiſme be in the ſecond figure (as by ſtanding of the termes appeareth) then is it falſe, becauſe it concludeth affirmatively.

You anſwer, that words make it blood to them that receive it; not that blood is in the cup, but becauſe it is made blood to them that receive it. That all men may ſee how falſly you would avoid the Fathers, heare what Ambroſe ſaith in the ſixth book and firſt chapter.

Amb. lib. 6. cap. 1. de ſacramentis.

Forte dicas, quomodo vera? qui ſimilitudinem video, non video ſanguinis veritatem. Primum omnium dixi tibi de ſermone Chriſti, qui operatur, ut poſſit mutare & convertere genera inſtituta naturæ. Deinde ubi non tulerunt ſermonem Diſcipuli ejus, ſed audientes, quòd carnem ſuam dedit manducari, & ſanguinem ſuum dedit bibendum, recedebant. Solus tamen Petrus dixit, Verba vitæ æternæ habes, & ego à te quò recedam? Ne igitur plures hoc dicerent, veluti quidam eſſet horror cruoris, ſed maneret gratia redemptionis, ideo in ſimilitudinem quidem accipis ſacramentum, ſed verè naturæ gratiam virtutemque conſequeris.

Operari. Mutare.

That is to ſay.

Peradventure thou wilt ſay, how be they true? I which ſee the ſimilitude, doe not ſee the truth of the blood. Firſt of all I told thee of the word of Chriſt, which ſo worketh, that it can change and turn kinds ordained by nature. Afterward, when the diſciples could not abide the words of Chriſt, but hearing that he gave his fleſh to eat, and his blood to drink, they departed. Onely Peter ſaid, thou haſt the words of eternall life: whether ſhould I go from thee? Leſt therefore mo ſhould ſay this thing, as though there ſhould be a certain horrour of blood, and yet the grace of redemption ſhould remaine: therefore in a ſimilitude thou receiveſt the Sacrament, but indeed thou obtaineſt the grace and power of his nature.

Anſwer to Ambroſe.

Cran. Theſe words of themſelves are plaine enough. And he read this place againe, Thou receiveſt the Sacrament for a ſimilitude. But what is that he ſaith, Thou receiveſt for a ſimilitude? I think he underſtandeth the Sacrament to be the ſimilitude of his blood.

Ched. That you may underſtand that truth diſſenteth not from truth, to overthrow that which you ſay of that ſimilitude; heare what Ambroſe ſaith, lib. 4. de Sacrament.

Ambroſ. de Sacrament. lib. 4.

Si operatus eſt ſermo cœleſtis in aliis rebus, non operatur in ſacramentis cœleſtibus? Ergo didiciſti quod è pane corpus fiat Chriſti, & quod vinum & aqua in calicem mittitur, ſed fit ſanguis conſecratione verbi cœleſtis. Sed forte dices, ſpeciem ſanguinis non videri. Sed habet ſimilitudinem. Sicut enim mortis ſimilitudinem ſumpſiſti, ita etiam ſimilitudinem precioſi ſanguinis bibis, ut nullus horror cruoris ſit, & pretium tamen operetur redemptionis. Didiciſti ergo, quia quod accipis corpus eſt Chriſti.

That is to ſay.

If the heavenly word did work in other things, doth it not worke in the heavenly Sacraments? Therefore thou haſt learned, that of bread is made the body of Chriſt, and that wine and water is put into that cup, but by conſecration of the heavenly word, it is made blood. But thou wilt ſay peradventure, that the likeneſſe of blood is not ſeen. But it hath a ſimilitude. For as thou haſt received the ſimilitude of his death, ſo alſo thou drinkeſt the ſimilitude of his precious blood, ſo that there is no horrour of blood, and yet it worketh the price of redemption. Therefore thou haſt learned, that that which thou receiveſt is the body of Chriſt.

Note, that Ambroſe ſaith, we drink a ſimilitude of Chriſts blood.

Cran. He ſpeaketh of Sacraments ſacramentally. He calleth the Sacraments by the names of the things; for hee uſeth the ſignes for the things ſignified: and therefore the bread is not called bread, but his body, for the excellency and dignity of the thing ſignified by it. So doth Ambroſe interpret himſelfe, when he ſaith, In cujus typum nos calicem myſticum ſanguinis ad tuitionem corporis & animæ noſtræ percepimus, 1 Cor. 11.

Anſwer to the place of Ambroſe. Sacraments be called by the name of the things.

Ambroſ. in 1 Cor. cap.

That is to ſay.

For a type or figure whereof we receive the myſticall cup of his blood, for the ſafegard of our bodies and ſoules.

Ched. A type? he calleth not the blood of Chriſt a type or ſigne: but the blood of Buls and Goats in that reſpect was a type or ſigne.

Cran. This is new learning; you ſhall never read this among the Fathers.

Ched. But Ambroſe ſaith ſo.

Cran. He calleth the bread and the cup a type or ſigne of the blood of Chriſt, and of his benefit.

West. Ambroſe underſtandeth it for a type of his benefit, that is, of redemption; not of the blood of Chriſt, but of his paſſion. The cup is the type or ſigne of his death, ſeeing it is his blood.

Cran. He ſaith moſt plainly, that the cup is the type of Chriſts blood.

Ambroſe alledged againſt Ambroſe. Argument.

Da- Ched. As Chriſt is truly and really incarnate, ſo is he truly and really in the Sacrament.
ri- But Chriſt is really and truly incarnate.
i. Ergo, the body of Chriſt is truly and really in the Sacrament.

Cran. I deny the Major.

Ched. I prove the Major out of Juſtine in his ſecond Apologie, Ὃν τρόπον διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ σαρκοποιηθεὶς Ἰησοῦς Χριστὸς ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ὑπὸ σωτηρίας ἡμῶν ἔχειν, οὕτω καὶ τὴν δι' εὐχῆς λόγου τοῦ παρ' αὐτοῦ εὐχαριστηθεῖσαν τροφήν, ἐξ ἧς αἷμα καὶ σάρκες κατὰ μεταβολὴν τρέφονται ἡμῶν, ἐκείνου τοῦ σαρκοποιηθέντος Ἰησοῦ καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ἐδιδάχθημεν εἶναι.

Iuſtin. Apol.

Cran. This place hath beene falſified by Marcus Conſtantius. Juſtine meant nothing elſe but that the bread, which nouriſheth us, is called the body of Chriſt.

Anſwer to the place of Juſtinus.

Ched. To the argument. As Chriſt is truly and naturally incarnate, &c. ut ſupra.

Cran. I deny your Major.

Ched. The words of Juſtine are thus to be interpreted word for word.

Quemadmodum per verbum Dei caro factus Ieſus Chriſtus, Salvator noſter, carnem habuit & ſanguinem pro ſalute noſtra: ſic & cibum illum conſecratum per ſermonem præcationis ab ipſo inſtitutæ, quo ſanguis carneſque noſtræ per communionem nutriuntur, ejuſdem Ieſu, qui caro factus eſt, carnem & ſanguinem eſſe accepimus.

Mutationem.

That is to ſay.

As by the word of God, Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour, being made fleſh, had both fleſh and blood for our ſalvation: ſo wee are taught, that the meat "conſecrated by the word of prayer, inſtituted of him, whereby our blood and fleſh are nouriſhed by "communion, is the fleſh & blood of the

"Of thankſgiving. "Mutation.

the ſame Ieſus which was made fleſh.

Anſwer.

Cran. You have tranſlated it well; but I deny your Major. This is the ſenſe of Iuſtine; that that bread is called the body of Chriſt, and yet of that ſanctified meat our bodies are nouriſhed.

Ched. Nay, he ſaith, of that ſanctified meat both our bodies and ſoules are nouriſhed.

αἷμα ϗ σάρκες. i. Blood and fleſh.

Cran. He ſaith not ſo; but he ſaith that it nouriſheth our fleſh and blood: and how can that nouriſh the ſoule, that nouriſheth the fleſh and blood?

Cole. It feedeth the body by the ſoule.

Cran. Speak uprightly. Can that which is received by the ſoul and the ſpirit be called the meat of the body?

Irenæus.

West. Heare then what Ireneus ſaith, Eum calicem, qui eſt creatura, ſuum corpus confirmavit, ex quo noſtra auget corpora. Quando & mixtus calix, & fractus panis percipit verbum Dei, fit Euchariſtia ſanguinis & corporis Chriſti, ex quibus augetur, & conſiſtit carnis noſtræ ſubſtantia. This, the ſame cup which is a creature, he confirmed to be his body, by which hee increaſeth our bodies. When both the cup mixed, and the bread broken, hath joyned to it the word of God, it is made the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt, of which yͤ ſubſtance of our fleſh is increaſed & conſiſteth.

Argument.

The ſubſtance of our fleſh is increaſed by the body and blood of Chriſt:

Ergo, Our body is nouriſhed by the body and blood of Chriſt.

Irenæus anſwered by Tertul.

Cran. I deny your argument. He calleth it the fleſh and blood, for the Sacrament of the body and blood, as Tertullian alſo ſaith, Nutritur corpus pane ſymbolico, anima corpore Chriſti. That is, Our fleſh is nouriſhed with ſymbolicall or ſacramentall bread, but our ſoule is nouriſhed with the body of Chriſt.

Irenæus lib.5

West. Look what he ſaith more. Quomodo carnem negant capacem eſſe donationis Dei quæ eſt vita æterna, quæ ſanguine & corpore Chriſti nutritur? Lib.5.poſt duo folia à principio. That is, How do they ſay, that the fleſh cannot receive the gift of God that is eternall life, which is nouriſhed with the blood and body of Chriſt? That is in the 5. book, two leaves from the beginning.

Cran. The body is nouriſhed both with the Sacrament, and with the body of Chriſt: with the Sacrament to a temporall life; with the body of Chriſt to eternall life.

Ched. I cannot but be ſorry when I ſee ſuch a manifeſt lye in your writings. For where you tranſlate Iuſtine on this faſhion; that the bread, water, and wine, are not ſo to be taken in this Sacrament, as common meates and drinkes are wont to be taken of us, but are meats choſen out peculiarly for this, namely, for the giving of thanks; and therefore be called of the Greeks Euchariſtia, that is, thankſgiving, they are called moreover the blood and body of Chriſt (ſo have you tranſlated it:) the words of Iuſtine are thus; We are taught that the meat conſecrated by the word of prayer, by the which our fleſh and bloud is nouriſhed by communion, is the body and bloud of the ſame Ieſus which was made fleſh.

Note that the Archb. here did not tranſlate the words of Iuſtine, but only gather the effect of his meaning.

Cranmer purgeth himſelfe.

Cran. I did not tranſlate it word for word, but only I gave the meaning: and I goe nothing from his meaning.

Harpſ. You remember touching Iuſtine, to whom this Apology was written, namely, to an heathen man. The Heathen thought that the Chriſtians came to the Church to worſhip bread. Iuſtine anſwereth, that we come not to common bread, but as to, &c, as is ſaid afore. Weigh the place well, it is right worthy to be noted; Our fleſh is nouriſhed according to mutation.

In eating the Sacrament no bread is conſidered, but onely the true body of Chriſt. De conſecrat. diſt.2. Quia.

Cran. We ought not to conſider the bare bread; but whoſoever commeth to the ſacrament eateth the true body of Chriſt,

West. You have corrupted Emiſſenus; for in ſtead of cibis ſatiandus, that is, to bee filled with meat, you have ſet cibis ſatiandus ſpiritualibus, that is, to be filled with ſpirituall meats.

Cran. I have not corrupted it; for it is ſo in the decrees.

West. You have corrupted another place of Emiſſenus. For you have omitted theſe words, Mirare cum reverendum altare cibis ſpiritualibus ſatiandus aſcendis: ſacrum Dei tui corpus & ſanguinem fide reſpice, honorem mirare, merito continge, &c. That is, Marvell thou when thou commeſt up to the reverend altar to be filled with ſpirituall meats: look in faith to the holy body and blood of thy God, marvell at his honour, worthily touch him.

Cran. This book hath not that.

Cranmer charged with falſe tranſlating.

West. Alſo you have falſified this place by evill tranſlating Honora corpus Dei tui, i. Honour the body of thy God. You have tranſlated it, Honora eum qui eſt Deus tuus, i. Honour him which is thy God. Whereas Emiſſenus hath not (honour him) but (honour the body of thy God.)

Cranmer purgeth himſelfe.

Cran. I have ſo tranſlated him, and yet no leſſe truly, than not without a weighty cauſe; els it ſhould not have been without danger, if I had tranſlated it thus; Honour the body of thy God; becauſe of certaine, that according to the error of the Anthropomorphites, dreamed that God had a body.

West. Nay, you moſt of all have brought the people into that errour, which ſo long have taught that hee ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father; and counted me for an heretike, becauſe I preached that God had no right hand. Then I will oppoſe you in the very Articles of your faith.

Argument.

Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father.

But God the Father hath no right hand:

Ergo, Where is Chriſt now?

The right hand of God what it ſignifieth.

Cran. I am not ſo ignorant a novice in the Articles of my faith, but that I underſtand, that to ſit at the right hand of God, doth ſignifie to be equall in the glory of the Father.

West. Now then take this argument.

Whereſoever Gods authority is, there is Chriſts body.

But Gods authority is in every place,

Ergo, What letteth the body of Chriſt to be in every place?

Cranmer charged with miſtranſlating Duns.

Moreover you have alſo corrupted Duns.

Cran. That is a great offence, I promiſe you.

West. For you have omitted ſecundum apparentiam, i. as it appeareth. Where his words are theſe, Et ſi quæras quare voluit Eccleſia eligere iſtum intellectum ita difficilem hujus articuli, cum verba Scripturæ poſſint ſalvari ſecundum intellectum facilem & veriorem, ſecundum apparentiam, de hoc articulo, &c. That is, if you demand why the Church did chuſe this ſo hard an underſtanding of this Article, whereas the words of Scripture may be ſalved after an eaſie and true underſtanding (as appeareth) of this Article, &c.

Cran. It is not ſo.

D. Cranmer challenged for ſetting forth the Catechiſm in the name of the Convocation.

West. Alſo you have ſet forth a Catechiſme in the name of the Synod of London, and yet there be 50. which witneſſing that they were of the number of the Convocation, never heard one word of this Catechiſme.

D. Cranmer purgeth himſelfe concerning the Catechiſme.

Cran. I was ignorant of the ſetting to of that title; and aſſoone as I had knowledge thereof, I did not like it: Therefore when I complained thereof to the Councell, it was anſwered me by them, that the booke was ſo entituled, becauſe it was ſet forth in the time of the Convocation.

West. Moreover, you have in Duns tranſlated In Romana Eccleſia, pro Eccleſia Catholica. In the

Anno 1554.

D. Cranmer charged with miſtranſlating Tho. Aquinas.

the Church of Rome, for the catholike Church.

Cran. Yea, but he meant the Romiſh Church.

Weſt. Moreover you have depraved S. Thomas, namely, where he hath theſe words, In quantum vero eſt ſacrificium, habet vim ſatisfactivam: Sed in ſatisfactione attenditur magis affectio offerentis, quàm quantitas oblationis. Vnde Dominus dicit apud Lucam de vidua quæ obtulit duo æra, quod plus omnibus miſit. Quamvis ergo hæc oblatio ex ſui quantitate ſufficiet ad ſatisfaciendum pro omni pœna: tamen fit ſatisfactoria illis pro quibus offertur, vel etiam offerentibus, ſecundum quantitatem ſuæ devotionis, & non pro tota pœna. That is, Inaſmuch as it is a ſacrifice, it hath the power of ſatisfaction: But in ſatisfaction the affection of the offerer is more to be weighed than the quantity of the oblation. Wherfore the Lord ſaid in Lukes Goſpell, of the widow which offered two mites, that ſhe caſt in more than they all. Therefore although this oblation of the quantity of it ſelfe will ſuffice to ſatisfie for all pain, yet it is made ſatisfactory to them, for whom it is offered, or to the offerers, according to the quantity of their devotion, & not for all the pain.

You have thus turned it, Quod ſacrificium Sacerdotis habet vim ſatisfactivam, &c. That is, That the ſacrifice of the Prieſt hath power of ſatisfaction, &c. And therefore in this place you have chopped in this word (Sacerdotis) of the Prieſt, whereas in the tranſlation of all the new Teſtament you have not ſet it, but where Chriſt was put to death. And againe, where S. Thomas hath (pro omni pœna) for all paine, your booke omitteth many things there.

Weſton triumpheth before the victory.

Thus you ſee brethren the truth ſtedfaſt and invincible, you ſee alſo the craft and deceit of heretikes; the truth may be preſſed, but it cannot be oppreſſed: therefore cry altogether; Vincit veritas, i. The truth overcommeth.

D. Smith ſet to diſpute againſt biſhop Ridley.

The next day following, which was the 17. of Aprill, was brought forth Doct. Ridley to diſpute, againſt whom was ſet D. Smith to be principall Opponent. Touching which D. Smith, forſomuch as mention here happeneth of his name, firſt the Reader is to be advertiſed what is to be attributed to his iudgement in Religion, which ſo oftentimes before had turned and returned to and fro, grounded (as it ſeemeth) upon no firme conſcience of doctrine, as both by his articles by him recanted may appeare, and alſo by his owne letter ſent a little before in K. Edwards dayes to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury from Scotland. Which letter I thought here to exhibit as a certaine preface before his own arguments, or rather as a teſtimony againſt himſelfe, whereby the Reader may underſtand how devoutly he magnified them and their doctrine a little before, againſt whon he now diſputeth ſo buſily. Read I beſeech thee his Epiſtle, and iudge.

The true copy of a certaine Epiſtle of D. Richard Smith, declaring his affection to the ſetting forth of Gods ſincere word.

A letter of D. Smith to D. Cranmer archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Moſt honourable, I commend me unto your Lordſhip, doing the ſame to underſtand, that I wrote letters to your grace in Ianuary laſt, and the tenth day of February, declaring the cauſes of my ſudden and unadviſed departing from your grace over the ſea; and deſiring your good Lordſhip of your charity toward them that repent of their ill acts, to forgive me your ſelf all yͤ wrong I did towards your grace, and to obtain in writing the Kings Maieſties pardon for me in all points concerning his laws: upon the receipt whereof I would return again home, and within half a yeere (at the uttermoſt) afterward write de Sacerdotum connubiis, &c. a Latine book that ſhould be a iuſt ſatisfaction for any thing that I have written againſt the ſame. Reliquaq; omnia dogmata veſtra tum demum libenter amplexurum, ubi Deus mentem meam, ut ea citra conſcientiæ læſionem agnoſcam, doceamque. I wrote not this that I want any good living here, but becauſe mine abſence out of the realme is diſhonour to the Kings Highneſſe and Realme, and becauſe I muſt needs (if I tarry here a quarter of a yeere longer) write an anſwer to your Graces booke of the Sacrament, and alſo a booke of common places againſt all the doctrine ſet forth by the Kings Maieſty, which I cannot do with a good conſcience. Wherefore I beſeech your Grace help me home, as ſoon as ye may conveniently, for Gods ſake, and ye ſhall never, I truſt in God, repent that fact.

Diſputers againſt Doctor Ridley.

And thus much touching the forenamed Doctor Richard Smith, being ſet here (as is ſaid) to diſpute againſt biſhop Ridley, who was brought now the next day after the Archbiſhop, to anſwer in the Divinity Schoole. Againſt whom alſo, beſides D. Smith, diſputed D. Weſton, D. Treſham, D. Oglethorpe, D. Glin, D. Seton, and D. Cole, M. Ward, M. Harpsfield, D. Watſon, M. Pie, M. Harding, M. Curton, M. Fecknam: To all them he anſwered very learnedly. He made a Preface to theſe queſtions, but they would not let him goe forth in it, but cauſed him to make an end of the ſame, and ſaid it was blaſphemy; and ſome ſaid he drave off the time in ambiguous things, nothing to the purpoſe, and ſo they would not ſuffer him to ſay his minde. D. Smith could get nothing at his hand; inſomuch that other did take his arguments and proſecuted them. He ſhewed himſelfe to be learned, and a great Clerk. They could bring nothing, but he knew it as well as they.

The diſputation beginneth.

Weſt. Prolocutor. Good Chriſtian people and brethren, we have begun this day our Schoole, by Gods good ſpeed I truſt, and are entring into a controverſie, wherof no queſtion ought to be moved concerning the verity of the body of our Lord Ieſu Chriſt in the Euchariſt. Chriſt is true, which ſaid the words. The words are true which he ſpake, yea, truth it ſelf that cannot faile. Let us therefore pray unto God to ſend downe unto us his holy Spirit, which is the true interpreter of his word; which may purge away errours, and give light, that verity may appeare. Let us alſo aſke leave and liberty of the Church to permit the truth received to be called this day in queſtion, without any preiudice to the ſame. Your parts therefore ſhall be to implore the aſſiſtance of Almighty God, to pray for the proſperity of the Queenes Maieſty, and to give us quiet and attentive eares. Now go to your queſtion.

Doct. Smith. This day (right learned Maſter Doctor) three queſtions are propounded, whereof no controverſie among Chriſtians ought to be moved, to wit;

The queſtions

1. Whether the naturall body of Chriſt our Saviour, conceived of the Virgin Mary, and offered for mans redemption upon the Croſſe, is verily and really in the Sacrament by vertue of Gods word ſpoken by the Prieſt, &c.
2. Whether in the Sacrament, after the words of conſecration, be any other ſubſtance, &c.
3. Whether in the Maſſe be a ſacrifice propitiatorie, &c.

Touching the which queſtions, although you have publikely and partly profeſſed your iudgement and opinion on Saturday laſt: yet being not ſatisfied with that your anſwer, I will aſſay againe to demand your ſentence in the firſt queſtion; Whether the true body of Chriſt, after the words pronounced, be really in the Euchariſt, or elſe onely the figure. In which matter I ſtand here now to heare your anſwer.

The preface or proteſtation of Doctor Ridley before his diſputation.

The proteſtation of Biſhop Ridley.

I Received of you the other day right worſhipfull Maſter Prolocutor, and ye my reverend Maſters, Commiſſioners from the Quéenes Maieſty and her honourable Councell, thrée propoſitions; whereunto ye commanded me to prepare againſt this day, what I thought good to anſwer concerning the ſame.

Now whileſt I weighed with my ſelfe how great a charge of the Lords flocke was of late committed unto me, for the which I am certain I muſt once render an account to my Lord God (and that how ſoone, he knoweth) and that moreover, by the commandement of the Apoſtle Peter, I ought to be ready alway to give a reaſon of the hope that is in me with méekneſſe and reverence, unto every one that ſhall demand the ſame: beſides this, conſidering my duty to the Church of Chriſt, and to your worſhips being commiſſioners by publike authority: I determined with my ſelfe to obey your commandement, and ſo openly to declare unto you my mind touching the foreſaid propoſitions. And albeit plainly to confeſſe unto you the truth in theſe things which ye now demand of me, I have thought otherwiſe in times paſt than now I do, yet (God I call to record unto my ſoule, I lie not) I have not altered my iudgement, as now it is, either by conſtraint of any man, or lawes, either for the dread of any dangers of this world, either for any hope of commodity; but onely for the love of the truth revealed unto me by the grace of God (as I am undoubtedly perſwaded) in his holy Word, and in the reading of the ancient Fathers.

What moved D. Ridley to alter his iudgement from the Church of Rome.

Theſe things I do the rather recite at this preſent, becauſe it may happen to ſome of you hereafter, as in times paſt it hath done to me: I meane, if ye think otherwiſe of the matters propounded in theſe propoſitions than I now doe, God may open them unto you in time to come.

But howſoever it ſhall be, I will in few words doe that which I think ye all looke I ſhould doe; that is, as plainly as I can, I will declare my iudgement herein. Howbeit of this I would ye were not ignorant, that I will not indéed wittingly and willingly ſpeake in any point againſt Gods word, or diſſent in any one iot from the ſame, or from the rules of faith, or Chriſtian religion: which rules that ſame moſt ſacred word of God preſcribeth to the Church of Chriſt, whereunto I now and for ever ſubmit my ſelfe, and all my doings. And becauſe the matter I have now taken in hand is weighty, and ye all well know how unready I am to handle it accordingly, as well for lacke of time, as alſo lacke of bookes: therfore here I proteſt, that I will publikely this day require of you, that it may be lawfull for me concerning all mine anſwers, explications, and confirmations, to adde or diminiſh whatſoever ſhall ſéeme hereafter more convenient and méet for the purpoſe, through more ſound iudgement, better deliberation, and more exact triall of every particular thing. Having now, by the way of Preface and proteſtation, ſpoken theſe few words, I will come to the anſwering of the propoſitions propounded unto me, and ſo to the moſt briefe explication and confirmation of mine anſwers.

Biſhop Ridley ſubmitteth himſelfe to the Church of Chriſt.

West. Reverend Maſter Doctor, concerning the lacke of bookes, there is no cauſe why you ſhould complaine. What books ſoever you will name, you ſhall have them: and as concerning the iudgment of your anſwers to be had of your ſelfe with farther deliberation; it ſhall (I ſay) be lawfull for you untill Sunday next to adde unto them what you ſhall think good your ſelfe. My minde is, that we ſhould uſe ſhort arguments, leſt we ſhould make an infinite proceſſe of the thing.

This promiſe was not kept.

Rid. There is another thing beſides, which I would gladly obtaine at your hands. I perceive that you have Writers and Notaries here preſent. By all likelihood our diſputations ſhall be publiſhed, I beſéech you for Gods ſake let me have liberty to ſpeak my minde fréely, and without interruption, not becauſe I have determined to protract the time with a ſolemne Preface, but leſt it may appeare that ſome be not ſatisfied. God wot I am no Orator, nor have I learned Rhetorick to ſet colours on the matter.

West. Among this whole company, it ſhall be permitted you to take two for your part.

Rid. I would chuſe two, if there were any here with whom I were acquainted.

West. Here are two which Maſter Cranmer had yeſterday. Take them if it pleaſe you.

Rid. I am content with them; I truſt they are honeſt men.

Two Notaries permitted to D Ridley. Theſe two Notaries were Maſter Iuell, ſometime Biſhop of Saliſbury, and Maſter Gilbert Mounſon.

The firſt Propoſition.

In the Sacrament of the Altar, by the vertue of Gods word ſpoken of the Prieſt, the naturall body of Chriſt borne of the virgin Mary, and his naturall bloud is really preſent under the formes of bread and wine.

The firſt propoſition.

The anſwer of N. Ridley.

In matters appertaining to God we may not ſpeake according to the ſenſe of man, nor of the world: Therefore this propoſition or concluſion is framed after another maner of phraſe or kind of ſpéech than the Scripture uſeth. Againe, it is very obſcure and darke, by meanes of ſundry words of doubtfull ſignification. And being taken in the ſenſe which the Schoolemen teach, and at this time the Church of Rome doth defend, it is falſe and erroneous, and plaine contrary to the doctrine which is according to godlineſſe.

D. Ridleys anſwer to the firſt propoſition.

The propoſition put forth in dark termes.

The explication.

How farre the diverſity and newneſſe of the phraſe in all this firſt propoſition is from the phraſe of the holy Scripture, and that in every part almoſt, it is ſo plain and evident to any that is but meanly exerciſed in holy writ, that I néed not now (eſpecially in this company of learned mend) to ſpend any time therein, except the ſame ſhall be required of me hereafter.

First, there is a double ſenſe in the words (by vertue of Gods word) For it is doubtfull what word of God this is; whether it be that which is read in the Evangeliſts, or in Paul, or any other. And if it be that which is in the Evangeliſts,

The firſt doubt.

geliſts, or in S. Paul, what that is. If it be in none of them, then how it may be knowen to be Gods word, and of ſuch vertue that it ſhould be able to worke ſo great a matter.

2. Doubt in the word Prieſt,

Againe, there is a doubt of theſe words (of the Prieſt) whether no man may be called a Prieſt, but hee which hath authority to make a propitiatory ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead; and how it may be proved that this authority was committed of God to any man, but to Chriſt alone.

3. Doubt in the word ſacrificing.

It is likewiſe doubted, after what Order the ſacrificing Prieſt ſhall be, whether after the order of Aaron, or elſe after the order of Melchiſedech. For as far as I know, the holy Scripture doth allow no mo.

West. Let this be ſufficient.

Rid. If we lacke time at this preſent, there is time enough hereafter.

D. Weſton interrupteth him in his explication.

West. Theſe are but evaſions or ſtarting holes; you conſume the time in vain.

Rid. I cannot ſtart far from you, I am captive and bound.

West. Fall to it my Maſters.

Smith. That which you have ſpoken may ſuffice at this preſent.

Rid. Let me alone I pray you, for I have not much to ſay behind.

West, Goe forward.

4. Doubt in the word really.

5. Doubt in the words (formes of bread and wine.)

Rid. Moreover, there is ambiguity in this word really, whether it be taken as the Logicians terme it, tranſcendenter, that is, moſt generally: and ſo it may ſignifie any manner of thing which belongeth to the body of Chriſt, by any meanes: after which ſort we alſo grant Chriſts body to bee really in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper, (as in diſputation, if occaſion bee given ſhall be declared) or whether it bee taken to ſignifie the very ſame thing, having body, life, and ſoule, which was aſſumed and taken of the word of God, into the unity of perſon. In which ſenſe, ſith the body of Chriſt is really in heaven, becauſe of the true manner of his body, it may not be ſaid to be here in the earth. There is yet a further doubtfulneſſe in theſe words, under the forms of bread and wine, whether the formes bee there taken to ſignifie the only accidentall and outward ſhewes of bread and wine; or therewithall the ſubſtantiall natures thereof, which are to bee ſeene by their qualities, and perceived by exteriour ſenſes.

The propoſition erroneous after the ſenſe of the Romiſh Church. Tranſubſtantiation not founded in Scripture.

Now the error and falſenes of the propoſition after the ſenſe of the Romiſh Church and ſchoolmen, may hereby appeare, in that they affirme the bread to bee tranſubſtantiated and changed to the fleſh aſſumed of the word of God, and that (as they ſay) by vertue of the words, which they have deviſed by a certain number of words and cannot be found in any of the Evangeliſts, or in Paul, and ſo they gather that Chriſts body is really contained in the ſacrament of the altar. Which poſition is grounded upon the foundation of tranſubſtantiation; which foundation is monſtrous, againſt reaſon, and deſtroyeth the Analogie or proportion of the Sacraments: and therefore this propoſition alſo, which is builded upon this rotten foundation, is falſe, erroneous, and to be counted as a deteſtable hereſie of the Sacramentaries.

The analogie of the Sacrament is the ſimilitude and likeneſſe which they have with the things they repreſent.

West. We loſe time.

Rid. You ſhall have time enough.

West. Fall to reaſoning. You ſhall have ſome other day for this matter.

Rid. I have no more to ſay concerning my explication. If you will give me leave and let me alone, I will but ſpeake a word or two for my confirmation.

West. Goe to; ſay on.

The confirmation of the foreſaid anſwer.

Confirmation of his anſwer.

Fes- There ought no Doctrine to be eſtabliſhed in the Church of God, which diſſenteth from the word of God, from the rule of faith, and draweth with it many abſurdities that cannot be avoided.

ti- But this Doctrine of the firſt propoſition is ſuch.

no. Ergo, It ought not to bee eſtabliſhed and maintained in the Church of God.

Argument.

The maior or firſt part of my argument is plain, and the minor or ſecond part is proved thus.

This Doctrine maintaineth a reall, corporall, and carnall preſence of Chriſts fleſh, aſſumed and taken of the word, to be in the ſacrament of the Lords Supper, and that not by vertue and grace only, but alſo by the whole eſſence and ſubſtance of the body and fleſh of Chriſt.

The reall preſence of Chriſts body diſagreeth from the Scriptures.

But ſuch a preſence diſagreeth from Gods word, from the rule of faith, and cannot but draw with it many abſurdities.

Ergo, the ſecond part is true.

The firſt part of this argument is manifeſt, & the ſecond may yet further bee confirmed thus.

D. Weſton againe interrupteth Doctor Ridley.

West. Thus you conſume time, which might be better beſtowed on other matters. Maſter Opponent, I pray you to your arguments.

Smith. I will here reaſon with you upon tranſubſtantiation, which you ſay is contrary to the rule and Analogie of faith. The contrary whereof I prove by the Scriptures and the Doctors. But before I enter argumentation with you, I demand firſt whether in the ſixth Chapter of John there be any mention made of the Sacrament, or of the reall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament?

Rid. It is againſt reaſon that I ſhould be impeached to proſecute that which I have to ſpeak in this aſſembly, being not ſo long, but that it may be comprehended in few words.

West. Let him read on.

7. Inconveniences come of the reall preſence.

Rid. Firſt of all this preſence is contrary to many places of the holy Scripture.

Secondly, it varieth from the Articles of the faith.

Thirdly, it deſtroyeth and taketh away the inſtitution of the Lords Supper.

Fourthly, it maketh precious things common to prophane and ungodly perſons; for it caſteth that which is holy unto dogs, and pearles unto ſwine.

Fifthly, it forceth men to maintaine many monſtrous miracles without neceſſity and authority of Gods word.

Sixthly, it giveth occaſion to the heretikes which erred concerning the two natures in Chriſt, to defend their hereſies thereby.

Seventhly, it falſifieth the ſayings of the godly Fathers; it falſifieth alſo the Catholike faith of the Church, which the Apoſtles taught, the Martyrs confirmed, and the faithfull (as one of the Fathers ſaith) doe retain and keep untill this day. Wherefore the ſecond part of mine argument is true.

The probation of the antecedent or former part of this argument by the parts thereof.

The 7. inconveniences declared by parts. The firſt inconvenience.

This carnall preſence is contrary to the word of God, as appeareth, John 16. I tell you the truth. It is profitable to you that I goe away, for if I goe not away, the Comforter ſhall not come unto you. Acts 3. Whom the heavens muſt receive untill the time of reſtoring of all things which God hath ſpoken. Matth. 9. The children of the Bridegroome cannot mourne ſo long as the Bridegroome is with them: But now is the time of mourning. John 16. But I will ſee you againe, and your hearts ſhall rejoyce. John 14. I will come againe and take you to my ſelfe. Matthew 24. If they ſhall ſay unto you, Behold here is Chriſt, or there is Chriſt, believe them not : for whereſoever the dead carcaſe is, thither the Eagles will reſort.

The reall preſence againſt the Scripture.

2. The reall preſence againſt the articles of the faith.

It varieth from the Articles of the faith; He aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father. From whence (and not from any other place, ſaith S. Auguſtine) he ſhall come to iudge both the quick and the dead.

3. It deſtroyeth the inſtitution of the Lords Supper

It deſtroyeth and taketh away the inſtitution of the Lords Supper, which was commanded only to bee uſed and continued untill the Lord himſelf ſhould come. If therefore he be not really preſent in the body of his fleſh, then muſt the Supper ceaſe: For a remembrance is not of a thing preſent, but of a thing paſt and abſent. And there is a difference betweene remembrance and preſence, and (as one of the Fathers ſaith) A figure is in vaine where the thing figured is preſent.

4. It prophaneth things holy and precious, and ingendreth abſurdities.

It maketh precious things common to prophane and ungodly perſons, and conſtraineth men to confeſſe many abſurdities. For it affirmeth, that whoremongers and murtherers, yea, and (as ſome of them hold opinion) the wicked and faithleſſe Miſe, Rats, and Dogs, alſo may receive the very reall and corporall body of the Lord, wherein the fulneſſe of the ſpirit of light and grace dwelleth; contrary to the manifeſt words of Chriſt in ſixe places and ſentences of the ſixth Chapter of S. John.

Anthropophagi are a kind of brutiſh people that feed on mans fleſh.

It confirmeth alſo and maintaineth that beaſtly kind of cruelty of the Anthropophagi, that is, the devourers of mans fleſh: for it is a more cruell thing to devoure a quicke man, than to ſlay him.

Pie. He requireth time to ſpeak blaſphemies. Leave your blaſphemies.

Rid. I had little thought to have had ſuch reprochfull words at your hands.

Weſt. All is quiet. Go to the arguments maſter Doctor.

Rid. I have not many things moe to ſay.

Weſt. You utter blaſphemies with a moſt impudent face: leave off (I ſay) and get you to the argument.

5. It maintaineth monſtrous miracles without neceſſity.

Rid. It forceth men to maintaine many monſtrous miracles, without all neceſſity and authority of Gods word. For at the comming of this preſence of the body and fleſh of Chriſt, they thruſt away the ſubſtance of bread, and affirme that the accidents remaine without any ſubiect, and in the ſtead thereof they place Chriſts body without his qualities and the true manner of a body. And if the Sacrament be reſerved ſo long untill it mould, and wormes breed, ſome ſay that the ſubſtance of bread miraculouſly returneth againe, and ſome deny it. Otherſome affirme, that the reall body of Chriſt goeth downe into the ſtomacke of the receivers, and doth there abide ſo long only as they ſhal continue to be good: but another ſort hold, that the body of Chriſt is carried into heaven, ſo ſoon as the forms of bread be bruiſed with the teeth. O works of miracles! Truly, and moſt truly I ſee that fulfilled in theſe men, whereof S. Paul propheſied, 2 Theſſ. 2. Becauſe they have not received the love of the truth, that they might be ſaved, God ſhall ſend them ſtrong deluſions, that they ſhould believe lies, and be all damned which have not believed the truth. This groſſe preſence hath brought forth that fond phantaſie of concomitance, whereby is broken at this day and abrogated the commandement of the Lord for the diſtributing of the Lords cup to the Laity.

All the reſt that followeth was not read, becauſe the Prolocutor made poſt haſt to the arguments.

By this device of concomitance, the Papiſts imagine as much to be received under one kinde as both.

6. It giveth occaſion to heretikes.

It giveth occaſion to heretikes to maintaine and defend their errours; as to Marcion, which ſaid that Chriſt had but a phantaſticall body; and to Eutiches, which wickedly confounded the two natures in Chriſt.

7. It falſifieth the ſayings of the old doctors

Finally, it falſifieth the ſayings of the godly Fathers and the Catholike faith of the Church, which Vigilius a martyr and grave writer ſaith, was taught of the Apoſtles, confirmed with the blood of Martyrs, and was continually maintained by the faithfull, untill his time. By the ſayings of the Fathers, I meane of Iuſtine, Irene, Tertullian, Origen, Euſebius, Emiſene, Athanaſius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Hierome, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, Vigilius, Fulgentius, Bertram, and others moſt ancient Fathers. All thoſe places, as I am ſure I have read making for my purpoſe, ſo am I well aſſured that I could ſhew the ſame, if I might have the uſe of mine owne bookes, which I will take to me to doe, even upon the perill of my life, and loſſe of all that I may loſe in this world.

The true preſence of Chriſts body in the Supper not denyed.

But now (my brethren) think not, becauſe I diſallow that preſence which the firſt propoſition maintaineth (as a preſence which I take to bee forged, phantaſticall, and beſides the authority of Gods word, perniciouſly brought into the Church by the Romaniſts) that I therefore goe about to take away the true preſence of Chriſts body in his Supper rightly and duely miniſtred, which is grounded upon the word of God, and made more plaine by the commentaries of the faithfull Fathers. They that thinke ſo of me, the Lord knoweth how farre they are deceived. And to make the ſame evident unto you, I will in few words declare what true preſence of Chriſts body in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper I hold and affirme, with the word of God and the ancient Fathers.

The faith and confeſſion of D Ridley in affirming the true preſence in the ſacrament.

I ſay and confeſſe with the Evangeliſt Luke, and with the Apoſtle Paul, that the bread on the which thanks are given, is the body of Chriſt in the remembrance of him and of his death, to be ſet forth perpetually of the faithfull untill his comming.

The grace of life and immortality given with the ſacrament to the faithfull.

I ſay and confeſſe the bread which we breake to be the communion and pertaking of Chriſts body, with the ancient and the faithful Fathers.

I ſay and believe that there is not only a ſignification of Chriſts body ſet forth by the Sacrament, but alſo that therwith is given to the godly and faithfull the grace of Chriſts body, that is, the food of life and immortality. And this I hold with Cyprian.

Life eaten. Auguſt.

The Lord felt in grace. Emiſene.

Celeſtiall food received. Athanaſius.

The propertie of naturall communion received. Hilar.

The vertue of Chriſts fleſh. Cyril.

I ſay alſo with Saint Auguſtine, that we eate life, and we drinke life; with Emiſene, that wee feele the Lord to be preſent in grace; with Athanaſius, that we receive Celeſtiall food, which commeth from above; the propertie of naturall communion, with Hilarius; the nature of fleſh and benediction which giveth life in bread and wine, with Cyril; and with the ſame Cyril, the vertue of the very fleſh of Chriſt, life and grace of his body, the property of the only begotten, that is to ſay, life, as hee himſelfe in plaine words expoundeth it.

The myſticall Advent of Chriſt. Baſil.

The ſacrament of his very fleſh. Ambroſe.

The body by grace. Epiphan.

Spirituall fleſh, but not that which was crucified. Hierome.

Grace flowing into a ſacrifice. Chryſoſt.

Grace and inviſible verity. Auguſt.

The power of Gods word feeding the ſoule. Bertram.

I confeſſe alſo with Baſil, that we receive the myſticall Advent and comming of Chriſt, grace, and the vertue of his very nature; the Sacrament of his very fleſh, with Ambroſe; the body by grace, with Epiphanius; ſpirituall fleſh, but not that which was crucified, with Hierome; Grace flowing into a ſacrifice, and the grace of the ſpirit, with Chryſoſtome; grace and inviſible verity, grace and ſociety of the members of Chriſts body, with Auguſtine.

Finally, with Bertram (which was the laſt of all theſe) I confeſſe that Chriſts body is in the Sacrament

The Proteſtants falſly belied to teach nothing but a figure in the Sacrament.

Sacrament in this reſpect; namely (as he writeth) becauſe there is in it the ſpirit of Chriſt, that is the power of the word of God, which not only feedeth the ſoule, but alſo cleanſeth it. Out of theſe I ſuppoſe it may clearely appeare unto all men, how far we are from that opinion, whereof ſome go about falſly to ſlander us to the world ſaying, we teach that the godly and the faithfull ſhould receive nothing elſe at the Lords table, but a figure of the body of Chriſt.

The ſecond propoſition.

After the conſecration there remaineth no ſubſtance of bread and wine, neither any other ſubſtance, than the ſubſtance of God and man.

The anſwer.

Anſwer to the ſecond propoſition.

The ſecond propoſition of tranſubſtantiation denied.

The ſecond concluſion is manifeſtly falſe, directly againſt the word of God, the nature of the Sacrament, and the moſt evident teſtimonies of the godly Fathers; and it is the rotten foundation of the other two concluſions propounded by you, both of the firſt, and alſo of the third. I will not therefore now tarry upon any further explication of this anſwer, being contented with that which is already added afore to the anſwer of the firſt propoſition.

The firſt argument for the confirmation of this anſwer.

Confirmation of his anſwer.

It is very plaine by the word of God, that Chriſt did give bread unto his Diſciples, and called it his body.

But the ſubſtance of bread is another manner of ſubſtance, than is the ſubſtance of Chriſts body God and man:

Therefore the concluſion is falſe.

The ſecond part of mine argument is plaine, and the firſt is proved thus:

The ſecond argument.

Da- That which Chriſt did take, on the which he gave thankes, and the which he brake, he gave to his Diſciples, and called it his body:

ti- But he took bread, gave thankes on bread, and brake bread:

ſi. Ergo, the firſt part is true. And it is confirmed with the authorities of the Fathers, Irene, Tertullian, Origene, Cyprian, Epiphanius, Hierome, Auguſtine, Theodoret, Cyril, Rabanus, and Bede. Whoſe places I will take upon me to ſhew moſt manifeſt in this behalfe, if I may be ſuffered to have my bookes, as my requeſt is.

Bread is the body of Chriſt:
Ergo, It is bread.

"The rule of Logick is this: A propoſitione de tertio adjacente, ad eam quæ eſt de ſecundo, cum verbo recto ſignificante exiſtentiam, valet conſequentia affirmativè, &c.

" A tertio adjacente ad ſecundum adjacens cum verbi ſubſtantivi pura copula.

The third argument.

The major proved.

Ba- As the bread of the Lords table is Chriſts naturall body, ſo is his myſticall body.

ro- But it is not Chriſts myſticall body by tranſubſtantiation.

co. Ergo, it is not his naturall body by tranſubſtantiation.

The ſecond part of my argument is plaine, and the firſt is proved thus: As Chriſt who is the verity, ſpake of the bread, This is my body which ſhall be betrayed for you, ſpeaking there of his naturall body: even ſo Paul, moved with the ſame ſpirit of truth, ſaid, Wee though wee bee many, yet are we all one bread, and one body, which be partakers of one bread.

1 Cor. 10.

The fourth argument.

The argument holdeth A deſtructione antecedentis, ad deſtructionem conſequentis.

We may no more believe bread to be tranſubſtantiate into the body of Chriſt than the wine into his blood.

But the wine is not tranſubſtantiate into his blood:

Ergo, neither is that bread therefore tranſubſtantiate into his body.

¶ The firſt part of this argument is manifeſt, and the ſecond part is proved out of the authority of Gods word in Matthew and Marke, I will not drinke of the fruit of the Vine, &c. Now the fruit the Vine was Wine, which Chriſt dranke and gave to his Diſciples to drink. With this ſentence agreeth plainly the place of Chryſoſtome on the 20. Chapt. of Mat. As Cyprian doth alſo, affirming that there is no blood, if wine be not in the cup.

Mat. 26.
Mark 14.

Chryſoſtome.
Cyprian.

The fifth argument.

This argument holdeth after the ſame rule as did the other before.

Ba- The words of Chriſt ſpoken upon the cup and upon the bread, have like effect and working.

ro- But the words ſpoken upon the cup have not vertue to tranſubſtantiate:

co. Ergo, it followeth that the words ſpoken upon the bread have no ſuch vertue.

The ſecond part of the argument is prooved; becauſe they would then tranſubſtantiate the cup, or that which is in the cup into the new Teſtament: but neither of theſe things can be done, and very abſurd it is to confeſſe the ſame.

The ſixth argument

Da- The circumſtances of the Scripture, the analogie and proportion of the Sacraments, and the teſtimony of the faithfull Fathers ought to rule us in taking the meaning of the holy Scripture touching the Sacrament.

ti- But the words of the Lords Supper, the circumſtances of the Scripture, the analogie of the Sacraments, and the ſaying of the Fathers, doe moſt effectually and plainly prove a figurative ſpeech in the words of the Lords Supper.

ſi. Ergo, a figurative ſenſe and meaning is ſpecially to be received in theſe words, This is my body.

The circumſtances and words of Scripture.

The circumſtances of the Scripture, Do this in the remembrance of me. As oft as ye ſhall eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup, yee ſhall ſhew forth the Lords death. Let a man prove himſelfe, and ſo eat of this bread, and drink of this cup. They came together to break bread; and they continued in breaking of bread. The bread which we break, &c. For we being many, are all one bread and one body, &c.

The analogie of the Sacraments.

The analogie of the Sacraments is neceſſary: for if the Sacraments had not ſome ſimilitude or likeneſſe of the things whereof they bee Sacraments, they could in no wiſe be Sacraments. And this ſimilitude in the Sacrament of the Lords Supper is taken three manner of wayes.

Analogie or ſimilitude in the Sacrament, three manner of wayes.

1 The firſt conſiſteth in nouriſhing, as yee ſhall reade in Rabana, Cyprian, Auguſtine, Irene, and moſt plainly in Iſidore out of Bertram.

2 The ſecond in the uniting and ioyning of many into one, as Cyprian teacheth.

3 The third is a ſimilitude of unlike things: where, like as the bread is turned into one body; ſo wee, by the right uſe of this Sacrament, are turned through faith into the body of Chriſt.

The ſayings of the Fathers for the figurative ſpeech.

The ſayings of the Fathers declare it to be a figurative ſpeech, as it appeareth in Origen, Tertullian, Chryſoſtome in opere imperfecto, Auguſtine, Ambroſe, Baſil, Gregory, Nazianzene, Hilary, and moſt plainly of all in Bertram. Moreover, the ſayings and places of all the Fathers, whoſe names I have before recited againſt the aſſertion of the firſt propoſition, doe quite overthrow tranſubſtantiation. But of all other moſt evidently and plainly, Irene, Origen, Cyprian, Chryſoſtome to Ceſarius the Monke, Auguſtine againſt Adamantus, Gelaſius, Cyril, Epiphanius, Chryſoſtome againe on the 20. of Matthew, Rabane, Damaſcene and Bertram.

Commendation of Bertram

Here right worſhipfull Maſter Prolocutor, and yee the reſt of the Commiſſioners, it may pleaſe you to underſtand, that I doe not leane to theſe things only, which I have written in my former anſwers and confirmations, but that I have alſo for the proofe of that I have ſpoken, whatſoever Bertram a man learned, of ſound and upright iudgement, and ever counted a Catholike for theſe ſeven hundred yeeres untill this our age, hath written. His Treatiſe whoſoever ſhall read and weigh, conſidering the time of the Writer, his learning, godlineſſe of life, the allegations of the ancient Fathers, and his manifold and moſt grounded arguments, I cannot (doubtleſſe) but much marvell, if he have any feare of God at all, how he can with good conſcience ſpeake againſt him in this matter of the Sacrament. This Bertram was the firſt that pulled me by the eare, and that firſt brought mee from the common errour of the Romiſh Church, and cauſed me to ſearch more diligently and exactly both the Scriptures and the Writings of the old Eccleſiaſticall Fathers in this matter. And this I proteſt before the face of God, who knoweth I lye not in the things I now ſpeake.

D. Ridley firſt brought to the knowledge of the ſacrament by Bertram.

The third propoſition.

The third propoſition touching propitiatory maſſe.

In the Maſſe is the lively ſacrifice of the Church, propitiable and available for the ſins as well of the quick as of the dead.

The anſwer to this propoſition.

Anſwers to the third propoſition.

I anſwer to this third propoſition as I did to the firſt. And moreover I ſay, that being taken in ſuch ſenſe as the words ſeeme to import, it is not only erroneous, but withall ſo much to derogation and defacing of the death and paſſion of Chriſt, that I iudge it may and ought moſt worthily to be counted wicked and blaſphemous againſt the moſt precious blood of our Saviour Chriſt.

The explication.

Explication of the ſame.

Doubts in the third propoſition.

In the primitive Church the newly inſtructed in the faith and the unworthy were put away from the Communion.

Concerning the Romiſh Maſſe which is uſed at this day, or the lively ſacrifice thereof, propitiatory and available for the ſins of the quick and the dead, the holy Scripture hath not ſo much as one ſyllable.

There is ambiguity alſo in the name of Maſſe: what it ſignifieth, and whether at this day there be any ſuch indeed as the ancient Fathers uſed; ſeeing that now there be neither Catechiſts nor Pœnitentes to be ſent away.

Againe, touching theſe words (The lively ſacrifice of the Church.) There is doubt whether they are to be underſtood figuratively and ſacramentally, for the ſacrament of the lively ſacrifice (after which ſort wee deny it not to be in the Lords Supper) or properly and without any figure: of the which manner there was but one only ſacrifice, and that once offered, namely upon the altar of the Croſſe.

The third doubt.

Moreover, in theſe words (as well as) it may be doubted whether they be ſpoken in mockage, as men are wont to ſay in ſport, of a fooliſh and ignorant perſon, that he is apt as well in conditions as in knowledge; being apt indeed in neither of them both.

The fourth doubt.

There is alſo a doubt in the word (Propitiable) whether it ſignifie here that which taketh away ſin, or that which may bee made available for the taking away of ſin; that is to ſay, whether it is to bee taken in the active or in the paſſive ſignification.

The falſneſſe of the third propoſition reproved.

Now the falſeneſſe of the propoſition, after the meaning of the Schoolemen and the Romiſh Church, and impiety in that ſenſe which the words ſeeme to import, is this: that they, leaning to the foundation and their fond tranſubſtantiation, would make the quick and lively body of Chriſts fleſh (united and knit to the divinity) to lye hid under the accidents, and outward ſhewes of bread and wine. Which is very falſe, as I have ſaid afore: and they, building upon this foundation, doe hold that the ſame body is offered unto God by the Prieſt in his daily maſſings to put away the ſinnes of the quick and the dead, whereas by the Apoſtle to the Hebrewes it is evident, that there is but one oblation, and one true and lively ſacrifice of the Church offered upon the altar of the Croſſe, which was, is, and ſhall be for ever the propitiation for the ſins of the whole world: and where there is remiſſion of the ſame, there is (ſaith the Apoſtle) no more offering for ſin.

But one Sacrifice in the Scripture.

Arguments confirming his Anſwer,

The firſt argument. Heb. 5.

Ce- No ſacrifice ought to be done, but where the Prieſt is meet to offer the ſame.
la- All other Prieſts bee unmeet to offer ſacrifice propitiatory for ſin, ſave only Chriſt.
rent. Ergo, no other Prieſts ought to ſacrifice for ſin, but Chriſt alone.

The ſecond part of my argument is thus prooved,

Argument.

Fe- No honour in Gods Church ought to be taken, whereunto a man is not called, as Aaron.
ri- It is a great honour in Gods Church to ſacrifice for ſinne:
ſon. Ergo, No man ought to ſacrifice for ſin, but only they which are called.

But only Chriſt is called to that honour.

Heb. 7.

Ergo, No other Prieſt but Chriſt ought to ſacrifice for ſin. That no man is called to this degree of honour but Chriſt alone, it is evident. For there are but two only orders of Prieſthood allowed in the word of God: namely, the order of Aaron, and the order of Melchiſedech. But now the order of Aaron is come to an end, by reaſon that it was unprofitable, and weak, and of the order of Melchiſedech there is but one prieſt alone, even Chriſt the Lord, which hath a Prieſthood that cannot paſſe to any other,

An Argument.

Heb. 9. Ab una cauſa veritatis ad præpoſitionem habentem illam cauſam, valet conſequentis

Ba- That thing is in vain, and to no effect, where no neceſſity is wherefore it is done.
ro- To offer up any more ſacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead there is no neceſſity, for Chriſt our Saviour did that fully and perfectly once for all.
co. Ergo, to doe the ſame in the Maſſe it is in vaine.

Another Argument.

Fe- After that eternall redemption is found and obtained, there needeth no more daily offering for the ſame.
ri- But Chriſt comming an high Biſhop, &c, found and obtained for us eternall redemption.

o. Ergo,

Anno 1554.

o. Ergo, there needeth now no more daily oblation for the ſins of the quick and the dead.

Another argument.

Ca- All remiſſion of ſins commeth only by ſhedding of blood.
mes- In the Maſſe there is no ſhedding of blood.
tres. Ergo, in the maſſe there is no remiſſion of ſins: and ſo it followeth alſo that there is no propitiatory ſacrifice.

Another Argument.

In the Maſſe the paſſion of Chriſt is not in verity, but in a myſterie repreſenting the ſame: yea, even there where the Lords Supper is duly miniſtred.

Heb. 9.

But where Chriſt ſuffereth not, there is hee not offered in verity: for the Apoſtle ſaith, Not that he might offer up himſelf oftentimes (for then muſt he have ſuffered oftentimes ſith the beginning of the world) now where Chriſt is not offered, there is no propitiatory ſacrifice:

Ergo, in the Maſſe there is no propitiatory ſacrifice: For Chriſt appeared once in the later end of the world, to put ſin to flight by the offering up of himſelfe. And as it is appointed to all men that they ſhall once dye, and then commeth the judgement: even ſo Chriſt was once offered to take away the ſins of many. And unto them that look for him ſhall he appeare againe without ſin unto ſalvation.

Another Argument.

Da- Where there is any ſacrifice that can make the commers thereunto perfect, there ought men to ceaſe from offering any moe expiatory and propitiatory ſacrifices.
ri- But in the new Teſtament there is one only ſacrifice now already long ſince offered, which is able to make the commers thereto perfect for ever.
i. Ergo, in the new Teſtament they ought to ceaſe from offering any moe propitiatory ſacrifices.

Sentences of the Scripture tending to the ſame end and purpoſe, out of which alſo may bee gathered other manifeſt arguments for more confirmation thereof.

Heb. 10.

BY the which will (ſaith the Apoſtle) wee are ſanctified, by the offering up of the body of Ieſus Chriſt once for all. And in the ſame place, But this man, after that hee had offered one ſacrifice for ſinne, ſitteth for ever at the right hand of God, &c. For with one offering hath hee made perfect for ever them that are ſanctified, and by himſelfe hath he purged our ſins. I beſeech you to marke theſe words (by himſelfe) the which well weighed will without doubt ceaſe all controverſie.

(By himſelfe.)

The Apoſtle plainly denieth any other ſacrifice to remaine for him that treadeth under his feet the blood of the Teſtament, by the which he was made holy. Chriſt will not bee crucified againe, hee will not his death to be had in deriſion.

Coloſſ. 1.

Hee hath reconciled us in the body of his fleſh. Marke I beſeech you, he ſaith not, in the myſtery of his body; but in the body of his fleſh.

1 Iohn 2.

If any man ſin, we have an Advocate with the Father, Ieſus Chriſt the righteous, and he is the propitiation for our ſins, not for ours only, but for the ſins of the whole world.

I know that all theſe places of the Scripture are avoided by two manner of ſubtill ſhifts: the one is by the diſtinction of the bloody and unbloodie ſacrifice, as though our unbloody ſacrifice of the Church were any other than the ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving, than a commemoration, a ſhewing forth, and a ſacramentall repreſentation of that one only bloody ſacrifice, offered up once for all.

The Popiſh diſtinction betweene bloody and unbloody ſacrifice.

The other is by depraving and wreſting the ſayings of the ancient Fathers unto ſuch a ſtrange kinde of ſenſe, as the Fathers themſelves indeed never meant. For what the meaning of the Fathers was, it is evident by that which Saint Auguſtine writeth in his Epiſtle to Boniface, and in the 83. chapter of his ninth booke againſt Fauſtus the Manichee, beſides many other places; likewiſe by Euſebius, Emiſene, Cyprian, Chryſoſtome, Fulgentius, Bertram, and others, which do wholly concord and agree together in this unity in the Lord, that the redemption, once made in verity for the ſalvation of man, continueth in full effect for ever, and worketh without ceaſing unto the end of the world, that the ſacrifice once offered cannot be conſumed; that the Lords death and paſſion is as effectuall, the vertue of that blood, once ſhed, as freſh at this day for the waſhing away of ſinnes, as it was even the ſame day that it flowed out of the bleſſed ſide of our Saviour: and finally, that the whole ſubſtance of our ſacrifice, which is frequented of the Church in the Lords Supper, conſiſteth in prayers, praiſe, and giving of thankes, and in remembring and ſhewing forth of that ſacrifice once offered upon the altar of the Croſſe; that the ſame might continually be had in reverence by myſtery, which one only, and no more, was offered for the price of our redemption.

The Papiſts maintain their ſacrifice propitiatory, by the old Doctors falſly wreſted.

Doctors making againſt the propitiatory ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The whole ſubſtance of the ſacrifice wherein it conſiſteth.

These are the things (right worſhipfull Maſter Prolocutor, and ye the reſt of the Commiſſioners) which I could preſently prepare to the anſwering of your three foreſaid propoſitions, being deſtitute of all helpe in this ſhortneſſe of time, ſudden warning, and want of bookes. Wherefore I appeale to my firſt proteſtation, moſt humbly deſiring the helpe of the ſame (as much as may be) to be granted unto me. And becauſe yee have lately given moſt uniuſt and cruell ſentence againſt me, I doe here appeale (ſo farre forth as I may) to a more indifferent and iuſt cenſure and iudgement of ſome other ſuperiour, competent, and lawfull Iudge, and that according to the approved ſtate of the Church of England. Howbeit, I confeſſe that I am ignorant what that is at this preſent, through the trouble and alteration of the ſtate of the Realme. But if this appeale may not bee granted to mee upon earth, then doe I flye (even as to my onely refuge and alone haven of health) to the ſentence of the eternall Iudge, that is of the almighty God, to whoſe moſt mercifull iuſtice towards us, and moſt iuſt mercifulneſſe, I do wholly commit my ſelfe and all my cauſe, nothing at all deſpairing of the defence of mine Advocate and alone Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, to whom, with the everlaſting Father, and the holy Spirit, the ſanctifier of us all, be now and for ever all honor and glory, Amen.

B. Ridley appealeth from the uniuſt ſentence of his adverſaries, to ſome other ſuperiour competent Iudge.

B. Ridley for lack of equall indifferency appealeth to almighty God.

Albeit this learned Biſhop was not ſuffered to read all that is above prefixed before the Diſputations, yet becauſe he had it then ready, and offered it up to the Prolocutor after the diſputations and ſentence pronounced; I thought here the place not unmeet to annexe the ſame together with the reſt. Now let us heare the arguments and anſwers betweene Doctor Smith and him.

Doctor Smith beginneth to oppoſe.

Smith. You have occaſioned me to goe otherwiſe to worke with you, than I had thought to have done. Me ſeemed you did in your ſuppoſition abuſe the teſtimonies of Scripture concerning the Aſcenſion of Chriſt, to take away his preſence in the Sacrament, as though this were a ſtrong argument to inforce your matter withall.

Smiths argument.

Chriſt did aſcend unto heaven:
Ergo, he is not in the Sacrament.

Now therefore I will goe about to diſprove this reaſon of yours.

Chriſts aſcenſion is no let to his reall preſence in the Sacrament.
Ergo, you are deceived, whereas you doe ground your ſelfe upon thoſe places.

Anſwer.

Rid. You import as though I had made a ſtrong Argument by Chriſts going up into heaven. But howſoever mine Argument is made, you collect it not rightly. For it doth not only ſtay upon his aſcenſion, but both upon his aſcenſion and his " abiding there alſo.

" The verity of M. Ridleyes anſwer touching the reall being of Chriſt in earth to bee reſtrained by his aſcending and abiding in heaven, ſtandeth upon the neceſſity, which we call (Neceſſitas conſequentiæ) by this demonſtration.

Da- Every naturall body muſt neceſſarily bee contained in his peculiar and certaine place.
ri- Chriſts body is a naturall body:
i. Ergo, Chriſts body not to be in one certaine place at once contained, it is impoſſible, according to the rule Omnes propoſitiones de impoſſibili & de neceſſe æquipollent dicto diſſimiliter ſe habenti, & modo ſimiliter.

Smith. Chriſts going up to heaven, and his abiding there, hinder not his reall preſence in the ſacrament.
Ergo, you are deceived.

Rid. Of Chriſts reall preſence there may bee a double underſtanding: if you take the reall preſence of Chriſt according to the reall and corporall ſubſtance which he took of the Virgin, that preſence being in heaven cannot bee on the earth alſo. But if you mean a reall preſence, ſecundum rem aliquam quæ ad corpus Chriſti pertinet, i. according to ſome thing that appertaineth to Chriſts body, certes the Aſcenſion and abiding in heaven are no let at all to that preſence. Wherefore Chriſts body after that ſort is here preſent to us in the Lords Supper; by grace I ſay, as Epiphanius ſpeaketh it.

West. I will cut off from henceforth all equivocation and doubt. For whenſoever we ſpeake of Chriſts body, we meane that which he took of the Virgin.

Rid. Chriſts aſcenſion and abiding in heaven cannot ſtand with his preſence.

Argument.

Smith. Chriſt appeared corporally and really on the earth, for all his aſcenſion and continuall abode in heaven unto the day of Doome.
Ergo, his aſcenſion and abiding in heaven, is no let to his reall preſence in the ſacrament.

Anſwer.

Rid. Maſter Doctor, this argument is nothing worth. I doe not ſo ſtraightly tye Chriſt up in heaven, that he may not come into the earth at his pleaſure. For when he will, hee may come down from heaven, and be on the earth, as it liketh himſelfe. Howbeit I do affirm, that it is not poſſible for him to bee both in heaven and earth at one time.

Smith. Mark I pray you my maſters that be here diligently, what he anſwereth. Firſt he ſaith, that the ſitting of Chriſt at the right hand of his Father, is a let to the reall preſence of his body in the ſacrament, and then afterward hee flieth from it againe, Rid. I would not have you thinke that I do imagine or dreame upon any ſuch manner of ſitting, as theſe men here ſit in the Schoole.

Smith. Ergo, it is lawfull for Chriſt then to be here preſent on the earth, when he will himſelfe.

Rid. Yea, when he will, it is lawfull indeed.

Smith. Ergo, he aſcending into heaven doth not reſtraine his reall preſence in the ſacrament.

Rid. I do not gainſay, but that it is lawfull for him to appeare on the earth when he will; but prove you that he will.

Chriſts abode in heaven is no let for him to appeare on earth when he will: but whether he will, that muſt be proved. Againe, it is one thing to appeare on earth, another ſtill in the Sacrament, and to be preſent the ſame time with his body in heaven, when he is bodily preſent in earth.

Smith. Then your anſwer dependeth upon the will of Chriſt, I perceive: therefore I will ioyn again with you in that ſhort argument.

Chriſt, albeit he doth alway abide in heaven after his aſcenſion, was ſeen really and corporally on the earth.

Ergo, notwithſtanding his aſcenſion and continuall ſitting at the right hand of his Father, hee may bee really and corporally in the ſacrament.

Rid. If the Notaries ſhould ſo record your argument, as you have framed it, you peradventure would be aſhamed of it hereafter.

Smith. Chriſt after his aſcenſion was ſeen really and corporally upon the earth.

Ergo, notwithſtanding his aſcenſion and abiding with his Father, he may be corporally in the Sacrament.

Rid. I grant the antecedent, but I deny the conſequence.

Smith. Do you grant the antecedent?

Rid. Yea, I grant the antecedent. I am content to let you have ſo much. Becauſe I know that there be certain ancient Fathers of that opinion. I am well content to let you uſe that propoſition as true. And I will frame the argument for you.

Hee was ſeene on earth after his aſcenſion,
Ergo, &c.

Smith. Nay, nay, I will frame it my ſelfe.

Chriſt after his aſcenſion was ſeen really and corporally on earth, albeit he do abide in heaven continually:

Ergo, notwithſtanding his aſcenſion and continuall abiding at the right hand of the Father, he may be really and corporally on the earth.

Chriſts continually ſitting in heaven expounded.

Rid. Let us firſt agree about the continuall ſitting at the right hand of the Father.

Smith. Doth he ſo ſit at the right hand of his Father, that he doth never forſake the ſame?

Rid. Nay, I doe not bind Chriſt in heaven ſo ſtraightly. I ſee you goe about to beguile mee with your equivocations. Such equivocations are to be diſtinguiſhed. If you meane by his ſitting in heaven, to raigne with his Father, he may be both in heaven and alſo in earth. But if ye underſtand his ſitting to be after a corporall manner of ſitting, ſo is hee alwaies permanent in heaven. For Chriſt to bee corporall here on earth, when corporally he is reſident in heaven, is cleane contrary to the holy Scriptures, as Auguſtine ſaith; Corpus Chriſti eſt in cœlo, ſed veritas ejus ubique diffuſa eſt, i. The body of Chriſt is in heaven, but his truth is diſperſed in every place.

Chriſt cannot be both corporally here, and corporally alſo in heaven at one time.

Now if continually he abide in heaven after the manner of his corporall preſence, then his perpetuall abiding there ſtoppeth or letteth that the ſame corporall preſence of him cannot be in the Sacrament.

Smith. Acts 3. We read that Chriſt ſhall ſit perpetually at the right hand of God, unto the conſumption of the world.

West. I perceive you are come here to this iſſue, whether the body of Chriſt may be together both in earth and in heaven. I will tell you that Chriſt in very deed is both in earth and in heaven together and at one time, both one and the ſame naturall Chriſt after the verity and ſubſtance of his very body: Ergo, &c.

Rid. I deny the antecedent.

Chryſ.hom. 17. ad Hebræos.

Weſt. I prove it by two witneſſes. Firſt, by Chryſoſtome, hom.17. ad Hebræos. Nonnè per ſingulos dies offerimus? Offerimus quidem, ſed recordationem facientes mortis ejus. Et una eſt hæc hoſtia, non multæ. Et quomodo una, & non multæ, quæ ſemel oblata eſt in ſancto ſanctorum? Hoc autem ſacrificium exemplar eſt illius; id ipſum ſemper offerimus, nec nunc quidem alium agnum, craſtina alium, ſed ſemper eundem ipſum. Proinde unum eſt hoc ſacrificium; alioqui hac ratione, quoniam in multis locis offertur, multi Chriſti ſunt? Nequaquam, ſed unus ubique eſt Chriſtus; & hic plenus exiſtens, & illic plenus, unum corpus, i. Do we not offer every day? We doe ſo indeed; but doing it for the remembrance of his death. And this offering is one, and not many. And how is it one, and not many which was offered in the holy place? This ſacrifice is a pattern of that: The ſelf ſame we alwaies offer; Not now as offering one lambe to day, and another to morrow, but alwaies one and the ſame lamb. Wherefore here is but one ſacrifice; for elſe by this meanes, ſeeing there be many ſacrifices in many places, be there many Chriſts? not ſo, but one Chriſt in all places, both perfect here and perfect there, one only body. Now thus I argue.

Argument.

We offer one thing at all times.

There is one Chriſt in all places, both here complete and there complete.

Ergo, by Chryſoſtome there is one body both in heaven and earth.

Anſwer.

Rid. I remember the place well. Theſe things make nothing againſt me.

Weſt. One Chriſt is in all places, here full and there full.

One Chriſt but not one body, nor after one bodily ſubſtance in all places.

Rid. One Chriſt is in all places; but not one body in all places.

Weſt. One body ſaith Chryſoſtome,

Anſwer to Chryſoſtome.

Rid. But not after the manner of bodily ſubſtance he is in all places, nor by circumſcription of place. For (hic) and (illic) here and there, in Chryſoſtome do aſſigne no place, as Auguſtine ſaith; Surſum eſt Dominus, ſed ubique eſt veritas Domini, i. The Lord is above, but the truth of the Lord is in all places.

Weſt. You cannot ſo eſcape. He ſaith not the verity of Chriſt is one; but one Chriſt is in all places, both here and there.

Rid. One ſacrifice is in all places, becauſe of the unity of him whom the ſacrifice doth ſignifie: not that the ſacrifices bee all one and the ſame.

Weſt. Ergo, by your ſaying it is not Chriſt, but the ſacrifice of Chriſt.

But Chryſoſtome ſaith, one body and one Chriſt is there, and not one ſacrifice.

One Chriſt & one ſacrifice in all places, and how: to wit, Chriſt by verity, the ſacrifice by ſignification.

Rid. I ſay, that both Chriſt and the ſacrifice of Chriſt is there: Chriſt by ſpirit, grace, and verity; the ſacrifice by ſignification.

„Ex libro Ridlei ipſius manu deſcripto.

Sacrifice why it is called one.

"Thus I grant with Chryſoſtome, that there is one hoſte or ſacrifice, and not many: and this our hoſte is called one, by reaſon of the unity of that one, which one only all our hoſts doe repreſent. That only hoſt was never other, but that which was once offered on the altar of the croſſe, of which hoſt all our hoſts are but ſacramentall examples.

How one Chriſt is offered in many places at once.

And where you alledge out of Chryſoſtome, that Chriſt is offered in many places at once, both here full Chriſt, and there full Chriſt: I grant it to be true, that is, that Chriſt is offered in many places at once, in a myſterie and ſacramentally, and that he is full Chriſt in all thoſe places, but not after the corporall ſubſtance of our fleſh which he tooke, but after the benediction which giveth life; and he is given to the godly receivers in bread and wine as Cyril ſpeaketh, Concerning the oblation of Chriſt, whereof Chryſoſtom here ſpeaketh, hee himſelfe doth cleerly ſhew what he meaneth thereby, in ſaying by the way of correction, We alwaies do the ſelfe ſame; Howbeit by the recordation or remembrance of his ſacrifice.

Weſt. The ſecond witneſſe is Bernard in a Sermon that hee made of the Supper of the Lord, who ſaith; Bernard.

Vnde hoc nobis piiſſime Ieſu, ut nos vermiculi, reptantes ſuper faciem terræ, nos inquam qui pulvis & cinis ſumus, te præſentem habere mereamur præ manibus, præ oculis, qui totus & integer ſedes ad dextram patris, qui etiam unjus horæ momento, ab ortu ſolis uſque ad occaſum, ab Aquilone uſque ad Auſtrũ præſtò es, unus in multis, idem in diverſis locis? that is to ſay, How commeth this to us, moſt gentle Jeſus, that we ſilly wormes creeping on the face of the earth, that we I ſay, which are but duſt and aſhes, may deſerve to have thee preſent in our hands, and before our eyes, who both together full and whole doſt ſit at the right hand of the Father, and who alſo in the moment of one houre, from the riſing of the Sun to the going down of the ſame, art preſent one and the ſelfe ſame in many and divers places?

The time of Bernard conſidered.

Rid. Theſe words of Bernard make for you nothing at all. But I know that Bernard was in ſuch a time, that in this matter he may worthily be ſuſpected. He hath many good and fruitfull ſayings; as alſo in that ſame foreſaid place by you alledged. But yet he followed in ſuch an age, when as the doctrine of the holy Supper was ſore perverted. Notwithſtanding yet I will ſo expound him, rather than reject him, that he ſhall make nothing for you at all. He ſaith, that we have Chriſt in a myſtery, in a ſacrament, under a veile or cover, but hereafter ſhall have him without veile or cover. In the meane time, here now he ſaith, that the verity of Chriſt is every where. The verity of Chriſt is both here and there, and in all places.

Bernard rather expounded than rejected.

Weſt. What do you call verity? He ſaith not the verity of Chriſt, but the verity of the body of Chriſt.

What is the verity of the body of Chriſt.

Rid. The verity of the body of Chriſt is the true faith of the body of Chriſt: after that veritie he is with them which truly believe upon him.

Weſt. Chriſt is one and the ſame in divers places. I urge theſe words (in diverſis locis) in diverſe places, and yet I am not ſatisfied.

Smith. Chriſt was ſeen really and corporally on the earth after his aſcenſion, and continually ſitting at the right hand of the Father.

Ergo, the aſcenſion and perpetuall ſitting in heaven hinder nothing, but that he may be really and corporally in the ſacrament.

To be reſident and not reſident, import contradiction.

Rid. If by perpetuall ſitting you mean the reſidence of his body in heaven, your reaſon containeth manifeſt contradiction.

Smith. Theſe two have no contradiction in them at all, both to ſit continually at his Fathers right hand, and alſo to be ſeen here really in earth after his aſcenſion. Firſt, you will give me that Chriſt ſitteth in heaven at the right hand of his Father. For ſo it is written, Acts 5. Heaven muſt needs receive him unto the time of the reſtoring of all, &c. Secondly, he was alſo ſeen of Paul here corporally on earth.

Wherefore theſe two do import, as ye ſee, no contradiction.

Rid. What letteth, but that Chriſt, if it pleaſe him, and when it pleaſeth him, may be in heaven and in earth, and appeare to whom hee will? and yet notwithſtanding you have not yet proved that he will ſo doe. And though Chriſt continually ſhall be reſident in heaven unto the iudgement, yet there may be ſome intermiſſion, that notwithſtanding. But this controverſie, as I ſaid, is amongſt all the ancient Doctors and Writers. And that Chriſt hath been here ſeene, that they grant all: but whether then he being in earth or in heaven, that is doubtfull.

To be here and not here, importeth contradiction in reſpect of ſundry times.

Smith. I will prove that he would appeare in earth.

He ſo would, and alſo did appeare here in earth after his aſcenſion: Ergo, &c.

Rid. He appeared, I grant; but how he appeared, whether then being in heaven or in earth, that is uncertaine. So he appeared to Steven, being then corporally ſitting in heaven. For ſpeaking after the true manner of mans body, when he is in heaven, he is not the ſame time in earth: and when he is in earth, he is not the ſame time corporally in heaven.

Chriſts appearing on the earth ſometime, taketh not away his reſidence in heaven.
How Chriſt appeared in earth.

Smith. Chriſt hath been both in heaven and in earth all at one time.

Ergo, You are deceived in denying that.

Rid. I do not utterly deny Chriſt here to have been ſeen in earth. Of uncertain things I ſpeak uncertainly.

This argument holdeth rather materiæ, than ratione formæ.

Smith. He was ſeen of Paul, as being borne before his time, after his aſcending up to heaven, 1 Cor. 15.

But his viſion was a corporall viſion:

Ergo, hee was ſeen corporally upon the earth after his aſcending into heaven.

Rid. He was ſeen really and corporally indeed: but whether being in heaven or earth, it is a doubt. And of doubtfull things we muſt iudge doubtfully. Howbeit you muſt prove that he was in heaven at the ſame time, when he was corporally on earth.

Smith. I would know of you, whether this viſion may inforce the reſurrection of Chriſt?

Rid. I account this a ſound and firme argument to prove the reſurrection. But whether they ſaw him in heaven or in earth, I am in doubt: and to ſay the truth, it maketh no great matter. Both waies the argument is of like ſtrength. For whether he were ſeen in heaven, or whether he were ſeen on earth, either of both maketh ſufficiently for the matter. Certaine it is, he roſe again: for he could not have been ſeen, unleſſe he had riſen again.

Whether Paul ſaw Chriſt in heaven or in earth, all is one to prove his reſurrection.

Petitio Principii.

Smith. Paul ſaw him as he was here converſant on earth, and not out of heaven as you affirme.

Rid. You run to the beginning again: that you take for granted, which you ſhould have proved.

Smith. You make delayes for the nonce.

Rid. Say not ſo, I pray you. Thoſe that heare us be learned: they can tell both what you oppoſe, and what I anſwer well enough, I warrant you.

Treſh. He was ſeen after ſuch ſort, as that he might be heard.

Argument.

Ergo, he was corporally on the earth, or elſe how could he be heard?

Anſwer.

Rid. He that found the meanes for Steven to behold him in heaven, even hee could bring to paſſe well enough, that Paul might heare him out of heaven.

Da- Smith As other ſaw him, ſo Paul ſaw him.
ti- Other did ſee him viſibly and corporally on earth.
ſi. Ergo, Paul ſaw him viſibly and corporally on earth.

Argument.

Anſwer.

Rid. I grant he was ſeen viſibly and corporally: but yet have you not proved that he was ſeen in earth.

Smith. He was ſeen ſo of him as of other:

But he was ſeen of other being on earth, and appeared viſibly to them on earth:

Ergo, he was ſeen of Paul on earth.

Anno 1554.

Rid. Your controverſie is about (exiſtens in terra) that is, being on earth: if exiſtere, to be, be referred as unto the place, I deny that Chriſt after that ſort was on the earth. But if it be referred as to the verity of the body, then I grant it. Moreover, I ſay that Chriſt was ſeene of men in earth after his aſcenſion, it is certaine. For he was ſeen of Steven; he was ſeen alſo of Paul. But whether hee deſcended unto the earth, or whether he being in heaven did reveal or manifeſt himſelfe to Paul, when Paul was rapt into the third heaven, I know that ſome contend about it: and the Scripture, as far as I have read or heard, doth not determine it. Wherfore wee cannot but iudge uncertainly of thoſe things which be uncertaine.

Egeſippus l.3 cap.3

Smith. We have Egeſippus & Linus againſt you, which teſtifie, that Chriſt appeared corporally on the earth to Peter after his aſcenſion, lib. 3. cap. 3. Peter overcome with the requeſts and mournings of the people, which deſired him to get him out of the city becauſe of Nero his lying in waite for him, began without company to convey himſelfe away from thence: and when he was come to the gate, he ſeeth Chriſt come to meet him, and worſhipping him, he ſaid; Maſter, whither walk you? Chriſt anſwered, I am come againe to bee crucified. Linus writing of the paſſion of Peter, hath the ſelf ſame ſtory. Saint Ambroſe hath the ſame likewiſe, and alſo Abdias, ſcholler to the Apoſtles, which ſaw Chriſt before his aſcending into heaven. With what face therefore dare you affirm it to be a thing uncertain, which theſe men do manifeſtly witneſſe to have beene done?

Linus de paſſione Petri, Ambroſius. Abdias.

Rid. I ſaid before that the Doctors in that matter did varie.

Smith. Doe you thinke this ſtory is not certain, being approved by ſo ancient and probable authority?

Rid. I do ſo think, becauſe I take and eſteem not their words for the words of Scripture. And though I did grant you that ſtory to be certain, yet it maketh not againſt me.

Smith. Such things as be certain, & approved of them, you do reject as things uncertain.

The credit of Linus ſtory.
" This addition is taken out of the copie of biſhop Ridleys own writing.

Rid. The ſtory of Linus is not of ſo great authority; although I am not ignorant that " Euſebius ſo writeth alſo in the ſtory of the Church. And yet I account not theſe mens reports ſo ſure as the canonicall Scriptures. Albeit if at any time he had to any man appeared here on yͤ earth after his aſcenſion, that doth not diſprove my ſaying. For I go not about to tye Chriſt up in fetters (as ſome do untruly report of us) but that he may be ſeen upon the earth according to his divine pleaſure, whenſoever it liketh him. But we affirme, that it is contrary to the nature of his manhood, and the true manner of his body, that hee ſhould be together and at one inſtant both in heaven and earth, according to his corporall ſubſtance. And the perpetuall ſitting at the right hand of the Father, may (I grant) bee taken for the ſtability of Chriſts kingdome, and his continuall or everlaſting equality with his Father in the glory of heaven.

Smith. Now whereas you boaſt that your faith is the very faith of the ancient Church; I will ſhew here that it is not ſo, but that it doth directly ſtrive againſt the Faith of the old Fathers, I will bring in Chryſoſtome for this point. Hom. 2. ad populum Antiochenum. Tanquam maximam hæreditatem, Eliſæus melotem ſuſcepit. Etenim verè maxima fuit hæreditas, omni auro pretioſior: & erat duplex Helias ille: & erat ſurſum Helian, & deorſum Helias. Novi quòd juſtum illum beatum putatis, & velletis quiſque eſſe ut ille. Quid igitur, ſi vobis demon-

Chryſoſtome alledged.
Hom. 2 ad populum Antioch.

demonſtravero quid aliud, quod illo multo majus omnes ſacris myſteriis imbuti recipimus? Helias quidem melotem diſcipulo reliquit: Filius autem Dei aſcendens ſuam nobis carnem dimiſit. Sed Helias quidem exutus: Chriſtus autem & nobis reliquit, & ipſam habens aſcendit. That is, Eliſeus received the mantle, as a right great inheritance. For it was indeed a right excellent inheritance, and more precious than any gold beſide. And the ſame was a double Helias: Hee was both Helias above, and Helias beneath. I know well you thinke that juſt man to be happy, and you would gladly be every one of you as hee is. What will you then ſay if I ſhall declare unto you a certaine other thing, which all wee that are inbued with theſe holy myſteries doe receive much more than that? Helias indeed left his mantle to his ſcholler: But the Son of God aſcending did leave here his fleſh unto us. Helias left it, putting off the ſame: But Chriſt both left it to us, and aſcended alſo to heaven, having it with him.

Here, at this anſwer great cartfuls of taunting, ſpitefull, & reproachfull words were caſt upon this good Biſhop.

Rid. I grant that Chriſt did both; that is, both took up his fleſh with him aſcending up, and alſo did leave the ſame behind him with us, but after a divers manner and reſpect. For he took his fleſh with him, after the true and corporall ſubſtance of his body and fleſh: againe, he left the ſame in myſtery to the faithfull in the Supper, to bee received after a ſpirituall communication, and by grace. Neither is the ſame received in the Supper only, but alſo at other times, by hearing the Goſpell, and by faith. For, the (bread) which wee breake, is the communication of the body of Chriſt: And generally, unleſſe ye eat the fleſh of the ſonne of man, and drinke his blood, yee ſhall have no life in you.

Chryſoſt. De dignitate Sacerdotii, lib. 3 cap. 3.

Smith. Chryſoſtome in his booke de dignitate Sacerdotii, lib. 3, ca. 3. ſaith, O miraculum, O Dei benevolentiam! Qui ſurſum ſedet tempore ſacrificii, hominum manibus continetur. Or as other have tranſlated it, O miraculum, O Dei benignitatem! Qui cum patre ſurſum ſedet, in illo ipſo temporis articulo, omnium manibus pertractatur, ac ſe ipſe tradit volentibus ipſum accipere & complecti! i. O miracle, O good will of God! He that ſitteth above at the ſacrifice time, is contained in the hands of men. Or elſe as other have tranſlated it, thus: O miracle, O the gentleneſſe of God! He that ſitteth above with the Father, is handled with the hands of all men at the very ſame moment of time, and doth himſelfe deliver himſelfe to them that are deſirous to take him and imbrace him.

Rid. He that ſitteth there is here preſent in myſterie and by grace, and is holden of the godly, ſuch as communicate him, not only ſacramentally with the hand of the body, but much more wholſomely with the hand of the heart, and by inward drinking is received; but by the ſacramentall ſignification he is holden of all men.

Seton. Where is then the miracle if he be only preſent through his grace and myſtery only?

The miracle in the ſacrament wherein it conſiſteth.

Rid. Yes, there is a miracle, good ſir, Chriſt is not idle in his ſacraments. Is not the miracle great, trow you, when bread, which is wont to ſuſtaine the body, becommeth food to the ſoul? He that underſtandeth not that miracle, he underſtandeth not the force of that myſterie. God grant we may every one of us underſtand his truth, and obey the ſame.

Smith. Chryſoſtome calleth it a miracle, that Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God in heaven and at the ſame time is held in the hands of men: not that hee is handled with the hands of men: only in a myſtery, and is with them through grace. Therefore while you deny that, you are altogether deceived, and ſtray far from the truth.

Harpſ. The former part of Chryſoſtome is not to be let ſlip. Let me, before I begin, aſk this one queſtion of you. Is it not a great matter that Elias left his cloak or mantle, and the gift of his prophecy to his ſcholler?

Rid. Yes ſurely it is a great matter.

Harpſ. Did not Elias then leave great grace?

Rid. He did ſo.

Harpſ. But Chriſt left a farre greater grace than Elias: for he could not both leave his cloak and take it with him; Chriſt doth both in his fleſh

How Chriſt tooke up his body, and left it with us.

Rid. I am well content to grant, that Chriſt left much greater things to us than Elias to Eliſeus, albeit he be ſaid to have left his double ſpirit with him: for that the ſtrength and grace of the body of Chriſt, which Chriſt aſcending up here left with us, is the only ſalvation and life of all men which ſhall bee ſaved: which life Chriſt hath here left unto us, to bee received by faith through the hearing of the word, and the right adminiſtration of the ſacraments. This vertue and grace Chryſoſtome, after the phraſe and manner of John the Evangeliſt, calleth Chriſts fleſh.

The phraſe of Chryſoſtome conſidered.

Harpſ. But Chriſt performed a greater matter. He carried up, and left behind. You underſtand not the compariſon. The compariſon is in this, that Elias left his mantle, and carried it not with him, Chriſt left his fleſh behinde him, and carried it with him alſo.

Compariſon betwen Elias mantle and Chriſts fleſh. Elias took his mantle and left neither mantle, nor ſacrament of his mantle behind him.

Rid. True it is, and I my ſelfe did affirme no leſſe before. Now where you ſeeme to ſpeak many things, indeed you bring no new things at all. Let there be a compariſon between grace & grace, then Chriſt gave the far greater grace, when he did inſert or graft us into his fleſh.

Chriſt took his fleſh, and left a ſacrament of his fleſh, which was more than Elias did: and yet the ſaid Elias afterward caſt down his mantle.

Harpſ. If you will give me leave, I will aſke you this queſtion. If Chryſoſtome would have meant ſo, that Chriſt left his body in the Euchariſt, what plainer words think you, or more evident could he have uſed than theſe?

Rid. Theſe things be not of ſo great force as they beare a great ſhew outwardly. He might alſo have uſed groſſer words if hee had liſted to have uttered his minde ſo groſſely: for he was an eloquent man. Now hee ſpeaketh after the manner of other Doctors, which of myſticall matters ſpeak myſtically, and of ſacraments ſacramentally.

Har. The compariſon lieth in this; That which was impoſſible to Elias is poſſible with Chriſt.

Rid. I grant it was poſſible to Chriſt, which was to the other impoſſible. Elias left his cloake: Chriſt both left his fleſh and tooke it with him.

Harpſ. Elias left behind him, and could not take with him: Chriſt both left behind him, and alſo took with him, Except you will ſay the compariſon here made to be nothing.

Rid. He took up his fleſh with him to heaven, & left here the communion of his fleſh in earth.

Harpsfeld anſwered.

Weſt. You underſtand in the firſt place his fleſh for very true fleſh; and in the ſecond place for grace, and communion of his fleſh; and why do you not underſtand it in the ſecond place alſo for his true fleſh? I will make it evident how blockiſh and groſſe your anſwer is.

Quam ſit ſtupida & craſſa reſponſio tua.

Rid. Theſe be taunts and reproaches, not beſeeming; as I think, the modeſty of this ſchoole.

Weſt. Elias left his cloak to his diſciple: but the Sonne of God going up to heaven, left his fleſh. But Elias certainly left his cloak behind, and Chriſt likewiſe his fleſh, and yet aſcending he carried the ſame with him too. By which words we make this reaſon.

Chriſt left his fleſh to his Diſciples, and yet for all that he took the ſame up with him:

Ergo, he is preſent here with us.

D. Weſton ſpeaketh to the audience in Engliſh.

Here Doctor Weſton crying to the people, ſaid unto them; maſter Doctor anſwereth it after this faſhion:

He carried his fleſh into heaven, and he left here the communion of his fleſh behind. Aſſuredly the anſwer is too unlearned.

Rid. I am glad you ſpeak in Engliſh. Surely, I wiſh that all the whole world might underſtand your reaſons and my anſwers. Reliquit nobis carnem ſuum, i. He left his fleſh. This you underſtand of his fleſh, and underſtand the ſame of grace. He carried his fleſh into heaven, and left behind the communion of his fleſh unto us.

But where were theſe Iudges in king Edwards time?

Weſt. Ye Iudges, what thinke you of this anſwer?

Iudges, It is ridiculous and a very fond anſwer.

Rid. Well, I take your words patiently for Chriſt cauſe.

Weſt. Weſton here citeth a place; Spargimur ſanguine Chriſti. i. We are ſprinkled with the blood of Chriſt.

How we are ſprinkled with Chriſts blood.

Rid. Maſter Doctor, it is the ſame blood, but yet ſpiritually received. And indeed all the Prophets were ſprinkled with the ſame blood, but yet ſpiritually I ſay, and by grace. And whatſoever they be that are not ſprinkled with this blood, they cannot be partakers of the everlaſting ſalvation.

“ This he repeated in Engliſh to the people alſo.

Weſt. “ Here I bring Bernard unto you again, Even from the Weſt unto the eaſt, from the North unto the South, there is one and the ſelf ſame Chriſt in many and divers places.

Anſwer to Bernard.

Rid. The anſwer is ſoone made, that one Chriſt is here and in divers places. For God according to his Maieſtie, and according to his providence, as S. Auſtin ſaith, is every where with the godly, according to his indiviſible and unſpeakable grace. Or elſe, if ye would underſtand Bernard according to the corporall preſence, how monſtrous, or huge, and giant-like a body would you then make Chriſts body to bee, which ſhould reach even from North to South, from Weſt to Eaſt.

The Papiſts make Chriſt to have a monſtrous body.

Weſt. Nay, nay you make a monſtrous anſwer, and unlearned.

Ward. Before I come in with thoſe reaſons which I had purpoſed to bring againſt you, I am minded to come againe to Maſter Doctors argument, by which you being brought into the briars, ſeemed to doubt of Chriſts preſence on the earth. To the proofe of which matter I will bring nothing elſe, than that which was agreed upon in the Catechiſme of the Synod of London, ſet out not long ago by you.

Here they returned againe to Latin.

Rid. Sir, I give you to wit, before you go any further, that I did ſet out no Catechiſme.

Biſhop Ridley falſly charged to ſet forth the Catechiſme. D. Weſton in king Edwards dates ſubſcribed.

Weſt. Yes, you made one ſubſcribe to it, when you were a biſhop in your ruffe.

Rid. I compelled no man to ſubſcribe.

Ward. Yes, by rood, you are the very author of that hereſie.

Rid. I put forth no Catechiſme.

Cole. Did you never conſent to the ſetting out of thoſe things which you allowed?

Rid. I grant that I ſaw the booke; but I deny that I wrote it. I peruſed it after it was made, and I noted many things for it. So I conſented to the booke; I was not the author of it.

Of this Catechiſme read before.

Iudges. “ The Catechiſme is ſo ſet forth, as though the whole Convocation houſe had agreed to it. Cranmer ſaid yeſterday, that you made it.

“ The Iudges give an untrue verdict: for D. Cranmer, meaning by the Councel, ſpake no word of Ridley.

Rid. I think ſurely that he would not ſay ſo.

Ward. The Catechiſme hath this clauſe; Si viſibiliter in terra, &c. If viſibly on the earth, Rid. I anſwer, that thoſe Articles were ſet out, I both witting and conſenting to them. Mine owne hand will teſtifie the ſame, and M. Cranmer put his hand to them likewiſe, and gave them to other afterward. Now, as for the place which you alledge out of it, that may eaſily be expounded, and without any inconvenience.

Ward. Chriſt is the power and the vertue of his Father.

Ergo, he was not of ſo little ſtrength, that he could not bring to paſſe whatſoever hee would himſelfe.

A poſſibili ad eſſe non valet conſequentia.

Rid. I grant.

Ward. Chriſt was the wiſdome of the Father.

Ergo, that he ſpake he ſpake wiſely, and ſo as every man might underſtand: neither was it his mind to ſpeak one thing inſtead of another.

Rid. All this I grant.

Ward. Chriſt was likewiſe the very truth: Ergo, he made and performed indeed that which he intended to make. And likewiſe it is, that he doth neither deceive, nor could be deceived, nor yet would go about to deceive other.

Argument of the wiſdome and truth of Chriſt.

Weſt. Hilarius in Pſalmum 118. hath theſe words: Vera omnia ſunt, & neque otioſe, neque inutiliter conſtituta Dei verba, ſed extra omnem ambiguitatem ſuperfluæ inanitatis, ignita, & ignita vehementer, ne quid illic eſſet, quod non perfectum ac proprium ſit, exiſtimetur, i. All Gods words or ſayings are true, and neither idely placed, or unprofitably, but fiery, and wonderfull fiery, without all doubtfulneſſe of ſuperfluous vanity, that there may be nothing thought to be there, which is not abſolute and proper.

Hilar. in Pſal. 118.

Ward. He is the truth of the Father: Ergo, he can neither deceive, nor yet be deceived: eſpecially I mean when he ſpake at his later end, and his teſtament.

Rid. Chriſt is the very truth of the Father: and I perceive well to what ſcope you drive your reaſon. This is but a far fet compaſſe of words. If that theſe words of Chriſt, This is my body, which you meane, be rightly underſtood, they are moſt true.

Anſwer to M. Wards argument.

Ward. He took, he brake, he gave, &c. What took he?

Rid. Bread, his body.

Ward. What brake he?

Rid. Bread.

Ward. What gave he?

Rid. Bread.

Ward. Gave he bread made of wheat, and materiall bread?

Rid. I know not whether hee gave bread of wheat; but he gave true and materiall bread.

Ward. I will prove the contrary by ſcriptures. He delivered to them that which he bade them take.

But he bade not them take materiall bread, but his owne body.

Ergo, he gave not materiall bread, but his own body.

This argument is not formall in the ſecond figure.

Rid. I deny the Minor. For he bade them take his body ſacramentally in materiall bread: and after that ſort it was both bread which he bade them take, becauſe the ſubſtance was bread, and it was alſo his body, becauſe it was the ſacrament of his body, for the ſanctifying and the comming of the holy Ghoſt, which is alwaies aſſiſtant to thoſe myſteries which were inſtituted of Chriſt, and lawfully adminiſtred.

Anſwer.

Harpſ. What is he that ſo ſaith, By the comming unto of the holy Spirit?

Rid. I have Theophilact for mine author for this manner of ſpeaking. And here I bring him, that yee may underſtand that phraſe not to bee mine, upon Matthew 26. Furthermore, the ſaid Theophilact writing upon theſe words, This is Theophylact. in Mat. 26.

my body, ſheweth, that the body of the Lord is bread, which is ſanctified on the altar.

Ogle. That place of Theophylact maketh openly againſt you. For hee ſaith in that place, that Chriſt ſaid not, This is the figure of my body, but my body. For, ſaith he, by an unſpeakable operation it is transformed, although it ſeeme to us to be bread.

The words of Theophylact (who ſaid not this is a figure of my body) anſwered.

Rid. It is not a figure, that is to ſay, non tantum eſt figura, i. it is not only a figure of his body.

Weſt. Where have you that word (tantum) only?

Rid. It is not in that place, but he hath it in another, and Auguſtine doth ſo ſpeake many times, and other Doctors moe.

Weſt. Here Weſton, repeating the words of Theophylact in Engliſh, ſaid, He ſaith it is no figure, and you ſay it is a figure.

And the ſame Theophylact ſaith moreover, that the converſion or turning of the bread is made into the Lords fleſh.

(a) This argument is without perfect moode and forme, having the Minor negative in the ſecond figure.

(a) That which Chriſt gave, we do give.
But that which he gave was not a figure of his body:
Ergo, we give no figure, but his body.

¶ As concerning the authority of Theophylactus, what hee thought and might have ſpoken of that author, Doctor Ridley did not then ſpeake, nor could conveniently (as he himſelfe afterward declared, reporting and writing with his owne hand the diſputations in the priſon) becauſe of the uproares and clamors, which were ſo great, and he of ſo many called upon, that he could not anſwer as he would, and what he thought touching the authority of Theophylactus, but anſwered ſimply to that which was brought out of that author, on this ſort.

Converſion after what ſort in the ſacrament.

I grant, quoth he, the bread to bee converted and turned into the fleſh of Chriſt, but not by tranſubſtantiation, but by a ſacramentall converſion or turning. It is transformed, ſaith Theophylactus, in the ſame place, by a myſticall benediction, and by the acceſſion or comming of the holy Ghoſt unto the fleſh of Chriſt. He ſaith not, by expulſion or driving away the ſubſtance of bread, and by ſubſtituting or putting in his place the corporall ſubſtance of Chriſts fleſh. And where he ſaith; It is not a figure of the body, we ſhould underſtand that ſaying, as he himſelf doth elſewhere adde only, that is, it is no naked or bare figure only. For Chriſt is preſent in his myſteries, neither at any time, as Cyprian ſaith, doth the divine Maieſty abſent himſelfe from the divine myſteries.

Weſt. You put in only, and and that is one lye. And I tell you farther, Peter Martyr was faine to deny the author, becauſe the place was ſo plaine againſt him. But marke his words how he ſaith, It is no figure, but his fleſh.

Rid. To take his words, and not his meaning, is to do iniury to the author.

This Harding ſate at the table among the Notaries.

Hard. No other Doctor maketh more againſt you. For the words in Greeke are μεταστοιχειοῦται, which is in Latine, tranſelementatur, that is, turned from one element into another. And ſhewing the cauſe why it is in form of bread, he ſaith, Theoph. in 6 cap. Ioan.

Quoniam infirmi ſumus, & horremus crudas carnes comedere, maximè hominis carnem: ideo panis quidem apparet, ſed caro eſt. That is, Becauſe we are infirm, and abhor to eat the raw fleſh, ſpecially the fleſh of man: therefore it appeareth bread, but it is fleſh.

Rid. That word hath not that ſtrength which you ſeeme to give it. You ſtraine it overmuch, and yet it maketh not ſo much for your purpoſe. For the ſame author hath in another place ἡμεῖς μεταστοιχειούμεθα, That is, We are tranſelemented, or transformed and changed into the body of Chriſt; and ſo by that word, in in ſuch meaning as you ſpeake of, I could prove as well that we are transformed indeede into the very body of Chriſt.

The word μεταστοιχεῖσθαι

Theophylact expounded.

Ward. Learned M. Doctor, thus you expound the place, Hoc eſt corpus meum, i. This is my bodie, that is a figure of my body.

Rid. Although I know there bee that ſo expound it, yet that expoſition is not full to expreſſe the whole.

Argument in the third figure.

Da- Ward. My ſheep heare my voice, and follow me.
ti- But all the ſheep of Chriſt heare this voice, This is my body, without a figure:
ſi. Ergo, the voice of Chriſt here hath no figure.

Rid. The ſheepe of Chriſt follow the voice of Chriſt, unleſſe they bee ſeduced and deceived through ignorance.

Ward. But the Fathers tooke this place for no figurative ſpeech.

Rid. Yet they doe all number this place among figurative and tropicall ſpeeches.

Ward. Iuſtinus Martyr in his ſecond Apologie hath thus: οὐ γὰρ ὡς κοινὸν ἄρτον οὐδὲ κοινὸν πόμα ταῦτα λαμβάνομεν, ἀλλ᾽ ὃν τρόπον διὰ λόγου Θεοῦ σαρκοποιηθεὶς Ἰησοῦς ὁ σωτὴρ ἡμῶν, καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ὑπὲρ σωτηρίας ἡμῶν ἔσχεν: οὕτως καὶ τὴν δι᾽ εὐχῆς λόγου τοῦ παρ᾽ αὐτοῦ εὐχαριστηθεῖσαν τροφὴν, ἐξ ἧς αἷμα καὶ σάρκες κατὰ μεταβολὴν τρέφονται ἡμῶν, ἐκείνου τοῦ σαρκοποιηθέντος Ἰησοῦ καὶ σάρκα καὶ αἷμα ἐδιδάχθημεν εἶναι.

Iuſtinus Martyr. Apolog. 2

Neque vero hæc pro pane potuve communi ſumimus; Imo quemadmodum verbo Dei Ieſus Chriſtus, Servator noſter incarnatus, habuit pro ſalute noſtra carnem & ſanguinem: Ita per orationem illius verbi conſecratum hoc alimentum, quo ſanguis & carnes noſtræ per immutationem enutriuntur, ejuſdem incarnati carnem & ſanguinem eſſe ſumus edocti.

This place Cranmer hath corrupted. Thus it is engliſhed.

¶ For we do not take this for common bread and drinke, but like as Jeſus Chriſt our Saviour incarnate by the word of God, had fleſh and blood for our ſalvation: even ſo we be taught the food wherewith our fleſh and blood is nouriſhed by alteration, when it is conſecrated by the prayer of his word, to bee the fleſh and blood of the ſame Jeſus incarnate.

Doctor Cranmer hath thus tranſlated it it: Bread, water, and wine, are not to be taken as other common meates and drinkes bee, but they be ordained purpoſely to give thankes to God, and therefore be called Euchariſtia, and be called the body and blood of Chriſt: and that it is lawfull for none to eat and drinke of them, but ſuch as profeſſe Chriſt, and live according to the ſame; and yet the ſame meate and drinke is changed into our fleſh and blood, and nouriſheth our bodies.

D. Cranmer charged with miſtranſlating a place of Iuſtine. Read his anſwer to this before.

Rid. O good Maſter Doctor, goe ſincerely to work: I know that place, and I know how it is uſed.

Ward. Ward here repeated the place againe out of Iuſtine; We are taught, &c. as above.

Rid. O what upright dealing is this? I have the ſelfe ſame place of Iuſtine here copied out. You know your ſelf which are ſkilfull in Greek, how the words here be removed out of the right place, and without any iuſt cauſe.

Sumptum ex exemplari domini Ridlei deſcripto.

Ward. I ſtand ſtill upon mine argument. What ſay you?

Rid. If you will that I ſhould anſwer to Iuſtine, then you muſt heare. I have but one tongue, I cannot anſwer at once to you all.

Weſt. Chriſt gave us his very and true fleſh to be eaten;

In this argument if the minor be a negative, the forme is falſe: if it be affirmative, æquipollenter, the maior is to be denied.

But hee never gave it to bee eaten but in his laſt ſupper, and in the ſacrament of the altar:

Ergo, there is the very fleſh of Chriſt.

Rid. If you ſpeake of the very true fleſh of Chriſt, after the ſubſtance of his fleſh taken in the womb of the Virgin Mary, and not by grace and ſpiritually, I then doe deny the firſt part of your reaſon. But if you underſtand it of the true fleſh, after grace and ſpirituall communication, I then grant the firſt part, and deny the ſecond. For he giveth unto us truly his fleſh, to be eaten of all that believe in him. For hee is the very and true meat of the ſoule, wherewith we are fed unto everlaſting life, according to this ſaying; My fleſh is meat indeed, &c.

Ward. Deſiderio deſideravi hoc paſcha manducare vobiſcum, i. I have deſired with my hearty deſire to eat this paſchall with you. What Paſchall I pray you deſired he to eat? If you ſtand in doubt, you have Tertullian, lib. 4. contra Marcionem: Profeſſus itaque ſe concupiſcentia concupiſcere edere paſcha ſuum (indignum enim ut alienum concupiſceret Deus) acceptum panem & diſtributum Diſcipilis ſuum corpus illum fecit; Hoc eſt corpus meum, dicendo, &c. i. Hee therefore proteſting a great deſire to eate his paſchall, his owne paſchall I ſay (for it was not meet that he ſhould deſire any other than his owne) taking bread and diſtributing it to his Diſciples, made it his body, ſaying, This is my body.

Tertul. contra Marcion. lib. 4.

What ſay you? Did hee underſtand by this Paſchall the Judaicall Lambe, or by that which afterward he gave in his Supper?

Rid. I ſuppoſe that the firſt hee underſtood of the Judaicall Paſſeover, and afterward of the Euchariſt.

Argument.

Ward. Nay then Tertullian is againſt you, which ſaith:

Ba- He deſired to eat his Paſſeover.

ro- But the Judaicall Paſſeover was not his, but ſtrange from Chriſt.

co. Ergo, he meant not of the Judaicall Paſſeover.

Anſwer.

Rid. The Judaicall Paſſeover was not ſtrange from Chriſt, but his owne: inſomuch as he is the Lord of all; and as well the Lord of the Judaicall Paſſeover, as of his owne Supper.

Ward. What anſwer you then to Tertullian, the which ſaith, He deſired to eat his own Paſſeover, and not the Jewiſh Paſſeover, which ſtood upon words without fleſh?

Rid. Tertullian may here dally in ſenſe Analogicall. I know that Cyprian hath theſe words; Tunc inſtituit quidem Euchariſtiam, ſed utrumque erat Chriſti. i. He began then to inſtitute the holy Euchariſt, but both were Chriſts.

Analogicall ſenſe is that which hath a high and myſticall underſtanding that lyeth abſtruſe and profound under the externall letter.

August. in Pſal. 96.

Ward. Auguſtine in Pſalme 96. writing upon theſe words, Adorate ſcabellum pedum eius, i. Worſhip his footſtoole, &c. Quæro, inquit, quid ſit ſcabellum pedum ejus? Et dicit mihi Scriptura, Terra ſcabellum pedum meorum: Fluctuans converto me ad Chriſtum, quia ipſum quæro hic, & invenio quomodo ſine impietate adoretur ſcabellum pedum ejus. Suſcepit enim de terra terram, quia caro de terra eſt, & de carne Mariæ carnem accepit, & quia in ipſa carne hic ambulavit, & ipſam carnem nobis manducandam ad ſalutem dedit: nemo autem illam carnem manducat niſi prius adoraverit. Inventum eſt quo modo tale ſcabellum pedum Domini adoretur, ut non ſolum non peccemus adorando, ſed peccemus non adorando ipſum, &c, i. I aſke (ſaith he) what is the footſtoole of his feet? and the Scripture telleth me, The earth is the footſtoole of my feet. And ſo in ſearching thereof I turne my ſelfe to Chriſt, becauſe I ſeeke him here in the earth, and finde how, without impiety, the footſtoole of his feet may be worſhipped; for he tooke earth of earth, in that he is fleſh of the earth, and of the fleſh of Mary he tooke fleſh, and becauſe that in the ſame fleſh here he walked, and alſo he gave the ſame fleſh to us to bee eaten unto ſalvation. But no man eateth that fleſh except he have worſhipped before. And ſo it is found, how ſuch a footſtoole of the feet of the Lord is to be worſhipped, ſo that not only we ſin not in worſhipping, but alſo doe ſin in not worſhipping the ſame.

Eſay 66.

Da- Hee gave to us his fleſh to bee eaten, the which he tooke of the earth, in which alſo here he walked, &c.

ti- But hee never gave his fleſh to bee eaten but when he gave it at his Supper, ſaying, This is my body.

ſi. Ergo, in the Euchariſt he gave us his fleſh.

If the minor of this argument (as is ſaid before) be equipollent to affirmative, then it commeth next to the Moode Datiſi.

Rid. You doe alledge the place of Auſten upon the 98. Pſalme, where he ſaith, that Chriſt gave his fleſh to be eaten which he tooke of the earth, and in which here hee walked, inferring hereupon that Chriſt never gave the ſame his fleſh to be eaten, but only in the Euchariſt: I deny your Minor; for he gave it both in the Euchariſt to be eaten and alſo otherwiſe, as well in the word, as alſo upon the croſſe.

How Chriſt gave his fleſh to be eaten, and when.

Smith. What if Auguſtine ſay, that Chriſt did not only give himſelf to us in a figure, but gave his owne very fleſh indeed and really?

Rid. I never ſaid that Chriſt gave only a figure of his body. For indeed he gave himſelfe in a reall communication, that is he gave his fleſh after a communication of his fleſh.

West. Here Weſton read the place of Auguſtine in engliſh, and afterward ſaid, Yee ſay, Chriſt gave not his body, but a figure of his body.

Chriſt gave himſelf not only in a figure, but indeed by a reall and effectuall communication of his fleſh.

Rid. I ſay not ſo, I ſay he gave his own body verily. But he gave it by a reall, effectuall, and ſpirituall communication.

D. Glin diſputeth.

D. Glin biſhop Ridleyes old friend deſireth him of pardon.

¶ After this, Doctor Glin began to reaſon, who (notwithſtanding Maſter Ridley had alwaies taken him for his old friend) made a very contumelious Preface againſt him. This Preface Maſter Ridley therefore did the more take to heart, becauſe it proceeded from him. Howbeit he thought that Doctor Glins mind was to ſerve the time. For afterward he came to the houſe wherein Maſter Ridley was kept, and as far as Maſter Ridley could call to remembrance, before Doctor Young and Doctor Oglethorpe hee deſired him to pardon his words. The which Maſter Ridley did even from the very heart, and wiſhed earneſtly, that God would give not only to him, but unto all other, the true and evident knowledge of Gods Evangelicall ſincerity, that all offences put apart, they being perfectly and fully reconciled, might agree and meet together in the houſe of the heavenly Father.

B. Ridley forgiveth D. Glin

Glin. I ſee that you elude or ſhift away all Scriptures and Fathers, I will goe to worke with you after another ſort.

Chriſt hath here his Church knowen in earth, of which you were once a childe, although now you ſpeake contumeliouſly of the Sacraments.

Rid. This is a grievous contumely, that you call me a ſhifter away of the Scriptures, and of the Doctors. As touching the ſacraments, I never yet ſpake contumeliouſly of them. I grant that Chriſt hath here his Church in earth: but that Church did ever receive and acknowledge the euchariſt to be a ſacrament of the body of Chriſt yet not the body of Chriſt really, but the body of Chriſt by grace.

Glin. Then I aſke this queſtion, whether the Catholike Church hath ever or at any time been Idolatrous?

Rid. The

Anno 1554.

Rid. The Church is the pillar and ſtay of the truth, that never yet hath beene Idolatrous in reſpect of the whole: but peradventure in reſpect of ſome part thereof, which ſometimes may be ſeduced by evill Paſtors, and through ignorance.

Glin. (a) That Church ever hath worſhipped the fleſh of Chriſt in the Euchariſt.

But the Church hath never been idolatrous:

Ergo, it hath alway iudged the fleſh of Chriſt to be in the Euchariſt.

(a) This argument having the minor a negative, neither is formable in the third figure, neither doth it conclude rightly, but ſhould conclude thus: Ergo, to worſhip the fleſh of Chriſt in the Euchariſt is no idolatry.

Rid. And I alſo worſhip Chriſt in the ſacrament, but not becauſe he is included in the ſacrament: like as I worſhip Chriſt alſo in the Scriptures, not becauſe he is really included in them. Notwithſtanding I ſay, that the body of Chriſt is preſent in the ſacrament, but yet ſacramentally and ſpiritually, according to his grace giving life, and in that reſpect really, that is, according to his benediction giving life.

Sumptum ab autographo Ridlei manu deſcripto.

Furthermore, I acknowledge gladly the true body of Chriſt to bee in the Lords Supper, in ſuch ſort as the Church of Chriſt (which is the Spouſe of Chriſt, and is taught of the Holy Ghoſt, and guided by Gods word) doth acknowledge the ſame. But the true Church of Chriſt doth acknowledge a preſence of Chriſts body in the Lords Supper to be communicated to the godly by grace, and ſpiritually, as I have often ſhewed, and by a ſacramentall ſignification, but not by the corporall preſence of the body of his fleſh.

Auguſt. contra Fauſt. lib. 20. cap. 13.

Glin. Auſtin contra Fauſtum, lib. 20. cap. 13. Nonnulli propter panem & calicem, Cererem & Bacchum nos colere exiſtimabant, &c. i. Some there were which thought us, inſtead of bread and of the cup, to worſhip Ceres and Bacchus.

Upon this place I gather, that there was an adoration of the ſacrament among the Fathers: and Eraſmus, in an Epiſtle to the brethren of low Germany, ſaith, that the worſhipping of the ſacrament was before Auſtin and Cyprian.

Rid. We doe handle the ſignes reverently: but we worſhip the ſacrament as a ſacrament, not as a thing ſignified by the ſacrament.

Glin. What is the Symbole or Sacrament?

Rid. Bread.

Glin. Ergo, We worſhip bread.

Equivocation of this word Worſhip, diſtinguiſhed.

Rid. There is a deceit in this word (Adoramus.) We worſhip the Symboles, when reverently we handle them. We worſhip Chriſt wherefoever we perceive his benefits. But we underſtand his benefit to be greateſt in the ſacrament.

Glin. So I may fall downe before the bench here, and worſhip Chriſt: and if any man aſke me what I doe, I may anſwer, I worſhip Chriſt.

Rid. We adore and worſhip Chriſt in the Euchariſt. And if you meane the externall ſacrament, I ſay, that alſo is to be worſhipped as a ſacrament.

We worſhip Chriſt in the Euchariſt: but we worſhip not the Euchariſt for Chriſt.

Glin. So was the faith of the Primitive Church.

Rid. Would to God we would all follow the faith of that Church.

Glin. Thinke you that Chriſt hath now his Church?

Rid. I do ſo.

Glin. But all the Church adoreth Chriſt, verily, and really in the ſacrament.

Rid. You know your ſelf that the Eaſt Church would not acknowledge tranſubſtantiation, as appeareth in the Councell of Florence.

This Councell of Florence was but of late yeeres in the time of the Councell of Baſil.

Cole. That is falſe. For in the ſame they did acknowledge tranſubſtantiation, although they would not intreat of the matter, for that they had not in their commiſſion ſo to do.

Rid. Nay, they would determine nothing of yͤ matter, when the Article was propounded unto them.

Cole. It was not becauſe they did not acknowledge the ſame, but becauſe they had no commiſſion ſo to do.

Curtop. Reverend Sir, I will prove and declare, that the body of Chriſt is truly and really in the Euchariſt: and whereas the holy Fathers, both of the Weſt and Eaſt Church, have written both many things and no leſſe manifeſt of the ſame matter, yet will I bring forth onely Chryſoſtome. The place is in cap. 10. Corinth. 1. Hom. 24.

Chryſ. in ca. 10. Cor. 1. Hom. 24.

(a) That which is in the cup, is the ſame that flowed from the ſide of Chriſt.

But true and pure blood did flow from the ſide of Chriſt:

Ergo, His true and pure blood is in the cup.

(a) The Maior ſhould be thus: Whatſoever did flow from the ſide of Chriſt is in the cup, &c. or els the argument being in the ſecond figure is affirmative, and falſe.

Rid. It is his true blood which is in the chalice, I grant, and the ſame which ſprang from the ſide of Chriſt. But how? It is blood indeed, but not after the ſame manner, after which manner it ſprang from his ſide. For here is the blood but by way of a ſacrament.

Againe, I ſay, like as the bread of the ſacrament and of thankſgiving is called the body of Chriſt given for us: ſo the cup of the Lord is called the blood which ſprang from the ſide of Chriſt. But that ſacramentall bread is called the body, becauſe it is the ſacrament of his body: even ſo likewiſe the cup is called the blood alſo which flowed out of Chriſts ſide, becauſe it is the ſacrament of that blood which flowed out of his ſide, inſtituted of the Lord himſelfe for our ſingular commodity: namely, for our ſpirituall nouriſhment, like as Baptiſme is ordained in water to our ſpirituall regeneration.

Cur. The ſacrament of yͤ blood is not the blood.

Rid. The ſacrament of the blood is the blood, and that is attributed to the ſacrament, which is ſpoken of the thing of the ſacrament.

Weſt. Here Weſton repeateth Curtops argument in Engliſh.

(b) That which is in the chalice, is the ſame which flowed out of Chriſts ſide.

But there came out very blood:

Ergo, There is blood in the chalice.

(b) This argument concludeth not directly, and being in the ſecond figure affirmative, it is not formall.

Rid. The blood of Chriſt is in the chalice indeed, but not in the reall preſence, but by grace, and in a ſacrament.

Weſt. That is very well. Then we have blood in the chalice.

Rid. It is true, but by grace, & in a ſacrament.

Here the people hiſſed at him.

Rid. O my maſters, I take this for no iudgement: I will ſtand to Gods iudgement.

Wat. Good Sir, I have determined to have reſpect of the time, and to abſtain from all thoſe things which may hinder the entrance of our diſceptation: and therefore firſt I aſke this queſtion; when Chriſt ſaid in the ſixth of Iohn, Qui manducat carnem meam, i. He that eateth my fleſh, &c. doth he ſignifie in thoſe words the eating of his true and naturall fleſh, or els of the bread and Symbole?

Rid. I underſtand that place of the very fleſh of Chriſt to be eaten, but ſpiritually: And further I ſay, that the ſacrament alſo pertaineth unto the ſpirituall manducation. For without the ſpirit to eat the Sacrament is to eat it unprofitably. For who ſo eateth not ſpiritually, he eateth his owne condemnation.

Spirituall eating of the fleſh of Chriſt.

Wat. I aſke then whether the Euchariſt be a ſacrament?

Rid. The Euchariſt, taken for a ſigne or ſymbole, is a ſacrament.

Wat. Is it inſtituted of God?

Rid. It is inſtituted of God.

Wat. Where?

Rid. In the Supper.

Wat. With what words is it made a ſacrament?

Rid. By the words and deeds which Chriſt ſaid and did, and commanded us to ſay and doe the ſame.

Wat. It is a thing commonly received of all, that the ſacraments of the new Law give grace to them that worthily receive.

The ſacraments give no grace, but are inſtruments.

Rid. True it is, that grace is given by the ſacrament, but as by an inſtrument. The inward vertue and Chriſt give the grace through the ſacrament.

Sacrament defined.

Wat. What is a ſacrament?

Rid. I remember there be many definitions of a ſacrament in Auguſtine: but I will take that which ſeemeth moſt fit to this preſent purpoſe. A ſacrament is a viſible ſigne of inviſible grace.

Wat. Ergo, Grace is given to the receivers.

Rid. The ſociety or coniunction with Chriſt through the Holy Ghoſt is grace, and by the ſacrament we are made the members of the myſticall body of Chriſt, for that by the ſacrament the part of the body is ingrafted in the head.

Wat. But there is difference betweene the myſticall body, and naturall body.

Rid. There is (I grant you) a difference, but the head of them both is one.

(a) The Syllogiſme is thus to be formed: The ſacrament of the new Teſtament hath a promiſe of grace annexed. Bread & wine have no promiſe of grace annexed: Ergo, bread & wine is no ſacrament of the new Teſtament.

Wat. (a) The Euchariſt is a ſacrament of the New Teſtament:

Ergo, It hath a promiſe of grace.

But no promiſe of grace is made to bread and wine:

Ergo, Bread and wine be not the ſacraments of the New Teſtament.

(b) No promiſe made to bread and wine, as they be common bread and common wine: but as they be ſanctified and made ſacraments of the Lords body and blood, they are not now called bread nor wine, but have a promiſe annexed to them, or rather (to ſay the truth) annexed to the receivers of them.

Rid. I grant that grace pertaineth to the Euchariſt, according to this ſaying, The bread which we breake is it not the communication or partaking of the body of Chriſt? And like as he that eateth, and he that drinketh unworthily the ſacrament of the body and blood of the Lord, eateth and drinketh his owne damnation: even ſo he that eateth and drinketh worthily, eateth life, and drinketh life. I grant alſo that there is no (b) promiſe made to bread and wine. But inaſmuch as they are ſanctified, and made the ſacraments of the body and blood of the Lord, they have a promiſe of grace annexed unto them; namely, of ſpirituall partaking of the body of Chriſt to be communicated and given, not to the bread and wine, but to them which worthily do receive the ſacrament.

Argument.

Wat. If the ſubſtance of bread and wine doe remaine, then the ſociety betwixt Chriſt and us is promiſed to them that take bread and wine.

But that ſociety is not promiſed to bread and wine, but to the receivers of the fleſh and blood. John 6. Qui manducat, &c.

Ergo, The ſubſtance of bread and wine remaineth not.

Sacraments how they have a promiſe of grace annexed, not abſolutely, but inſtrumentally.

Rid. The promiſe undoubtedly is made to the fleſh and blood, but the ſame is to be received in the ſacrament through faith.

Wat. Every ſacrament hath a promiſe of grace annexed unto it.

But bread and wine have not a promiſe of grace annexed unto it.

Ergo, The bread and wine are not ſacraments.

Grace not included in ſacraments: but the receiving of them turneth to grace in them that duly come unto them.

Rid. True it is, every ſacrament hath grace annexed unto it inſtrumentally. But there is divers underſtanding of this word (Habet) hath. For the ſacrament hath not grace included in it; but to thoſe that receive it well, it is turned to grace. After that manner the water in Baptiſme hath grace promiſed, and by that grace the holy ſpirit is given, not that grace is included in water, but that grace commeth by water.

Wat. This promiſe is made to the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, and not to the bread and wine.

Ergo, The ſacrament is not bread and wine, but the body and blood of Chriſt.

Promiſe made not to the Symboles, but to the thing of the ſacrament. Sacraments only inſtruments of grace. Bread more largely taken in the minor, than in the concluſion.

Rid. There is no promiſe made to him that taketh common bread and common wine: but to him that receiveth the ſanctified bread, and bread of the communion, there is a large promiſe of grace made, neither is the promiſe given to the Symboles, but to the thing of the ſacrament. But the thing of the ſacrament is the fleſh and blood.

Wat. Every ſacrament of the New Teſtament giveth grace, promiſed of God to thoſe that worthily receive it.

Rid. This ſacrament hath a promiſe of grace, made to thoſe that receive it worthily, becauſe grace is given by it, as by an inſtrument, not that Chriſt hath transfuſed grace into the bread and wine.

Wat. But this promiſe which is made, is not but to thoſe that worthily receive the fleſh and blood; not the bread and wine.

Rid. That propoſition of yours hath a divers underſtanding. There is no promiſe made to them that receive common bread, as it were; but to thoſe that worthily receive the ſanctified bread, there is a promiſe of grace made, like as Origen doth teſtifie.

Wat. Where is that promiſe made?

1 Cor. 12.

Rid. The bread which hee brake, is it not a communication of the body of Chriſt? (And) wee being many are one bread, one body of Chriſt.

Wat. What doth he meane by bread in that place?

Rid. The bread of the Lords Table, the communion of the body of Chriſt.

Chryſ. in 1 Cor. cap. 10

Wat. Hearken what Chryſoſtome ſaith upon that place; Panis quem frangimus, nonne communicatio corporis Chriſti eſt? Quare non dixit participatio? Quia amplius quid ſignificare voluit, & multam inter hæc convenientiam oſtendere. Non enim participatione tantum & acceptione, ſed unitate communicamus. Quemadmodum enim corpus illud unitum eſt Chriſto, ita & nos per hunc panem unione conjungimur. That is, the bread which we breake, is it not the communication of Chriſts body? Wherefore did he not ſay participation? Becauſe hee would ſignifie ſome greater matter, and that he would declare a great convenience and coniunction betwixt the ſame. For we do not communicate by participation onely and receiving, but alſo by co-uniting. For likewiſe as that body is co-united to Chriſt, ſo alſo we by the ſame bread are conioyned and united to him.

Anſwer to Chryſoſtome.

Rid. Let Chryſoſtome have his manner of ſpeaking, and his ſentence. If it be true, I reiect it not. But let it not be preiudiciall to me to name it true bread.

In 1 Cor. cap. 10.

Wat. All (ſaith Chryſoſtome) which ſit together at one boord, doe communicate together of one true body. What doe I call (ſaith he) this communicating? We are all the ſelfe ſame body. What doth bread ſignifie? The body of Chriſt. What be they that receive it? The body of Chriſt. For many are but one body. Chryſoſtome doth interpret this place againſt you. All wee bee one bread, and one myſticall body, which doe participate together one bread of Chriſt.

Bread ſignifieth the body after Chryſoſt. One bread, one myſticall body.

Rid. All we be one myſticall body, which doe communicate of one Chriſt in bread, after the efficacie of regeneration or quickening.

Wat. Of what manner of bread ſpeaketh he?

Rid. Of the bread of the Lords Table.

Wat. Is that bread one?

Rid. It is one, of the Church being one, becauſe one bread is ſet forth upon the table: and ſo of one bread all together do participate which communicate at the table of the Lord.

Wat. See how abſurdly you ſpeake. Doe you ſay all which be from the beginning to the end of the world?

Rid. All, I ſay, which at one table together have communicated in the myſteries, might well ſo doe. Albeit the heavenly and celeſtiall bread is likewiſe one alſo, whereof the ſacramentall bread is a myſterie: the which being one, all we together do participate.

Watſon cavilleth about the word (All.)

Wat. A perverſe anſwer. Which all? Meane you all Chriſtian men?

Rid. I do diſtribute this word (All:) for all were wont together to communicate of one bread divided into parts. All, I ſay, which were one congregation, and which all did communicate together at one table.

Wat. What? doe you exclude then from the body of Chriſt all them which did not communicate, being preſent?

Cyprian. de cœna Dom.

Feck. But Cyprian ſaith, Panis quem nulla multitudo conſumit, i. Bread which no multitude doth conſume. Which cannot be underſtood but only of the body of Chriſt.

Rid. Alſo Cyprian in this place did ſpeake of the true body of Chriſt, and not of materiall bread.

M. Fecknams reaſon.

Feck. Nay, rather he did there intreat of the ſacrament in that tractation De cœna Domini, writing upon the Supper of the Lord.

Rid. Truth it is, and I grant he intreateth there of the ſacrament: but alſo he doth admire ſomething therewithall of the ſpirituall manducation.

Smith. When the Lord ſaith, This is my body, he uſeth no tropicall ſpeech:

Ergo, You are deceived.

Rid. I deny your antecedent.

August. in Pſal 33. Con. 1.

Smith. I bring here Auguſtine in Pſal. 33. Conc. 1. expounding theſe words, Ferebatur in manibus ſuis, i. Hee was carried in his owne hands, 1 Regum.

Hoc quomodo poſſit fieri in homine, quis intelligat? Manibus enim ſuis nemo portatur, ſed alienis. Quomodo intelligatur de David ſecundum literam, non invenimus; de Chriſto autem invenimus. Ferebatur enim Chriſtus in manibus ſuis cum diceret; Hoc eſt corpus meum. Ferebat enim illud corpus in manibus ſuis, &c. That is, How may this be underſtood to be done in man? For no man is carried in his owne hands, but in the hands of other. How this may be underſtood of David after the letter, we do not finde; Of Chriſt we finde it. For Chriſt was borne in his owne hands when he ſaith, This is my body, for he carried that ſame body in his owne hands, &c.

Auguſtine here did not ſee how this place after the letter could be underſtood of David, becauſe no man can carry himſelfe in his owne hands. Therefore, ſaith he, this place is to be underſtood of Chriſt after the letter. For Chriſt carried himſelfe in his owne hands in his Supper, when he gave the Sacrament to his Diſciples, ſaying, This is my body.

The place of Auguſtine anſwered.

Rid. I deny your argument, and I explicate the ſame. Auſtin could not finde after his owne underſtanding how this could be underſtood of David after the letter. Auſtin goeth here from other in this expoſition, but I goe not from him. But let this expoſition of Auſtin be granted to you; although I know this place of Scripture be otherwiſe read of other men, after the verity of the Hebrew text, and is alſo otherwiſe to be expounded. Yet to grant to you this expoſition of Auſtin, I ſay yet notwithſtanding it maketh nothing againſt my aſſertion: for Chriſt did beare himſelfe in his own hands, when he gave the ſacrament of his body to be eaten of his Diſciples.

Smith. Ergo, It is true of Chriſt after the letter, that he was born in his own hands.

Rid. He was borne literally, and after that letter which was ſpoken of David: but not after the letter of theſe words, Hoc eſt corpus meum.

The place of Auſtin, how Chriſt was carried in his hands ad literam, i. literally.

I grant that S. Auſtin ſaith, that it is not found literally of David, that he carried himſelfe in his owne hands, but that it is found of Chriſt. But this word, ad literam, literally, you doe not well referre to that which was borne, but rather it ought to be referred to him that did beare it. S. Auguſtines meaning is this; that it is not read any where in the Bible, that this carnall David, the ſonne of Jeſſe did beare himſelfe in his hands, but of that ſpirituall David that overthrew Goliah the Divell; that is, of Chriſt our Saviour, the ſonne of the Virgin, it may well be found literally, that he bare himſelfe in his own hands after a certaine manner, namely, in carrying the ſacrament of himſelfe. And note that S. Auſtin hath theſe words, quodam modo, after a certaine manner; which manifeſtly declare how the Doctors meaning is to be taken.

Ferebatur quodam modo in manibus ſuis.

Auguſt. i. Chriſt was borne in his owne hands ſacramentally.

Smith. When then was he borne in his owne hands, and after what letter?

Rid. He was borne in the Supper ſacramentally, when he ſaid, This is my body.

Smith. Every man may beare in his owne hands a "figure of his body.

"A figure he may beare, but not a ſacrament.

But Auguſtine denieth that David could carrie himſelfe in his hands.

Ergo, He ſpeaketh of no figure of his body.

Rid. If Auſtin could have found in all the Scripture, that David had carried the ſacrament of his body, then he would never have uſed that expoſition of Chriſt.

Smith. But he did beare himſelfe in his owne hands:

Ergo, He did not beare a figure onely.

Rid. He did beare himſelfe, but in a ſacrament: and Auſtin afterward addeth, quodam modo, that is, ſacramentally.

Quodam modo.

Smi. You underſtand not what Auſtin meant when he ſaid, quodam modo; for he meant that he did beare his very true body in that Supper, not in figure and forme of a body, but in forme and figure of bread.

Ergo, you are holden faſt, neither are you able to eſcape out of this labyrinth.

Doctor Weſton repeated this place againe in Engliſh. Which done, then Doctor Treſham began thus to ſpeake, moved (as it ſeemed to M. Ridley) with great zeale, and deſired that he might be in ſtead of John Baptiſt, in converting the hearts of the Fathers, and in reducing the ſaid Biſhop Ridley again to the mother Church. Now at the firſt, not knowing the perſon, he thought he had been ſome good old man, which had the zeale of God, although not according to knowledge, and began to anſwer him with manſuetude and reverence. But afterward he ſmelled a foxe under a ſheeps clothing.

D. Treſham prayeth for converting Ridley.

GOD Almighty grant that it may bee fulfilled in mee, that was ſpoken by the Prophet Malachi of Iohn Baptiſt, which may turne the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to their fathers, that you at length may be converted. The wiſe man ſaith, Sonne, honour thy father, and reverence thy mother. But you diſhonour your father in heaven, and pollute your mother the holy Church here on earth, while ye ſet not by it.

Rid. These by-words do pollute your Schoole.

Treſh. If there were an Arrian which had that ſubtill wit that you have, he might ſoone ſhift off the authority of the Scriptures and Fathers.

Weſt. Either diſpute, or elſe hold your peace, I pray you.

The decree of the Laterane Councell alledged for tranſubſtantiation. Of this Councell read before Treſh. I bring a place here out of the Councell of Laterane, the which Councell repreſenting the univerſall Church, wherein were congregated 300. Biſhops, and 70. Metropolitans, beſides a great multitude of other, decreed that bread and wine, by the power of Gods word, was tranſubſtantiate into the body and blood of the Lord. Therefore whoſoever ſaith contrary, cannot be a child of the Church, but an Heretike.

Rid. Good ſir, I have heard what you have cited out of the Councell of Laterane, and remember that there was a great multitude of Biſhops and Metropolitans, as you ſaid: but yet you have not numbred how many Abbots, Priors, and Friers were in that Councell, who were to the number of 800.

One of the Scribes carpeth againſt D. Ridley.

One of the Scribes. What, will you deny then the authority of that Councell for the multitude of thoſe Priors?

Of this Innocentius the third read before.

Rid. No ſir, not ſo much for that cauſe, as for that eſpecially, becauſe the doctrine of that Councell agreed not with the word of God, as it may well appeare by the acts of that Councell, which was holden under Innocentius the third, a man (if we beleeve the hiſtories) moſt pernicious to the Church and common-wealth of Chriſt.

Treſh. What, do you not receive the Councell of Laterane? Whereupon he with certaine other cried, Scribite, ſcribite, Write, write.

D. Ridley rejecteth the councel of Lateran. Good men do eat the very true body of Chriſt both ſacramentally and ſpiritually.

Rid. No ſir, I receive not that Councell; Scribite, & reſcribite, Write, and write againe.

Treſh. Evill men doe eat the naturall body of Chriſt.

Ergo, The true and naturall body of Chriſt is on the altar.

Rid. Evill men do eat the very true and naturall body of Chriſt ſacramentally, and no further, as S. Auguſtine ſaith: but good men doe eat the very true body both ſacramentally, and ſpiritually by grace.

Aug. lib. 5. cont. Don. ca. 8.

Treſh. I prove the contrary by S. Auſtin, Lib. 5. contra Donatiſtas cap. 8. Sicut enim Iudas, cui buccellulam Dominus tradidit, non malum accipiendo, ſed malè accipiendo peccavit, &c. Like as Judas, to whom the Lord gave the morſell, did offend, not in taking a thing that was evill, but in receiving it after an evill manner, &c. And a little after, Quia aliquis non ad ſalutem manducat, non ideo non eſt corpus, i. Becauſe ſome do not eat unto ſalvation, it followeth not therefore that it is not his body.

Manducare panem Domini, & panem Dominum. Aug.

Rid. It is the body to them, that is, the ſacrament of the body: and Judas tooke the ſacrament of the Lord to his condemnation. Auſtin hath diſtinguiſhed theſe things well in another place, where he ſaith, Panem Domini, & panem Dominum. Mali manducant panem Domini, non panem Dominum: boni autem manducant & panem Domini, & panem Dominum, i. The bread of the Lord, the bread the Lord. Evill men eat the bread of the Lord, but not bread the Lord. But good men eat both the bread of the Lord, and bread the Lord.

This Weſton ſpake in Engliſh

Weſt. Paul ſaith, the body, and you ſay, the ſacrament of the body.

Rid. Paul meaneth ſo indeed.

Wat. You underſtand it evill concerning the ſigne: For the Fathers ſay, that evill men doe eat him which deſcended from heaven.

Anno 1554.

The old Doctors do uſe many times the ſacrament for the matter of the ſacrament.

Rid. They eat him indeed, but ſacramentally. The Fathers uſe many times the ſacrament for the matter of the ſacrament, and all that ſame place maketh againſt you; and ſo here he cited the place.

Theophylact alledged.

Weſt. I bring Theophylact, which ſaith, that Judas did taſte the body of the Lord. Oſtendit Dominus crudelitatem Iudæ, qui cùm argueretur, non intellexit, & guſtavit carnem Domini, &c. i. The Lord did ſhew the cruelty of Judas, which, when he was rebuked, did not underſtand, and taſted the Lords fleſh, &c.

Anſwer.

Rid. This phraſe to Divines is well knowen, and uſed of the Doctors. He taſted the fleſh of the Lord Inſenſibiliter, Inſenſibly, that is, the ſacrament of the Lords fleſh.

Chryſoſtome alledged.

Weſt. Chryſoſtome ſaith, that the ſame puniſhment remaineth to them which receive the body of the Lord unworthily, as to them which crucifie him.

Chryſoſtome expounded.

Rid. That is, becauſe they defile the Lords body: for evill men do eat the body of Chriſt ſacramentally, but good men eat both the ſacrament and the matter of the ſacrament.

The Councell of Nice alledged.

Wat. You reject the Councell of Laterane, becauſe (you ſay) it agreeth not with Gods word. What ſay you then to the Councell of Nice? The words of the Councell be theſe, Ne humiliter ſpectemus propoſitum panem & potum, ſed exaltata mente fideliter credamus jacere in illa ſacra menſa Agnum Dei tollentem peccata mundi à Sacerdotibus ſacrificatum, i. Let us not looke alow by the ground upon the bread and the drinke ſet before us, but lifting up our minde let us faithfully beleeve, there upon the holy table to lye the Lambe of God taking away the ſinnes of the world, being ſacrificed of the Prieſts.

Rid. That Councell was collected out of ancient Fathers, and is to me of great authority; for it ſaith, Poſitum eſſe panem in altari, & exaltata mente conſiderandum eum qui in cœlis eſt, i. That bread is ſet upon the altar, and having our mindes lifted up, we muſt conſider him which is in heaven. The words of the Councell make for me.

Wat. (Exaltata mente) with a minde exalted: that is, not as bruit beaſts at the racke or manger, having an eye onely upon the thing that is ſet before them. Agnus Dei jacet in menſa, i. the “lambe of God lieth on the table, ſaith the Councell.

“If the Lambe of God do lie really upon the table, then why doth the Councell bid us lift up our mindes, which rather ſhould bid us let downe our mindes to the Altar? The place of the Nicene Councell expounded.

Rid. The Lambe of God is in heaven, according to the verity of the body: and here he is with us in a myſtery, according to his power, not corporally.

Wat. But the Lambe of God lieth on the table.

Rid. It is a figurative ſpeech, for in our minde we underſtand him which is in heaven.

Wat. But he lyeth there, the Greeke word is κεῖται.

Rid. He lyeth there, that is, he is there preſent, not corporally, but he lieth there in his operation.

Wat. He lyeth, but his operation lieth not.

Rid. You think very groſly of the ſitting or lying of the celeſtiall Lambe on the table of the Lord. For we may not imagine any ſuch ſitting or lying on the table, as the reaſon of man would judge: but all things are here to be underſtood ſpiritually. For that heavenly Lambe is (as I confeſſe) on the table, but by a ſpirituall preſence, by grace, and not after any corporall ſubſtance of his fleſh taken of the Virgin Marie.

And

Anno 1554

De conſecrat. diſt. 9.

And indeed the ſame Canon doth very plainly teach, that the bread which is ſet on the table is materiall bread; and therefore it (the Canon I meane) commandeth that we ſhould not creepe on the ground in our cogitation, to theſe things which are ſet before us; as who ſhould ſay, what other things are they (as much as pertaineth to their true ſubſtance) than bread and wine? but rather, ſaith the Canon, lifting up our mindes into heaven, let us conſider with faith the Lamb of God which taketh away the ſinnes of the world, ſitting or lying upon the table. For a lifted up faith, ſaith he, ſeeth him which ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father, after the true manner of a body, ſet by grace on the Lords table, and taking away the ſins of the world. For I think you meane not ſo, as though the Lambe did lie there proſtrate with his members ſpread upon the table.

Another place of the Nicene Councell alledged.

Smith. I bring another place out of the Councell of Nice, Nullus Apoſtolorum dixit, hæc eſt figura corporis Chriſti: Nullus venerabilium Preſbyterorum dixit incruentum altaris ſacrificium figuram, &c. i. None of the Apoſtles ſaid, this is a figure of the body of Chriſt: None of the reverend Elders ſaid, the unbloudy ſacrifice of the altar to be a figure.

Ergo, You are deceived.

Rid. This Canon is not in the Councell of Nice. For I have read over this Councell many times.

Out of Doctor Ridleyes copy. The Councell of Florence alledged.

Then came in another whom M. Ridley knew not, and ſaid, The univerſall Church both of the Greekes and Latines, of the Eaſt and of the Weſt, have agreed in the Councell of Florence uniformely in the doctrine of the ſacrament, that in the ſacrament of the altar there is the true and reall body.

Rid. I deny the Greeke and the Eaſt Church to have agreed either in the Councell at Florence, or at any time elſe, with the Romiſh Church in the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation of bread into the body of Chriſt. For there was nothing in the Councell of Florence, wherein the Greekes would agree with the Romaniſts; albeit hitherto I confeſſe it was left free for every Church to uſe, as they were wont, leavened or unleavened bread.

Here cried out Doctor Cole, and ſaid, they agreed together concerning Tranſubſtantiation of bread into the body of Chriſt. Maſter Ridley ſaid that could not be.

One of the Scribes.

Here ſtart up another unknowne to Maſter Ridley, but thought to be one of the Scribes, who affirmed with him, that indeed there was nothing decreed concerning Tranſubſtantiation, but the Councell left that, as a matter not meet nor worthy to diſturbe the peace and concord of the Church. To whom M. Ridley anſwered againe, ſaying, that he ſaid the truth.

M. Pie diſputeth againſt B. Ridley.

Pie. What ſay you to that Councell, where it is ſaid, that the Prieſt doth offer an unbloudy ſacrifice of the body of Chriſt?

Rid. I ſay, it is well ſaid, if it be rightly underſtood.

Pie. But he offereth an unbloudy ſacrifice.

Sacrifice called unbloudy is nothing elſe but a repreſentation of the bloudy ſacrifice of Chriſt.

Rid. It was called unbloudy, and is offered after a certaine manner, and in a myſtery, and as a repreſentation of that bloudy ſacrifice, and he doth not lie which ſaith Chriſt to be offered.

Weſton playeth Goliah with David.

Weſt. I with one argument will throw down to the ground your opinion, out of Chryſoſtome, Hom. 24. in 1. ad Cor. and I will teach, not only a figure and ſigne, or grace onely, but the very ſame body, which was here converſant on the earth, to be in the Euchariſt.

We worſhip the ſelf ſame body in ẏ Euchariſt, which the wiſe men did worſhip in the manger.

But that was his naturall and reall body, not ſpirituall:

This argument, after the diſpoſition and termes, as it ſtandeth, is not formall.

Ergo, The reall body of Chriſt is in the Euchariſt.

Againe, the ſame Chryſoſtome ſaith, We have not here the Lord in the manger, but on the altar. Here a woman holdeth him not in her hands, but a Prieſt.

Rid. We worſhip, I confeſſe, the ſame true Lord and Saviour of the world, which the wiſe men worſhipped in the manger, howbeit we doe it in a myſtery, and in the ſacrament of the Lords Supper, and that in ſpirituall liberty, as ſaith S. Auſt. lib. 3. De doctrina Chriſtiana: not in carnall ſervitude; that is, we doe not worſhip ſervilely the ſignes for the things: for that ſhould be, as he alſo ſaith, a part of a ſervile infirmity. But we behold with the eys of faith him preſent after grace, and ſpiritually ſet upon the table; and we worſhip him which ſitteth above, and is worſhipped of the Angels. For Chriſt is alwaies aſſiſtant to his myſteries, as the ſaid Auguſtine ſaith. And the divine Maieſty, as ſaith Cyprian, doth never abſent it ſelfe from the divine myſteries; but this aſſiſtance and preſence of Chriſt, as in Baptiſme it is wholly ſpirituall, and by grace, and not by any corporall ſubſtance of the fleſh: even ſo it is here in the Lords Supper, being rightly and according to the word of God duly miniſtred.

Weſt. That which the woman did hold in her womb, the ſame thing holdeth the Prieſt.

The ſame thing, but the manner divers

Rid. I grant the Prieſt holdeth the ſame thing, but after another manner. She did hold the naturall body; the Prieſt holdeth the myſtery of the body.

Weſt. Weſton repeated againe his argument out of Chryſoſtome in Engliſh.

Rid. I ſay that the author meant it ſpiritually.

Weſt. Weſton here diſſolving the diſputations, had theſe words: Videtis præfractum hominis animum, glorioſum, vafrum, inconſtantem: videtis hodie veritatis vires inconcuſſas. Itaque clamate, Vicit veritas, i. Here you ſee the ſtubborne, the boaſting, the crafty, the unconſtant mind of this man. Here you ſee this day, that the ſtrength of the truth is without foile. Therefore I beſeech you all moſt earneſtly to blow the note; and he began, and they followed, Verity hath the victory, Verity hath the victory.

D. Weſton bloweth up the triumph.

The diſputation had at Oxford the 18. day of Aprill, 1554. between M. Hugh Latimer Anſwerer, and M. Smith, and other Oppoſers.

M. Hugh Latimer diſputeth. Aprill 18.

After theſe diſputations of Biſhop Ridley ended, next was brought out Maſter Hugh Latimer to diſpute, upon Wedneſday, which was the eighteenth day of Aprill. Which diſputation began at eight of the clock, in ſuch forme as before: but it was moſt in Engliſh. For Maſter Latimer the Anſwerer alledged that he was out of uſe with the Latine, and unfit for that place.

M. Smith of Oriall colledge Opponent to M. Latimer

There replied unto him Maſter Smith of Oriall Colledge, Doctor Cartwright, M. Harpsfield, and divers other had ſnatches at him, and gave him bitter taunts. He eſcaped no hiſſings and ſcornfull laughings, no more than they that went before him. He was very faint, and deſired that he might not long tarry. He durſt not drinke for feare of vomiting. The diſputation ended before eleven of the clock. Maſter Latimer was not ſuffered to read that he had (as he ſaid) painfully written: but it was exhibited up, and the Prolocutor read part thereof, and ſo proceeded unto the diſputation.

M. Latimers writings could not be read.

The Preface of Weſton unto the diſputation following.

Weſtons Preface.

Men and brethren, we are come together this day (by the helpe of God) to vanquiſh the ſtrength of the arguments, and diſperſed opinions of adverſaries, againſt the truth of the reall preſence of the Lords body in the Sacrament. And therefore, you father, if you have any thing to anſwer, I do admoniſh that you anſwer in ſhort and few words.

M. Latimer requireth to diſpute in the Engliſh tongue

Latimer. I pray you good Maſter Prolocutor, doe not exact that of me, which is not in me, I have not theſe twenty yeeres much uſed the Latine tongue.

Weſt. Take your eaſe, father.

Lat. I thank you ſir, I am well. Let me here proteſt my faith, for I am not able to diſpute; and afterwards do your pleaſure with me.

The proteſtation of M. Hugh Latimer, given up in writing to Doctor Weſton.

The concluſions whereunto I muſt anſwer, are theſe:

The three concluſions.

1. The firſt is, that in the ſacrament of the altar, by the vertue of Gods word pronounced by the Prieſt, there is really preſent the naturall body of Chriſt, conceived of the Virgin Mary, under the kindes of the appearance of bread and wine; and in like manner his bloud.
2. The ſecond is, that after conſecration there remaineth no ſubſtance of bread and wine, nor any other ſubſtance, but the ſubſtance of God and man.
3. The third is, that in the Maſſe there is the lively ſacrifice of the Church, which is propitiable, as well for the ſinnes of the quicke, as of the dead.

The anſwers of M. Latimer given up in writing concerning the queſtions aforeſaid.

Concerning the firſt concluſion, me thinketh it is ſet forth with certaine new found termes that be obſcure, and doe not ſound according to the ſpeech of the Scripture. Howbeit, howſoever I underſtand it, this I doe anſwer plainly, though not without perill; I anſwer, I ſay, that to the right celebration of the Lords Supper there is no other preſence of Chriſt required, than a ſpirituall preſence: and this preſence is ſufficient for a Chriſtian man, as a preſence by which we abide in Chriſt, and Chriſt abideth in us, to the obtaining of eternall life, if we perſevere. And this ſame preſence may be called moſt fitly a reall preſence, that is, a preſence not feined, but a true and a faithfull preſence. Which thing I here rehearſe, leſt ſome ſycophant or ſcorner ſhould ſuppoſe me, with the Anabaptiſts, to make nothing elſe of the ſacrament, but a naked and a bare ſigne. As for that which is feined of many concerning their corporall preſence, I for my part take it but for a Papiſticall invention; therefore think it utterly to be rejected.

The preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament, how it is a reall preſence.

Anſwer to the ſecond concluſion.

Concerning the ſecond concluſion, I dare be bold to ſay, that it hath no ſtay or ground in Gods word, but is a thing invented and found out by man; and therefore to be taken as fond and falſe: and I had almoſt ſaid, as the Mother and Nurſe of the other errors. It were good for my lords and maſters of the tranſubſtantiation, to take heed leſt they conſpire with the Neſtorians, for I do not ſee how they can avoid it.

Anſwer to the third concluſion.

Heb. 1.

The third concluſion (as I doe underſtand it) ſeemeth ſubtilly to ſow ſedition againſt the offering which Chriſt himſelfe offered for us in his owne proper perſon, according to that pithie place of Paul, Heb. 1. where he ſaith, That Chriſt his owne ſelfe hath made purgation of our ſinnes. And afterward, That he might (ſaith he) be a mercifull and a faithfull biſhop, concerning thoſe things which are to be done with God, for the taking away of our ſinnes. So that the expiation or taking away of our ſinnes may be thought rather to depend on this, that Chriſt was an offering Biſhop, than that he was offered, were it not that he was offered of himſelfe: and therefore it is needleſſe that he ſhould be offered of any other. I will ſpeak nothing of the wonderfull preſumption of man, to dare to attempt this thing without a manifeſt vocation, ſpecially in that it tendeth to the overthrowing and making fruitleſſe (if not wholly, yet partly) of the Croſſe of Chriſt; for truly it is no baſe or meane thing to offer Chriſt. And therefore worthily a man may ſay to my lords and maſters the offerers: By what authority doe ye this? and who gave you this authority? Where? when? A man cannot (ſaith the Baptiſt) take any thing, except it be given him from above: much leſſe then may any man preſume to uſurpe any honour, before he be thereto called. Againe, If any man ſin (ſaith S. John) we have (ſaith he) not a maſter or offerer at home, which can ſacrifice for us at maſſe; but we have (ſaith he) an Advocate Ieſus Chriſt, which once offered himſelfe long agoe; of which offering the efficacie and effect is perdurable for ever, ſo that it is needleſſe to have ſuch offerers.

The taking away of ſins dependeth rather in the perſon of the offerer, than in the thing offered, but that he that was the offerer was offered himſelfe.

1 John 2.

What meaneth Paul, when he ſaith, They that ſerve at the altar, are partakers of the altar? and ſo addeth; So the Lord hath ordained, that they that preach the Goſpell, ſhall live of the Goſpell. Whereas he ſhould have ſaid, The Lord hath ordained, that they that ſacrifice at maſſe, ſhould live of their ſacrificing, that there might be a living aſſigned to our ſacrificers now, as was before Chriſts comming, to the Jewiſh Prieſts. For now they have nothing to alledge for their living, as they that be Preachers have. So that it appeareth, that the ſacrificing Prieſthood is changed by Gods ordinance into a preaching Prieſthood, and the ſacrificing Prieſthood ſhould ceaſe utterly, ſaving in as much as all Chriſtian men are ſacrificing Prieſts.

The ſacrificing Prieſthood changed into a preaching Prieſthood

The Supper of the Lord was inſtituted to provoke us to thankſgiving for the offering which the Lord himſelfe did offer for us, much rather than that our offerers ſhould doe there as they doe. Feed (ſaith Peter) as much as ye may the flock of Chriſt: nay rather let us ſacrifice as much as we may for the flocke of Chriſt. If ſo be the matter be as now men make it, I can never wonder enough, that Peter would or could forget this office of ſacrificing, which at this day is in ſuch a price and eſtimation, that to feed is almoſt nothing with many. If thou ceaſe from feeding the flocke, how ſhalt thou be taken? truly Catholike enough. But if thou ceaſe from ſacrificing and maſſing, how will that be taken? at the leaſt, I warrant thee, thou ſhalt be called an Heretike. And whence, I pray you, come theſe Papiſticall judgements? Except perchance they think a man feedeth the flock in ſacrificing for them: and then what needeth there any learned Paſtors? For no man is ſo fooliſh, but ſoone may he learne to ſacrifice and maſſe it.

The finall cauſe why the Lords Supper was chiefly ordained.

Sacrificing taketh away preaching.

Prepoſterous judgement of Papiſts.

Thus loe, I have taken the more paine to write, becauſe I refuſed to diſpute, in conſideration of my debility thereunto: that all men may know, how that I have ſo done not without great paines, having not any man to helpe me, as I have never before beene debarred to have. O ſir, you may chance to live till you come to this age and weakeneſſe that I am of.

I have

Anno 1554.

M. Latimer found more audience with Kings and Princes, than with ruſticall Divines.

I have ſpoken in my time before two Kings more than once, two or three houres together, without interruption: but now, that I may ſpeake the truth (by your leave) I could not be ſuffered to declare my minde before you, no, not by the ſpace of a quarter of an houre, without ſnatches, revilings, checkes, rebukes, taunts, ſuch as I have not felt the like, in ſuch an audience, all my life long. Surely it cannot be but an heinous offence that I have given. But what was it? Forſooth I had ſpoken of the foure marrowbones of the Maſſe. The which kinde of ſpeaking I never read to be a ſinne againſt the Holy Ghoſt.

I could not be allowed to ſhew what I meant by my metaphor: But ſir, now by your favour I will tell your Maſterſhip what I meane.

The foure marrow-bones of the Maſſe by M. Latimer expounded. Conſecration, Tranſubſtantiation, Oblation, Adoration.

The firſt is the Popiſh conſecration, which hath been called a Gods body making.

The ſecond is Tranſubſtantiation.

The third is Miſſall oblation.

The fourth adoration.

Theſe chief and principall portions, parts and points belonging or incident to the Maſſe, and moſt eſteemed and had in price in the ſame, I call the marrowbones of the Maſſe, which indeed you by force, might, and violence intrude in ſound of words in ſome of the Scripture, with racking and cramping, iniuring and wronging the ſame: but els indeed, plaine out of the Scripture, as I am thorowly perſwaded, although in diſputation I now could nothing do to perſwade the ſame to others, being both unapt to ſtudy, and alſo to make a ſhew of my former ſtudy in ſuch readineſſe as ſhould be requiſite to the ſame.

The iudgment of M. Latimer of D. Weſton.

I have heard much talke of Maſter Doctor Weſton to and fro in my time: but I never knew your perſon to my knowledge, till I came before you, as the Queenes Maieſties Commiſſioner. I pray God ſend you ſo right iudgement, as I perceive you have a great wit, great learning, with many other qualities. God give you grace ever well to uſe them, and ever to have in remembrance, that he that dwelleth on high, looketh on the low things on the earth; and that there is no counſell againſt the Lord; and alſo that this world hath beene, and yet is a tottering world. And yet again, that though we muſt obey the Princes, yet that hath this limitation, namely, in the Lord. For who ſo doth obey them againſt the Lord, they be moſt pernicious to them, and the greateſt adverſaries that they have: for they ſo procure Gods vengeance upon them, if God be only the ruler of things.

Pride of Doct. Weſton privily touched.

Obedience to Princes hath his limitation.

Knowledge without Chriſt is meere ignorance.

There be ſome ſo corrupt in minde, the truth being taken from them, that they thinke gaine to be godlineſſe; Great learned men, and yet men of no learning, but of railing, and raging about queſtions and ſtrife of words. I call them men of no learning, becauſe they know not Chriſt, how much elſe ſoever they know. And on this ſort we are wont to call great learned Clerkes, being ignorant of Chriſt, unlearned men; for it is nothing but plaine ignorance, to know any thing without Chriſt: whereas who ſo knoweth Chriſt, the ſame hath knowledge enough, although in other knowledge he be to ſeeke. The Apoſtle S. Paul confeſſeth of himſelf to the Corinthians, that he did know nothing but Ieſus Chriſt crucified. Many men babble many things of Chriſt which yet know not Chriſt; but pretending Chriſt, do craftily colour and darken his glory. Depart from ſuch men, ſaith the Apoſtle S. Paul to Timothy.

Many there be which under pretence of Chriſt darken the glory of Chriſt.

Auguſtine.

It is not out of the way to remember what Saint Auguſtine ſaith. The place where, I now well remember not, except it be againſt the Epiſtles of Petilian; Whoſoever (ſaith hee) teacheth any thing neceſſarily to bee believed, which is not contained in the old and New Teſtament, the ſame is accurſed. Oh beware of this curſe if you be wiſe. I am much deceived if Baſilius have not ſuch like words; Whatſoever (ſaith he) is beſides the holy Scripture, if the ſame bee taught as neceſſarily to bee believed, that is ſinne. Oh therefore take heed of this ſinne.

Baſilius.

There be ſome that ſpeak many falſe things more probable, and more like to the truth, than the truth it ſelfe. Therefore Paul giveth a watchword; Let no man (ſaith he) deceive you with probability and perſwaſions of words. But what meane you, ſaith one, by this talke ſo farre from the matter? Well, I hope, good Maſters, you will ſuffer an old man a little to play the child, and to ſpeak one thing twice. O Lord God, you have changed the moſt holy Communion into a private action; and you deny to the Laity the Lords Cup, contrary to Chriſts commandement: and you doe blemiſh the annunciation of the Lords death till he come: for you have changed the Common prayer, called the divine Service, with the adminiſtration of the ſacraments, from the vulgar and knowne language, into a ſtrange tongue, contrary to the will of the Lord revealed in his word. God open the doore of your heart, to ſee the things you ſhould ſee herein. I would as faine obey my Soveraigne as any in this Realme: but in theſe things I can never do it with an upright conſcience. God be mercifull unto us. Amen.

The abſurdities of the Papiſts opened in abaſing the Lords Supper.

West. Then refuſe you to diſpute? Will you here then ſubſcribe?

Lat. No, good Maſter, I pray be good to an old man. You may, if it pleaſe God, be once old, as I am: you may come to this age, and to this debility.

But God ſaw it good that Weſton never came to his age.

West. Ye ſaid upon Saturday laſt, that ye could not finde the Maſſe, nor the marrow-bones thereof in your book: but we will finde a Maſſe in that book.

Lat. No, good M. Doctor, ye cannot.

West. What finde you then there?

Lat. Forſooth a Communion I finde there.

West. Which Communion, " the firſt or ẏ laſt?

" By this firſt and ſecond communion, he meaneth the two bookes of publike order ſet forth in K. Edwards dayes, the one in the beginning, the other in the later end of his reigne.

Lat. I find no great diverſity in them; they are one ſupper of ẏ Lord: but I like ẏ laſt very well.

West. Then the firſt was naught belike.

La. I do not well remember wherin they differ.

West. Then cake bread and loafe bread are all one with you. Ye call it the Supper of the Lord, but you are deceived in that: for they had done the ſupper before; and therefore the Scripture ſaith, Poſtquam cœnatum eſt, i. After they had ſupped. For ye know that S. Paul findeth fault with the Corinthians, for that ſome of them were drunken at this ſupper; and ye know no man can be drunken at your Communion.

D. Weſton cavilleth againſt the name of the Lords Supper

Lat. The firſt was called Cœna Iudaica, i. The Jewiſh Supper, when they did eat the Paſchall Lamb together: the other was called Cœna Dominica, i. The Lords Supper.

Cœna Iudaica.

Cœna Dominica.

West. That is falſe; for Chryſoſtome denieth that. And S. Ambroſe in cap. 10. prioris ad Corinthios, ſaith, that Myſterium euchariſtiæ inter cœnandum datum, non eſt Cœna Dominica, i. The myſtery of the ſacrament, given as they were at ſupper, is not the Supper of the Lord.

Chryſoſt. in 1 Cor. cap. 10

And Gregory Nazianzene ſaith the ſame, Rurſus Paſche ſacra cum Diſcipulis in cœnaculo ac poſt cœnam, dieque unica ante paſſionem celebrat. Nos verò ea in orationis domibus, & ante cœnam & poſt reſurrectionem peragimus: that is, Againe hee kept the holy feaſt of Paſſeover with his Diſciples in the dining chamber after the ſupper, and one day before his Greg. Nazianz.

Paſſion. But we keepe it both in the Churches and houſes of prayer, both before the Supper, and alſo after the reſurrection.

ἀγάπη, i. So were the feaſts called wont to be given to the poore.

And that firſt Supper was called ἀγάπη: can you tell what that is?

Lat. I underſtand no Greeke. Yet I think it meaneth charity.

Weſton. Will you have all things done that Chriſt did then? Why, then muſt the Prieſt be hanged on the morrow. And where finde you, I pray you, that a woman ſhould receive the ſacrament?

Weſton oppoſed in his Grammar. δοκιμαζέτω ὁ ἄνθρωπος ἑαυτόν. 1 Cor. 11.

Lat. Will you give mee leave to turne my booke? I finde it in the 11. Chapter to the Corinthians. I trow theſe be his words, Probet autem ſeipſum homo, &c.

I pray you good Maſter, what gender is homo?

Weſt. Marry the common gender,

Cole. It is in the Greeke, ὁ ἄνθρωπος.

Harpſ. It is ἀνήρ, that is, vir.

Lat. It is in my booke of Eraſmus tranſlation, Probet ſeipſum homo.

Feck. It is Probet ſeipſum indeed, and therfore it importeth the Maſculine gender.

Lat. What then? I trow when the woman touched Chriſt, he ſaid, Quis tetigit me? Scio quòd aliquis me tetigit, i. Who touched me? I know that ſome man touched me.

Argument.

Weſt. I will be at hoſt with you anon. When Chriſt was at his ſupper, none were with him but his Apoſtles only.

Ergo, He meant no woman, if you will have his inſtitution kept.

The Apoſtles repreſented the whole Church.

Lat. In the twelve Apoſtles was repreſented the whole Church, in which you will grant both men and women to be.

Weſton ſcorned the name of Miniſter.

Weſt. So through the whole hereticall tranſlated Bible ye never make mention of Prieſt, till ye come to the putting of Chriſt to death. Where finde you then that a Prieſt or Miniſter (a Minſtrell I may call him well enough) ſhould doe it of neceſſity?

The name of Miniſter more fit than the name of Prieſt.

Lat. A Miniſter is a more fit name for that office; for yͤ name of a Prieſt importeth a ſacrifice.

Weſt. Well, remember that ye cannot finde that a woman may receive by Scripture. Maſter Opponent fall to it.

Smith. Becauſe I perceive that this charge is laid upon my neck to diſpute with you: to the end that the ſame may go forward after a right manner and order, I will propoſe three queſtions, ſo as they are put forth unto me. And firſt I aſke this queſtion of you, although the ſame indeed ought not to be called in queſtion: but ſuch is the condition of the Church, that it is alwayes vexed of the wicked ſort. I aſk, I ſay, whether Chriſts body be really in the ſacrament?

M. Latimer modeſtly maketh himſelfe unable to diſpute.

Lat. I truſt I have obtained of M. Prolocutor, that no man ſhall exact that thing of me which is not in me. And I am ſorry that this worſhipfull audience ſhould be deceived of their expectation for my ſake. I have given up my minde in writing to M. Prolocutor.

Smith. Whatſoever ye have given up, it ſhall be regiſtred among the Acts.

Lat. Diſputation requireth a good memory; Aſt abolita eſt mihi memoria. My memory is gone cleane, and marvellouſly weakened, and never the better, I wis, for the priſon.

Weſt. How long have ye been in priſon?

Lat. This three quarters of this yeere.

Weſt. And I was in priſon ſixe yeeres.

Lat. The more pitie, ſir.

Weſt. How long have you bin of this opinion?

Lat. It is not long, ſir, that I have been of this opinion.

Weſt. The time hath been when you ſaid Maſſe full devoutly.

Then they hiſt and clapt their hands at him.

Lat. Yea, I cry God mercy heartily for it.

Weſt. Where learned you this new fanglenes?

M. Latimer confirmed by D. Cranmers book.

Lat. I have long ſought for the truth in this matter of the ſacrament, and have not beene of this minde paſt ſeven yeeres: and my L. of Canterburies booke hath eſpecially confirmed my judgement herein. If I could remember all therein contained, I would not feare to anſwer any man in this matter.

Treſh. There are in that booke 600. errours.

Weſt. You were once a Lutheran.

The zeale of M. Latimer ſometimes in Popery againſt the Tygurines.

Lat. No, I was a Papiſt: For I never could perceive how Luther could defend his opinion without tranſubſtantiation. The Tigurines once did write a booke againſt Luther, and I oft deſired God that he might live ſo long to make them anſwer.

In that booke the divell doth not diſſwade him ſo much from ſaying Maſſe, as he laboureth to bring him to deſperation for ſaying Maſſe: ſuch temptations many times happen to good men.

Weſt. Luther in his booke De privata Miſſa, ſaid, that the divell reaſoned with him, and perſwaded him that the Maſſe was not good, Fol. 14. Contigit me, &c. Whereof it may appeare, that Luther ſaid Maſſe, and the divell diſſwaded him from it.

Lat. I do not take in hand here to defend Luthers ſayings or doings. If he were here, he would defend himſelfe well enough I trow. I told you before that I am not meet for diſputations. I pray you read mine anſwer, wherein I have declared my faith.

Weſt. Doe you beleeve this, as you have written?

Lat. Yea, ſir.

Weſt. Then have you no faith.

Lat. Then would I be ſorry, ſir.

Here Treſham began to diſpute in Latine.

Treſh. It is written, John 6. Except ye ſhall eat the fleſh of the ſonne of man, and drinke his blood, ye ſhall have no life in you. Which when the Capernaites and many of Chriſts Diſciples heard, they ſaid, This is a hard ſaying, &c. Now that the truth may the better appeare, here I aſk of you, whether Chriſt ſpeaking theſe words did meane of his fleſh to be eaten with the mouth, or of the ſpirituall eating of the ſame?

Lat. I anſwer (as Auguſtine underſtandeth) yͭ Chriſt meant of yͤ ſpirituall eating of his fleſh.

Treſh. Of what fleſh meant Chriſt, his true fleſh, or no?

Lat. Of his true fleſh, ſpiritually to be eaten in the Supper by faith, and not corporally.

Treſh. Of what fleſh meant the Capernaites?

Lat. Of his true fleſh alſo; but to be eaten with the mouth.

D. Treſhams argument without forme or mood, concluding affirmatively in the ſecond figure.

Treſ. They (as ye confeſſe) did meane his true fleſh to be eaten with the mouth. And Chriſt alſo (as I ſhall prove) did ſpeak of the receiving of his fleſh with the mouth.

Ergo, they both did underſtand it of yͤ eating of one thing, which is done by the mouth of the body.

Lat. I ſay, Chriſt underſtood it not of the bodily mouth; but of the mouth of the ſpirit, minde, and heart.

D. Treſham flyeth to cuſtome.

Treſh. I prove the contrary, that Chriſt underſtandeth it of the eating with the bodily mouth. For whereas cuſtome is a right good miſtreſſe and interpreter of things, and whereas the acts put in practice by Chriſt, do certainly declare thoſe things which he firſt ſpake: Chriſts deeds in his Supper, where he gave his body to be taken with the mouth, together with the cuſtome which hath beene ever ſince that time of that eating which is done with the mouth, doth evidently inferre that Chriſt did underſtand his words, here cited of me out of the ſixth of John, of the eating with the mouth.

The ſacrament given to the mouth, the body to faith.

Lat. He gave not his body to be received with the mouth, but he gave the ſacrament of his body to be received with the mouth: he gave the ſacrament to the mouth, his body to the minde.

Treſh.

Anno 1554.

Treſh. But my reaſon doth conclude, that Chriſt ſpake concerning his fleſh to be receiued with the corporall mouth: for otherwiſe (which God forbid) he had beene a deceiuer, and had been offenſiue to the Capernaites and his Diſciples, if he had not meant in this point as they thought he meant: for if he had thought as you doe feigne, it had beene an eaſie matter for him to haue ſaid: "You ſhall not eat my fleſh with your mouth, but the ſacrament of my fleſh; that is to ſay, ye ſhall receiue with your mouth not the thing it ſelfe, but the figure of the thing, and thus he might haue ſatisfied them: but ſo he ſaid not, but continued in the truth of his words, as he was wont. Therefore Chriſt meant the ſelfe ſame thing that the Capernaites did, I meane concerning the thing it ſelfe to be receiued with the mouth, videlicet, that his true fleſh is truly to be eaten with the mouth. Moreouer, foraſmuch as you doe expound for (corpus Chriſti) the body of Chriſt (ſacramentum corporis Chriſti) the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt, and hereby doe ſuppoſe that we obtaine but a ſpirituall union, or union of the minde betweene us and Chriſt, plaine it is, that you are deceiued in this thing, and doe erre from the minde of the Fathers: for they affirme by plaine and expreſſe words, that we are corporally and carnally ioyned together. And theſe be the words of Hilary, Si verè igitur carnem corporis noſtri Chriſtus aſſumpſit, & verè homo ille qui ex Maria natus fuit; nos quoque verè ſub myſterio carnem corporis ſui ſumimus, & per hæc unum erimus, quia pater in eo eſt, & ille in nobis: Quomodo voluntatis unitas aſſeritur, cum naturalis per ſacramentum proprietas perfectè ſacramentum ſit unitatis? That is, Therefore if Chriſt did truly take the fleſh of our body upon him, and the ſame man be Chriſt indeed which was borne of Mary; then we alſo doe receiue under a myſtery the fleſh of his bodie indeed, and thereby ſhall become one, becauſe the Father is in him, and he in us. How is the unity of will affirmed, when a naturall propriety by the ſacrament is a perfect ſacrament of unity?

"And what doth Chriſt els meane by theſe words where he ſaith, My words be ſpirit and life; the fleſh profiteth nothing.

Thus farre hath Hilary. Lo here you ſee how manifeſtly theſe words confound your aſſertion. To be ſhort, I my ſelfe haue heard you preaching at Greenewich before King Henry the eighth, where you did openly affirme, that no Chriſtian man ought to doubt of the true and reall preſence of Chriſts body in the ſacrament, foraſmuch as he had the word of Scripture on his ſide, (videlicet) Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body: whereby he might be confirmed. But now there is the ſame truth; the word of Scripture hath the ſelfe ſame thing which it then had. Therefore why do you deny at this preſent that, whereof it was not lawfull once to doubt before when you taught it?

M. Latimer charged to preach the contrary doctrine before the king at Greenwich.

Lat. Will you giue me leaue to ſpeak?

Treſh. Speak Latine, I pray you, for ye can do it, if ye liſt, promptly enough.

Lat. I cannot ſpeake Latine ſo long and ſo largely. M. Prolocutor hath giuen me leaue to ſpeak Engliſh. And as for the words of Hilary, I think they make not ſo much for you. But he that ſhall anſwer the Doctors had not need to be in my caſe, but ſhould haue them in a readineſſe, and know their purpoſe. Melancthon ſaith, if the Doctors had foreſeene that they ſhould haue beene ſo taken in this controuerſie, they would haue written more plainly.

Melancthons iudgement of the old Doctors.

Smith. I will reduce the words of Hilary into the forme of a ſyllogiſme.

Argument.

Da- Such as is the unity of our fleſh with Chriſts fleſh, ſuch (yea greater) is the unity of Chriſt with the Father.

ti- But the unity of Chriſts fleſh with ours is true and ſubſtantiall.

ſi. Ergo, The unity of Chriſt with the Father is true and ſubſtantiall.

Lat. I underſtand you not.

Seaton. I know your learning well enough, and how ſubtill ye be: I will uſe a few words with you, and that out of Cyprian, De cœna Domini. The old Teſtament doth forbid the drinking of blood; The new Teſtament doth command the drinking and taſting of blood: but where doth it command the drinking of blood?

D. Seaton reaſoneth againſt M. Latimer out of Cyprian.

Lat. In theſe words, Bibite ex hoc omnes, i. Drink ye all of this.

Seat. Then we taſte true blood.

Lat. We doe taſte true blood, but ſpiritually; and this is enough.

Seat. Nay, the old and new Teſtament in this doe "differ: for the one doth command, and the other doth forbid to drink blood.

"By that reaſon the new and old Teſtament ſhould not differ, but ſhould be contrary one from the other, which cannot be true in naturall or morall precepts.

Lat. It is true as touching the matter, but not as touching the manner of the thing.

Seat. Then there is no difference betweene the drinking of blood in the new Teſtament, and that of the old: for they alſo drank ſpiritually.

Lat. And we drink ſpiritually alſo, but a more precious blood.

Weſt. Auguſtine upon the 45. Pſalme ſaith, Securè bibite ſanguinem quem fudiſtis: That is, Drinke boldly the blood which yee haue powred out.

Ergo, It is blood.

Lat. I neuer denied it, nor euer will I goe from it, but that we drink the very blood of Chriſt indeed, but ſpiritually: for the ſame S. Auguſtine ſaith, Crede, & manducaſti, i. Beleeue, and thou haſt eaten.

Weſt. Nay, Credere, non eſt bibere nec edere. i. To beleeue, is not to drink or eat. You will not ſay, I pledge you, when I ſay, I beleeue in God.

Lat. Is not (manducare) to eat, in your learning put for (credere) to beleeue?

Weſt. I remember my L. Chancellor demanded M. Hooper of theſe queſtions, whether "(edere) to eat, were (credere) to beleeue, and (altare) an altar, were Chriſt in all the Scripture, &c. And he anſwered, yea.

Then ſaid my L. Chancellor, Why then "Habemus altare de quo non licet edere, i. We haue an altar of which it is not lawfull to eat, is as much to ſay, as Habemus Chriſtum, in quo non licet credere, i. We haue a Chriſt, in whom we may not beleeue.

"Edere in ſome places is taken for credere: but that in all places it is ſo taken, it followeth not.

"This place of the Hebrews alluded to the old ſacrifice of the Iews, who, in the feaſt of propitiation the tenth day, uſed to carry the fleſh of the ſacrifice out of the tents to be burned on an altar without, becauſe none of them which ſerued in the Tabernacle ſhould eat thereof: onely the bloud was carried by the high Prieſt into the holy place.

Treſh. Beleeue, and thou haſt eaten, is ſpoken of the ſpirituall eating.

Lat. It is true, I do allow your ſaying; I take it ſo alſo.

Weſt. We are commanded to drink blood in the new law.

Ergo, it is very blood.

Lat. We drink blood, ſo as appertaineth to us to drink to our comfort, in ſacramentall wine. We drink blood ſacramentally: he gaue us his blood to drink ſpiritually, he went about to ſhew, that as certainly as we drink wine, ſo certainly we drink his blood ſpiritually.

Weſt. Do not you ſeeme to be a Papiſt, which do bring in new words, not found in Scripture? Where finde you that (ſacramentaliter) ſacramentally, in Gods book?

La. It is neceſſarily gathered upon Scripture.

Weſt. The old Teſtament doth forbid the taſting of blood, but the new doth command it.

Lat. It is true, not as touching the thing, but as touching the manner thereof.

Weſt. Heare ye people, this is the argument.

That which was forbidden in the old Teſtament, is commanded in the new.

To drinke blood was forbidden in the old Teſtament, and commanded in the new.

Ergo, it is very blood that we drink in the new.

¶ This argument, becauſe the major thereof is not univerſall, is not formall, and may well be retorted againſt Weſton thus.

D. Weſtons argument retorted againſt himſelfe.

Ce- No naturall or morall thing, forbidden materially in the old Teſtament, is commanded in the new.
la- To drink mans naturall blood is forbidden materially in the old Teſtament. rent. Ergo, to drinke mans naturall blood materially is not commanded in the new.

Anſwer.

Lat. It is commanded ſpiritually to be drunk, I grant it is blood drunk in the new Teſtament, but we receive it ſpiritually.

Pie. It was not forbidden ſpiritually in the old Law.

Lat. The ſubſtance of blood is drunk, but not in one manner.

Pie. It doth not require the ſame manner of drinking.

Lat. It is the ſame thing, not the ſame manner. I have no more to ſay.

Chryſoſtome.

Weſt. Here Weſton cited the place of Chryſoſtome, of Iudas treaſon: O Iudæ dementia! Ille cum Iudæis triginta denariis paciſcebatur, ut Chriſtum venderet, & Chriſtus ei ſanguinem, quem vendidit, offerebat; i. O the madneſſe of Iudas! He made bargaine with the Iewes for thirty pence to ſell Chriſt, and Chriſt offered him his blood which he ſold.

Lat. I grant he offered to Iudas his blood which he ſold, but in a ſacrament.

D. Cartwright urged to diſpute.

Weſt. Becauſe ye can defend your Doctors no better, ye ſhall ſee what worſhipfull men ye hang upon, & one y^t hath bin of your mind ſhall diſpute with you. M. Cartwright, I pray you diſpute.

Cartwright returneth to his old errour againe.

Cart. Reverend father, becauſe it is given me in commandement to diſpute with you, I will doe it gladly. But firſt underſtand ere we goe any further, that I was in the ſame errour that you are in: but I am ſorry for it, and do confeſſe my ſelfe to have erred, I acknowledge mine offence, and I wiſh and deſire God that you may alſo repent with me.

Argument. à pœna legis durum & difficile.

Lat. Will you give me leave to tell what hath cauſed M. Doctor here to recant? It is pœna legis, the paine of the law which hath brought you backe, and converted you, and many moe; the which letteth many to confeſſe God. And this is a great argument, there are few here can diſſolve it.

Cart. That is not my cauſe, but I will make you this ſhort argument, by which I was converted from mine errours.

Argument. à deſtructione conſequentis, ad deſtructionem antecedentis.

If the true body of Chriſt be not really in the ſacrament, all the whole Church hath erred from the Apoſtles time.

But Chriſt would not ſuffer his Church to erre:

Ergo, it is the true body of Chriſt.

No mention made of any eating, but ſpiritually, in the Church, for the ſpace of 700. yeeres.

Lat. The Popiſh Church hath erred, and doth erre. I thinke for the ſpace of ſixe or ſeven hundred yeeres there was no mention made of any eating but ſpiritually: for before theſe five hundred yeers the Church did ever confeſſe a ſpirituall manducation. But the Romiſh Church begat the errour of tranſubſtantiation. My Lord of Canterburies book handleth that very well, and by him I could anſwer you, if I had him.

Cart. Linus and all the reſt do confeſſe the body of Chriſt to be in the ſacrament: and S. Auguſtine alſo upon the 98. Pſalme, upon this place, Adorate ſcabellum pedum, &c. granteth that it is to be worſhipped.

Lat. We do worſhip Chriſt in the heavens, and we do worſhip him in the ſacrament: but the maſſing worſhip is not to be uſed.

Smith. Doe you think that Cyril was of the ancient Church?

Lat. I do think ſo.

Smith. He ſaith, that Chriſt dwelleth in us corporally: Theſe be Cyrils words of the myſticall benediction.

Cyril. in Ioan. lib. 10. cap. 13.

Lat. That (corporally) hath another underſtanding than you do groſly take it.

¶ Cyril ſaith, that Chriſt dwelleth corporally in us, but he ſaith not that Chriſt dwelleth corporally in the bread. Which dwelling of Chriſt in us, is as our dwelling is alſo in Chriſt, not locall or corporall, but ſpirituall and heavenly. Corporally therefore is to be taken here in the ſame ſenſe as S. Paul ſaith the fulneſſe of divinity to dwell in Chriſt corporally, that is, not lightly nor accidentally, but perfectly and ſubſtantially, with all his vertue and power, &c. And ſo dwelleth Chriſt corporally in us alſo.

Smith. Here Smith repeateth theſe words of Cyril, Per communionem corporis Chriſti, habitat in nobis Chriſtus corporaliter, i. By the communicating of the body of Chriſt, Chriſt dwelleth in us corporally.

Lat. The ſolution of this is in my Lord of Canterburies book.

Smith. Cyril was no Papiſt, and yet theſe be his words; Chriſt dwelleth in us corporally: but you ſay he dwelleth in us ſpiritually.

La. I ſay both, that he dwelleth in us both corporally & ſpiritually, according to his meaning: Spiritually by faith, and corporally by taking our fleſh upon him. For I remember I have read this in my Lord of Canterburies book.

The immodeſt behaviour of this Iacke ſcorner to be noted.

Weſt. Becauſe your learning is let out to farme, and ſhut up in my Lord of Canterburies book, I will recite unto you a place of S. Ambroſe, De apparatione ad Miſſam, where he ſaith, Videmus principem Sacerdotem ad nos venientem, & offerentem ſanguinem, &c. That is, We ſee the chiefe Prieſt comming unto us, and offering blood, &c.

Aug. in Pſal. 38. Chryſoſt. de incomprehenſibili Dei natura.

Likewiſe both Auguſtine in the 38. Pſalme, and Chryſoſtome concerning the incomprehenſible nature of God, tom. 3. ſay, Non ſolum homines, &c.

Lat. I am not aſhamed to acknowledge mine ignorance, and theſe teſtimonies are more than I can beare away.

Weſt. Then you muſt leave ſome behinde you for lack of carriage.

Chryſoſtome full of figurative ſpeeches and emphaticall locutions.

Lat. But of Chryſoſtome, he hath many figurative ſpeeches, and emphaticall locutions in many places; as in that which you have now recited: but he ſaith not, For the quicke and the dead: he taketh the celebration for the ſacrifice.

Chryſoſt. in Act. cap. 9.

Weſt. You ſhall heare Chryſoſtome againe, upon the ninth chapter of the Acts, Quid dicis? Hoſtia in manibus ſacerdotis, &c. He doth not call it a cup of wine.

Lat. Ye have mine anſwer there with you in a paper: and yet he calleth it not, Propitiatorium ſacrificium, i. A propitiatory ſacrifice.

Weſt. You ſhall heare it to be ſo: and I bring another place of Chryſoſtome out of y^e ſame treatiſe, Non temerè ab Apoſtolis eſt inſtitutum, &c.

Lat. He is too precious a thing for us to offer; he offereth himſelfe.

Chryſoſt. ad populum Antioch. hom. 69.

Weſt. Here in another place of Chryſoſtome to the people of Antioch, Hom. 69. and alſo to the Philippians he ſaith, There ſhould be a memory and ſacrifice for the dead.

Lat. I doe ſay that the holy Communion beareth the name of a ſacrifice, becauſe it is a ſacrifice memorative.

Anno 1554

Auguſt. Enchirid. cap. 110.

West. How ſay you to yͤ ſacrifice for the dead?

Lat. I ſay that it needeth not, and it booteth not.

West. Auguſtine in his Enchiridion the 110. chapt. ſaith, Non eſt negandum defunctorum animos pietate ſuorum viventium relevari, quum pro illis ſacrificium Mediatoris offertur, i. We muſt not deny that the ſoules of the dead are relieved by the devotion of their friends which are living, when the ſacrifice of the Mediator is offered for them. Where he proveth the verity of Chriſts body, and praying for the dead. And it is ſaid, that the ſame Auguſtine ſaid Maſſe for his mother.

Auguſtine falſly belyed to ſay Maſſe for his mother.

Lat. But that Maſſe was not like yours, which thing doth manifeſtly appeare in his writings, which are againſt it in every place. And Auguſtine is a reaſonable man, he requireth to be beleeved no further than he bringeth Scripture for his proofe, and agreeth with Gods word.

The blaſphemous mouth of D. Weſton calling the Lords table an oyſter boord.

West. In the ſame place he proveth a propitiatory ſacrifice, and that upon an altar, and no oyſter boord.

Lat. It is the Lords table, and no oyſter boord. It may be called an altar, and ſo the Doctors call it in many places: but there is no propitiatory ſacrifice, but only Chriſt. The Doctors might be deceived in ſome points, though not in all things. “ I beleeve them when they ſay well.

“ Doctores legendi ſunt cum venia.

Cole. Is it not a ſhame for an old man to lie? You ſay, you are of the old Fathers faith where they ſay well, and yet ye are not.

Lat. I am of their faith when they ſay well. I referre my ſelfe to my Lord of Canterburies booke wholly herein.

Smith. Then are not you of Chryſoſtomes faith, nor of S. Auguſtines faith.

Lat. I have ſaid, when they ſay well, and bring Scripture for them, I am of their faith, and further Auguſtine requireth not to be beleeved.

West. Origen, Hom. 13. upon Leviticus.

Lat. I have but one word to ſay, Panis ſacramentalis, the ſacramentall bread is called a propitiation, becauſe it is a ſacrament of the propitiation. What is your vocation?

Weſton. My vocation is at this time to diſpute; otherwiſe I am a Prieſt, and my vocation is to offer.

Lat. Where have you that authority given you to offer?

Facere for ſacrificare with D. Weſton.

West. Hoc facite, Doe this; for facite in that place is taken for offerte, that is, offer you.

Lat. Is facere nothing but ſacrificare to ſacrifice? Why then no man muſt receive the ſacrament but Prieſts only: for there may none offer but Prieſts.

Ergo, There may none receive but Prieſts.

West. Your argument is to be denied.

Lat. Did Chriſt then offer himſelf at his ſupper?

Pie. Yea, he offered himſelf for yͤ whole world.

If Chriſt offered himſelfe at the Supper, and the next day upon the Croſſe, then was Chriſt twice offered.

Lat. Then if this word Facite, Doe ye, ſignifie Sacrificate, Sacrifice ye, it followeth, as I ſaid, that none but Prieſts onely ought to receive the ſacrament, to whom it is onely lawfull to ſacrifice: and where finde you that I pray you?

West. Forty yeere agone whither could you have gone to have found your doctrine?

Lat. The more cauſe we have to thank God, that hath now ſent the light into the world.

Weſtons railing.

West. The light? Nay light and lewd preachers; for you could not tell what you might have. Ye altered and changed ſo often your communions and altars, and all for this one end, to ſpoile and rob the Church.

Lat. Theſe things pertaine nothing to me, I muſt not anſwer other mens deeds, but only for mine owne.

D. Weſtons Apes have tailes.

Blaſphemous lies of D. Weſton ſitting in Cathedra peſtilentiæ. Who be theſe, or where be they M. Oblocutor, that will be like the Apoſtles, that will have no Churches? that be runnagates out of Germanie? that get them tankards? that make monethly faiths? that worſhip not Chriſt in all his ſacraments? ſpeak truth, man and ſhame the devill.

West. Well, Maſter Latimer, this is our intent, to will you well, and to exhort you to come to your ſelfe, and remember, that without Noahs Arke there is no health. Remember what they have beene that were the beginners of your doctrine, none but a few flying Apoſtataes, running out of Germany for feare of the fagot. Remember what they have beene which have ſet forth the ſame in this Realme: A ſort of fling-braines and light heads, which were never conſtant in any one thing, as it was to be ſeene in the turning of the table, where like a ſort of Apes they could not tell which way to turne their tailes, looking one day Weſt, and another day Eaſt, one that way, and another this way. They will bee like (they ſay) to the Apoſtles, they will have no Churches. A hovell is good enough for them. They come to the Communion with no reverence. They get them a Tankard, and one ſaith, I drinke, and I am thankfull; the more ioy of thee, ſaith another. And in them was it true that Hilary ſaith, Annuas & menſtruas de Deo fides facimus, that is, We make every yeere and every moneth a faith. A runnagate Scot did take away the adoration or worſhipping of Chriſt in the ſacrament, by whoſe procurement that hereſie was put into the laſt communion booke; ſo much prevailed that one mans authority at that time. You never agreed with the Tygurines or Germaines, or with the Church, or with your ſelfe. Your ſtubbornneſſe commeth of a vaine glory, which is to no purpoſe: for it will doe you no good when a fagot is in your beard. And we ſee all, by your owne confeſſion, how little cauſe you have to be ſtubborne, for your learning is in Feoffers hold. The Queenes Grace is mercifull, if ye will turne.

Lat. You ſhall have no hope in me to turne. I pray for the Queene daily even from the bottome of my heart, that ſhe may turne from this religion.

West. Here you all ſee the weakneſſe of hereſie againſt the truth: he denieth all truth, and all the old Fathers.

HEre all good Readers may ſee how this glorious Prolocutor triumpheth: but whether he hath the victory or no, that I ſuppoſe they have yet neither heard nor ſeene. And give that he had the victory, yet what great marvell was it, diſputing as he did, Non ſine ſuo Theſeo, that is, not without his tipling cup ſtanding at his elbow all the time of his diſputation; not without a privy noting and ſmiling of them that beheld the matter, but eſpecially at that time, when Doctor Ridley diſputing with one of the Opponents, the ſaid Prolocutor tooke the cup, and holding it in his hand, ſaid to the Opponent, Vrge hoc, urge hoc, Nam hoc facit pro nobis. In which words, as he moved no little matter of laughter to the beholders thereof, ſo I thought here alſo not to leave the ſame unmentioned, ſomwhat alſo to delight the Reader withall, after his tedious wearineſſe in reading the ſtory thereof.

Vrge hoc, quoth Weſton with his beere-pot.

To the Reader.

And thus haſt thou (loving Reader) the whole action and ſtage of this Doctorly diſputation ſhewed forth unto thee againſt theſe three worthy Confeſſors and Martyrs of the Lord, wherein thou mayeſt behold the diſordered uſage of the Univerſity men, the unmannerly manner of the Schools, the rude tumult of the multitude, the fierceneſſe and interruption of the Doctors, the full pith and ground of all their arguments, the cenſures of the Iudges, the railing language of the Oblocutor, with his blaſt of triumph in the latter end, being both the actor, the moderator, and alſo Iudge himſelf. And what marvell then if the courage of this victorious Conquerour, having the law in his owne hands, to do and ſay what him liſted, would ſay for himſelfe, Vicit veritas, although he ſaid never a true word, nor made ever a true concluſion almoſt in all that diſputation.

Aprill 19.

It followed furthermore, after diſputation of theſe three dayes being ended, that M. Harpſfield the next day after, which was the nineteenth of April, ſhould diſpute for his Form, to be made Doctor. To the which diſputation the Archbiſhop of Canterbury was brought forth, and permitted among the reſt to utter an argument or two in defence of his cauſe. As in ſequele hereof may appeare.

Diſputation of Maſter Harpsfield Bachelour of Divinity, anſwering for his Forme to be made Doctor.

Harpsfield.

Aprill 19. The iudgement of Maſt. Harpsfield for the beſt way to underſtand the Scriptures. If M. Harpſfield had willed us to ſubmit our ſenſes to the Holy Ghoſt, he had ſaid much better.

I Am not ignorant what a weighty matter it is to intreat of the whole order and trade of the Scriptures: and moſt hard it is too, in the great contention of Religion, to ſhew the ready way whereby the Scriptures may be beſt underſtood. For the often reading of them doth not bring the true underſtanding of them. What other thing is there then? Verily this is the ready way, not to follow our owne heads and ſenſes, but to give over our iudgement unto the holy Catholike Church, who hath had of old yeeres the truth, and alwayes delivered the ſame to their poſterity: but if the often reading of Scriptures, and never ſo painfull compating of places ſhould bring the true underſtanding, then divers Heretikes might prevaile ever againſt whole generall Councels. The “Iewes did greatly brag of the knowledge of the Law, and of the Saviour that they waited for. But what availed it them? Notwithſtanding, I know right well, that divers places of the Scripture doe much warne us of the often reading of the ſame, and what fruit doth thereby follow; as Scrutamini, &c. Search the Scriptures: for they do beare witneſſe of me, &c. Lex Domini, &c. The Law of the Lord is pure, able to turne ſoules. And that ſaying of S. Paul, Omnis Scriptura, &c. All Scripture inſpired from above, doth make that a man may be inſtructed to all good workes. Howbeit doth the Law of the Iewes convert their ſoules? are they by reading inſtructed to every good work? The letter of the old Teſtament is the ſame that we have.

“No, but thoſe Iews, ſticking ſo much to the old cuſtome and face of their Church, and not ſeeking for knowledge, by ignorance of the Scriptures were deceived, and ſo be you.

The heretikes alſo have ever had the ſame Scriptures which we have that be Catholikes. But they are ſerved as Tantalus that the Poets ſpeak of, who, in the plenty of things to eat and drink, is ſaid to be oppreſſed with hunger and thirſt. The ſwifter that men do ſeeke the Scriptures without the Catholike Church, the deeper they fall, and finde hell for their labour. Saint Cyprian never ſwarving from the Catholike Church, ſaith, Hee that doth not acknowledge the Church to be his mother, ſhall not have God to his father. Therefore it is true Divinity, to be wiſe with the Church, where Chriſt ſaith, Niſi manducaveritis, &c. Vnleſſe ye eat my fleſh, and drinke my bloud, ye have no life in you.

If he had meant of onely eating bread and drinking wine, nothing had beene more pleaſant to the Capernaites, neither would they have forſaken him. The fleſh profiteth nothing to them that do ſo take it. For the Capernaites did imagine Chriſt to be given in ſuch ſort as he lived. But Chriſt ſpake high things; not that they ſhould have him as fleſh in the market, but to conſider his preſence with the ſpirit (a) under the formes whereby it is given. As there is an alteration of bodies by courſes and times of ages, ſo there is no leſſe (b) variety in eating of bodies.

(a) Under the formes, that is, under the properties of bread and wine, and ſo all this is true.

(b) In the materiall eating of mans body there is no variety: for to eat mans fleſh either under accidents, or not accidents, both is againſt the Scripture and againſt nature.

Theſe things which I have recited briefly, Maſter Harpsfield did with many more words ſet out: and hereupon Doctor Weſton diſputed againſt him.

Weſt. Chriſts reall body is not in the ſacrament:

Ergo, You are deceived.

Harpſ. I deny the antecedent.

Weſt. Iohn the 16. Dico veritatem vobis, &c. I ſpeak the truth unto you: It behoveth me that I go away from you. For unleſſe I doe depart that Comforter cannot come, &c.

Upon this I will make this argument.

Argument.

Chriſt is ſo gone away as he did ſend the holy Ghoſt.

But the holy Ghoſt did verily come into the world:

Ergo, Chriſt is verily gone.

Harpſ. He is verily gone, and yet remaineth here.

This anſwer doth not ſatiſfie the argument: for the concluſion ſpeaketh of a bodily abſence, the anſwer ſpeaketh of a ſpirituall remaining.

Weſt. S. Auguſtine ſaith, that theſe words, Ego ero, &c. I will be with you even to the end of the world, are accompliſhed, ſecundum majeſtatem, according to his majeſty: but ſecundum præſentiam carnis non eſt hic, i. by the preſence of his fleſh he is not here. The Church hath him not in fleſh, but by beliefe.

Harpſ. We muſt diligently weigh that there are two natures in Chriſt: the divine nature, and humane nature. The divine nature is of ſuch ſort, that it cannot chuſe but be in all places. The humane nature is not ſuch, that of force it muſt be in all places, although it be in diverſe after a divers manner. So where the Doctors do intreat of his preſence by maieſty, they doe commend the maieſty of the divine nature not to hinder us of the (c) naturall preſence here in the ſacrament.

(c) If the naturall preſence is here, then is it falſe that S. Auguſt. ſaith, ſecundum præſentiam carnis non eſt hic.

Weſt. He ſaith further, Me autem non ſemper habebitis, Ye ſhall not have me alwayes with you, is to be underſtood in the fleſh.

Harpſ. The preſence of the fleſh is to be conſidered, that he is not here as he was wont to live in converſation with them, to bee ſeene, talked withall, or in ſuch ſort as a man may give him (d) any thing: after that ſort he is not preſent.

(d) And how can we then give honour to him, to whom we can ſhew no charity, nor give any thing elſe unto? What manner ſoever ye give to the body, if the ſubſtantiall body be here indeed, it cannot be avoided, but either it muſt needs be falſe that S. Auguſtine ſaith, Non eſt hic, or elſe Chriſt muſt have two bodies in two places together, preſent here after one manner, and in heaven after another manner.

Weſt. But what ſay you to this of Auguſtine, Non eſt hic, He is not here.

Harpſ. I doe anſwer out of Saint Auguſtine upon Iohn, Tractat. 25. upon theſe words, Non videbitis me, vado ad Patrem, &c. I goe to the Father, ye ſhall not ſee me, that is, Such as I am now. Therefore I doe deny the manner of his preſence.

Weſt. I will overthrow S. Auguſtine with S. Auguſtine; who ſaith this alſo, Quomodo quis poſſit tenere Chriſtum? fidem mitte, & tenuiſti, i. How may a man hold Chriſt? ſend thy faith, and thou holdeſt him.

So he ſheweth, that by ſending our faith we do hold Chriſt.

Harpſ. Indeed no man holdeth Chriſt unleſſe he beleeve in him; but it is another thing to have Chriſt mercifull and favourable unto us, and to have him preſent in the Sacrament.

There S. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of holding him by faith, as he is favourable unto us.

Weſt. Nay, he ſpeaketh there how the Fathers had him in the fleſh, and teacheth that we have him not ſo in the fleſh, as they had him long time, ſaying, Your fathers did hold Chriſt preſent in the fleſh: doe you hold him in your heart? What words can be more plaine? Further he ſaith, He is gone and is not here: he hath left us, and yet hath not forſaken us. Hic eſt majeſtate, abiit carne, i. He is here in majeſtie, and gone touching the fleſh.

Harpſ. I doe underſtand Auguſtine thus, that Chriſt is here in his fleſh to them that receive him worthily: to ſuch as do not worthily receive him, to them he is not preſent in the fleſh. I iudge S. Auguſtine meaneth ſo. We have him, and have him not: wee have him in receiving him worthily, otherwiſe not.

Note what Harpsfield here holdeth, that the body of Chriſt is not preſent in the ſacrament, but only to them that receive him worthily.

Weſt. Nay, Tenere carnem eſt tenere corticem literæ. I will proſecute another argument, Cyril doth ſay, By the majeſty of his divinity hee is ever here, but the Preſence of his fleſh hath he taken away.

Harpſ. The ſenſe of Cyril is thus to be underſtood; The moſt true fleſh of Chriſt is at the right hand of the Father. Thus the Fathers taught, and ſo they believed. Thus ſaid Cyril: Thus ſaid Auguſtine; and becauſe this is the foundation of our faith, they did oftentimes teach it. Therefore when they prove this, (the body to bee in heaven) they do not make againſt the preſence in the ſacrament.

So unleſſe ye can plainly ſhew, that the Fathers do directly ſay he is not in the ſacrament, you make nothing againſt me: for I have ſhewed why the Fathers ſo ſpake. They did teach the great difference betweene the divine nature, and the humane nature, as I have before ſaid.

If the preſence of his fleſh be taken away as Cyril ſaith, how then can the preſence of his fleſh be in the ſacrament? Vigilius ſaith, his body is taken up, how then doth the ſame body remaine ſtill, unleſſe either ye make him to have two bodies: or elſe make two contradictories true in one propoſition.

Weſt. I will then prove, that he is not in the ſacrament. Vigilius againſt the Heretike Eutiches, upon theſe words, Me autem non ſemper habebitis, ſaith, The Son of God, as touching his humanity, he is gone from us, by his divinity he remaineth with us. And that ſame Vigilius in his fourth book ſaith, He that is in the heaven, is not in the earth, ſpeaking of Chriſt.

Harpſ. I will ſhew you the reaſon of theſe words. The Heretike Eutiches did believe that the divine nature of Chriſt was faſtned on the Croſſe, and believed that Chriſt had no naturall body. To this Vigilius ſaid, that the humane nature was taken up and aſcended, which could not ſo have done, unleſſe he had a body. This he ſaid not, to take away the preſence in the ſacrament.

For what had he to refer this ſentence to the ſacrament? He never did ſo much as dreame of the ſacrament.

Cyrillus.

Weſt. Cyril ſaith, Although hee bee abſent from us in body, yet are wee governed by his ſpirit.

Harpſ. By theſe words he gave us a chéerfulneſſe to aſpire upwards, ſéeking therehence our helpe. For as touching his converſation, he is not ſo in the ſacrament as one méet to bee lived withall. But let him teach us that he is not there to féed us; for after that ſort he is there.

The body of Chriſt is here to feed our bellies, but not to be lived withall.

Weſt. You have ſatisfied me with your anſwers, in doing the ſame learnedly, and catholikely. But now to another argument.

" Chriſt is now ſo abſent from the earth by his body, as he was abſent from heaven when he lived here.

" The argument holdeth è proportione.

But when he did live bodily on earth; the ſame naturall body was out of heaven.

Ergo, now whileſt this naturall body is in heaven, it is not in earth.

Harpſ. I deny the Maior.

Weſt. Fulgentius ad Thraſimundum Regem, libro ſecundo, ſaith, Secundum humanam ſubſtantiam abſens erat cœlo, cum deſcendit de cœlo. Theſe are Fulgentius words touching his humane ſubſtance. Hee was abſent from heaven, when he deſcended from heaven; and touching the ſame ſubſtance, now he is in heaven he is not on the earth: but concerning the divine nature, he never forſooke, neither heaven nor earth.

After theſe words, not waiting Harpsfield anſwer he offered M. Cranmer to diſpute; who began in this wiſe.

Cranmer. I have heard you right learnedly and eloquently intreat of the dignity of the ſcriptures, which I doe both commend, and have marvelled thereat within my ſelfe. But whereas you referre the true ſenſe and iudgement of the Scriptures to the Catholike Church as Judge thereof, you are much deceived; ſpecially, for that under the name of the Church you appoint ſuch iudges as have corruptly iudged, and contrary to the ſenſe of the Scriptures. I wonder likewiſe why you attribute ſo little to the diligent reading of the ſcriptures, and conferring of places; ſeeing the ſcriptures doe ſo much commend the ſame, as well in divers other places, as alſo in thoſe which you your ſelfe have already alledged. And as touching your opinion of theſe queſtions, it ſéemeth to mee neither to have any ground of the word of God, nor of the primitive Church. And to ſay the truth, the Schoolemen have ſpoken diverſly of them, and doe not agree thereof among themſelves. Wherefore, minding here briefly to ſhew my iudgement alſo, I muſt deſire you firſt to anſwer to me a few queſtions which I ſhall demand of you. Which being done, wee ſhall the better procéed in our diſputation. Moreover, I muſt deſire you to beare alſo with my rudeneſſe in the Latine tongue, which through long diſuſe is not now ſo prompt and ready with me as it hath been: and now all other things ſet apart, I minde chiefly to have regard to the truth: My firſt queſtion is this, How Chriſts body is in the Sacrament, according to your minde or determination?

The errour M. Harpsfield reproved, referring the ſenſe of the Scripture rather to the iudgement of the Church than to the diligent reading and conferring of places.

Then anſwered a Doctor, he is there as touching his ſubſtance, but not after the manner of his ſubſtance.

Chriſt preſent in the ſacrament in ſubſtance, but not after the manner of ſubſtance.

Harpſ. He is there in ſuch ſort and manner, as he may be eaten.

Cran. My next queſtion is, Whether hee hath his quantity and qualities, forme, figure, and ſuch like properties.

Harpſ. Are theſe your queſtions, ſaid Maſter Harpsfield? I may likewiſe aske you, when Chriſt paſſed thorow the Virgins wombe, an ruperit necne? When they had thus a while contended, there were divers opinions in this matter.

All the Doctors fell in a buzzing, incertaine what to anſwer: ſome thought one way, ſome another; and thus Maſter Doctors could not agrée.

The Rabbines could not agree among themſelves.

Then Maſter Cranmer ſaid thus; you put off queſtions with queſtions, and not with anſwers, I aske one thing of you, and you anſwer another. Once again I ask, Whether he have thoſe properties which he had on the earth.

Treſh. No, he hath not all the quantities and qualities belonging to a body.

Chriſts body without his properties in the ſacrament.

Smith. Stay you M. Treſham. I will anſwer you M. Doctor, with the words of Damaſcene, Transformatur panis, &c. The bread is transformed, &c. But if thou wilt inquire how, Modus impoſſibilis, The manner is impoſſible.

Then two or thrée others added their anſwers to this queſtion, ſomewhat doubtfully. A great hurly-burly was among them, some affirming one thing, and ſome another.

The Doctors in a doubt.

Cran. Doe you appoint me a body, and can not tell what manner of body? Either hee hath not his quantity, or elſe you are ignorant how to anſwer it.

Harpſ. Theſe are vain queſtions, and it is not meet to ſpend the time on them.

Lanfrancus contra Berengarium.

Weſt. Heare me a while, Lanfrancus ſometime biſhop of Canterbury, doth anſwer in this wiſe unto Berengarius upon ſuch like queſtions; Salubriter credi poſſunt, fideliter quæri non poſſunt, i. They may be well believed, but never faithfully aſked.

Cran. If you think good to anſwer it, ſome of you declare it.

Harpſ. Hee is there as pleaſeth him to bee there.

Cran. I would be beſt contented with that anſwer, if that your appointing of a carnall preſence had not driven me of neceſſity to have inquired for diſputations ſake, how you place him there, ſince you will have a naturall body.

The Papiſts would have Chriſts body in the ſacrament, but they cannot tell how.

When againe he was anſwered of divers at one time, ſome denying it to be quantum, ſome ſaying it to be quantitativum, ſome affirming it to have modum quanti, ſome denying it ſome one thing, ſome another; up ſtart D. Weſton, and doughtily decided, as he thought, all the matter, ſaying, It is Corpus quantum, ſed non per modum quanti, i. It is a body, ſaith he, having quantity, but not according to the manner of quantity.

Whereunto maſter Ward, a great Sophiſter, thinking the matter not fully anſwered, did largely declare and diſcourſe his ſentence: how learnedly and truly I cannot tell, nor I thinke he himſelf neither, ne yet the beſt learned there. For it was ſaid ſince, that farre better learned than he laid as good eare to him as they could, and yet could by no meanes perceive to what end all his talke tended. Indeed he told a formall tale to clout up the matter. He was full of quantum & quantitativum. This that followes was, as it is thought, the effect, yet others thinke no. Howbeit wee will rehearſe the ſumme of his words, as it is thought he ſpake then.

M. Ward in the myſty clouds of Duns his quiddities.

Ward. We muſt conſider, ſaith he, that there are duæ poſitiones two poſitions. The one ſtandeth by the order of parts, with reſpect of the whole. The other in reſpect of that which containeth. Chriſt is in the Sacrament in reſpect of the whole. This propoſition is in one of Ariſtotles Predicaments, called Situs. I remember I did intreat theſe matters very largely, when I did rule and moderate the Philoſophicall diſputations in the publike Schooles. This poſition is ſine modo quantitativo, as by an enſample, you can never bring heaven to a quantity. So I conclude that he is in the ſacrament quantum, ſine modo quantitativo.

Ariſtotle muſt helpe to tell us how Chriſt is in the ſacrament.

Chriſt, ſine modo quantitativo in the ſacrament.

Theſe words he amplified very largely, and ſo high he climbed into the heavens with Duns his ladder, and not with the Scriptures, that it is to be marvelled how he could come downe againe without falling. To whom M. Cranmer ſaid; Then thus do I make mine argument.

D. Cranmers argument.

Cran. In heaven his body had quantity, in earth it hath none by your ſaying.

Ergo, he hath two bodies, the one in heaven, the other in earth.

Here ſome would have anſwered him, that he had quantity in both, and ſo put off the antecedent; but thus ſaid M. Harpsfield.

Harpſ. I deny your argument, though ſome would not have had him ſay ſo.

Cran. The argument is good. It ſtandeth upon contradictories, which is the moſt ſure hold.

Harpſ. I deny that there are contradictions.

Cran. I thus prove it. Habere modum quantitativum & non habere, ſunt contradictoria.

Sed Chriſtus in cœlis, ut dicitis, habet modum quantitativum, in terra non habet:

Ergo, Duo ſunt corpora ejus in quæ cadunt hæc contradictoria; Nam in idem cadere non poſſunt.

Ariſtotle 4. Metaph. Impoſſibile eſt idem ſimul eſſe & non eſſe.

Weſt. I deny the minor.

Harpſ. I anſwer that the maior is not true. For Habere quantum, & non habere, non ſunt contradictoria, niſi ſic conſiderentur ejuſdem ad idem, eodem modo & ſimpliciter.

Weſt. I confirme the ſame: for one body may have modum quantitativum, and not have; and idem corpus was paſſible and impaſſible; one body may have wounds and not wounds.

Cran. This cannot be at one time.

Weſt. The enſample of the Potter doth prove that which I ſay; who, of that which is clay now, maketh a pot or cup forthwith.

Cran. But I ſay againe, that it is ſo, but at divers times: as one peece of meate to be rawe and ſodden cannot be at one time together. But you would have it otherwiſe, that Chriſt ſhould bee here and in heaven at one time, and ſhould have modum quantitativum, and not have: which cannot bee but by ſuch argument as I have ſhewed you.

Weſt. But I ſay, Chriſts body was paſſible and not paſſible at one (a) inſtant.

(a) Paſſible and impaſſible cannot ſtand together in one ſubiect. Simul & ejuſdem reſpectu & eodem tempore, propter rerum pugnantiam.

Seaton. You may aſke as well other queſtions, how he is in heaven? whether he ſit or ſtand? and whether he be there as he lived here?

Cran. You your ſelfe, by putting a naturall preſence, do force me to queſtion how he is here. Therefore next I do aſk this queſtion; Whether good and evill men doe eate the bodie in the ſacrament?

Harpſ. Yea, they doe ſo, (b) even as the Sun doth ſhine upon kings palaces, and on dung-heapes.

Chriſts body to be paſſible and not impaſſible at the Supper, it appeareth by theſe words, That ſhall bee given for you.

(b) That remaineth yet unproved. Harpsfield ſeemed a little before to note the contrary, where he ſaid, that the fleſh of Chriſt to them that receive him not worthily is not preſent, pag. 87.

Cran. Then doe I inquire how long Chriſt tarrieth in the eater?

Harpſ. Theſe are curious queſtions, unmeet to be aſked.

Cran. I have taken them out of your Schools and Schoolmen, which you your ſelves do moſt uſe: and there alſo do I learn to ask how far he goeth into the body.

Harpſ. We know that the body of Chriſt is received to nouriſh the whole man both body and ſoule: Eo uſque progreditur corpus quouſque (c) ſpecies.

Cran. How long doth he abide in the body?

Seaton. S. Auguſtine ſaith, our fleſh goeth into his fleſh: But after he is once received into the ſtomack, it maketh no matter for us to know how far hee doth pierce, or whether he is conveyed.

(c) Sed ſpecies non progreditur; uſque ad animam: Ergo nec corpus Chriſti non paſcit corpus & animam.

¶ Here M. Treſham and one M. London anſwered that Chriſt being given there under ſuch forme and quantity as pleaſed him, it was not to be inquired of his tarrying, or of his deſcending into the body.

Harpſ. You were wont to lay to our charge, that we added to the Scripture; ſaying alwaies that wee ſhould fetch the truth out of the Scripture, and now you your ſelfe bring queſtions out of the Schoolmen, which you have diſallowed in us.

Cran. I ſay as I have ſaid alway, that I am conſtrained to aske theſe queſtions, becauſe of this carnall preſence which you imagine; and yet I know right well, that theſe queſtions bee anſwered out of the Scriptures. As to my laſt queſtion, How long he abideth in the body? &c. the Scripture anſwereth plainly, that Chriſt doth ſo long dwell in his people, as they are his members. Whereupon I make this argument.

Theſe men would needs have a bodily preſence, yet would they not, or elſe could not bring any reaſon how.

Ba- They

Anno 1554

D. Cranmers argument in the ſecond figure and ſecond moode.

Ba- They which eat the fleſh of Chriſt do dwell in him, and he in them.
ro- But the wicked doe not remaine in him, nor he in them:
co. Ergo, the wicked doe not eat his fleſh, nor drink his blood.

Anſwer inſufficient.

Harpſ. I will anſwer unto you as S. Auguſtine ſaith, not that howſoever a man doe eate, he eateth the body; but he that eateth after a certain manner.

Cran. I cannot tell what manner ye appoint, but I am ſure that evill men do not eat the fleſh, and drink the blood of Chriſt, as Chriſt ſpeaketh in the ſixth of John.

Harpſ. In the ſixth of John ſome things are to be referred to the godly, and ſome to the ungodly.

Cran. Whatſoever hee doth intreat there of eating, doth pertain unto good men.

Harpſ. If you doe mean only of the word of eating, it is true; if concerning the thing, it is not ſo: And if your meaning be of that which is contained under the word of eating, it may be ſo taken, I grant.

Evill men doe not eate the body of Chriſt.

Cran. Now to the argument, Hee that eateth my fleſh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in mee, and I in him. Doth not this prove ſufficiently, that evill men doe not eate that the good doe?

Treſham. You muſt adde, Qui manducat digne, He that eateth worthily.

Cran. I ſpeak of the ſame manner of eating that Chriſt ſpeaketh of.

Weſt. Auguſtinus ad fratres in Eremo, Sermon. 28. Eſt quidam manducandi modus, that is, There is a certaine manner of eating. Auguſtine ſpeaketh of two manners of eating; the one of them that eate worthily, the other that eate unworthily.

The ſixth Chapter of John is to bee referred partly to the Supper, partly to faith, after the Papiſts.

Harpſ. All things in the ſixth of John are not to be referred to the ſacrament, but to the receiving of Chriſt by faith. The Fathers do agree, that there is not intreatie made of the Supper of the Lord, before they come unto, Panis quem dabo vobis, caro mea eſt, &c.

Cran. There is intreating of Manna both before and after.

Harpſ. I will apply another anſwer. This argument hath a kind of poiſon in it, which muſt be thus bitten away; that Manna and this Sacrament be not both one. Manna hath not his efficacy of himſelf, but of God.

Compariſon between eating of Manna, and eating the body of Chriſt.

Cran. But they that did take Manna worthily had fruit thereby: and ſo by your aſſertion, hee that doth eate the fleſh of Chriſt worthily, hath his fruit by that.

Therefore the like doth follow of them both, and ſo there ſhould bee no difference betweene Manna and this Sacrament, by your reaſon.

Harpſ. When it is ſaid, that they which did eat Manna are dead, it is to be underſtood, that they did want the vertue of Manna.

If Maſter Harpsfield doe meane of bodily life, they which eate the Sacrament doe dye as well as they which did eate the Manna. If hee meane of ſpirituall life, neither bee they all damned that did eat Manna, nor all ſaved that doe eate the Sacrament. Wherefore the truth is, that neither the eating of Manna bringing death, nor the eating of the Sacrament bringeth ſalvation: but only the ſpirituall believing upon Chriſts bodily paſſion, which only juſtifieth both them and us. And therefore as the effect is ſpirituall, which Chriſt ſpeaketh of in this Chapter; ſo is the cauſe of that effect ſpirituall whereof he meaneth, which is our ſpirituall believing in him, and not our bodily eating of him.

Cran. They then which do eat either of them worthily, doe live.

Harpſ. They doe live which doe eate Manna worthily, not by Manna, but by the power of God given by it. The other which doe eate this ſacrament, do live by the ſame.

Cran. Chriſt did not intreat of the cauſe, but the effect which followed: he doth not ſpeake of the cauſe whereof the effect proceedeth.

Harpſ. I do ſay the effects are divers, life and death, which do follow the worthy and the unworthy eating thereof.

Cran. Since you will needs have an addition to it, we muſt uſe both in Manna and in the Sacrament, indifferently, either worthily or unworthily.

Chriſt ſpake abſolutely of Manna, and of the Supper, ſo that, after that abſolute ſpeaking of the Supper, wicked men can in no wiſe eate the fleſh of Chriſt, and drink his blood.

Aug. in Ioan. tract. 26.

Further, Auguſtine upon John, Tractat. 26. upon theſe words, Qui manducat, &c. ſaith, There is no ſuch reſpects in common meats as in the Lords body. For who that eateth other meats hath ſtill hunger, and needeth to be ſatisfied daily: but hee that doth eate the fleſh of Chriſt, and drinketh his blood, doth live for ever. But you know wicked men do not ſo.

Ergo, wicked men do not receive.

Harpſ. S. Auguſtine meaneth, that he who eateth Chriſts fleſh, &c. after a certaine manner, ſhould live for ever. Wicked men do eat, but not after that manner.

Argument in the ſecond figure & ſecond moode.

Ca- Cran. Only they which participate Chriſt be of the myſticall body. me- But the evill men are not of the myſtical body:
ſtres. Ergo, they do not participate Chriſt.

D. Cranmer commended for his modeſty

Weſt. Your wonderfull gentle behaviour and modeſty (good M. Doctor Cranmer) is worthy much commendation: and that I may not deprive you of your right and juſt deſerving, I give you moſt hearty thankes in mine owne name, and in the name of all my brethren. At which ſaying all the Doctors gently put off their caps. Then M. Weſton did oppoſe the Reſpondent on this wiſe.

Weſt. Tertullian doth call the ſacrament the ſigne and figure of the Lord.

S. Auguſtine ad Dardanum ſaith. Non dubitavit Dominus dicere, Hoc eſt corpus meum, cum daret ſignum corporis, i. The Lord did not ſticke to ſay, This is my body, when he gave a ſigne of his body.

Auguſt. de doctrina chriſtiana.

Beſides this, hee giveth rules how to underſtand the Scriptures, ſaying: If the Scriptures ſeeme to command ſome hainous thing, then it is figurative, as by example; Manducare carnem, & bibere ſanguinem eſt tropicus ſermo, i. To eat the fleſh, and drinke the blood, is a tropicall ſpeech.

Anſwer to Tertullian.

Harpſ. Tertullian did write in that place againſt Marcion an Heretike, who denied Chriſt to have a true body, and ſaid, he had only a fantaſticall body. He went about to ſhew that wee had Chriſt both in heaven and in earth; and though we have the true body in the ſacrament, yet he would not goe about ſo to confound him, as to ſay, that Chriſt was truly in the ſacrament: For that Heretike would have thereat rather marvelled, than believed it. Therefore he ſhewed him, that it was the figure of Chriſt: and a figure cannot be but of a thing that is, or hath been extant.

Anſwer to Auguſtine.

To the text of Auguſtine, the Church hath never taught the contrary. There is an outward thing in the ſacrament, which ſometimes hath ſundry names. For it may bee called a figure in this declaration, That body which is in the ſacrament is a figure of Chriſt dwelling in heaven.

Anſwer to Auguſtine. De doctrina chriſtiana.

To the third, That which is brought by Auguſtine for example, about the underſtanding of the Scriptures, is thus to be underſtood, as tending to a generall manner of eating; ſo Manducare carnem, & bibere ſanguinem, i. To eate the fleſh, and drinke the blood, may be a figurative ſpeech to exclude Anthropaphagiam, i. The eating of mans fleſh. The which is, when we eate mans fleſh cut into morſels, as we eat common meat; ſo as we neither have nor eate Chriſt in the ſacrament.

The ſecond queſtion.

Weſt. I underſtand your ſhort and learned anſwer, which doth ſufficiently content me. But now to the ſecond queſtion, which is of tranſubſtantiation.

The Scripture calleth it bread.

Ergo, it is bread.

Harpſ. In the name of bread all is ſignified which we do eat.

Theodoretus dialog. 1.

A ſingle ſole anſwer to Theodoretus.

Weſt. Theodoretus an ancient writter, in his firſt Dialogue, ſaith, that Chriſt changed not the nature, but called it his body.

Harpſ. He doth there ſpeak de Symbolo, which is Externa ſpecies ſacramenti, i. The outward form of the ſacrament. He meaneth that that doth tarry in his own nature. Moreover, as it was reported, he brought for his anſwer Auguſtinum in ſententiis Proſperi.

Theodoretus dial. 2.

Weſt. Theodoret alſo in his ſecond Dialogue of thoſe kindes of bread and wine ſaith, Nec naturam egrediuntur, manent etiam in ſua ſubſtantia, i. They go not out of their owne nature, but they tarry in their own ſubſtance.

(a) And how are they turned if they remain in priori ſubſtantia?

Harpſ. They are underſtood to be of the ſame ſubſtance wherein they are (a) turned.

Weſt. But what ſay you to this? Manent in priori ſubſtantia, i. They remaine in their former ſubſtance.

Harpſ. Symbola manent, i. The outward ſignes do tarry.

Symbolum quid.

Weſt. But what is meant here by this word Symbolum?

Harpſ. The outward form or ſhape only of the nature,

Weſt. Then you cannot call them a ſubſtance.

Harpſ. Yes Sir, every thing hath a certaine ſubſtance in his kinde.

Weſt. That is true, but accidents are not ſubſtances in their kind.

Harpſ. Sunt quid in ſuo genere. Of this they contended much.

Chryſoſt. ad Cæſarium Monachum.

Weſt. Chryſoſtome ad Cæſarium monachum ſaith, Sicut antequam conſecratur, panis eſt: ſic poſtquam conſecratur, liberatus eſt ab appellatione panis, donatuſque eſt appellatione corporis Domini, cum natura remanet, that is, Like as before it is conſecrated, it is bread: ſo after it is conſecrated, it is delivered from the name of bread, and is indued with the name of the Lords body, whereas the nature doth remaine.

Harpſ. Where reade you this place, I pray you?

D. Weſton compileth his arguments out of Peter Martyrs ſtory.

Weſt. Here in Peter Martyr I find it: I have his book in my hand.

Harpſ. The Author ſhall be of more credit, before that I make ſo much of him, as to frame an anſwer unto it.

Gelaſius.

Weſt. Indeed I know not weil where he findeth it. But Gelaſius ſaith, that the nature of bread and wine doe tarry.

Harpſ. What is that Celaſius?

Weſt. A Biſhop of Rome.

Harpſ. Then he allowed the Maſſe.

Weſt. Yea, and oftentimes ſaid it: and Purgatory he alſo allowed, and ſo prayer for the dead, reliques and invocation to ſaints.

Harpſ. Belike then he meant nothing againſt Tranſubſtantiation.

Origen in Mat. cap. 15,

Weſt. It doth appeare ſo indeed, But Origen upon Matthew the 15. Chapter ſaith, that the materiall bread doth tarry, and is conveyed into the privie, and is eaten of Wormes.

Harpſ. Tuſh, tuſh, this place appertaineth unto holy bread.

Weſt. What, doth it appertaine to holy bread?

Harpſ. Yea, unto holy bread.

Weſt. By what meanes can you ſhew how this miraculous worke bringeth Chriſt into the ſacrament?

Harpſ. By the Scriptures I prove that, which ſaith, Hoc eſt corpus meum, This is my body.

Weſt. It doth reioyce all us not a little, that you have ſo well maintained the ſound doctrine of the ſacrament of the Altar, wherein you have faithfully cleaved to the Catholike Church, as an only ſtay of our Religion: by the which means you have proved your ſelfe meet to be authoriſed further towards the practiſing of the Scripture.

And here I doe openly witneſſe, that I doe throughly conſent with you, and have for diſputations ſake only brought theſe arguments againſt you, which you have right learnedly ſatisfied: and now all things being done, after our form and manner, we will end this diſputation, ſaying, In'oppoſitum eſt ſacra Theologia, In oppoſitum eſt, &c.

¶ Thus have ye heard in theſe foreſaid diſputations, about the holy Supper of the Lord, the reaſons and arguments of the Doctors, the anſwers and reſolutions of the Biſhops, and the triumph of the Prolocutor, triumphing before the victory, with Vicit veritas, who rather in my minde ſhould have exclaimed, Vicit poteſtas; as it happeneth alwaies, Vbi pars maior vincit meliorem. For elſe if poteſtas had not helped the Prolocutor more than veritas, there had been a ſmall victoria. But ſo it is where iudgements be partiall, and parties be addicted, there all things turne to victory: though it be never ſo meane and ſimple, as in this diſputation might well appeare.

For firſt, of the Opponents part, neither was there almoſt any argument in true moode and figure rightly framed: neither could the anſwerers be permitted to ſay for themſelves: and if they anſwered any thing, it was condemned before they began to ſpeake. Againe, ſuch diſturbance and confuſion, more like a conſpiration than any diſputation, without all forme and order, was in the Schooles during the time of their anſwering, that neither could the anſwerers have place to utter their mindes, neither would the Opponents be ſatisfied with any reaſons. Concerning the which diſturbance of that miſruled diſputation you ſhall heare what Maſter Ridley himſelf reporteth by his own deſcription, in manner as followeth.

The report and narration of M. Ridley concerning the miſordered diſputation had againſt him and his fellow-priſoners at Oxford.

B. Ridleyes report of the miſorder of this diſputation.

I Never yet, ſince I was borne ſaw, or heard any thing done or handled more vainly or tumultuouſly, than the diſputation which was with me in the Schooles at Oxford. Yea verily, I could never have thought that it had been poſſible to have found amongſt men recounted to bee of knowledge and learning in this Realme, any ſo brazen faced and ſhameleſſe, ſo diſorderly and vainly to behave themſelves, more like Stage-players in Enterludes to ſet forth a Pageant, than to grave Divines in Schooles to diſpute. The Sorbonicall clamours (which at Paris I have ſeene in times paſt, when Popery moſt reigned) might be worthily thought (in compariſon of this Thraſonicall oſtentation) to have had much modeſty. And no great marvell, ſeeing they which ſhould have beene Moderatours, and overſeers of others, and which ſhould have given good enſample in words and gravity: they themſelves above all other gave worſt enſample, and did, as it were, blow the trumpe to the reſt, to rave, roare, rage, any cry out. By reaſon whereof (good Chriſtian Reader) manifeſtly it may appeare, that they never ſought for any truth or verity, but only for the glory of the world, and their own bragging victory. But leſt by the innumerable railings and reproachfull taunts, wherewith I was baited on every ſide, our cauſe, yea rather Gods cauſe and his Churches ſhould be evill ſpoken of, and ſlandered to the world through falſe reports, and untrue enſamples given out of our diſputation, and ſo the verity might ſuſtaine ſome dammage, I thought it no leſſe than my duty to write mine anſwers: to the intent that whoſoever is deſirous to know the truth thereof, may by this perceive as well thoſe things which were chiefly objected, as ſummarily that which was anſwered of me unto every of them. Howbeit (good Reader) I confeſſe this to be moſt true, that it is impoſſible to ſet forth either all that was, God knoweth, tumultuouſly & confuſedly objected of their parts, being ſo many, ſpeaking many times all together ſo thick that one could not well heare another, neither all that was anſwered on my behalfe to them ſo ſundry and divers Opponents.

No verity but glory ſought for in this diſputation.

Moreover, a great part of the time appointed for the diſputations was vainly conſumed in opprobrious checks and reviling taunts, with hiſſing and clapping of hands, and that in the Engliſh tongue, to procure the peoples favour withall. All which things, when I with great grief of heart did behold, proteſting openly, that ſuch exceſſive and outragious diſorder was unſeemely for thoſe Schools and men of learning and gravity, and that they which were the doers and ſtirrers of ſuch things, did nothing elſe but bewray the ſlenderneſſe of their cauſe, and their owne vanities: I was ſo farre off by this my humble complaint from doing any good at all, that I was inforced to heare ſuch rebukes, checkes, and taunts for my labour, as no perſon of any honeſty without bluſhing could abide to heare the like ſpoken of a moſt vile varlet, againſt a moſt wretched ruffian.

Taunts and revilings uſed in this diſputation

At the firſt beginning of the diſputation, when I ſhould have confirmed mine anſwer to the firſt propoſition in few words, and that (after the manner and law of Schools) afore I could make an end of my firſt probation, which was not very long, even the Doctors themſelves cried out, He ſpeaketh blaſphemies, he ſpeaketh blaſphemies. And when I on my knees beſought them, and that heartily, that they would vouchſafe to heare me to the end (whereat the Prolocutor being moved, cried out on high, Let him reade it, let him reade it) yet when I began to reade againe, there followed immediately ſuch ſhouting, ſuch a noiſe and tumult, and confuſion of voices, crying, Blaſphemies, blaſphemies, as I to my remembrance never heard or read the like, except it be that one which was in the Acts of the Apoſtles, ſtirred up of Demetrius the Silver-Smith, and other of his occupation, crying out againſt Paul, Great is Diana of the Epheſians, great is Diana of the Epheſians: and except it be a certaine diſputation which the Arrians had againſt the Orthodoxes, and ſuch as were of godly iudgement in Africa, where it is ſaid, that ſuch as the Preſident and Rulers of the diſputation were, ſuch was the end of the diſputations. All were in a hurly-burly, and ſo great were the ſlanders which the Arrians caſt out, that nothing could quietly bee heard. This writeth Victor in the ſecond booke of his hiſtory.

D. Ridley could not be ſuffered to read forth his proteſtation.

The which cries and tumults of them againſt me ſo prevailed, that will I, nill I, I was inforced to leave off the reading of my probations, although they were ſhort. If any man doubt of the truth hereof let the ſame aſke any one that was there, and not utterly perverted in Poperie, and I am aſſured he will ſay, I ſpeak the leaſt. But to complaine of theſe things further I will ceaſe.

And further ſpeaking of this diſputation, hee concludeth with theſe words: And thus was ended this moſt glorious diſputation of the moſt holy Fathers, Sacrificers, Doctors and Maſters, which fought moſt manfully, as yee may ſee, for their God and goods, for their faith and felicity, for their countrey and kitchin, for their beautie and bellie, with triumphant applauſes and favour of the whole Univerſity.

After rhe diſputation of M. Latimer ended, which was the 18. day of April; the Friday following, which was the 20. day of the ſaid moneth, the Commiſſioners ſate in Saint Maries Church, as they did the Saturday before, and Doctor Weſton uſed particularly diſſwaſions with every of them, and would not ſuffer them to anſwer in any wiſe, but directly and peremptorily, as his words were, to ſay whether they would ſubſcribe or no. And firſt to the Biſhop of Canterbury he ſaid, he was overcome in diſputations: to whom the Biſhop anſwered, that whereas Doctor Weſton ſaid, he hath anſwered and oppoſed, and could neither maintaine his owne errours, nor impugne the verity, all that he ſaid was falſe. For he was not ſuffered to oppoſe as he would, nor could anſwer as he was required, unleſſe he would have brawled with them, ſo thick their reaſons came one after another. Ever foure or five did interrupt him, that he could not ſpeake. Maſter Ridley and Maſter Latimer were aſked what they would do: they replyed they would ſtand to that they had ſaid. Then were they all called together, and ſentence read over them, that they were no members of the Church. And therefore they, their fautors and patrons were condemned as heretikes: and in reading of it, they were aſked whether they would turne or no; and they bade them read on in the name of God, for they were not minded to turn. So they were condemned all three.

The three priſoners at Oxford called before the Commiſsioners April 20.

D. Cranmer, biſhop Ridley, & M. Latimer condemned.

After which ſentence of condemnation being awarded againſt them, they anſwered againe every one in his turne, in manner and effect of words, as followeth: The Archbiſhop firſt beginning thus:

The Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

From this your iudgement and ſentence I appeal to the iuſt iudgement of God Almighty, truſting to bee preſent with him in heaven, for whoſe preſence in the Altar I am thus condemned.

Doctor Ridley.

Although I bee not of your company, yet doubt I not but my name is written in another place, whither this ſentence will ſend us ſooner, than wee ſhould by the courſe of nature have come.

Maſter Latimer.

I thanke God moſt heartily, that he hath prolonged my life to this end, that I may in this caſe glorifie God by that kinde of death.

Doctor Weſtons anſwer unto Latimer.

Weſton giveth ſentence againſt himſelf.

If you go to heaven in this faith, then I will never come thither as I am thus perſwaded.

The Archbiſhop and his fellow-priſoners ſeparated

After the ſentence pronounced, they were ſeparated one from another, videlicet, the Archbiſhop was returned to Bocardo, D. Ridley was carried to the Shiriffes houſe, M. Latimer to the Bailiffes.

On Saturday following, they had a Maſſe with a generall Proceſſion and great ſolemnitie. Doctor Cranmer was cauſed to behold the Proceſſion out of Bocardo; Doctor Ridley out of the Shiriffes houſe. Latimer alſo, being brought to ſee it from the Bailiffs houſe, thought that he ſhould have gone to burning, and ſpake to one Auguſtine Cooper a Catchpoll, to make a quick fire. But when he came to Carfox, and ſaw the matter, hee ran as faſt as his old bones would carrie him to one Spenſers ſhop, and would not looke towards it. Laſt of all, Doctor Weſton carried the ſacrament, and foure Doctors carried the Canopy over him.

Immediately after the ſentence was given, Doctor Ridley writeth to the Prolocutor in manner as followeth.

Doctor Ridley to the Prolocutor.

D Ridleyes letter to the Prolocutor.

Papiſts have ſmall conſcience in performing promiſes

MAſter Prolocutor, you remember, I am ſure, how you promiſed mee openly in the Schooles, after my proteſtation, that I ſhould ſee how my anſwers were there taken and written of the Notaries whom ye appointed (me fateor neminem recuſare) to write what ſhould bee ſaid, and to have had licence to have added unto them, or to have altered them, as upon more deliberation ſhould have ſeemed mee beſt. Yee granted me alſo, at the delivery of my anſwer unto your firſt propoſition, a copie of the ſame: theſe promiſes are not performed. If your ſudden departure be any part of the cauſe thereof, yet I pray you remember that they may be performed: for performance of promiſe is to be looked for at a righteous Iudges hands. Now I ſend you here my anſwers in writing to your ſecond and third propoſitions, and doe deſire and require earneſtly a copie of the ſame, and I ſhal by Gods grace procure the paines of the writer to be paid for and ſatisfied accordingly. Maſter Prolocutor, in the time of my anſwering in the Schooles, when I would have confirmed my ſayings with authorities and reaſons, yee ſaid then openly, that I ſhould have time and place to ſay and bring whatſoever I could another time, and the ſame your ſaying was then and there confirmed of other of the Commiſſioners: yea, and (I dare ſay) the audience alſo thought then that I ſhould have had another day, to have brought and ſaid what I could for the declaration and confirmation of mine aſſertions. Now that this was not done, but ſo ſuddenly ſentence given before the cauſe was perfectly heard, I cannot but marvell, &c.

Aprill 23.

On Munday next inſuing, after theſe things done and paſt, being the 23. of the ſaid moneth of April, Doctor Weſton Prolocutor tooke his iourney up to London, with the Letters certificatory from the Univerſity unto the Queene, by whom the Archbiſhop of Canterbury directed his letters ſupplicatory unto the Councell. The which letters after the Prolocutor had received, and had carried them well-neere halfe way to London, by the way he opened the ſame, and ſeeing the contents thereof, ſent them back again, refuſing to carry them, &c. Likewiſe Biſhop Ridley hearing of the Prolocutors going to London, writeth to him his letters, wherein he deſireth him to carry his anſwers up to certaine Biſhops in London, the forme of which letters, firſt of D. Ridley, then of the Archbiſhop; and laſtly, another letter of D. Ridley to the Archbiſhop, here in order followeth.

A Letter of biſhop Ridley to the Prolocutor.

MAſter Prolocutor, I deſire you, and in Gods Name require you, that you truly bring forth and ſhew all mine anſwers, written and ſubſcribed with mine owne hand, unto the higher houſe of the Convocation, and ſpecially to my Lord Chancellor, my Lords of Dureſme, Ely, Worceſter, Norwich, and Chicheſter, and alſo to ſhew and exhibit this my writing unto them, which in theſe few lines here I write unto you: and that I did make this requeſt unto you by this my writing, know yee that I did take witneſſe of them by whom I did ſend you this writing, and alſo of thoſe which were then with them preſent, videlicet, the two Bailiffes of Oxford, and of M. Iriſh Alderman, then there called to be a witneſſe.

By me Nicholas Ridley, 13. of April, An. 1554.

The copy of the Archbiſhop of Canterburies Letters to the Councell, ſent by D. Weſton, who refuſed to deliver them.

The Archbiſhop writeth to the Councell.

The Archbiſhop not ſuffered to anſwer fully to any argument.

IN right humble wiſe ſheweth unto your honorable Lordſhips Thomas Cranmer late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, beſeeching the ſame to be a meanes for mee unto the Queenes Highneſſe for her mercy and pardon. Some of you know by what meanes I was brought and trained unto the Will of our late Soveraigne Lord King Edward the ſixth, and what I ſpake againſt the ſame, wherein I refer me to the reports of your honours and worſhips. Furthermore, this is to ſignifie unto your Lordſhips, that upon Munday, Tueſday, and Wedneſday laſt paſt, were open diſputations here in Oxford againſt me, M. Ridley, and M. Latimer, in three matters concerning the ſacrament: Firſt, of the reall preſence, ſecondly, of tranſubſtantiation, and thirdly, of the ſacrifice of the Maſſe: upon Munday againſt me, upon Tueſday againſt D. Ridley, and upon Wedneſday againſt Maſter Latimer. How the other two were ordered I know not; for we were ſeparated, ſo that none of us knoweth what the other ſaid, nor how they were ordered. But as concerning my ſelfe I can report. Doctor Chedſey was appointed to diſpute againſt me, but the diſputation was ſo confuſed, that I never knew the like, every man bringing forth what him liked without order, and ſuch haſte was made, that no anſwer could be ſuffered to be taken fully to any argument, before another brought a new argument: and in ſuch weighty matters the diſputation muſt needs be ended in one day, which can ſcantly be ended in three moneths. And when we had anſwered them, they would not appoint us one day to bring forth our proofes, that they might anſwer us, being required by mee thereunto, whereas I my ſelfe have more to ſay than can be well diſcuſſed, as I ſuppoſe, in twenty dayes. The meanes to reſolve the truth, had beene to have ſuffered us to anſwer fully to all that they could ſay, and then they againe to anſwer us fully to all that we can ſay. But why they would not anſwer us, what other cauſe can there be, but that either they feared their matter, that they were not able to anſwer us, or elſe for ſome conſideration they made ſuch haſte, not to ſeeke the truth, but co condemn us, that it muſt be done in poſt-haſte before the matters could be throughly heard: for in haſte we were all three condemned of hereſie. Thus much I thought good to ſignifie unto your Lordſhips, that you may know the indifferent handling of matters, leaving the iudgment thereof unto your wiſdomes. And I beſeech your Lordſhips to remember mee a poore priſoner unto the Queens Maieſty, and I ſhall pray, as I doe daily, unto God for the long preſervation of your good Lordſhips in all godlineſſe and felicity. April 23.

Haſte made in condemning the Archbiſhop & his fellowes.

Doctor Ridley to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

B. Ridley writeth to the Archbiſhop.

I Wiſh ye might have ſeen theſe mine anſwers before I had delivered them, that yee might have corrected them. But I truſt in the ſubſtance of the matter we doe agree fully, both led by one ſpirit of truth, and both walking after one rule of Gods word. It is reported, that Sergeant Morgan, the chief Juſtice of the common place, is gone mad. It is ſaid alſo that Juſtice Hales hath recanted, perverted by Doctor Moreman. Item, that maſter Rogers, Doctor Crome, and maſter Bradford ſhall be had to Cambridge, and there be diſputed with, as we were here, and that the Doctors of Oxford ſhall goe likewiſe thither, as Cambridge men came hither. When ye have read mine anſwers, ſend them againe to Auſten, except ye will put any thing to them. I truſt the day of our delivery out of all miſeries, and of our entrance into perpetuall reſt, and unto perpetuall ioy and felicity, draweth nigh: The Lord ſtrengthen us with his mighty Spirit of grace. If you have not to write with, you muſt make your man your friend. And this bearer deſerveth to be rewarded; ſo he may and will do you pleaſure. My man is truſty; but it grieveth both him and me, that when I ſend him with any thing to you, your man will not let him come up to ſee you, as he may to maſter Latimer, and yours to me. I have a promiſe to ſee how my anſwers were written in the Schools, but as yet I cannot come by it. Pray for me, I pray for you, and ſo ſhall I for you. The Lord have mercy of his Church, and lighten the eyes of the Magiſtrates, that Gods extreme plagues light not on this Realme of England. Turne, or burne.

This Juſtice Morgan gave ſentence againſt Lady Jane.

Diſputation in Cambridge intended.

Theſe diſputations being thus diſcuſſed and ended, which were at Oxford in the moneth of Aprill, as is aforeſaid: now let us return again to the proſecuting of our ſtory, touching other things likewiſe that happened in other parts of the Realme, in this tumultuous time of Queen Mary. And becauſe things that hapned in that time were ſo many and divers, that it is hard to keep a perfect order in reciting them all: to the intent therefore to inſert things left out before, or els to proſecute the ſame more at full, we have thought here a little to interrupt the order of time (albeit not much) returning againe to the moneth of July the yeer before, viz. 1553. In the which moneth of July I ſhewed before, how the Duke of Northumberland was apprehended by the Guard, and brought to London by the Earle of Arundell, and other Lords and Gentlemen appointed for that purpoſe on ſaint James day, being the 25. day of July, and ſo to the Tower, where he remained. Theſe bee the names of them which were committed to the Tower with the Duke.

First, the Earle of Warwick, the Earle of Huntington, Lord Ambroſe and Lord Henry Dudley, Lord Haſtings, who was delivered again the ſame night, ſir John Gates, ſir Henry Gates, ſir Andrew Dudley, ſir Thomas Palmer, and D. Sands Chancellor of Cambridge.

The names of them that were committed to the Tower with the Duke of Northumberland.

The 26. day, the Lord Marqueſſe of Northhampton, the Biſhop of London, Lord Robert Dudley, and ſir Richard Corbet were brought and committed to the Tower.

The 27. day, the Lord chiefe Juſtice of England, and the Lord Mountacute chiefe Juſtice of the common place, were committed to the Tower.

Upon the Friday, being the 28 of July, the Duke of Suffolke, and ſir John Cheek were committed to the Tower.

The 30. of July, the Lord Ruſſell was committed to the Shiriffe of Londons cuſtody.

The 31 day, the earle of Rutland was committed to the Fleet.

Upon the Munday, the laſt of July, the Duke of Suffolke was delivered out of the Tower againe.

The Duke of Suffolke delivered out of the Tower.

Upon Thurſday, the 3. of Auguſt, the Queen entred into the city of London at Algate, and ſo to the Tower, where ſhe remained ſeven dayes, and then removed to Richmond.

Upon Friday, the 4. day, Doctor Day was delivered out of the Fleet.

Upon the Saturday, the 5. day, the Lord Ferris was committed to the Tower, and the ſame day D. Boner was delivered out of the Marſhalſey. The ſame day at night D. Cockes was committed to the Marſhalſey, and one maſter Edward Underhill to Newgate. Alſo the ſame day Doctor Tonſtall and Steven Gardiner were delivered out of the Tower, and Gardiner received into the Queens privie Councell, and made Lord Chancellor.

Boner ſet at liberty.

Upon Sunday, the 7. day, Henry Dudley Captain of the Guard at Guines, which before had been ſent to the French King by his couſin the Duke of Northumberland, after the diſpatch of his amballage with the French King, returned to Guines, and ſo was taken, and this day brought to the Tower.

Upon Munday, the 7. day of Auguſt, Dirige in Latine was ſung within the Tower, by all the Kings Chappel, and the Biſhop of Wincheſter was chiefe miniſter, whereat was preſent the Queen, and moſt part of the Councell.

K. Edwards body buried.

Upon Tueſday, the 8. of Auguſt, the Kings body was brought to Weſtminſter, and there buried, where Doctor Day biſhop of Chicheſter preached. The ſame day a maſſe of Requiem was ſung within the Tower by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, who had on his Miter, and did all things as in times paſt was done, at which maſſe the Queen was preſent.

Upon Thurſday the Duke of Norfolke came forth of the Tower, with whom the Dutcheſſe of Somerſet was alſo delivered this Thurſday.

Upon Sunday, the 11. of Auguſt, D. Bourne preached at Pauls Croſſe: of the which Sermon reade before, pag. 17.

In the week following, commandement was given throughout the City, that no Prentiſes ſhould come to the ſermon, nor beare any knife or dagger.

Upon the Wedneſday, being the 16. day of Auguſt, maſter Bradford, maſter Beacon, and maſter Veron, were committed to the Tower: with whom alſo maſter Sampſon ſhould have been committed, and was ſought for the ſame time in M. Elſings houſe in Fleetſtreet, where

M. Bradford with others committed to the Tower.

Maſter Bradford was taken; and becauſe hee was not found, the biſhop of Wincheſter fumed like a Prelate with the meſſenger.

Upon the Friday, being the 18. of Auguſt, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſſe of Northampton, and the Earle of Warwicke, were arraigned at Weſtminſter, and there the ſame day condemned, the Duke of Northfolke that day being the high Judge.

Upon the Saturday, the 19. of Auguſt, ſir Andrew Dudley, ſir John Gates, ſir Henry Gates, and ſir Thomas Palmer were arraigned at Weſtminſter, and condemned the ſame day, the Lord Marqueſſe of Wincheſter being high Judge.

Upon which day a letter was ſent unto ſir Henry Tirril, Anthony Browne, and Edmund Browne, Eſquires, praying them to commit to ward all ſuch as ſhall contemne the Queens order of Religion, or ſhall keep themſelves from Church, there to remaine untill they be conformable, and to ſignifie their names to the Councell.

D. Watſon preached at Pauls Croſſe.

Upon Sunday, the 20. of Auguſt, D. Watſon, the biſhop of Wincheſters Chapleine, preached at Pauls Croſſe, at whoſe ſermon was preſent the Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, the Earle of Bedford, the Earle of Pembroke, the Lord Rich, and 200, of the Guard with their halberds, leſt the people ſhould have made any ſtir againſt the Preacher.

Upon Munday, the 21. of Auguſt, the Duke of Northumberland, the Marqueſſe of Northampton, ſir Andrew Dudley, ſir John Gates, and ſir Thomas Palmer, heard a maſſe within the Tower, and after maſſe they all five received the ſacrament in one kinde only, as in the Popiſh time was uſed. On the which day alſo Queene Mary ſet forth a Proclamation, ſignifing to the people, that ſhe could not hide any longer the Religion which ſhe from her infancy had profeſſed, &c. inhibiting in the ſaid Proclamation Printing, and Preaching, the tenor whereof, reade before, page 16.

Execution at the Tower hil.

Upon the Tueſday, being the 22. of Auguſt, the Duke of Northumberland, ſir John Gates, and ſir Thomas Palmer, were beheaded at the Towerhill, as before is ſaid, pag. 16. The ſame day certain noble perſonages heard maſſe within the Tower, and likewiſe after maſſe received the ſacrament in one kinde.

Upon Sunday, the 27. day of Auguſt, Doctor Chedſey preached at Pauls Croſſe, and the ſame day the biſhop of Canterbury, ſir Thomas Smith, and the Deane of Pauls were cited to appeare the weeke following before the Queens Commiſſioners, in the biſhops Conſiſtory within Pauls.

In this meane time it was noiſed abroad by running rumors falſly & craftily deviſed; either to ſtabliſh the credit of the maſſe, or elſe to bring Thomas Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury out of credit, that he, to curry favour with Queen Mary, ſhould promiſe to ſay Dirige maſſe after the old cuſtome for King Edward, and that hee had already ſaid maſſe at Canterbury, &c. Wherfore to ſtop the noiſe and ſlanders of thoſe rumours, the ſaid Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, the 7. day of September ſet forth a letter, which was alſo printed, in purgation of himſelfe, the copie of which letter here enſueth.

A purgation of Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, againſt certaine ſlanders falſly raiſed upon him.

The Archbiſh. of Canterbury purgeth himſelfe againſt falſe rumours.

AS the Divell, Chriſts ancient adverſary, is a lyer, and the father of lyes, even ſo hath hee ſtirred up his ſervants and members to perſecute Chriſt and his true word and religion with lying: which hee ceaſeth not to doe moſt earneſtly at this preſent time. For whereas the Prince of famous memory King Henry the eighth, ſeeing the great abuſes of the Latine Maſſe, reformed ſome things therein in his life time, and after, our late Soveraigne Lord King Edward the ſixth, took the ſame whole away for the manifold and great errours and abuſes of the ſame, and reſtored in the place thereof Chriſts holy Supper, according to Chriſts owne inſtitution, and as the Apoſtles uſed the ſame in the Primitive Church, the Divell goeth about now by lying to overthrow the Lords Supper again, and to reſtore his Latine ſatisfactory Maſſe, a thing of his owne invention and device. And to bring the ſame more eaſily to paſſe, ſome have abuſed the name of mee Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, bruting abroad that I have ſet up the Maſſe at Canterbury, and that I offered to ſay Maſſe at the buriall of our late Soveraigne Prince King Edward the ſixth, and that I offered to ſay Maſſe before the Queenes Highneſſe, and at Pauls Church, and I wot not where. And although I have beene well exerciſed theſe twenty yeares to ſuffer and beare evill reports and lyes, and have not beene much grieved thereat, but have borne all things quietly: yet when untrue reports and lyes turne to the hinderance of Gods truth, they are in no wiſe to bee ſuffered. Wherefore theſe bee to ſignifie unto the world, that it was not I that did ſet up the Maſſe at Canterbury, but it was a falſe, flattering, lying, and diſſembling Monke, which cauſed Maſſe to be ſet up there without mine advice or counſell; Reddat illi Dominus in die illo. And as for offering my ſelfe to ſay Maſſe before the Queenes Highneſſe, or in any other place, I never did it, as her Grace well knoweth. But if her Grace will give me leave, I ſhall be ready to prove, againſt all that will ſay the contrary that all that is contained in the holy communion, ſet out by the moſt innocent and godly Prince King Edward the ſixth, in his high Court of Parliament, is conformable to that order which our Saviour Chriſt did both obſerve, and command to be obſerved, and which his Apoſtles and Primitive Church uſed many yeeres; whereas the Maſſe in many things not only hath no foundation of Chriſt, his Apoſtles, nor the Primitive Church, but is manifeſtly contrary to the ſame, and containeth many horrible abuſes it it. And although many either unlearned or malicious, doe report that M. Peter Martyr is unlearned, yet if the Queenes Highneſſe will grant thereunto, I with the ſaid M. Peter Martyr, and other foure or five, which I ſhall chuſe, will by Gods grace take upon us to defend, not only the common prayers of the Church, the miniſtration of the Sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies, but alſo all the doctrine and religion ſet out by our Soveraigne Lord King Edward the ſixth, to be more pure, and according to Gods word, than any other that hath beene uſed in England theſe 1000. yeeres: ſo that Gods word may be Iudge, and that the reaſons and proofes of both parties may be ſet out in writing, to the intent, as well that all the world may examine and judge thereon, as that no man ſhall ſtart backe from his writing. And where they boaſt of the faith, that hath beene in the Church theſe 1500. yeeres, wee will joyne with them in this point; and that the ſame doctrine and uſage is to bee followed, which was in the Church 1500. yeeres paſt: and wee ſhall prove, that the order of the Church, ſet out at this preſent in this Realme by Act of Parliament, is the ſame that was uſed in the Church 1500 yeeres paſt, and ſo ſhall they be never able to prove theirs.

This Monke was Doctor Thornton, a cruell murtherer of Gods people, of whoſe horrible end ye ſhall reade hereafter, partly alſo in the life of Cranmer ber, Lord Mountacute chiefe Juſtice, and Lord chiefe Baron were delivered out of the Tower.

The 13. of September, the reverend father maſter Hugh Latimer was committed to the Tower.

The 14. of September, the Biſhop of Canterbury was committed to the Tower.

The 26. of September, one maſter Gray of Cambridge, called before him one maſter Garth, for that he would not ſuffer a boy of Peterhouſe to help him ſay maſſe in Pembroke hall, which was before any law was eſtabliſhed for that behalf.

Amongſt theſe Pageants ſtood a certain man upon the top of the Eagle upon Pauls ſteeple with a flagge in his hand.

The Queen came to the Tower of London upon the Thurſday, being the 28. of September and upon the Saturday following ſhe rode from the Tower thorow the City of London, where were made many Pageants to receive her, and ſo ſhe was triumphantly brought to Weſtminſter to White-hall.

Vpon the Sunday, being the firſt day of October, the Queens Highneſſe went from White-hall to Weſtminſter Abbey, accompanied with the moſt part of the Nobility of this Realme: namely theſe, The Duke of Norfolk, the Earle of Arundell, the Earle of Shrewſbury, the Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, the Earles of Darby, Bedford, Worceſter, Cumberland, Weſtmerland, Oxford, Suſſex, Devonſhire, Pembroke, the Lord Dacres of the North, Lord Ferris, Lord Cobham, Lord Aburgeiny, Lord Wentworth, Lord Scroupe, Lord Rich, Lord Vaus, Lord Howard, Lord Conias Lord Morley, Lord Paget, and the Lord Willowby, with other Nobles, and all the Embaſſadours of divers Countries, the Maior of London with all the Aldermen. Alſo out of the Abbey, to receive her comming, came three ſilver croſſes, and to the number of fourescore, or neere upon, of ſinging men, all in very rich and gorgeous coapes. Amongſt whom were the Deane of Weſtminſter, and divers of her Chapleines, which bare every one ſome enſigne in their hands, and after them followed ten Biſhops mytred all, and their Croyſer ſtaves in their hands, and rich coapes upon them every one. And in this order they returned from Weſtminſter hall before the Queene to the Abbey, wher ſhee was crowned by Steven Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Chancellour of England. At the time of the Coronation Doctor Day Biſhop of Chicheſter made a Sermon to the Queens Maieſty, and to the reſt of the Nobility.

Also there was a generall pardon proclaimed within the Abbey at the ſame time of her Coronation, out of which Proclamation all the priſoners of the Tower and of the Fleet were excepted, and 62. more. Whereof M. Whitchurch and M. Grafton were two.

Generall pardon at the Queenes Coronation Exempted out of the pardon.

The third of October, the Vicechancellour of Cambridge did challenge one maſter Pierſon, for that he miniſtred ſtill the Communion in his owne Pariſh, and did receive ſtrangers of other Pariſhes to the ſame, and would not ſay Maſſe. Whereupon within two dayes after hee was cleane diſcharged from farther miniſtring in his Cure.

Vpon the Wedneſday following, the Archbiſhop of Yorke was committed to the Tower.

Vpon Thurſday, being the 5. of October, 1554 the Queen rode to the Parliament in her robes, and all the Nobility with her, and when they were ſet in the Parliament Houſe, the Biſhop of Wincheſter made to them a ſolemne Oration, and Sergeant Pollard was choſen ſpeaker of the Parliament. The ſame day the Biſhops of Lincolne, Hereford, and Weſtcheſter, were diſcharged from the Parliament and Convocation.

Alſo the 10. day of October, the earle of Huntington was delivered out of the Tower.

The Earle of Huntington delivered out of the Tower.

Vpon the Sunday after, being the 15. of October, M. Laurence Saunders preached at Alhallowes in Breadſtreet in the morning: where hee declared the abomination of the maſſe, with divers other matters very notably and godly. Whereof more ſhall bee heard (by the Lords leave) hereafter when we come to his ſtory. In which his doing, as he ſhewed himſelf to be Gods faithfull miniſter, ſo is hee ſure not to bee defrauded of Gods faithfull promiſe, who ſaith, Omnis qui confitebitur me coram hominibus, confitebor & ego illum coram Patre meo qui eſt in cœlis, Mat. 10. But about noon of the ſame day hee was ſent for by the biſhop of London, and from thence committed to the Marſhalſey.

M. Saunders for preaching againſt the Maſſe, committed to the Marſhalſey.

Vpon the Sunday following, being the 20. of October, Doctor Weſton preached at Pauls Croſſe. Who in the beginning of his Sermon willed the people to pray for the ſouls departed, on this wiſe: You ſhall pray for all them that be departed, that be neither in heaven, nor hell, but in a place not yet ſufficiently purged to come to heaven, that they may be relieved by your devout prayers. He named the Lords Table an oyſter bord. He ſaid that the Catechiſme in Latine, lately ſet out, was abominable hereſie, and likened the ſetters out of the ſame Catechiſme to Julianus Apoſtata, and the book to a Dialogue ſet out by the ſaid Julianus Apoſtata, wherein Chriſt and Pilate were the ſpeakers; with many other things. Which ſermon with all the points thereof, maſter Coverdale the ſame time learnedly confuted by writing, which remaineth yet in my hands to be ſeene.

In the week following began the diſputations in the Convocation houſe in Pauls Church, whereof ſufficient hath been before declared.

The 26. day of October, the Vicechancellour of Cambridge went to Clarehall, and in the preſence of doctor Walker, diſplaced doctor Madew, and placed maſter Swyborne in the maſterſhip there, by force of the Lord Chancellours letters, for that he was (as they termed it) Vxoratus, that is, married.

The 28. day of October, the Papiſts in the Kings Colledge in Cambridge (not tarrying the making of any law, but of their blind zeale) had their whole ſervice again in the Latine tongue, contrary to the law then in force.

Running before the law

The laſt of October, the Vicechancellour of Cambridge did ſharpely reprove and threaten one M. Thrackold, for that he challenged the ſaid Vicechancellour, who had ſuffered maſter Bovell (contrary to the ſtatutes then in force) quietly without puniſhment to depart, notwithſtanding that he refuſed to ſweare to the ſupremacy of the Queene, and the abrogation of the Biſhop of Rome.

The third day of November, the Vicechancellour ſent for the Curate of the round Pariſh in Cambridge, commanding him not to miniſter any more in the Engliſh tongue, ſaying, hee would have one uniforme order of ſervice throughout the towne, and that in Latine, with maſſe, which was eſtabliſhed the 12. day of this moneth.

The 6. day of November, maſter Pollard preached at ſaint Michaels, and in his ſermon approved Purgatory.

The 28. day of November, the Archdeacons Officiall viſited in Hynton, where he gave in charge to preſent all ſuch as did diſturbe the Queens proceedings, in letting the Latine ſervice, the ſetting up of their Altars, and ſaying of maſſe, or any part thereof: whereby it was eaſie to ſee how theſe good fellowes meant to proceed, having the law once on their ſide, that thus readily againſt a manifeſt law would attempt the puniſhment of any man.

K. Edwards acts repealed.

The 15. day of December there were two proclamations at London; the one for the repealing of certain acts made by K. Edward, and for the the ſetting up of the maſſe, for the 20. day of December then next following: the other was that no man ſhould interrupt any of thoſe that would ſay maſſe.

The Parliament beginning about the 5. day of October, continued till the fifth of December. In the which parliament were diſſolved as well all Statutes made of Premunirc, in the time of K Henry the eighth, &c. as alſo other lawes and ſtatutes concerning religion and adminiſtration of ſacraments, decreed under King Edward the ſixth, as is partly above touched In the which parliament moreover was appointed the 20. day of December next inſuing the ſame yeer 1553. that all the old form and manner of Church ſervice, uſed in the laſt yeere of King Henry, ſhould now again be reſtored,

On New-yeeres Even being the laſt of December, the Lord Marqueſſe of Northhampton was delivered out of the Tower.

A Prieſt of Canterbury repenting his ſaying Maſſe.

About this time a Prieſt of Canterbury ſaid maſſe on the one day, and the next day after he came into the Pulpit, and deſired all the people to forgive him; for he ſaid he had betrayed Chriſt but not as Judas did, but as Peter did, and there made a long ſermon againſt the maſſe.

The day after New-yeeres day, being the ſecond day of January, in the yeere of our Lord 1554. foure Ambaſſadours came into London from the Emperour, and were honourably received. There names were theſe: Le Countie de Egmont, Le Countie de Lalen, Mounſieur Corire, Le Chancellor Nigre.

About this time a great number of new Biſhops, Deanes, &c. were choſen, more than were made at one time ſince the Conqueſt. Their names are theſe:

New Biſhops made.

D. Holyman B. of Briſtow.
D. Coates B. of Weſtcheſter.
D. Hopton Biſhop of Norwich.
D. Bourne Biſhop of Bathe.
D. White Biſhop of Lincolne.
D. Mores B. of Rocheſter.
D. Morgan Biſhop of S. Davies.
D. Poole B. of S. Aſſe.
D. Brookes B. of Gloceſter.
D. Moreman, coadjutor to the Biſhop of Excეter, and after his deceaſe Biſhop of Exceter.
D. Glin Biſhop of Bangor.
Maſter Fecknam Deane of Pauls.
D. Rainolds Deane of Briſtow, with others.

The 12. day of January, the Vicechancellor of Cambridge called a congregation generall, wherein amongſt other things he ſhewed, that the Queen would have there a maſſe of the holy Ghoſt upon the 18. day of February then next following, for that it was her birth day, which was fulfilled the day appointed, and that very ſolemnly.

Doctor Crome committed to the Fleet.

Upon the Saturday, being the 13. of January Doctor Crome was committed to the Fleet. Alſo upon the Sunday following, one M. Addington was committed to the tower. Alſo this ſame Sunday knowledge was given in the Court openly by the biſhop of Wincheſter, that the marriage betwéen the Quéens Maieſty and the King of Spain was concluded, and the day following, being Munday, and the 15. of January, the Maior with the Aldermen and certaine Commons were at the Court, and there they were commanded by the Lord Chancellor to prepare the City ready to receive the ſaid King of Spaine; who declared unto them what a Catholike, mighty, prudent, and wiſe Prince the ſaid King was, with many other commendations of him.

The marriage of Q. Mary.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 20. of January, the Court of the firſt fruits and tenths was diſſolved.

Upon the Thurſday at night following, the 25 day of January, the Lord Marqueſſe of Northhampton was again committed to the Tower, and ſir Edward Warner with him. Who were brought to the Tower by the Maior, Juſtice Hales committed to the Marſhalſey.

M. Rogers committed to Newgate.

Upon the Saturday following, being the 26. of January, Juſtice Hales was committed to the Marſhalſey, and the ſame day maſter Rogers was committed to Newgate. Upon this Saturday, Sunday, and Munday following, the Londoners prepared a number of ſouldiers (by the Quéenes commandement) to goe into Kent againſt the Commons: whereof were chiefe Captaines the Duke of Northfolke, the earle of Wormwood, ſir Henry Jerningham, ſir George Haward, and ten other captaines. Which ſouldiers when they came to Rocheſter bridge, where they ſhould have ſet upon their enemies, moſt of them (as it is ſaid) left their own Captaines and came wholly to the Kentiſh men, and ſo the foreſaid Captaines returned to the court both void of men & victory, leaving behind them both ſixe pieces of ordnance, and treaſure.

About yͤ later end of January, yͤ duke of Suffolk with his brethren departed from his houſe at Shene, & took his voyage into Leiceſter ſhire. After whom was ſent the earle of Huntington to take him and bring him to London, who proclaimed the ſaid duke traitor by the way as he rode.

Strange ſights ſeen before the comming in of King Philip, and ſubverſion of Religion.

And thus paſſing to the moneth of February, here is to be noted by the way of ſtory, that upon the 15. day of the ſaid moneth, being Thurſday, there were ſéen within the city of London, about nine of the clock in the forenoone, ſtrange ſights. There were ſéene two ſunnes both ſhining at once, the one a good pretty way diſtant from the other. At the ſame time was alſo ſéene a Rain-bow turned contrary, and a great deale higher than hath béen accuſtomed. The common ſtanding of the Raine-bow is thus ⌒ but this ſtood thus ‿ with the head downward, and the féet as it were upward. Both theſe ſights were ſéene as well at Weſtminſter, in Cheapſide, on the ſouth ſide of Pauls, as in very many other places, and that by a great number of honeſt men. Alſo certaine Aldermen went out of the Guild-Hall to behold the ſight.

February 23.

The order and manner of the Duke of Suffolkes death. D. Weſton the Dukes ghoſtly father againſt the Dukes will.

ON Friday the 23. of February, 1554. about nine of the clocke in the forenoone, the Lord Henry Gray, Duke of Suffolke, was brought forth of the Tower of London unto the ſcaffold on the Tower-Hill, with a great company, &c, and in his comming thither, there accompanied him Doctor Weſton as his ghoſtly father, notwithſtanding, as it ſhould ſeeme, againſt the will of the ſaid Duke. For when the Duke went up to the ſcaffold, the ſaid Weſton being on the left hand, preaſed to goe up with him. The Duke with his hand, put him down again off the ſtaires: and Weſton, taking hold of the Duke, forced him downe likewiſe. And as they aſcended the ſecond time, the Duke again put him down.

Weſton put backe by the Dukes hand.

Then Weſton ſaid that it was the Queenes pleaſure he ſhould ſo doe. Wherewith the Duke caſting his hands abroad, aſcended up the ſcaffold, and pauſed a pretty while after. And then he ſaid: Maſters, I have offended the Queene, and her lawes, and thereby am iuſtly condemned to dye, and am willing to dye, deſiring all men to be obedient, and I pray God that this my death may be an enſample to all men, beſeeching you all to beare me witneſſe, that I dye in the faith of Chriſt, truſting to be ſaved by his blood only, and by no other trumpery, the which died for me, and for all them that truly repent, and ſtedfaſtly truſt in him. And I doe repent, deſiring you all to pray to God for me; and that when you ſee my breath depart from mee, you will pray to God that he may receive my ſoule. And then he deſired all men to forgive him, ſaying, that the Queen had forgiven him.

The words of the Duke to the people.

The godly faith and confeſſion of the Duke at his death.

Then M. Weſton declared with a loud voice that the Queenes Maieſtie had forgiven him. With that divers of the ſtanders by ſaid with meetly good and audible voice: ſuch forgiveneſſe God ſend thee, meaning D. Weſton. Then the Duke kneeled down upon his knee, and ſaid the Pſalm Miſerere mei Deus unto the end, holding up his hands, and looking up to heaven. And when he had ended the Pſalm, he ſaid, In manus tuas Domine commendo ſpiritum meum, &c. Then he aroſe and ſtood up, and delivered his cap and his ſkarfe unto the executioner.

The Duke prayeth.

Then the ſaid executioner kneeled down, and aſked the Duke forgiveneſſe. And the Duke ſaid God forgive thee, and I do: and when thou doeſt thine office, I pray thee do it well, and bring me out of this world quickly, and God have mercy to thee. Then ſtood there a man and ſaid, my Lord how ſhall I do for the money that you doe owe me? and the Duke ſaid, alas good fellow, I pray thee trouble me not now, but goe thy way to my officers. Then he knit a kercher about his face, and kneeled down and ſaid, Our Father which art in heaven. &c. unto the end. And then he ſaid, Chriſt have mercy upon me, and laid down his head on the block, and the executioner took the axe, and at the firſt chop ſtroke off his head, and held it up to the people, &c.

The end of the Duke of Suffolke.

The ſame day a number of priſoners had their pardon, and came through the City with their halters about their necks. There were in (a) number about 200.

(a) The number of thoſe were 240. which with halters, about their neckes paſſed through the City to Weſtminſter, and had their pardon.

Upon the Saturday, the 24. of February, ſir William Sentlow was committed as priſoner to the maſter of the Horſe to be kept. This ſir William was at this time one of the Lady Elizabeths Gentlemen.

Upon the Sunday, being the 25. of February, ſir John Rogers was committed to the Tower.

In this weeke, all ſuch Prieſts within the Dioceſſe of London as were married, were divorced from their livings, and commanded to bring their wives within a fortnight, that they might likewiſe be divorced from them. This the biſhop did of his owne power.

Prieſts divorced.

Upon the Tueſday in the ſame weeke, being the 27. of February, certaine Gentlemen of Kent were ſent into Kent to be executed there. Their names were theſe, the two Mantels, two Knevets, and Bret; with theſe Maſter Rudſton alſo and certaine other were condemned, and ſhould have beene executed, but they had their pardon.

Gentlemen ſent into Kent to be executed.

M. Rudſton with certain others pardoned.

As touching the foreſaid maſter Mantel the elder, here by the way is to be noted, that as he was led to execution, and at his firſt caſting under the gallowes, the rope brake. Then they would have had him recanted the truth, and received the ſacrament of the altar (as they terme it) and then they ſaid he ſhould have the Queens pardon: but maſter Mantel, like a worthy Gentleman, refuſed their ſerpentine counſell, and choſe rather to dye, than to have life for diſhonouring of God.

Moreover, as touching the ſaid M. Mantel, for that he was reported falſly to have fallen from the conſtancy of his profeſſion; to cleere himſelfe thereof, and to reprove the ſiniſter ſurmiſe of his recantation, he wrote this brief Apologie in purgation of himſelfe: the copy whereof you ſhall heare.

Further, as concerning Confeſſion and Penance, I declare that I could bee content to ſhew unto any learned Miniſter of Chriſts Church any thing that troubled my conſcience, and of ſuch a man I would moſt willingly heare abſolution pronounced.

M. Mantle opposed in the ſacrament.

Touching the ſacrament of the Altar (as he termed it) I ſaid that I believed Chriſt to be there preſent as the holy Ghoſt meant, when theſe words were written, Hoc est corpus meum.

Mat. 5.
Iames 2.

Further, when this would not ſatisfie, I deſired him to conſider, that I was a condemned man to dye by a law, and that it was more meete for mee to ſeeke a readineſſe and preparation to death. And inſomuch as I diſſented not from him in any Article of the Chriſtian faith neceſſary to ſalvation, I deſired him for Gods ſake no more to trouble mee with ſuch matters, as which to believe, is neither ſalvation; nor not to believe, damnation. Hee anſwered, that if I diſſented but in the leaſt matter from the Catholike Church, my ſoule was in great danger; therefore much more in this great matter, alledging this Text, Qui offenderit in minimo, factus eſt reus omnium, i. Hee that offendeth in the leaſt of theſe, is guilty of them all. Yea, quoth I, Verum eſt ex hiſce mandatis, i. It is true of theſe commandements of God. To this I deſired him to conſider it was not my matter, nor could I in theſe matters keepe diſputation, nor minded ſo to doe; and therefore to take theſe few words for a full anſwer, that I not onely in the matter of the Sacrament, but alſo in all other matters of Religion, believe as the holy Catholike Church of Chriſt (grounded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles) believeth. But upon this word Church we agreed not; for I tooke exception at the Antichriſtian Popiſh Church.

The Church.

D. Bourn and M. Mantel diſagree in the Maſſe.

Then fell we in talke of the Maſſe, wherein wee agreed not: for I both for the occaſion of Idolatrie, and alſo the cleare ſubverſion of Chriſts inſtitution, thought it naught; and hee è contra upon certaine conſiderations ſuppoſed it good. I found fault that it was accounted a Sacrifice propitiatory for ſinne, and at certaine other applications of it. But he ſaid that it was not a propitiatory Sacrifice for ſinne (for the death of Chriſt only was the Sacrifice) and this but a commemoration of the ſame. Then, if yee thinke ſo, (certaine blaſphemous Collects left out) I could bee content (were it not for offending my poore brethren rhat believe in Chriſt, which know not ſo much) to heare your Maſſe. See, quoth he how vain glory toucheth you. Not ſo Sir, quoth I, I am not now I thank God, in caſe to be vain glorious.

Bourne maketh the Maſſe a communion.

1 Cor. 10.

Then I found further fault with it, that it was not a communion. Yea, ſaith hee, one Prieſt ſaying Maſſe here, and another there, and the third in another place, &c. is a communion. This agreeth ſcarcely with theſe words of Paul, ſaid I, Non in melius, ſed in deterius convenitis, i. Yee, come not after a better manner, but after a worſe. Yea, and it is a communion too, ſaid hee, when they come together. Now draweth on the time (quoth hee) that I muſt depart from you to the Court, to ſay Maſſe before the Queen, and muſt ſignifie unto her in what caſe I finde you, and mee thinke I finde you ſore ſeduced. Then I ſaid, I pray you report the beſt: for I truſt you finde mee not obſtinate. What ſhall I ſay? are yee content to heare Maſſe, and to receive the Sacrament of the Maſſe? I beſeech you, ſaid I, ſignifie unto her Majeſty, that I am neither obſtinate nor ſtubborne; for time and perſwaſion may alter mee, but as yet my conſcience is ſuch, that I can neither heare Maſſe, nor receive the ſacrament after that ſort. Thus, after certaine requeſts made to the Queenes Majeſty concerning other matters, he departed.

Mantel neither obſtinate nor ſtubborne.

The next day hee came to mee againe, and brought with him Saint Cyprians workes; for ſo I had required him to doe the day before, becauſe I would ſee his Sermon De Mortalitate. Hee had in this booke turned and interlined certaine places both concerning the Church and the Sacrament, which he willed me to reade. I read as much as my time would ſerve, and at his next comming I ſaid, that I was wholly of Cyprians minde in the matter of the Sacrament. Doctor Weſton and Doctor Mallet came after to mee, whom I anſwered much after that ſort as I did the other. Doctor Weſton brought in the place of Saint Cyprian, Panis iſte non effigie, ſed natura mutatus, &c. I aſked of him how natura was taken in the Convocation houſe, in the diſputation upon the place of Theodoret.

To bee ſhort, Doctor Bourne came often unto mee, and I alwaies ſaid unto him, that I was not minded, nor able to diſpute in matters of Religion: but I believed as the holy Catholike Church of Chriſt, grounded upon the Prophets and Apoſtles, doth believe: and namely in the matter of the Sacrament, as the holy Fathers, Saint Cyprian and Saint Auguſtine doe write, and believed; and this anſwer and none other they had of mee in effect, what words ſoever have beene ſpread abroad of mee, that I ſhould be conformable to all things, &c. The truth is, I never heard Maſſe, nor received the Sacrament during the time of my impriſonment.

M. Mantel conſtant in his Religion.

One time hee willed mee to bee confeſſed. I ſaid, I am content. Wee kneeled down to pray together in a window. I began without Benedicite, deſiring him not to looke at my hand for any ſuperſtitious particular enumeration of my ſinnes. Therewith hee was called away to the Councell; & ego liberatus. Thus much I beare onely for my life, as God knoweth. If in this I have offended any Chriſtian, from the bottome of my heart I aſk them forgiveneſſe. I truſt God hath forgiven me, who knoweth that I durſt never deny him before men, leſt hee ſhould deny mee before his heavenly Father.

Thus have I left behinde me written with mine owne hand the effect of all the talke, eſpecially of the worſt that ever I granted unto, to the uttermoſt I can remember, as God knoweth. All the whole communication I have not written; for it were both too long and too fooliſh ſo to do. Now I beſeech the living God, which hath received me to his mercy, and brought to paſſe, that I dye ſtedfaſt and undefiled in his truth, at utter defiance and deteſtation of all Papiſticall and Antichriſtian doctrine; I beſeech him (I ſay) to keepe and defend all his choſen for his names ſake, from the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome that Antichriſt, and from the aſſault of all his ſatellites. Gods indignation is knowne: hee will trie and prove who be his. Amend your lives. Deny not Chriſt before men, leſt he deny you before his heavenly Father. Feare not to loſe your lives for him; for ye ſhall finde them againe. God hold his mercifull hand over this Realme, and avert the plagues imminent from the ſame. God ſave the Queene, and ſend her knowledge in his truth, Amen. Pray, pray, pray yee Chriſtians, and comfort your ſelves with the Scriptures.

Written the 2. of March, Ann. 1554. by me Walter Mantel priſoner, whom both God and the world hath forgiven his offences. Amen.

And thus much concerning the purgation of M. Walter Mantell, who if hee had conſented unto the Queen, what time ſhe ſent D. Bourne unto him, to deny his faith, it is not otherwiſe to be thought, but he had had his pardon, and eſcaped with life.

March 3. Sir Gawen Carew, & Maſter Gibbes brought to the Tower.

Upon the Saturday, being the third of March Sir Gawen Carew, and M. Gibbes were brought through London to the Tower with a company of horſemen.

March 17.

In London the 17. day of March, every houſeholder was commanded to appeare before the Aldermen of their Ward, and there were commanded, that they, their wives, and ſervants ſhould prepare themſelves to ſhrift, and receive the ſacrament at Eaſter, and that neither they, nor any of them ſhould depart out of the City, untill Eaſter was paſt.

March 18. Lady Elizabeth brought to the Tower.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 18. day of March, the Lady Elizabeth, of whom mention was made before, the Queenes ſiſter, was brought to the Tower.

March 24.

Upon Eaſter Even, being the 24. of March, the Lord Marqueſſe of Northampton, the Lord Cobham, and Sir William Cobham were delivered out of the Tower.

March 25. The Pixe riſen out of the Sepulchre from all the watchmen at Saint Pancraſe Church.

The 25. day (being Eaſter day) in the morning, at S. Pancraſe in cheape, the Crucifixe with the Pixe were taken out of the Sepulchre, before the Prieſt roſe to the reſurrection: ſo that when after his accuſtomed manner hee put his hand into the Sepulchre, and ſaid very devoutly, Surrexit, non eſt hic, he found his words true, for he was not there indeed: Whereupon being half diſmayed, they conſulted amongſt themſelves whom they thought to be likeſt to doe this thing. In which debatement they remembred one Marſh, which a little before had been put from that Parſonage, becauſe hee was married, to whoſe charge they laid it. But when they could not prove it, being brought before the Maior, they then burthened him to have kept company with his wife, ſince that they were by commandement divorced. Whereto he anſwered, that he thought the Queene had done him wrong to take from him both his living and his wife: which words were then noted, and taken very grievouſly, and he and his wife were both committed to ſeverall Counters, notwithſtanding that he had been very ſicke.

M. Marſh burthened with ſuſpition and with his marriage.

April 8. A Cat hanged with a ſhaven crowne, upon the gallowes in Cheapeſide.

The 8. of April, there was a Cat hanged upon a gallowes at the Croſſe in Cheape, apparrelled like a Prieſt ready to ſay Maſſe, with a ſhaven crowne. Her two forefeet were tyed over her head, with a round paper like a wafer-cake put betweene them: whereon aroſe great evill will againſt the City of London. For the Queen and the Biſhops were very angry withall; and therefore the ſame afternoone there was a Proclamation, that whoſoever could bring forth the party that did hang up the Cat, ſhould have xx. nobles, which reward was afterwards increaſed to xx. marks, but none could or would earne it.

The number and occaſion of the gallowſes ſet up in the City of London.

As touching the firſt occaſion of ſetting up this Gallowes in Cheapeſide, here is to be underſtood, that after the Sermon of the Biſhop of Wincheſter (above mentioned) made before the Queene for the ſtreight execution of Wyats ſouldiers, immediately upon the ſame, the 13. of February, were ſet up a great number of gallowſes in divers places of the City; namely, two in Cheapſide, one at Leaden Hall, one at Billingſgate, one at S. Magnus Church, one in Smithfield, one in Fleetſtreet, foure in Southwarke, one at Algate, one at Biſhops gate, one at Alderſgate, one at Newgate, one at Ludgate, one at S. James Parke corner, one at Cripplegate: all which gibbets and gallowſes, to the number of twenty, there remained for terrour of other, from the 13. of February till the 4. of June, and then at the comming in of K. Phillip were taken downe.

M. Wyats words touching the Lady Elizabeth.

The 11. day of April was Sir Thomas Wyat beheaded and quartered at the Tower hill, where he uttered theſe words touching the Lady Elizabeth, and the Earle of Devonſhire. Concerning, ſaid he, what I have ſaid of others in my examination, to charge any others as partakers of my doings, I accuſe neither my Lady Elizabeths Grace, nor my Lord of Devonſhire. I cannot accuſe them, neither am I able to ſay, that to my knowledge they knew any thing of my riſing. And when Doctor Weſton told him, that his confeſſion was otherwiſe before the Councell, he anſwered: That which I ſaid then, I ſaid; but that which I ſay now, is true.

April 17. Sir James Croft. M. Winter. Sir Nicholas Throgmorton

Upon the Tueſday, being the 17. of Aprill, Sir James Croft, and Maſter Winter, were brought to the Guild-Hall, with whom alſo the ſame time, and to theſame place was brought Sir Nicholas Throgmorton, and there arraigned of treaſon, for that he was ſuſpected to be of the conſpiracy with the Duke of Suffolke and the reſt, againſt the Queen: where he ſo learnedly and wiſely behaved himſelfe (as well in cleering his owne caſe, as alſo in opening ſuch lawes of the Realm as were then alledged againſt him) that the Queſt, which was charged with this matter could not in conſcience but find him not guilty: for the which, the ſaid 12. perſons of the Queſt, being alſo ſubſtantiall men of the Citie, were bound in the ſumme of 500. pounds a peece to appeare before the Queens Councell at a day appointed, there to anſwer ſuch things as ſhould be laid againſt them for his acquitting. Which Queſt appeared accordingly before the Councell in the Star-chamber upon Wedneſday, being the 25. of April, and ſaint Markes day. From whence, after certain queſtioning, they were committed to priſon: Emanuel Lucar, and maſter Whetſtone were committed to the Tower and the other ten to the Fleet.

The Queſt troubled for Sir Nicholas Throgmorton.

April 25.

As concerning the condemnation of Thomas Archbiſhop of Canterbury, of Doctor Ridley, and Maſter Latimer, which was the 20. of this moneth of April, and alſo of their diſputations, becauſe we have ſaid enough before, it ſhall not need now to beſtowe any further rehearſall thereof.

Lord Thomas Gray beheaded April 27.

The Friday next following after the condemnation of them, the 27. of April, Lord Thomas Gray, the late Duke of Suffolkes brother, was beheaded at Tower-Hill.

Aprill 28.

Upon the Saturday, being the 28. of Aprill, ſir James Croft, and M. Winter were againe brought to the Guild-Hall, where ſir James Croft was arraigned and condemned; and becauſe the day was farreſpent, M. Winter was not arraigned.

William Thomas condemned. May 27.

Upon the Thurſday, being the 17. of May, William Thomas was arraigned at the Guild-Hall and there the ſame day condemned, who the next day after was hanged, drawne, and quartered. His accuſation was, for conſpiring the Queens death: which how true it was I have not to ſay. This is certaine, that he made a right godly end, and wrote many fruitfull exhortations.

hortations, Letters, and Sonets in the priſon before his death.

A certaine diſputation intended to be had at Cambridge.

In the moneth of May it was given out, and bruted abroad, that a ſolemne Diſputation ſhould be holden at Cambridge (as ye heard before in Maſter Ridleyes letter, page 92.) betwéene Maſter Bradford, Maſter Saunders, Maſter Rogers, and other of that ſide, and the Doctors of both the Univerſities on the other ſide, like as had beene in Oxford before, as you have heard. Whereupon the godly Preachers which were in priſon having word thereof, albeit they were deſtitute of their bookes, neither were ignorant of the purpoſe of the adverſaries, and how the cauſe was preiudiced before: alſo how the Diſputations were confuſedly handled at Oxford: nevertheleſſe they thought not to refuſe the offer of diſputation, ſo that they might be quietly and indifferently heard; and therefore wiſely pondering the matter with themſelves, by a publike conſent directed out of priſon a declaration of their minde by writing, the 8. day of May. Wherein firſt, as touching the Diſputation, although they knew that they ſhould doe noe good, whereas all things were ſo predetermined before; yet nevertheleſſe they would not deny to diſpute, ſo that the diſputation might be either before the Quéene, or before the Councell, or before the Parliament Houſes, or els if they might diſpute by writing: for els if the matter were brought to the Doctors handling in their owne Schooles, they have ſufficient proofe, they ſaid, by the experience of Oxford, what little good will be done at Cambridge; and ſo conſequently declaring the faith and doctrine of their religion, and exhorting the people withall to ſubmit themſelves with all patience and humility, either to the will or puniſhment of the higher powers, they appealed in the end from them to be their Iudges in this behalfe, and ſo ended their proteſtation, the copie and contents whereof I thought not unfit here to be inſerted.

The Preachers in priſon refuſe not to diſpute before indifferent Iudges.

A copy of a certaine declaration drawne and ſent out of priſon by Maſter Bradford, Maſter Saunders, and divers other godly Preachers, concerning their diſputation, and doctrine of their Religion, as followeth.

A declaration of the godly Preachers, written and ſent abroad out of priſon.

BEcauſe we heare that it is determined of the Magiſtrates, and ſuch as be in authority, eſpecially of the Clergie, to ſend us ſpéedily out of the priſons of the Kings Bench, the Fléet, the Marſhalſey, & Newgate, where at this preſent we are, and of long time ſome of us have béene, not as rebels, traitors, ſeditious perſons, théeves, or tranſgreſſors of any lawes of this Realme, inhibitions, proclamations, or commandements of the Quéenes Highneſſe, or of any of the Councels (Gods name be praiſed therefore) but alonely for the conſcience we have to God, and his moſt holy word and truth, upon moſt certaine knowledge: becauſe we ſay, we heare that it is determined, we ſhalbe ſent to one of the Univerſities of Cambridge or Oxford, there to diſpute with ſuch as are appointed in that behalfe: in that we purpoſe not to diſpute otherwiſe than by writing, except it may be before the Quéenes Highneſſe and her Councell, or before the Parliament Houſes; and therefore perchance it wilbe bruted abroad, that we are not able to maintain by the truth of Gods word, and the conſent of the true and catholike Church of Chriſt, the doctrine we have generally and ſeverally taught, and ſome of us have written and ſet forth, wherethrough the godly and ſimple may be offended, and ſomwhat weakened: we have thought it our bounden duty now whileſt we may, by writing to publiſh and notifie the cauſes why we will not diſpute otherwiſe than is aboveſaid, to prevent the offences which might come thereby.

A talk of a pretenſed diſputation to be had at Cambridge.

The cauſes why they will not otherwiſe diſpute than before indifferent Iudges.

The matter of diſputation is againſt Gods word.

Firſt, becauſe it is evidently knowne unto the whole world; that the determinations of both the Univerſities in matters of Religion, eſpecially wherein we ſhould diſpute, are directly againſt Gods word, yea, againſt their own determinations in the time of our late Soveraigne Lord and moſt godly Prince, King Edward: and further it is knowne they be our open enemies, and have already condemned our cauſes, before any diſputation had of the ſame.

The ſecond cauſe.

Secondly, becauſe the Prelates and Clergie doe not ſéeke either us or the verity, but our deſtruction and their glory. For if they had ſought us (as charity requireth) then would they have called us forth here-abouts before their lawes were ſo made, that frankly and without perill we might have ſpoken our conſciences. Againe, if they had ſought for the verity, they would not have concluded of controverſies before they had béene diſputed; ſo that it eaſily appeareth, that they ſéeke their owne glory and our deſtruction, and not us and the verity: and therefore we have good cauſe to refuſe diſputation, as a thing which ſhall not further prevail than to the ſetting forth of their glory, and the ſuppreſſion of the verity.

In the diſputation neither charity nor verity ſought for.

The third cauſe.

The Iudges of the diſputation profeſſed enemies againſt the truth.

Thirdly, becauſe the Cenſors and Iudges (as we heare who they be) are manifeſt enemies to the truth, and that which worſe is, obſtinate enemies, before whom pearles are not to be caſt, by the commandement of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, and by his owne example. That they be ſuch, their doings of late at Oxford, and in the Convocation houſe in October laſt paſt, do moſt evidently appeare.

The fourth cauſe.

Want of bookes neceſſary for diſputation.

Fourthly, becauſe ſome of us have béene in priſon theſe eight or nine moneths, where we have had no bookes, no paper, no pen, no ink, or convenient place for ſtudy, we think we ſhould do evill thus ſuddenly to deſcend into diſputation with them, which may alledge, as they liſt, the Fathers and their teſtimonies, becauſe our memories have not that which we have read, ſo readily, as to reprove, when they ſhall report and wreſt the Authors to their purpoſe, or to bring forth that we may have there for our advantage.

The fifth cauſe.

Example of the diſputation at Oxford.

Fifthly, becauſe in diſputation we ſhall not be permitted to proſecute our arguments, but be ſtopt when we ſhould ſpeake; one ſaying this, another that, the third his minde, &c. As was done to the godly learned Fathers, eſpecially Doctor Ridley at Oxford, who could not be permitted to declare his minde and meaning of the propoſitions, and had oftentimes halfe a dozen at once ſpeaking againſt him, alwayes letting him to proſecute his argument, and to anſwer accordingly: we will not ſpeake of the hiſſing, ſcoffing, and taunting, which wonderfully then was uſed. If on this ſort, and much worſe they handled theſe Fathers, much more will they be ſhameleſſe bold with us, if we ſhould enter into diſputation with them.

The ſixth cauſe.

Sixthly, becauſe the Notaries, that ſhall receive and write the diſputations, ſhall be of their appointment, and ſuch as either doe not or dare not favour the truth, and therefore muſt write either to pleaſe them, or els they themſelves (the Cenſors and Iudges we mean) at their pleaſure will put to and take from that which is written by the Notaries; who cannot, or muſt not have in their cuſtody that which they write, longer than the diſputation endureth, as their doings at Oxford declareth. No copie nor ſcroule could any man have by their good will. For the Cenſors & Iudges will have all delivered into their hands.

Notaries not indifferent.

Yea,

Anno 1554

Yea, if any man was ſeene there to write, as the report is, the ſame man was ſent for, and his writings taken from him: ſo muſt the diſputation ſerve only for the glory, not of God, but of the enemies of his truth.

For theſe cauſes we all thinke it ſo neceſſary not to diſpute with them, as if we did diſpute we ſhould do that which they deſire and purpoſely ſeeke, to promote the kingdome of Antichriſt, and to ſuppreſſe (as much as may be) the truth. We will not ſpeak of the offence that might come to the godly, when they ſhould heare, by the report of our enemies, our anſwers and arguments framed (you may be ſure) for their fantaſies, to the ſlandering of the verity.

Exceptions taken againſt the adverſaries.

Conditions aſſigned how they would diſpute.

Exhortation to obedience.

Therefore we publiſh, and by this writing notifie unto the whole congregation and Church of England, that for theſe aforeſaid cauſes we will not diſpute with them, otherwiſe than with the pen, unleſſe it be before the Queenes Highneſſe and her Councell, or before the Houſes of the Parliament, as is above ſaid. If they will write, we will anſwer, and by writing confirme and prove out of the infallible verity, even the very word of God, and by the teſtimony of the good and moſt ancient Fathers in Chriſts Church, this our faith and every peece therof, which hereafter we in a ſumme doe write and ſend abroad purpoſely, that our good brethren and ſiſters in the Lord may know it: and to ſeale up the ſame, we are ready through Gods helpe and grace to give our lives to the halter or fire, or otherwiſe, as God ſhall appoint: humbly requiring, and in the bowels of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt beſeeching all that feare God, to behave themſelves as obedient ſubiects to the Queenes Highneſſe and the ſuperiour powers, which are ordained of God under her, rather after our example to give their heads to the block, than in any point to rebell, or once to mutter againſt the Lords annointed; we meane our Soveraigne Lady Queene Mary, into whoſe heart we beſeech the Lord of mercy plentifully to powre the wiſdome & grace of his holy Spirit, now and for ever. Amen.

The confeſſion and faith of the priſoned Preachers.

Firſt, we confeſſe and beleeve all the Canonicall bookes of the old Teſtament, and all the bookes of the New Teſtament, to be the very true word of God, and to be written by the inſpiration of the holy Ghoſt, and are therefore to be heard accordingly, as the Judge in all controverſies and matters of religion.

The catholike Church.

Secondly, we confeſſe and beleeve, that the Catholike Church which is the Spouſe of Chriſt, as a moſt obedient and loving wife, doth embrace and follow the doctrine of theſe bookes in all matters of religion, and therefore is ſhe to be heard accordingly; ſo that thoſe, which will not heare this Church thus following and obeying the word of her Huſband, we account as heretikes and ſchiſmatikes, according to this ſaying, If he will not heare the Church, let him be unto thee as a Heathen.

The Creed.

Thirdly, we beleeve and confeſſe all the Articles of faith and doctrine ſet forth in the ſymbole of the Apoſtles, which we commonly call the Creed, and in the ſymboles of the Councels of Nice, kept An. Dom. 324. of Conſtantinople, An. Dom. 384. of Epheſus, kept An. Dom. 432. of Chalcedon, kept An. Dom. 454. of Toletum, the firſt and fourth. Alſo in the ſymboles of Athanaſius, Ireneus, Tertullian, and of Damaſus, which was about the yeere of our Lord 376. we confeſſe and beleeve (we ſay) the doctrine of the ſymboles generally and particularly; ſo that whoſoever doth otherwiſe, we hold the ſame to erre from the truth.

Juſtification by faith only in Chriſt.

What faith is.

Righteouſneſſe in man, righteouſneſſe without man.

The doctrine of free iuſtification defended for no curioſity, but for quiet of conſcience.

Fourthly, we beleeve and confeſſe concerning iuſtification, that as it commeth only from Gods mercy through Chriſt, ſo it is perceived and had of none, which be of yeeres of diſcretion, otherwiſe than by faith only: which faith is not an opinion, but a certaine perſwaſion wrought by the holy Ghoſt in the mind and heart of man, wherethrough as the minde is illumined, ſo the heart is ſuppled to ſubmit it ſelfe to the will of God unfainedly, and ſo ſheweth forth an inherent righteouſneſſe, which is to be diſcerned in the Article of Juſtification, from the righteouſneſſe which God indueth us, withall iuſtifying us, although inſeparably they go together. And this we doe not for curioſity or contention ſake, but for conſcience ſake, that it might be quiet, which it can never be, if we confound without diſtinction forgiveneſſe of ſins, and Chriſts iuſtice imputed to us, with regeneration and inherent righteouſneſſe. By this we diſallow Papiſticall doctrine of free-will, of works of ſupererogation, of merits, of the neceſſity of auricular confeſſion, and ſatisfaction to God-wards.

Service in the vulgar tongue.

Fifthly, we confeſſe and beleeve concerning the exteriour ſervice of God, that it ought to be according to the word of God; and therefore in the congregation all things publike ought to be done in ſuch a tongue as may be moſt to edifie, and not in Latine, where the people underſtand not the ſame.

Invocation to God alone.

Sixthly, we confeſſe and beleeve that God only by Chriſt Jeſus is to be prayed unto and called upon; and therefore we diſallow invocation or prayer to Saints departed this life.

Purgatory an Maſſes ſuffragatory denied.

Seventhly, we confeſſe and beleeve, that as a man departeth this life, ſo ſhall he be iudged in the laſt day generally, and in the meane ſeaſon is entred either into the ſtate of the bleſſed for ever, or damned for ever; and therefore is either paſt all helpe, or els needs no helpe of any in this life. By reaſon whereof we affirme Purgatory, Maſſes of Scala cœli, Trentals, and ſuch ſuffrages as the Popiſh Church doth obtrude as neceſſary, to be the doctrine of Antichriſt.

Two ſacraments.

Eighthly, we confeſſe and beleeve the ſacraments of Chriſt, which be Baptiſm and the Lords Supper, that they ought to be miniſtred according to the inſtitution of Chriſt, concerning the ſubſtantiall parts of them: and that they be no longer ſacraments, than they be had in uſe, and uſed to the end for the which they were inſtituted.

The Supper to be miniſtred in both kindes.

Againſt tranſubſtantiation.

And here we plainly confeſſe, that the mutilation of the Lords Supper, and the ſubſtraction of ẏ one kind from the Lay people, is Antichriſtian. And ſo is the doctrine of Tranſubſtantiation of the ſacramentall bread and wine after the words of conſecration, as they be called.

Againſt adoration of the ſacrament.

Item, the adoration of the ſacrament, with honour due unto God: the reſervation and carrying about of the ſame.

The Maſſe to be no propitiatory ſacrifice.

Item, the Maſſe to be a propitiatory ſacrifice for the quicke and dead, or a work that pleaſeth God.

Inhibition of Prieſts marriage antichriſtian.

All theſe we confeſſe and beleeve to be Antichriſts doctrine: as is the inhibition of marriage, as unlawfull, to any ſtate. And we doubt not by Gods grace, but we ſhall be able to prove all our confeſſions here to be moſt true by the verity of Gods Word, and conſent of the Catholike Church, which followeth and hath followed the governance of Gods Spirit, and the iudgement of his word.

And this through the Lords helpe we will do, either in diſputation by word before the Queens Highneſſe and her Councell, either before the Parliament Houſes, of whom we doubt not but to be indifferently heard, or els with our pens, whenſoever we ſhall be thereto by them that have authority, required and commanded.

In the meane ſeaſon, as obedient ſubiects, we ſhall

Exhortation againſt rebellion.

ſhall behave our ſelves towards all that be in authority, and not ceaſe to pray to God for them, that he would governe them all, generally and particularly, with the Spirit of wiſdome and grace. And ſo we heartily deſire, and humbly pray all men to doe, in no point conſenting to any kinde of rebellion or ſedition againſt our Soveraigne Lady the Queenes Highneſſe: but where they cannot obey, but they muſt diſobey God, there to ſubmit themſelves with all patience and humility to ſuffer as the will and pleaſures of the higher powers ſhall adiudge: as we are ready through the goodneſſe of the Lord to ſuffer whatſoever they ſhall adiudge us unto, rather than we will conſent to any doctrine contrary to this which we here confeſſe, unleſſe we ſhall be iuſtly convinced thereof, either by writing or by word, before ſuch Iudges as the Queenes Highneſſe and her Councell, or the Parliament houſes ſhall appoint. For the Univerſities and Clergie have condemned our cauſes already by the bigger, but not by the better part, without all diſputation of the ſame: and therefore moſt iuſtly we may, and doe appeale from them to be our Iudges in this behalfe, except it may be in writing, that to all men the matter may appeare. The Lord of mercy indue us all with the Spirit of his truth and grace of perſeverance therein unto the end, Amen.

The bigger part againſt the better. Appeale from the Univerſity Doctors, as not indifferent Iudges.

And thus much concerning this preſent declaration ſubſcribed by theſe Preachers, which was on the 8. day of May.

May 19. Lady Elizabeth. Sir Iohn Williams.

Furthermore, the 19. day of the ſaid moneth, the Lady Elizabeth, ſiſter to the Queene, was brought to the Tower, and committed to the cuſtody of Sir Iohn Williams, after Lord Williams of Tame, of whom her Highneſſe was gently and curteouſly intreated: who afterward was had to Woodſtocke, and there committed to the keeping of Sir Henry Beniſield knight, of Oxeborough in Northfolke: who on the other ſide both forgetting her eſtate, and his owne duty (as it is reported) ſhewed himſelfe more hard and ſtreight unto her, than either cauſe was given of her part, or reaſon of his owne part would have led him, if either grace or wiſedome in him might have ſeene before, what danger afterward might have enſued therof. Whereof we have to intreat more at large (the Lord willing) hereafter in the ſtory and life of Queene Elizabeth.

Sir Henry Beniſield.

July 20. K. Philip arrivety at Southhampton.

Upon the Friday following, being the 20. of Iuly, and Saint Margarets day, the Prince of Spaine landed at Southhampton. The Prince himſelfe was the firſt that landed: who, immediately as he ſet foot upon the land, drew out his ſword, and carried it naked in his hand a good pretty way.

K. Philip carrieth his ſword naked comming into England. The keyes of Southhampton delivered to K. Philip.

Then met him a little without the Town the Maior of Southhampton with certain Commoners, who delivered the keyes of the Towne unto the Prince, who removed his ſword (naked as it was) out of his right into his left hand, and ſo received the keyes of the Maior without any word ſpeaking, or countenance of thankfulneſſe, and after a while delivered the keys to the Maior againe. At the Towne gate met him the Earle of Arundell and the Lord Williams, and ſo he was brought to his lodging.

Anno 1554.

July 25. Marriage betweene K. Philip & Q. Mary.

Upon the Wedneſday following, being S. Iames day, and the 25. of Iuly, Philip Prince of Spaine, and Mary Queene of England were married together ſolemnly in the Cathedrall Church at Wincheſter, by the Biſhop of Wincheſter, in the preſence of a great number of Noble men of both the Realmes. At the time of this marriage the Emperors Ambaſſador being preſent, openly pronounced, that in conſideration of that marriage the Emperor had granted and given unto his ſon the kingdome of Naples, &c.

August 1.

Whereupon the firſt day of Auguſt following, there was a Proclamation, that from that time forth the ſtile of all manner of writings ſhould be altered, and this following ſhould be uſed.

Philip and Mary by the grace of God, King and Queene of England, France, Naples, Ieruſalem, and Ireland, defenders of the faith, Princes of Spaine and Sicil, Archdukes of Auſtrich, Dukes of Millaine, Burgundie, and Brabant, Counties of Haſpurge, Flaunders and Tyrol.

Of this marriage as the Papiſts chiefly ſeemed to be very glad, ſo divers of them after divers ſtudies, to ſhew forth their inward affections, made Interludes and Pageants, ſome drew forth Genealogies, deriving his petigree from Edward the third, and Iohn of Gaunt, ſome made verſes. Amongſt all other, M. White, then biſhop of Lincolne (his Poeticall veine being drunken with ioy of the marriage) ſpued out certaine Verſes: the copie whereof we have here inſerted.

After the conſummation of which marriage, they both removed from Wincheſter to ſundry other places, & by eaſie iourneys came to Windſore Caſtle, where he was ſtalled in the order of the Garter, upon Sunday, being the 12. of Auguſt. At which time an Herald tooke downe the Armes of England at Windſore, and in the place of them would have ſet up the Armes of Spaine, but he was commanded to ſet them up againe by certaine Lords. From thence they both removed to Richmond, and from thence by water to London, and landed at the Biſhop of Wincheſters houſe, through which they paſſed both into Southwarke park, and ſo to Southwarke houſe called Suffolk place, where they lay that night, being the 18. of Auguſt.

K. Philip commeth to Windſore.

The armes of England taken downe, and the armes of Spaine ſet up.

King Philip commeth to London.

And the next day, being Saturday, and the 19. of Auguſt, the King and Queenes Maieſties rode from Suffolke place (accompanied with a great number, as well of Noblemen as Gentlemen) through the city of London to Whitehall, and at London bridge, as he entred at the drawbridge, was a vaine great ſpectacle ſet up, two Images preſenting two Giants, one named Corineus, and the other Gogmagog, holding betweene them certain Latine Verſes, which for the vaine oſtentation of flattery, I overpaſſe.

Auguſt 19.

Vain pageants of London.

And as they paſſed over the Bridge, there was a number of ordnance ſhot at the Tower, ſuch as by old mens report the like hath not beene heard or ſeene theſe 100. yeeres.

From London bridge they paſſed the Conduit in Gracious ſtreet, which was finely painted, and among other things, the nine Worthies, wherof king Henry the eighth was one. He was painted in harneſſe, having in one hand a ſword, and in the other hand a booke, whereupon was written Verbum Dei, delivering the ſame booke (as it were) to his ſon king Edward, who was painted in a corner by him.

But hereupon was no ſmall matter made: for the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Lord Chancellor, ſent for the Painter, and not onely called him knave for painting a book in king Henries hand, and ſpecially for writing thereupon Verbum Dei, but alſo ranke Traitor and Villaine, ſaying to him that he ſhould rather have put the booke into the Queenes hand (who was alſo painted there) for that ſhe had reformed the Church and Religion, with other things according to the pure and ſincere word of God indeed.

Wincheſter cannot abide the book called Verbum Dei.

The Painter ſent for to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

The Painter anſwered and ſaid, that if he had knowne that had been the matter wherefore his Lordſhip ſent for him, he could have remedied it, and not have troubled his Lordſhip.

The Painters anſwer.

The Biſhop anſwered and ſaid, that it was the Queenes Maieſties will and commandement that he ſhould ſend for him: and ſo commanding him to wipe out the booke and Verbum Dei too, he ſent him home. So the Painter departed, but fearing leſt he ſhould leave ſome part either of the book, or of Verbum Dei in king Henries hand; he wiped away a peece of his fingers withall.

Here I paſſe over and cut off other gawdes and pageants of paſtime ſhewed to him in paſſing through London, with the flattering Verſes ſet up in Latine, wherein were blazed out in one place the five Philips, as the five Worthies of the world, Philip of Macedonia, Philip the Emperor, Philippus Audax, Philippus Bonus, Philip prince of Spaine and king of England.

Five Philips.

In another Poetry king Philip was reſembled by an Image repreſenting Orpheus, and all Engliſh people reſembled to brute and ſavage beaſts

beaſts following after Orpheus harpe, and dancing after King Philips pipe. Not that I reprehend the art of the Latine Verſes, which was fine and cunning, but that I paſſe over the matter, having other graver things in hand; and therfore paſſe over alſo the ſight at Pauls Church ſide, of him that came downe upon a rope tied to the battlements with his head before, neither ſtaying himſelf with hand nor foot; which ſhortly after coſt him his life.

But one thing by the way I cannot let paſſe, touching the young flouriſhing Rood, newly ſet up againſt this preſent time to welcome King Philip into Pauls Church. The ſetting up of which Rood was this, and may make as good a Pageant as the beſt.

The erecting up of the Rood at Pauls.

Anno 2. Mariæ, Boner in his royalty, and all his Prebendaries about him in Pauls Quire, the Rood laid along upon the pavement, and alſo the doores of Pauls being ſhut, the Biſhop with other ſaid and ſung divers prayers by the Rood: that being done, they annointed the Rood with oyle in divers places, and after the annointing crept unto it, and kiſſed it.

B. Boners god.
The Rood of Pauls ſet up with Te Deum.

After that they took the ſaid Rood, and weighed him up, and ſet him in his old accuſtomed place, and all the while they were doing thereof, the whole Quire ſang Te Deum, and when that was ended, they rang the bels, not onely for ioy, but alſo for the notable and great fact they had done therein.

Salutation to the Rood of Pauls.

Not long after this a merry fellow came into Pauls, and ſpied the Rood with Mary and John new ſet up; whereto, among a great ſort of people, he made low curteſie, and ſaid: Sir, your Maſterſhip is welcome to towne. I had thought to have talked farther with your Maſterſhip, but that ye be here clothed in the Queenes colours. I hope ye be but a Summers bird, in that ye be dreſſed in white and greene.

The Prince thus being in the Church of Pauls, after Doctor Harpsfield had finiſhed his Oration in Latine, ſet forward through Fleetſtreet, and ſo came to Whitehall, where he with the Queene remained foure dayes after, and from thence removed unto Richmond.

After this, all the Lords had leave to depart into their countries, with ſtreight commandement to bring all their harneſſe and artillery into the Tower of London with all ſpeed. Now remained there no Engliſh Lord at the Court but the biſhop of Wincheſter. From Richmond they removed to Hampton Court, where the Hall doore within the Court was continually ſhut, ſo that no man might enter, unleſſe his errand were firſt knowne, which ſeemed ſtrange to Engliſhmen that had not been uſed thereto.

Septemb. 8.

About the 8. day of September Biſhop Boner began his viſitation, who charged ſix men in every Pariſh to inquire (according to their oaths) and to preſent before him the day after S. Mathewes day, being the 23. of September, all ſuch perſons as either had or ſhould offend in any of his Articles, which he had ſet forth to the number of 37. Of the which viſitation of Boner I have ſomwhat more largely to intreat, after that firſt I ſhall overpaſſe a few other things following in courſe of this preſent ſtory.

Septemb. 17

The 17. day of September was a Proclamation in London, that all vagabonds and maſterleſſe men, as well ſtrangers as Engliſhmen, ſhould depart the City within five dayes; and ſtreightly charging all Inholders, Victuallers, Taverners and Alehouſe-keepers, with all other that ſell victuals, that they (after the ſaid five dayes) ſhould not ſell any meat, drinke, or any kinde of victuall to any Servingman whatſoever, unleſſe he brought a teſtimoniall from his Maſter to declare whoſe ſervant he was, and were in continuall houſhold with his ſaid Maſter, upon paine to run in danger of the law if they offend herein.

September 30
The biſhop of Wincheſter preacheth.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 30. day of September, the Biſhop of Wincheſter Lord Chancellour of England, preached at Pauls Croſſe, at whoſe Sermon were preſent all the Councell that were at the Court: namely, the Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, yͤ Earle of Arundell, Lord North, ſir Anthony Browne, M. Rocheſter, M. Walgrave, M. Englefield, Lord Fitzwater, and Secretary Peter, and the Biſhops of London, Dureſme, and Ely, which three ſate under the Biſhops armes. The Goſpell whereof he made his ſermon, is written in the 22. chapter of Mathew. Where the Phariſies came unto Chriſt, and amongſt them one aſked Chriſt, which was the greateſt commandement; Chriſt anſwered, Thou ſhalt love thy Lord God with all thy heart, &c. and thy neighbour as thy ſelfe, in theſe two is comprehended the Law and the Prophets.

A blaſphemous mouth againſt the true Preachers of Gods word.

After his long declaration of theſe words, ſpeaking very much of love and charity, at laſt he had occaſion upon S. James his words to ſpeake of the true teachers and of the falſe teachers; ſaying that all the Preachers almoſt in K. Edwards time, preached nothing but voluptuouſneſſe, and filthy and blaſphemous lies, affirming their doctrine to be that falſe doctrine whereof S. James ſpeaketh; ſaying, that it was full of perverſe zeale, earthly, full of diſcord and diſſention, that the Preachers aforenamed would report nothing truly, and that they taught that it was lawfull for a man to put away his wife for adultery, and marry another, and that if a man vowed to day, he might breake it to morrow at his pleaſure, with many other things which I omit. And when he ſpake of the ſacrament, he ſaid, that all the Church from the beginning have confeſſed Chriſts naturall body to be in heaven, and here to be in the ſacrament, and ſo concluded that matter: and then willed all men to ſay with Joſephs brethren, Peccavimus in fratrem: We have all ſinned againſt our brother, and ſo (ſaid he) have I too. Then he declared what a noble King and Queene we have, ſaying, that if he ſhould goe about to ſhew that the King came hither for no neceſſity or need, and what he had brought with him, it ſhould be ſuperfluous, ſeeing it is evidently knowne, that he hath ten times as much as we are in hope and poſſeſſion of, affirming him to be as wiſe, ſober, gentle, and temperate a Prince as ever was in England, and if it were not ſo proved, then to take him for a falſe lyar for his ſo ſaying: Exhorting all men to make much of him, and to win him whileſt we had him, and ſo ſhould we alſo win all ſuch as he hath brought with him, and ſo made an end.

The Church never confeſſed the naturall body of Chriſt ſo to be in the ſacrament, that the ſubſtance of bread was taken away, before the time of Pope Innocent the third, an. 1215.
Wincheſter preacheth in commendation of K. Philip.

Upon the Tueſday following, being the ſecond day of October, twenty carts came from Weſtminſter laden (as it was noiſed) with gold and ſilver, and certaine of the Guard with them through the city to the Tower, and there it was received in by a Spaniard, who was the Kings Treaſurer, and had cuſtody of it within the Tower. It was matted about with mats, and mayled in little bundles about two foot long, and almoſt half a foot thick, and in every cart were ſixe of thoſe bundles. What it was indeed God knoweth, for it is to us uncertaine.

John Street.

About the ſame time, or a little before, upon Corpus Chriſti day, the Proceſſion being made in Smithfield, where after the manner the Prieſt with his boxe went under the Canopie, by chance there came by the way a certaine ſimple man, named John Street, a Joyner of

The Prieſt worſe feared than hurt. The Prieſt let the Pixe fall for feare.

Coleman ſtreet, who having ſome haſte in his buſineſſe, and finding no other way to paſſe through, by chance went under the Canapy by the Prieſt. The Prieſt ſeeing the man ſo to preſume to come under the Canapy, being belike afraid, and worſe feared than hurt, for feare let his Pixe fall downe. The poore man, being ſtreightwayes apprehended, was had to the Counter, the Prieſt accuſing him unto the Councell, as though he had come to ſlay him, when as the poore man (as himſelfe hath ſince declared unto us) had no ſuch thought ever in his minde. Then from the Counter he was had unto Newgate, where he was caſt into the dungeon, there chained to a poſt, where he was cruelly and miſerably handled, and ſo extremely dealt withall, that being but ſimple before, he was now feared out of his wits altogether, and ſo upon the ſame had to Bedlem. Whereupon the briefe Chronicle of London in this point is not to be credited, which untruly reported that he feigned himſelfe in Newgate to be mad: which thing we in writing of this Hiſtorie, by due inquiſition of the party, have found to be contrary.

John Street innocently caſt in the dungeon.

October 5.

Men priſoned for bookes.

About the fifth of October, and within a fortnight following, were divers as well houſeholders as ſervants and prentiſes apprehended and taken, and committed to ſundry priſons, for the having and ſelling of certaine bookes which were ſent into England by the Preachers that fled into Germany and other Countreyes; which bookes nipped a great number ſo neere, that within one fortnight there were little leſſe than threeſcore impriſoned for this matter: among whom was Maſter Browne a Goldſmith, Maſter Sparke a Draper, Randall Tirer a Stationer, Maſter Beſton a Merchant, with many other.

October 14.

Upon the Sunday being the xiiii. day of October, the old Biſhop of Dureſme preached in the Shroudes.

Upon S. Lukes day following, being the xviii. of October, the Kings Maieſty came from Weſtminſter to Pauls church along the ſtreets, accompanied with a great number of Noble men, and there he was received under a Canapy at the Weſt doore, and ſo came into the Chancell, where he heard Maſſe, which a Spaniſh Biſhop and his own Chappell ſung, and that done, he returned to Weſtminſter to dinner againe.

October 26.

The trouble of the good men which were of M. Throgmortons Queſt

Upon the Friday, being the xxvi. of October, certaine men, whereof I ſpake before, which were of Maſter Throgmortons Queſt, being in number viii. (for the other foure were delivered out of priſon, for that they ſubmitted themſelves, and ſaid they had offended, like weaklings, not conſidering truth to be truth, but of force for feare ſaid ſo) theſe eight men, I ſay, whereof M. Emanuel Lucas, M. Whetſtone were chief, were called before the Councell of the Starre-chamber: where they all affirmed that they had done all things in that matter according to their knowledge, and with good conſciences, even as they ſhould anſwer before God at the day of iudgement. Where Maſter Lucas ſaid openly before all the Lords, that they had done in the matter like honeſt men, and true and faithfull Subiects, and therefore they humbly beſought the Lord Chancellor, and the other Lords, to be meanes to the King and Queenes Maieſties that they might be diſcharged, and ſet at liberty, and ſaid that they were all contented humbly to ſubmit themſelves to their Maieſties, ſaving and reſerving their truth, conſciences, and honeſty. Some of the Lords ſaid, that they were worthy to pay a thouſand pounds a peece, and other ſome ſaid, that maſter Lucas and maſter Whetſtone were worthy to pay a thouſand markes a peece, and the reſt five hundred pounds a peece. In concluſion, ſentence was given by the Lord Chancellor, that they ſhould pay a thouſand markes a peece, and that they ſhould goe to priſon againe, and there remaine, till further order were taken for their puniſhment.

October 30.

Upon Tueſday being the xxx. of October, the Lord John Gray was delivered out of the Tower, and ſet at liberty.

Novemb. 4.

Upon Sunday the fourth of November, five Prieſts did penance at Pauls Croſſe, which were content to put away their wives, and take upon them againe to miniſter. Every of them had a Taper in his hand, and a rod, wherewith the Preacher did diſple them.

Novemb. 7.

Upon the Wedneſday the vii. of November, the Lord Paget, and Sir Edward Haſtings Maſter of the Horſe, were ſent as Ambaſſadors, I know not whither, but, as it was adiudged, to Cardinall Poole, who lay all that ſommer before at Bruxels: and it was thought they were ſent to accompany and conduct him into England, where at that time he was nominated and appointed Biſhop of Canterbury.

Cardinall Poole nominated Archbiſhop of Canterbury

Upon the Friday following the ninth of November, Maſter Barlow late Biſhop of Bathe, and maſter Cardmaker, were brought before the Councell in the Starre-chamber, where after communication they were commanded to the Fleet.

Novemb. 10.

Upon the Saturday being the x. of November, the Sheriffs of London had commandment to take an inventory of every one of their goods which were of maſter Throgmortons Queſt, and to ſeale up their doores, which was done the ſame day. Maſter Whetſtone, maſter Lucas, and maſter Kytely, were iudged to pay 2000. pounds a peece, and the reſt 1000. marks a peece, to be paid within one fortnight after. From this payment were exempted thoſe foure which confeſſed a fault, and ſubmitted themſelves, whoſe names are theſe, maſter Loc, maſter Poynter, maſter Beſwike, and maſter Cater.

B. Boner goeth in his viſitation.

Mention was made a little before of the viſitation of Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, which began (as is ſaid) about the moneth of September: for the better preparation whereof were ſet forth certaine Articles to the number of 37. Which Articles partly for the tediouſneſſe of them, partly for that maſter Bale in a certaine treatiſe hath ſufficiently painted out the ſame in their colours, partly alſo becauſe I will not infect this booke with them, I ſlip them over, proceeding in the progreſſe of this Biſhop in his viſitation in the County of Eſſex. Who paſſing through the ſaid County of Eſſex, being attended with divers worſhipfull of the Shire (for ſo they were commanded) arrived at Sterford in Hertfordſhire, where he reſted certaine dayes, ſolacing himſelfe after that painefull peregrination with no ſmall feaſting and banquetting with his attendants aforeſaid, at the houſe of one Parſons his nephew, whoſe wife he commonly called his faire Neece (and faire ſhe was indeed) he tooke there great pleaſure to heare her play upon the Virginals (wherein ſhe excelled) inſomuch that every dinner (ſitting by his ſweet ſide) ſhe roſe and played three ſeverall times at his requeſt of his good and ſpirituall devotion towards her. Theſe certaine dayes thus paſſed in this biſhoplike faſhion, he proceeded in his Popiſh viſitation towards Hadham his owne houſe and pariſh, not paſt two miles from Sterford, being there moſt ſolemnly rung out, as in all other places whereas he paſſed. At length drawing neere unto Hadham, when he heard no bels ſtirring there in honor of his holineſſe, he grew into ſome choler, and the neerer he approached, the hotter was his fit: and the quieter the bels were, the unquieter was his mood. Thus rode he on chafing and fuming with himſelfe. What meaneth (ſaith he) that knave the Clarke that he ringeth not? and the Parſon that he meeteth me not? with ſundry other furious words of fiery element. There this patient Prelate, comming to the towne, alighted, calling for the key of the Church, which was then all unready, for that (as they then pretended) he had prevented his time by two houres, whereupon he grew from choler to plaine melancholy, ſo as no man willingly would deale with him to qualifie the raging humor ſo farre incorporated in his breaſt. At the laſt, the Church doore being opened, the Biſhop entred, and finding no ſacrament hanged up, nor Rood loft decked after the Popiſh precept (which had commanded about the ſame time a welfavored Rood, and of tall ſtature univerſally in all Churches to be ſet up) curtalled his ſmall devotions, and fell from all choler and melancholy to flat madneſſe in the uttermoſt degree, ſwearing and raging with an hunting oath or two, and by no beggers, that in his own Church, where he hoped to have ſeen beſt order, he found moſt diſorder, to his honors moſt heavy diſcomfort, as he ſaid, calling the Parſon (whoſe name was Doctor Bricket) knave, and Heretike.

D. Bricket, Parſon of Hadham, called knave of Boner.

Who there humbled himſelfe, and yeelded, as it were, to his fault, ſaying, he was ſorry his Lordſhip was come before that he and his Pariſh looked for him, and therefore could not doe their duties to receive him accordingly: and as for thoſe things lacking, he truſted a ſhort time hereafter ſhould compaſſe that, which hitherto he could not bring about. Therefore if it pleaſed his Lordſhip to come to his poore houſe (where his dinner was prepared) he would ſatiſfie him in thoſe things which his Lordſhip thought amiſſe. Yet this ſo reaſonable an anſwer nothing could ſatiſfie nor aſſwage his paſſion unreaſonable. For the Catholike Prelate utterly defied him and his cheere, commanding him out of his ſight, ſaying, as his by-word was, Before God thou art a knave, avant heretike, and therewithall, whether thruſting or ſtriking at him, ſo it was that with his hand he gave Sir Thomas Joſſelin Knight (who was then amongſt the reſt, and ſtood next the Biſhop) a good flewet upon the upper part of the neck, even under his eare, as ſome ſay which ſtood by, but, as he himſelfe ſaid, he hit him full upon the eare: whereat he was ſomewhat aſtonied at the ſuddenneſſe of the quarrell for that time.

Sir Thomas Joſſelin ſtriken of Boner.

B. Boner ſtriketh him that ſtandeth next.

At laſt he ſpake and ſaid, What meaneth your Lordſhip? have you beene trained in Will Sommers Schoole, to ſtrike him that ſtandeth next you? The Biſhop ſtill in rage either heard not, or would not heare.

Fecknam excuſeth B. Boner by the Marſhalſey.

Then M. Fecknam Dean of Pauls, ſeeing the Biſhop ſtill in this bitter rage, ſaid, O M. Joſſelin, you muſt beare with my Lord, for truly his long impriſonment in the Marſhalſey, and the miſuſing of him there hath altered him, that in theſe paſſions he is not ruler of himſelfe, nor it booteth any man to give him counſell untill his heat be paſt, and then aſſure your ſelfe M. Joſſelin, my Lord will be ſorry for thoſe abuſes yͤ now he cannot ſee in himſelf.

Sir Thomas Joſſelins Apothegme touching B. Boner.

Whereunto he merrily replied and ſaid, So it ſeemes M. Fecknam, for now that he is come forth of the Marſhalſey, he is ready to go to Bedlem. At which merry conceit ſome laughed & moe ſmiled, becauſe the naile was ſo truly hit upon the head. The Biſhop, nothing abaſhed at his own folly, gave a deaf eare; as no marvell it was that he ſhamed little to ſtrike a ſtranger, which ſpared not the burning of ſo many good men.

After this worthy combate thus finiſhed and atchieved, this martiall prelate preſently taketh him to his horſe againe, notwithſtanding he was minded to tarry at Hadham three or foure days, and ſo had made proviſion in his owne houſe, and leaving his dinner rode that night with a ſmall company of his houſhold to Ware, where he was not looked for three dayes after, to the great wonder of all the countrey, why he ſo prevented his day aforeſtalled.

At this haſty poſting away of this Biſhop his whole train of attendants there left him. Alſo his Doctors and Chaplaines (a few excepted) tarryed behind, and dined at Doctor Brickets as merily, as he rode toward Ware all chafingly: which dinner was prepared for the Biſhop himſelfe. Now whether the Biſhop were offended at thoſe ſolemnities which he wanted, and was accuſtomed to be ſaluted withall in other places where he iourneyed, ioyning to that that his great God was not exalted above ground over the altar, nor his block almighty ſet ſeemly in the rood loft to entertaine ſtrangers, and thereupon took occaſion to quarrell with Doctor Bricket (whoſe religion perchance he ſomwhat ſuſpected) I have not perfectly to ſay, but ſo it was ſuppoſed of divers the cauſe therof to riſe, which drave the Biſhop ſo haſtily from ſuch a dinner. Teſtified by ſuch as there and then were preſent. Rich. K. &c.

B. Boner driven from a good dinner.

A ſtory of a Rood ſet up in Lancaſhire.

IN this Viſitation of Biſhop Boner above mentioned, ye ſee how the Biſhop tooke on for not ſetting up the Rood, and ringing the bels at Hadham. Ye heard alſo of the precept, which commanded in every pariſh a Rood to be erected both well favoured, and of a tall ſtature. By the occaſion whereof it commeth in minde (and not out of place) to ſtory likewiſe what happened in a certaine Towne in Lancaſhire neere to Lancaſter, called Cockram, where the Pariſhioners and Church-wardens, having the ſame time a like charge for the erecting of a rood in their pariſh Church, had made their bargaine and were at a price with one that could cunningly carve and paint ſuch idols, for the framing of their Rood: who, according to his promiſe, made them one, and ſet it up in their Church.

A ſtory of a Rood ſet up in Lancaſhire.

The men of Cockram not pleaſed with their Rood.

This done, he demanded his money: But they, miſliking his workmanſhip, refuſed to pay him, wherupon he arreſted them, and the matter was brought before the Maior of Lancaſter, who was a very meet man for ſuch a purpoſe, and an old favourer of the Goſpell, which is rare in that Country. Then the carver began to declare how they covenanted with him for the making of a Rood, with the appurtenances ready carved and ſet up in their Church, which he according to his promiſe had done, and now demanding his money, they refuſed to pay him. Is this true, quoth the Maior to the Wardens? Yea Sir, ſaid they. And why doe you not pay the poore man his due, quoth he? And it pleaſe you maſter Maior (quoth they) becauſe the Rood we had before was a well favored man, and he promiſed to make us ſuch another: but this that he hath ſet us up now is the worſt favored thing that ever you ſet your eyes on, gaping and grinning in ſuch ſort, that none of our children dare once look him in the face, or come neere him.

The Rood of Cockram driving the children out of the Church.

The Maior thinking that it was good enough for that purpoſe if it had been worſe, my Maſters (quoth he) howſoever the Rood like you, the poore mans labor hath been never the leſſe, and it is pitie that he ſhould have any hindrance or loſſe thereby. Therefore I will tell

tell you what you ſhall doe: Pay him the money ye promiſed him, and goe your wayes home, and looke on it, and if it will not ſerve for a god, make no more adoe, but clap a paire of hornes on his head, and ſo he will make an excellent divell. This the Pariſhioners tooke well in worth: the poore man had his money, and diverſe laughed well thereat: but ſo did not the Babyloniſh Prieſts.

The Maior of Lancaſter a good man.

This Mayor above mentioned continued a Proteſtant almoſt 50. yeeres, and was the onely reliever of March, the Martyr (whoſe ſtory followeth hereafter) with meat, drink, and lodging while he lay in Lancaſter Caſtle, the ſpace of three quarters of a yeere, before he was had to Cheſter to be burned, &c.

About this time or the moneth next before, which was October, there came a precept or mandate from Boner Biſhop of London, to all Biſhops and Curates within his Dioceſſe, for the aboliſhing of ſuch Scriptures and writings as had been painted upon Church wals before, in King Edwards dayes. The copie of which precept or mandate here we thought good to expreſſe, that the world might ſee the wicked proceedings of their impious zeale, or rather their malicious rage againſt the Lord, and his word, and againſt the edifying of Chriſtian people: whereby it might appeare, by this blotting out of Scriptures, not only how blaſphemouſly they ſpake againſt the holy Scriptures of God, but alſo how ſtudiouſly they ſought by all manner of meanes, to keepe the people ſtill in ignorance.

A mandate of Boner Biſhop of London, to aboliſh the Scriptures and writings painted upon the Church wals.

The Scriptures painted on Church wals razed out

Edmund by Gods permiſſion Biſhop of London, to all and every Parſons, Vicars, Clarkes, and lettered, within the pariſh of Hadham, or within the precinct of our Dioceſſe of London, whereſoever being, ſendeth greeting, grace and benediction.

Note wel theſe cauſes reader, why the Scriptures ſhould be razed out.

Scriptures open a window to vices with Boner.

Becauſe ſome children of iniquity, given up to carnall deſires and novelties, have by many wayes enterpriſed to baniſh the ancient manner and order of the Church, and to bring in and eſtabliſh ſects and hereſies; taking from thence the picture of Chriſt, and many things beſides inſtituted and obſerved of ancient time laudably in the ſame, placing in the roome thereof ſuch things, as in ſuch a place it behoved them not to doe, and alſo have procured as a ſtay to their Hereſies (as they thought) certaine Scriptures wrongly applied to be painted upon the Church wals, all which perſons tend chiefly to this end, that they might uphold the libertie of the fleſh, and marriage of Prieſts, and deſtroy, as much as lay in them, the reverent Sacrament of the Altar, and might extinguiſh and enervate holy dayes, faſting dayes, and other laudable diſcipline of the Catholike Church, opening a window to all vices, and utterly cloſing up the way unto vertue: Wherefore we being moved with a Chriſtian zeale, judging that the premiſes are not to bee longer ſuffered, doe for diſcharge of our duty, commit unto you joyntly and ſeverally, and by the tenour hereof doe ſtreightly charge and command you, that at the receipt hereof, with all ſpeed convenient, you doe warne, or cauſe to bee warned, firſt, ſecond, and third time, and peremptorily, all and ſingular Church-wardens and Pariſhioners whoſoever within our foreſaid Dioceſſe of London, whereſoever any ſuch Scriptures or paintings have beene attempted, that they aboliſh and extinguiſh ſuch manner of Scriptures, ſo that by no meanes they be either read or ſeene, and therein to proceed moreover as they ſhall ſee good and laudable in this behalf. And if after the ſaid monition, the ſaid Church-wardens and Pariſhioners ſhall be found remiſſe and negligent, or culpable, then you joyntly and ſeverally ſhall ſee the foreſaid Scriptures to be razed, aboliſhed and extinguiſhed forthwith: citing all and ſingular thoſe Church-wardens and Pariſhioners, (whom we alſo for the ſame do cite here by the tenour hereof) that all and ſingular the Church-wardens and Pariſhioners being ſlacke and negligent, culpable therein, ſhall appeare before us, our Vicar generall and principall Officiall, or our Commiſſary ſpeciall in our Cathedrall Church of Saint Paul at London, in the Conſiſtory there, at the houre appointed for the ſame, the ſixth day next after their citation, if it bee a Court day, or elſe at the next Court day after enſuing, whereas either wee or our Officiall or Commiſſary ſhall ſit: there to ſay and alledge for themſelves ſome reaſonable cauſe, if they have or can tell of any, why they ought not to be excommunicated, or otherwiſe puniſhed for their ſuch negligence, ſlackneſſe, and fault, to ſay and to alledge, and further to doe and receive, as law and reaſon requireth. And what you have done in the premiſſes, doe you certifie us, or our Vicar, principall Officiall, and ſuch our Commiſſary, diligently and duely in all things, and through all things, or let him among you thus certifie us, which hath taken upon him to execute this Mandate: In witneſſe whereof we have ſet our Seales to theſe preſents. M. Chriſtopherſon ſent to Cambridge with Gardiners injunctions.

About this time the Lord Chancellour ſent Maſter Chriſtopherſon unto the Univerſity of Cambridge, with theſe three Articles, which he injoyned them to obſerve.

The firſt, that every ſchollar ſhould weare his apparell according to his degree in the ſchooles.

The ſecond was touching the pronunciation of the Greeke tongue.

The third, that every Preacher there ſhould declare the whole ſtile of the King and Queene in their Sermons.

In Cambridge were 24. places void at one time in one Colledge.

In this Univerſity of Cambridge, and alſo of Oxford, by reaſon of the bringing of theſe things, and eſpecially for the alteration of Religion, many good wits and learned men departed the Univerſities: of whom, ſome of their owne accord gave over, ſome were thruſt out of their fellowſhips, ſome were miſerably handled: in ſo much that in Cambridge, in the Colledge of S. John, there were foure and twenty places void together, in whoſe roomes were taken in foure and twenty other, which neither in vertue nor in religion ſeemed to anſwer to them before. And no leſſe miſerable was the ſtate of Oxford, by reaſon of the time, and the ſtreight dealing of the viſitors, that, for ſetting forward their Papiſticall proceedings, had no regard or reſpect to the forwardneſſe of good wits, and the maintenance of good letters, beginning then more and more to flouriſh in that Univerſity.

A popiſh exhortation of Doctor Treſham.

And for ſo much as we have entred into the mention of Oxford, we may not paſſe over in ſilence the famous exhortation of Doctor Treſham, who ſupplying the roome of the Subdeane in Chriſts Church, after he had called all the ſtudents of the Colledge together, with great eloquence, and art perſwaſorie began to commend the dignity of the Maſſe unto them, declaring, that there was ſtuffe enough in the Scripture to prove the Maſſe good. Then to allure them to the catholike ſervice of the Church, he uſed theſe reaſons, declaring that there were a goodly company of Copes, that were appointed to Windſore, but he had found the Queene ſo gracious unto him, that they ſhould come to Chriſt Church. Now, if they like honeſt men ſhould come to Church, they ſhould weare them on Holy-dayes. And beſides all this, he would get them the Lady Bell of Bampton, and that ſhould make the ſweeteſt ring in all England. And as for an holy water ſprinkle, he had already the faireſt that was within the Realme. Wherefore he thought that no man would be ſo mad to forgo theſe commodities, &c.

The great reaſons of Doctor Treſham.

Which things I rehearſe, that it may appeare what want of diſcretion is in the Fathers of Popery, and into what idle follies ſuch men do fall, whom I beſeech the Lord, if it be his pleaſure, to reduce to a better truth, and to open their eyes to ſee their own blindneſſe.

" Where note, that the Printer of Q. Maries Statutes doth erre in his ſupputation, which ſaith that this Parliament began the 11. of this moneth, which day was then Sunday.

To proceed now further in the courſe and race of our ſtory where as we left, being before in the moneth of November, it followeth more, that on the " xxii. day of the ſame moneth of November, being Munday, began the Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, to the beginning whereof both the King and Queene rode in their Parliament robes, having two ſwords borne before them. The Earle of Pembroke bare his ſword, and the Earle of Weſtmerland bare the Queens. They had two caps of maintenance born before them, whereof the Earle of Arundell bare one, and the Earle of Shrewſbury the other.

Cardinall Poole arriveth in England. Ex Statut. an. 1. & 2. R. Philip. & Mariæ. cap. 8, Cardinall Poole landed at Dover upon the Wedneſday, being the xxi. day of November, on which day one Act paſſed in the Parliament for his reſtitution in blood, utterly repealing as falſe and moſt ſlandrous, that Act made againſt him in King Henry the eighths time, and on the next day being Thurſday, and the xxii. of November, the King and the Queen came both to yͤ Parliament houſe to give their royall aſſent, and to eſtabliſh this Act againſt his comming.

Upon the Saturday, being the 24. of November, the ſaid Cardinall came by water to London, and ſo to Lambeth houſe, which was ready prepared againſt his comming.

Novemb. 28.

Upon the Wedneſday following, being the 28. of November, there was generall proceſſion in Pauls for ioy that the Queene was conceived and quicke with child, as it was declared in a letter ſent from the Councell to the Biſhop of London.

The ſame day were preſent at this Proceſſion ten Biſhops, with all the Prebendaries of Pauls, and alſo the Lord Maior with the Aldermen, and a great number of Commons of the City in their beſt array. The copie of the Councels letter here followeth, ad perpetuam rei memoriam.

A Copie of a Letter ſent from the Councell unto Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, concerning Queene Maries conceiving with child.

The Councels letter to biſhop Boner of the Queenes conceiving with child.

After our hearty commendations unto your good Lordſhip: whereas it hath pleaſed Almighty God amongſt other his infinite benefits of late moſt graciouſly powred upon us and this whole Realme, to extend his benediction upon the Queens Maieſty in ſuch ſort, as ſhe is conceived and quick of child: Whereby her Maieſty (being our naturall liege Lady, Queen, and undoubted inheritor of this imperiall crowne) good hope of certain ſucceſſion in the crown is given unto us, and conſequently the great calamities (which for want of ſuch ſucceſſion might otherwiſe have fallen upon us, and our poſterity) ſhall by Gods grace be well avoided, if we thankfully acknowledge this benefit of almighty God, endeavouring our ſelves with earneſt repentance to thank, honour, and ſerve him, as we be moſt bounden: Theſe be not only to advertiſe you of theſe good newes, to be by you publiſhed in all places within your dioceſſe, but alſo to pray and require you, that both your ſelfe do give God thanks with us for this his eſpeciall grace, and alſo give order that thanks may be openly given by ſinging of Te Deum in all the Churches within your ſaid Dioceſſe; and that likewiſe all Prieſts and other Eccleſiaſticall Miniſters, in their Maſſes, and other divine Services, may continually pray to almighty God ſo to extend his holy hand over her Maieſty, the Kings highneſſe, and this whole Realme, as that this thing, being by his omnipotent power graciouſly thus begun, may by the ſame be well continued and brought to good effect, to the glory of his name. Whereunto, albeit we doubt not, ye would of your ſelf have had ſpeciall regard without theſe our letters, yet for the earneſt deſire we have to have this thing done out of hand, and diligently continued, we have alſo written theſe our letters, to put you in remembrance; and ſo bid your Lordſhip moſt heartily well to fare. From Weſtminſter the 27. of November, 1554.

If Q. Mary were quicke with child in the 28. of the moneth of November, and afterward did labour in the moneth of June, then went ſhe almoſt ſeven moneths quick with child.

Cardinall Poole commeth to the Parliament.

Alſo the ſame day in the afternoone Cardinall Poole came to the Parliament houſe, which at that preſent was kept in the great chamber of the Court at White-Hall, for that the Queene was then ſick, and could not goe abroad: where the King and Queenes Maieſty ſitting under the cloth of Eſtate, and the Cardinall ſitting on the right hand, with all the other Eſtates of the Parliament being preſent, the biſhop of Wincheſter being L. Chancellor began in this maner.

The words of Wincheſter for receiving of the Cardinall.

Wincheſters words for Cardinall Poole.

My Lords of the upper houſe, and you my Maſters of the nether houſe, here is preſent the right reverend Father in God my Lord Cardinall Poole, come from the Apoſtolike See of Rome, as Ambaſſadour to the King and Queenes Majeſties, upon one of the weightieſt cauſes that ever hapned in this Realme, and which pertaineth to the glory of God, and your univerſall benefit. The which Ambaſſage their Majeſties pleaſure is to be ſignified unto you all by his owne mouth, truſting that you will receive and accept it in as benevolent and thankfull wiſe as their highneſſes have done, and that you will give an attent and inclinable eare unto him.

When the Lord Chancellor had thus ended his talk, the Cardinall, taking the time then offered, began his Oration, wherein he declared the cauſes of his comming, and what were his deſires and requeſts. In the which meane time the Court gate was kept ſhut untill he had made an end of his Oration. The tenour and words whereof here followeth.

The tenour of Cardinall Pooles Oration, made in the Parliament houſe.

My Lords all, & you that are the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, which in

Anno

Cardinall Pooles oration in the Parliament houſe.

in effect is nothing elſe but the ſtate and body of the whole realme, as the cauſe of my repaire hither hath béen moſt wiſely and gravely declared by my Lord Chancellor, ſo before that I enter to the particularities of my Commiſſion, I have ſomewhat touching my ſelfe, and to give moſt humble and hearty thankes to the King and Quéenes Maieſties, and after them to you all, which, of a man exiled and baniſhed from this Commonwealth, have reſtored me to be a member of the ſame, and of a man having no place neither here, or elſwhere within this Realme, have admitted me in a place, where to ſpeak and to be heard. This I proteſt unto you all, that though I was exiled my native countrey without iuſt cauſe as God knoweth, yet the ingratitude could not pull from me the affection and deſire that I had to profit and do you good. If the offer of my ſervice might have béene received, it was never to ſéeke, and where that could not be taken, you never failed of my prayer, nor ever ſhall.

But leaving the rehearſall thereof, and comming more néere to the matter of my Commiſſion, I ſignifie unto you all, that my principall travell is for the reſtitution of this noble Realm to the ancient nobility, and to declare unto you, that the Sée Apoſtolike, from whence I come, hath a ſpeciall reſpect to this Realm above all other, and not without cauſe, ſéeing that God himſelfe, as it were by providence, hath given this Realme prerogative of Nobility above other: which to make more plaine unto you, it is to be conſidered that this Iland firſt of all Ilands received the light of Chriſts Religion. For as ſtories teſtifie, it was prima provinciarum quæ amplexa eſt fidem Chriſti.

More for the vantage that was hoped by it, than for any great love.

England, of all Ilands, received firſt the faith of Chriſt.

For the Britanes being firſt inhabitants of this Realme (notwithſtanding the ſubiection of the Emperors and heathen Princes) did receive Chriſts faith from the Apoſtolike Sée univerſally, and not in parts as other Countreyes, nor by one and one, as Clocks increaſe their houres by diſtinction of times, but altogether at once, as it were in a moment. But after that their ill merits or forgetfulneſſe of God had deſerved expulſion, and that ſtrangers being infidels had poſſeſſed this land, yet God of his goodneſſe, not leaving where he once loved, ſo illuminated the hearts of the Saxons being heathen men, that they forſooke the darkneſſe of heathen errors, and embraced the light of Chriſts Religion: ſo that within ſmall ſpace Idolatry and Heathen ſuperſtition was utterly abandoned in this Iland.

This was a great prerogative of Nobility, the benefit whereof though it be to be aſcribed to God, yet the meane occaſion of the ſame came from the Church of Rome. In the faith of which Church we have ever ſince continued and conſented with the reſt of the world in unity of Religion. And to ſhew further the fervent devotion of the inhabitants of this Iland towards the Church of Rome, we read that divers Princes in the Saxons time with great travell and expences went perſonally to Rome, as Offa, and Adulphus, which thought it not enough to ſhew themſelves obedient to the ſaid Sée; unleſſe that in their owne perſons they had gone to that ſame place from whence they had received ſo great a grace and benefit.

That the faith of the Britans came firſt from Rome, neither doth it ſtand with the circumſtance of our ſtories: and if it ſo did, yet that faith and doctrine of the Romaniſts was not ſuch then as it is now. Read before.

Of this Offa read before.

In the time of Carolus Magnus who firſt founded the Univerſity of Paris, he ſent into England for Alcuinus a great learned man, which firſt brought learning to that Univerſity, whereby it ſéemeth that the greateſt part of the world fet the light of Religion from England.

Of Alcuinus read before.

Adrian the fourth being an Engliſhman converted Norway from infidelity, which Adrian afterwards, upon great affection and love that he bare to this Realme being his native Countrey, gave to Henry the ſecond King of England, the right and ſeigniory of the dominion of Ireland, which pertained to the Sée of Rome.

I will not rehearſe the manifold benefits that this Realme hath received from the Apoſtolike Sée, nor how ready the ſame hath béen to relieve us in all our neceſſities. Nor will I rehearſe the manifold miſeries and calamities that this realme hath ſuffered by ſwerving from that unity. And even as in this realme, ſo in all other Countreyes which refuſing the unity of the catholike faith have followed fantaſticall doctrine, the like plagues have happened. Let Aſia, and the Empire of Gréece be a ſpectacle unto the world, who, by ſwerving from the unity of the Church of Rome, are brought into captivity and ſubiection of the Turke. All ſtories be full of like examples. And to come unto the later time, looke upon our Neighbours in Germany, who, by ſwerving from this unity, are miſerably afflicted with diverſity of ſects, and divided into factions.

May rather what riches and treaſures the See of Rome hath ſuckt out of England, it is incredible.

The cauſe of their ſubiection to the Turke cannot be proved to come by ſwerving from the unity of the Church of Rome, for they were never fully ioyned unto it.

And as touching the ſubiection of Aſia and Grecia to the Turkes, read in the ſtory of the Turks before.

What ſhall I rehearſe unto you the tumults and effuſion of blood that hath happened there of late dayes? Or trouble you with the rehearſall of thoſe plagues that have happened ſince this innovation of Religion, whereof you have felt the bitterneſſe, and I have heard the report? Of all which matters I can ſay no more, but ſuch was the miſery of the time. And ſée how farre forth this fury went. For thoſe that live under the Turk may fréely live after their conſcience, and ſo was it not lawfull here.

And why then doe ye more cruelly than the Turke perſecute other for their conſcience?

If men examine well upon what grounds theſe innovations began, they ſhall well find that the root of this, as of many other miſchiefes, was avarice, and that the luſt and carnall affection of one man confounded all lawes both divine and humane. And notwithſtanding all theſe deviſes and policies practiſed within this realme againſt the Church of Rome, they néeded not to have left you, but that they thought rather as friends to reconcile you, than as enemies to infeſt you. For they wanted not great offers of the moſt mighty Potentates in all Europe to have ayded the Church in that quarrell. Then mark the ſequell: There ſéemed by theſe changes to riſe a great face of riches and gaine, which in proofe came to great miſery and lack. Sée how God then can confound the wiſdome of the wiſe and turne uniuſt policy to méere folly, and that thing which ſéemed to be done for reliefe, was cauſe of plaine ruine and decay. Yet ſée that goodneſſe of God, which at no time failed us, but moſt benignly offered his grace, when it was of our parts leaſt ſought and worſe deſerved.

And when all light of true Religion ſéemed utterly extinct, the Churches defaced, the Altars overthrown, the Miniſters corrupted: even like as in a lamp the light being covered, yet it is not quenched, even ſo in a few remained the confeſſion of Chriſts faith, namely in the breaſt of the Quéenes excellency, of whom, to ſpeake without adulation, the ſaying of the Prophet may be verified, Ecce quaſi derelicta.

And ſée how miraculouſly God of his goodnes preſerved her highneſſe, contrary to the expectation of man, that when numbers conſpired againſt her, and policies were deviſed to diſinherit her, and armed power prepared to deſtroy her, yet, ſhe being a Virgin helpleſſe, naked and unarmed, prevailed and had the victory of tyrants, which is not to be aſcribed to any policy of man, but to the almighty great goodneſſe and providence of God, to whom the honor is to be given. And therefore it may be ſaid, Da gloriam Deo.

What policy is this to make promiſe to get ſtrength, and to break it as the Queene did?

Anno 1554.

For in mans iudgement, on her Graces part was nothing in appearance but deſpaire.

And yet for all theſe practiſes and deviſes of ill men, here you ſee her Grace eſtabliſhed in her eſtate, being your lawfull Queene and Governeſſe, borne among you, whom God hath appointed to reigne over you for the reſtitution of true religion, and extirpation of all errors and ſects. And to confirme her Grace the more ſtrongly in this enterpriſe, loe how the providence of God hath ioyned her in marriage with a Prince of like religion, who being a King of great might, armor, and force, yet uſeth towards you neither armor nor force, but ſeeketh you by the way of love and amity: in which reſpect great cauſe you have to give thanks to almighty God, that hath ſent you ſuch a catholike Governeſſe. It ſhall be therefore your part againe to love, obey, and ſerve them.

The Cardinal here appeareth to be a falſe Prophet.

And as it was a ſingular favor of God to conioyne them in marriage, ſo it is not to be doubted but that he ſhall ſend them iſſue, for the comfort and ſurety of this common-wealth.

Charles the Emperour compared to David.

Two powers in earth: Eccleſiaſticall, and Imperiall.

Of all Princes in Europe, the Emperor hath travailed moſt in the cauſe of Religion, as it appeareth by his acts in Germany: yet happily, by ſome ſecret iudgment of God, he hath not atchieved the end. With whom in my iourney hitherwards I had conference touching my legation: whereof when he had underſtanding, he ſhewed a great appearance of moſt earneſt ioy and gladneſſe, ſaying, that it reioyced him no leſſe of the reconcilement of this Realme unto Chriſtian unity, than that his ſonne was placed by marriage in the Kingdome, and moſt glad he was of all, that the occaſion thereof ſhould come by me being an Engliſh man borne, which is (as it were) to call home our ſelves. I can well compare him to David, which though he were a man elect of God, yet, for that he was contaminate with blood and war, he could not build the temple of Jeruſalem, but left the finiſhing thereof to Salomon, which was Rex pacificus. So may it be thought, that the appeaſing of controverſies of Religion in Chriſtianity, is not appointed to this Emperor, but rather to his ſonne, who ſhall performe the building that his father hath begun. Which Church cannot be perfectly builded, unleſſe univerſally in all realmes we adhere to one head, and do acknowledge him to be the Vicar of God, and to have power from above. For all power is of God, according to the ſaying, Non eſt poteſtas, niſi à Deo. And therefore I conſider that all power being in God, yet, for the conſervation of quiet and godly life in the world, he hath derived that power from above into the parts here in earth: which is, into the power Imperiall, and Eccleſiaſticall. And theſe two powers, as they be ſeverall and diſtinct, ſo have they two ſeverall effects and operations. For ſecular Princes, to whom the temporall ſword is committed, be miniſters of God to execute vengeance upon tranſgreſſors and evill livers, and to preſerve the well doers and innocents from iniury and violence. Which power is repreſented in theſe two moſt excellent perſons, the King and Queenes Maieſty here preſent, who have this power committed unto them immediatly from God, without any ſuperiour in that behalfe.

The power of the keyes clarkely declared.

The other power is of miniſtration, which is the power of the keyes, and order in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtate, which is by the authority of Gods word, and examples of the Apoſtles, and of all old holy Fathers from Chriſt hitherto, attributed and given to the Apoſtolike Sea of Rome, by ſpeciall prerogative. From which Sea I am here deputed Legate and Embaſſador, having ful and ample commiſſion from thence, and have the keyes committed to my hands, I confeſſe to you that I have the keyes, not as mine owne keyes, but as the keyes of him that ſent me, and yet cannot open, not for want of power in me to give, but for certaine impediments in you to receive, which muſt be taken away before my Commiſſion can take effect. This I proteſt before you, my Commiſſion is not of preiudice to any perſon. I come not to deſtroy, but to build, I come to reconcile, not to condemne, I come not to compell, but to call againe, I am not come to call any thing in queſtion already done, but my Commiſſion is of grace and clemency, to ſuch as will receive it. For touching all matters that be paſt they ſhall be as things caſt into the Sea of forgetfulneſſe.

The Popes keyes ſent by the Cardinall.

The Popes keyes cannot worke in England before the lock of good lawes be changed.

But the meane, whereby you ſhall receive this benefit, is to revoke and repeale thoſe laws and ſtatutes, which be impediments, blocks, and barres to the execution of my commiſſion. For like as I my ſelfe had neither place nor voice to ſpeake here among you, but was in all reſpects a baniſhed man, till ſuch time as ye had repealed thoſe lawes that lay in my way: even ſo cannot you receive the benefit and grace offered from the Apoſtolike See, untill the abrogation of ſuch lawes, whereby you have diſioyned and diſſevered your ſelves from the unity of Chriſts Church.

It remaineth therefore that you, like true Chriſtians and provident men for the weale of your ſoules and bodies, ponder what is to be done in this ſo weighty a cauſe, and ſo to frame your acts and proceedings, as they may tend firſt to the glory of God, and next to the conſervation of your Common-wealth, ſurety, and quietneſſe.

The next day after the three eſtates aſſembled againe in the great Chamber of the Court at Weſtminſter: where the King and Queens Maieſties and the Cardinall being preſent, they did exhibit (all kneeling on their knees) a ſupplication to their highneſſes, the tenor whereof enſueth.

The Copie of the ſupplication and ſubmiſsion exhibited to the King and Queenes Majeſties, by the Lords and Commons of the Parliament.

The ſupplication and ſubmiſſion of the lords and commons, to the King and Queenes maieſties.

O great ſorrow and deep repentance.

VVE the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons of this preſent Parliament aſſembled, repreſenting the whole body of the Realme of England and Dominions of the ſame, in our owne names particularly, and alſo of the ſaid body univerſally, in this ſupplication directed to your Majeſties, with moſt humble ſute, that it may by your gracious interceſsion and meane, be exhibited to the moſt reverend father in God, the Lord Cardinall Poole Legate, ſent ſpecially hither from our moſt holy Father Pope Iulius the third, and the Sea Apoſtolike of Rome, doe declare our ſelves very ſorrie and repentant for the ſchiſme and diſobedience, committed in this Realme and the Dominions of the ſame, againſt the ſaid See Apoſtolike, either by making, agreeing, or executing any lawes, ordinances, or commandements againſt the ſupremacie of the ſaid See, or otherwiſe doing or ſpeaking that might impugne the ſame: offering our ſelves, and promiſing by this our ſupplication, that for a token and knowledge of our ſaid repentance, we be, and ſhall be alway ready, under and with the authorities of your Majeſties, to the uttermoſt of our power, to doe that ſhall be in us for the abrogation and repealing of the ſaid lawes and ordinances in this preſent Parliament; as well for our ſelves, as for the whole body whom we repreſent.

Whereupon wee moſt humbly beſeech your

Majeſties,

Anno 1554

The Popes abſolution cannot come, but by interceſſion of kings and Queenes.

Majeſties, as perſons undefiled in the offence of this body towards the ſaid See, which neverthele ſſe God by his providence hath made ſubject to your Majeſties, ſo to ſet forth this our moſt humble ſuit, that we may obtaine from the See Apoſtolike, by the ſaid moſt reverend Father, as well particularly as univerſally, abſolution, releaſe and diſcharge from all danger of ſuch cenſures and ſentences, as by the lawes of the Church we be fallen in, and that we may as children repentant, be received into the boſome and unity of Chriſts Church, ſo as this noble Realm, with all the members thereof, may in unity and perfect obedience to the See Apoſtolike, and Pope for the time being, ſerve God and your Majeſties, to the furtherance and advancement of his honour and glory, Amen.

The ſupplication given up by the King and Queene to the Cardinall.

The ſupplication being read, the King and Queene delivered the ſame unto the Cardinall, who (perceiving the effect thereof to anſwer his expectation) did receive the ſame moſt gladly from their Majeſties: and after hee had in few words given thankes to God, and declared what great cauſe he had to reioyce above all others, that his comming from Rome into England had taken moſt happy ſucceſſe: He by the Popes authority did give them this abſolution following

An abſolution pronounced by Cardinall Poole to the whole Parliament of England, in the preſence of the King and Queen.

Abſolution from the Pope given to the Realme of England. Chriſts abſolution not ſufficient, without the Popes be ioyned withall. England brought from Gods bleſſing into the warm ſunne.

Our Lord Jeſus Chriſt which with his moſt precious blood hath redeemed and waſhed us from all our ſinnes and iniquities, that hee might purchaſe unto himſelfe a glorious ſpouſe without ſpot or wrinkle, and whom the Father hath appointed head over all his Church, hee by his mercy abſolve you. And we by Apoſtolike authority given unto us (by the moſt holy Lord Pope Julius the third, his Vicegerent in earth) do abſolve and deliver you and every of you, with the whole Realme and the Dominions thereof, from all hereſie and ſchiſme, and from all and every iudgement, cenſures and paines, for that cauſe incurred, and alſo we do reſtore you again unto the unity of our mother the holy Church, as in our letters more plainly it ſhall appeare: In the name of the Father, of the Son, and of holy Ghoſt.

Te Deum ſung, but with heavie hearts God knoweth.

When all this was don, they went into the Chappell, and there ſinging Te Deum with great ſolemnity declared the ioy and gladneſſe that for this reconciliation was pretended,

The report of this was with great ſpeed ſent unto Rome, as well by the King and Cardinals letters, which hereafter follow, as alſo otherwiſe Whereupon the Pope cauſed there at Rome proceſſions to be made, and thankes to be given to God with great ioy for the converſion of England to his Church, and therefore praiſing the Cardinals diligence, and the devotion of the King and Queen, on Chriſtmas even, by his buls he ſet forth a generall pardon to all ſuch as did truly reioyce for the ſame.

Great ioy at Rome for the converſion of England, and good cauſe why.

A copie of King Philips letter, written with his own hand to Pope Iulius, touching the reſtoring of the Realm of England.

November 30. King Philips letter to the P. tranſlated out of Spaniſh into Engliſh.

Moſt holy Father, I wrote yeſterday unto Don Iohn Maurique, that hee ſhould declare by word of mouth, or elſe write to your holineſſe, in what good ſtate the matter of Religion ſtood in this Realme, and of the ſubmiſſion to your holineſſe as to the chiefe. As this day, which is the feaſt of S. Andrew, late in the evening, we have done God that ſervice (to whoſe only Godneſſe we muſt impute it, and to your holineſſe who have taken ſo great paine to gaine theſe ſoules) that this Realme with full and generall conſent of all them that repreſent the ſtate, being very penitent for that was paſt, and well bent to that they come to doe, ſubmitted themſelves to your holineſſe, and to that holy See, whom, at the requeſt of the Queene and me, your Legate did abſolve. And foraſmuch as the ſaid Don Iohn ſhall ſignifie unto your holineſſe all that paſſed in this matter, I will write no more thereof, but only that the Queene and I as moſt faithfull and devout children of your holineſſe, have received the greateſt joy and comfort hereof that may be expreſſed with tongue: Conſidering that beſides the ſervice done to God hereby, it hath chanced in the time of your holineſſe, to place as it were in the lap of the holy Catholike Church ſuch a kingdome as this is. And therefore I thinke I cannot be thankfull enough for that is done this day. And I truſt in him, that your holineſſe ſhall alway underſtand, that the holy See hath not had a more obedient ſonne than I, nor more deſirous to preſerve and increaſe the authority of the ſame. God guide and proſper the moſt holy perſonage of your holineſſe as I deſire.

From London the 30. of November, 1554.

Your holineſſe moſt humble
ſonne the King, &c.

Here followeth likewiſe the Cardinals letter to the ſaid Pope, concerning the ſame matter.

The Cardinals letter to the Pope for the reclaiming againe of England to his See.

Thoſe things which I wrote unto your holyneſſe of late, of that hope which I truſted would come to paſſe, that in ſhort ſpace this Realme would bee reduced to the unity of the Church, and obedience of the Apoſtolike See, though I did write then not without great cauſe: yet neverthe leſſe I could not be void of all fear, not only for that difficultie which the mindes of our Countrimen did ſhew, being ſo long alienated from the See Apoſtolike, and for the old hatred which they had borne ſo many years to that name: but much more I feared, leſt the firſt entry into the cauſe it ſelfe ſhould be put off by ſome other matter or convention comming betwixt.

For the avoiding whereof I made great meanes to the King and Queene, which little needed: for their own godly forwardneſſe, and earneſt deſire to bring the thing to paſſe, far ſurmounted my great and earneſt expectation. This day in the evening being S. Andrewes day (who firſt brought his brother Peter to Chriſt) it is come to paſſe by the providence of God, that this Realm is reclaimed to give due obedience unto Peters ſeate and your holineſſe, by whoſe means it may be conioyned to Chriſt the head, and his body which is the Church. The thing was done and concluded in Parliament (the King and Queen being preſent) with ſuch full conſent and great reioycing, that incontinently after I had made my Oration and given the Benediction, with a great ioy and ſhout there was divers times ſaid, Amen, Amen: which doth evidently declare that that holy ſeed, although it hath been long oppreſſed, yet was not utterly quenched in them: which chiefly was declared in the " Nobility. Returning home to my houſe, theſe things I wrote unto your holines upon the ſudden, reioycing that I had ſo luckily brought to paſſe, so weighty a matter by the divine providence, thinking to have ſent my letters by the Kings Poſt, who (as it was ſaid) ſhould have departed ſhortly: but afterwards changing my purpoſe, when I had determined to ſend one of mine owne men, I thought good to adde thus much to my letters, for the more ample gratulation and reioycing at that good chance: which thing as it was right great gladneſſe to mee, through the event of the ſame (being it ſelfe very great, and ſo holy, ſo profitable to the whole Church, ſo healthſome to this my country which brought me forth, ſo honorable to the ſame which received me:) ſo likewiſe I tooke no leſſe reioycing of the Princes themſelves, through whoſe vertue and godlineſſe the matter did take ſucceſſe and perfection. Of how many, and how great things may the Church (which is the ſpouſe of Chriſt, and our mother) make her account through thoſe her children?

" The Popes authority as much welcome to the Nobility of England, as water into the ſhip.

Oh diſſimulation of a flattering Cardinal

Oh notable zeale of godlineſſe. Oh ancient faith, which undoubtedly doth ſo manifeſtly appeare in them both, that who ſo ſeeth them, muſt needs (whether hee will or no) ſay the ſame which the Prophet ſpake of the firſt children of the Church; Iſti ſunt ſemen cui benedixit Dominus. Hæc plantatio Domini ad gloriandum, That is, theſe are the ſeed which the Lord hath bleſſed. This is the Lords planting to glory in.

What ſimilitude is betwixt light and darkneſſe? 2 Cor. 6.

How holily did your holineſſe with all your authority and earneſt affection favour this marriage? which truly ſeemeth to expreſſe a great ſimilitude of the higheſt King, which, being heire of the world, was ſent downe by his father from the Regall ſeat to be ſpouſe and ſon of the Virgin, and by this meanes to comfort all mankinde: for even ſo this King himſelfe, the greateſt heire of all men which are in the earth, leaving his fathers Kingdomes that are moſt great, is come into this little Kingdome, and is become both the ſpouſe, and ſonne of this Virgin, (for he ſo behaveth himſelfe as though he were a ſonne, whereas indeed he is an husband) that he might, as he hath in effect already performed, ſhew himſelfe an aider and helper to reconcile this people to Chriſt, and his body, which is the Church.

Cardinal Poole flattereth the King.

Which things ſeeing they are ſo, what may not our mother the Church her ſelfe looke for at his hands, that hath brought this to paſſe, to convert the hearts of the Fathers towards their Sonnes, and the unbeleevers to the wiſedome of the righteous? which vertue truly, doth wonderfully ſhine in him. But the Queene, which at that time, when your holineſſe ſent me Legat unto her, did riſe up as a rod of incenſe ſpringing out of the trees of myrrhe, and as frankincenſe out of the deſert, ſhe I ſay which a little before was forſaken of all men, how wonderfully doth ſhe now ſhine? what a ſavour of myrrhe and frankincenſe doth ſhe give forth unto her people?

Scripture wel applyed.

which (as the Prophet ſaith of the mother of Chriſt) brought forth before ſhe laboured, before ſhee was delivered brought forth a man child; who ever heard of ſuch a thing? and who hath ſeen the like of this? ſhall the earth bring forth in one day, or ſhall a whole nation be brought forth together? But ſhe now hath brought forth a whole nation before the time of that delivery, whereof wee are in moſt great hope.

How great cauſe is given to us to reioyce? How great cauſe have wee to give thankes to Gods mercy, your holineſſe, and the Emperors Maieſty, which have beene cauſers of ſo happy and ſo godly a marriage, by which we being reconciled are ioyned to God the Father, to Chriſt and to the Church: of the which although I cannot comprehend in words the ioy that I have taken, yet I cannot keepe ſilence of it. And to this my reioycing this alſo was ioyned (which when I had perceived by the letters of the reverend Archbiſhop of Conſane, your holineſſe Nuncio with the Emperors Maieſtie, brought me marvellous great gladneſſe) that your ſaid holineſſe began to reſtore to the ancient beautie thoſe things, which in the Church of Rome through the corruption of times were deformed, which truly when it ſhall be finiſhed, then indeed may we well cry out with the Prophet, and ſpeak unto your holineſſe with theſe words, Exue te ſtolâ luctus & vexationis, & indue te decore, qui à Deo tibi eſt in gloria ſempiterna: nominabitur enim tibi nomen tuum à Deo ſempiternum, pax juſtitiæ & honor pietatatis. Tum autem dicetur, Circumſpice & vide collectos filios tuos ab oriente ſole uſque in occidentem verbo ſancto gaudentem. That is, Put off the ſtole of ſorrow and vexation, and put on comlineſſe, which thou haſt of God in everlaſting glory. For thy name ſhall be named of God everlaſting, peace of righteouſneſſe, and honour of godlineſſe; and then it ſhall be ſaid; Looke about and ſee thy ſonnes gathered together from the ſunne riſing, to the going downe of the ſame, reioycing in the holy word.

The Scripture ſpeaking of Sion and Ieruſalem, unaptly applyed to the Pope

There is nothing truly (to ſpeake of thy children gathered together in the Weſt, which prepare themſelves to meet their mother) which they had rather ſee, than her apparelled (that I may uſe the words of the Prophet) in that garment of righteouſnes wherewith God adorned her in times paſt. This one thing remaineth, that your holineſſe ioy, and the ioy of all the univerſall Church may be perfected, which, together with us her unworthy children, ceaſeth not to pray to God for it. The Almighty God preſerve your holineſſe long to continue in health for the profit of his Church. From London the laſt of November, 1554.

Your moſt humble ſervant Reginald Poole, Cardinall.

December 2.

A Sermon of Ste. Gardiner preached at Pauls Croſſe.

Upon the Sunday following, being the 2. of December, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, Lord Chancellor of England, preached at Paules Croſſe, at which Sermon was preſent the King and Cardinall Poole. Hee tooke for his Theame this part of the Epiſtle of S. Paul to the Romanes the 13. Chapter, This alſo we know the ſeaſon (brethren) that we ſhould now awake out of ſleep, for now is our ſalvation nearer, than when we believed, &c. Some notes whereof as they came to my hands faithfully gathered (as it appeareth by ſundry copies) I have here thought good to ſet forth.

A dreaming ſermon of the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Firſt, he ſhewed how the ſaying of S. Paul was verified upon the Gentiles, who had a long time ſlept in dark ignorance not knowing God: therefore ſaint Paul (quoth he) to ſtirre up their heavie dulneſſe, willed them to wake out of their long ſleepe, becauſe their ſalvation was neerer, than when they believed. In amplifying this matter, and comparing our times with theirs he tooke occaſion to declare what difference the Iewiſh ſacraments had from theſe of the Chriſtians, wherein he uſed theſe words:

Even as the ſacrament of the Iewes did declare Chriſt to come, ſo doe our ſacraments declare Chriſt to be already come: but Chriſt to come, and Chriſt to be come is not all one. For now that he is come the Iewes ſacraments be done away, and ours only remaine, which declare that he is already come, and is nearer us, than he was to the Fathers of the old Law: for they had him but in ſignes, but we have him in the Sacrament of the altar, even his very body. Wherefore now alſo it is time that we awake out of our ſleep, who have ſlept or rather dreamed theſe xx. yeers paſt, as ſhall more eaſily appeare by declaring at large ſome of the properties and effects of a ſleep or a dreame. And firſt, as men intending to ſleep, do ſeparate themſelves from compacompany, and deſire to be alone: even ſo have we ſeparated our ſelves from the ſea Apoſtolike of Rome: and have beene alone, no Realme in Chriſtendome like us.

Wincheſter very expert (as appeareth) in ghoſtly dreames.

Secondly, as in ſleep men dreame ſometime of killing, ſometime of maiming, ſometime of drowning, or burning, ſometime of ſuch beaſtlyneſſe as I will not name, but will ſpare your eares: ſo have we in this our ſleep not only dreamed of beaſtlineſſe, but we have done it indeed. For in this our ſleepe hath not one brother deſtroyed another? Hath not half our money beene wyped away at one time? And again, thoſe that would defend their conſcience, were ſlain; and others alſo otherwiſe troubled, beſides infinite other things, which you all know as well as I; whereof I report me to your owne conſciences. Further, in a mans ſleep all his ſenſes are ſtopped, ſo that he can neither ſee, ſmell, nor heare: even ſo whereas the ceremonies of the Church were inſtituted to move and ſtir up our ſenſes, they being taken away, were not our ſenſes (as ye would ſay) ſtopped, and we faſt aſleep? Moreover, when a man would gladly ſleep, he will put out the candle, leſt peradventure it may let his ſleepe, and awake him: ſo of late all ſuch Writers as did hold any thing with the Apoſtolike Sea, were condemned, and forbidden to be read, and Images (which were " Laymens bookes) were caſt down and broken.

Who putteth out the candle but they which extinguiſh Gods word, and forbid the Scriptures that ſhould give us light? " They forbid Laymens books, but you forbid the book of God.

The ſleep hath continued with us theſe twentie yeeres, and we all that while without a head. For when King Henry did firſt take upon him to be head of the Church, it was then no Church at all. After whoſe death, King Edward (having over him governors and protectors which ruled as them liſted) could not be head of the Church, but was only a ſhadow or ſigne of a head: and at length it came to paſſe, that we had no head at all: no, not ſo much as our two Archbiſhops. For on the one ſide, the Queen being a woman could not be head of the Church, and on the other ſide they both were convicted of one crime, and ſo depoſed. Thus while we deſired to have a ſupreme head among us, it came to paſſe, that we had no head at all. When the tumult was in the North in the time of K. Henry the eighth (I am ſure) the King was determined to have given over the ſupremacy again to the Pope: but the houre was not then come, and therefore it went not forward, leſt ſome would have ſaid, that he did it for feare.

Then belike Chriſt is no head at all to give life to his Church, unleſſe the Popes head alſo be clapt on the Churches ſhoulders.

After this, Maſter Knevet and I were ſent Ambaſſadors unto the Emperour, to deſire him that he would be a meane betweene the Popes Holineſſe and the King, to bring the King to the obedience of the Sea of Rome: but the time was not yet come. For it might have beene ſaid, that it had beene done for a civill policy. Againe, in the beginning of King Edwards reign the matter was moved, but the ſame was not yet: for it would have been ſaid, that the King (being but a child) had beene bought and ſould. Neither in the beginning of the Queens reigne was the houre come; for it would have beene ſaid, that it was done in a time of weakneſſe. Likewiſe when the King firſt came, if it had been done, they might have ſaid it had been by force and violence. But now, even now, " hora eſt, the houre is come, when nothing can be objected, but that it is the meere mercy and providence of God. Now hath the Popes Holines, Pope Julius the third, ſent unto us this moſt reverend father, Cardinall Poole, an ambaſſador from his ſide. What to do? not to revenge the iniuries done by us againſt his Holineſſe, ſed benedicere maledicentibus, to give his benediction to thoſe that defamed and perſecuted him.

" Imo poteſtas tenebrarum.

Steven Gardiner claweth the Cardinall.

And that we may be the more meet to receive the ſaid benediction, I ſhall deſire you that we may alway acknowledge our ſelves offenders againſt his Holineſſe; I doe not exclude my ſelfe forth of the number. I will flere cum flentibus, & gaudere cum gaudentibus, that is, weepe with them that weepe, and rejoyce with them which reioyce. And I ſhall deſire you, that we may deferre the matter no longer; for now, hora eſt, the houre is come. The King and Queens Maieſties have already reſtored our holy father the Pope to his ſupremacy, and the three eſtates aſſembled in the Parliament, repreſenting the whole bodie of the Realme, have alſo ſubmitted themſelves to his Holines, and his Succeſſors " for ever. Wherefore let us not any longer ſtay. And even as S. Paul ſaid to the Corinthians, that he was their father, ſo may the Pope ſay, that he is our father: for we received our doctrine firſt from Rome; therefore he may challenge us as his owne. We have all cauſe to reioyce, for his Holineſſe hath ſent hither and prevented us, before we ſought him: ſuch care hath he for us. Therefore let us ſay, Hæc eſt dies quam fecit Dominus, exultemus & lætemur in ea, Reioyce in this day which is of the Lords working, that ſuch a noble birth is come, yea, ſuch a holy father (I mean my Lord Cardinall Pool) which can ſpeak unto us as unto brethren, and not as unto ſtrangers; who hath a long time been abſent. And let us now awake, which ſo long have ſlept, and in our ſleep have done ſo much naughtines againſt the ſacraments of Chriſt, denying the bleſſed ſacrament of the Altar, and pulled down the " Altars, which thing Luther himſelf would not do, but rather reproved them that did, examining them of their beliefe in Chriſt.

Note how the meaning of S. Pauls words is here applied " For ever, Wincheſter a falſe Prophet. Saint Paul, though he were the father of many Churches in Chriſt Jeſus, yet was he never ſo arrogant to take upon him to be ſupreme head of any Church, but left that ſolely to Chriſt, and laboured to bring all under him.

" So Ezechias pulled down the hill-altars, which Manaſſes afterward did ſet up: yet we commend the doings of Ezechias, and diſprove the fact of the other.

This was the ſumme of his Sermon before his prayers, wherein he prayed firſt for the pope, Pope Julius the third, with all his Colledge of Cardinals, the Biſhop of London, with the reſt of that order; then for the King and Queen, and the Nobility of this Realm: and laſt for the commons of the ſame, with the ſouls departed, lying in the paines of Purgatory. This ended, the time being late, they began in Pauls to ring to their evening ſong, whereby the Preacher could not be well heard, which cauſed him to make a ſhort end of his Clerkly Sermon.

About this very time a poſt or meſſenger was ſent from the whole Parliament to the Pope, to deſire him to confirme and eſtabliſh the ſale of Abbey lands and Chauntry lands: for the Lords and the Parliament would grant nothing in the Popes behalf, before their purchaſes were fully confirmed.

December 6. The chapter of Pauls abſolved by the Cardinall.

Upon the Thurſday following, being the 6. day of December, and Saint Nicholas day, all the whole Convocation, both Biſhops and other, were ſent for to Lambeth to the Cardinall, who the ſame day forgave them all their periurations, ſchiſmes, and hereſies, and they all there kneeled down and received his abſolution, and after an exhortation and gratulation for their converſion to the Catholike Church made by the Cardinall, they departed.

December 11. The queſt men of M. Throgmorton put to their fine, and delivered.

Upon the Wedneſday, being the 12. of December, five of the eight men which lay in the Fleet, that were of Maſter Throgmortons queſt, were diſcharged, and ſet at liberty upon their fine paid, which was 220. pound a peece; and the other three put up a ſupplication, therein declaring, that their goods did not amount to the ſumme that they were appointed to pay; and ſo upon that declaration paying 40. li. a piece, they were delivered out of priſon upon Saint Thomas day before Chriſtmas, being the 21. of December.

Upon

December 22.

Vpon the Saturday following, being the 22. of December, all the whole Parliament had ſtreight commandement, that none of them ſhould depart into their country this Chriſtmas, nor before the Parliament were ended. Which commandement was wonderfull contrary to their expectations. For aſwel many of the Lords as alſo many of the inferiour ſort had ſent for their horſes, and had them brought hither.

December 28.

Vpon the Friday following, being the 28. of December, and Childermas day, the Prince of Piedmont came to the Court at Weſtminſter.

Anno 1555.

January. M. Roſe with 30. perſons taken at a communion in Bowe Church yard.

January 3.

Vpon Newyeeres day at night following, certaine honeſt men and women of the City, to the number of 30. and a Miniſter with them named Maſter Roſe, were taken as they were in a houſe in Bow Church-yard at the Communion, and the ſame night they were all committed to priſon. And on the Thurſday following, being the 3. day of January, M. Roſe was before the B. of Wincheſter being Lord Chancellor, and from thence the ſame day he was committed to the Tower, after certaine communication had betwéen the Biſhop and him.

The Act of ſupremacy paſſed in the Parliament.

A ſtirre between the Spaniards and Engliſhmen at Weſtminſter.

The ſame day the Act of ſupremacie paſt in the Parliament. Alſo the ſame day at night was a great tumult betwéen Spaniards and Engliſhmen at Weſtminſter, whereof was like to have enſued a great miſchief through a Spaniſh Frier which got into the Church and rung Alarum. The occaſion was about two whores which were in the cloyſter at Weſtminſter with a ſort of Spaniards, whereof whileſt ſome plaid the knaves with them, other ſome did kéepe the entry of the Cloyſter with dags in harneſſe. In the meane time certain of the Deanes men came into the Cloyſter, and the Spaniards diſcharged their dags at them, and hurt ſome of them. By and by the noiſe of this doing came into the ſtréetes, ſo that the whole towne was up almoſt, but never a ſtroke was ſtricken. Notwithſtanding the noiſe of this doing with the Deanes men, and alſo the ringing of the Alarum, made much adoe, and a great number alſo to be ſore affraid.

Ye heard a little before the Councels letter ſent to Biſhop Boner, ſignifying the góod newes of Quéene Mary to be not only conceived, but alſo quick with childe, which was in the moneth of November, the 28. day. Of this childe great talke began at this time to riſe in every mans mouth, with buſie preparation, and much ado, eſpecially amongſt ſuch as ſéemed in England to carry Spaniſh hearts in Engliſh bodies. In number of whom here is not to be forgotten, nor defrauded of his condigne commendation for his worthy affection toward his prince and her iſſue, one ſir Richard Southwell, who being the ſame time in the Parliament houſe, when as the Lords were occupied in other affaires and matters of importance, ſuddenly ſtarting up, for fulneſſe of ioy braſt out in theſe words following: Tuſh my maſters, quoth he, what talk ye of theſe matters? I would have you take ſome order for our maſter that is now comming into the world apace, leſt he find us unprovided, &c. By the which words both of him, and alſo by the foreſaid letters of the Councell, and the common talk abroad, it may appeare what an aſſured opinion was then conceived in mens heads of Q. Mary, to be conceived and quick with child. Inſomuch that at the ſame time, and in the ſame Parliament there was eftſóones a bill exhibited, and an Act made upon the ſame, the words whereof, for the more evidence, I thought góod here to exemplificate, as followeth.

The words of ſir Richard Southwell in the Parliament houſe.

The Words of the Act.

Anno 1555.

Ex ſtat. an. 1. & 2. Phil. & Mar. cap.

ALbeit wee the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, have firme hope and confidence in the goodneſſe of almighty God, that like as hee hath hitherto miraculouſly preſerved the Queenes Majeſtie from many great imminent perils and dangers; even ſo hee will of his infinite goodneſſe give her Highneſſe ſtrength, the rather by our continuall prayers, to paſſe well the danger of deliverance of childe, wherewith it hath pleaſed him (to all our great comforts) to bleſſe her: yet forſomuch as all things of this world bee uncertaine, and having before our eyes the dolorous experience of this inconſtant government, during the time of the reigne of the late king Edward the ſixth, doe plainly ſee the manifold inconveniences, great dangers and perils that may enſue in this whole Realme, if foreſight bee not uſed to prevent all evill chances, if they ſhould happen: For the eſchewing hereof, we the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, for and in conſideration of a moſt ſpeciall truſt and confidence that wee have and repoſe in the Kings Majeſty, for and concerning the politike government, order, and adminiſtration of this Realme in the time of the young yeeres of the iſſue or iſſues of her Majeſties body to bee borne, if it ſhould pleaſe God to call the Queenes Highneſſe out of this preſent life, during the tender yeeres of ſuch iſſue or iſſues (which God forbid) according to ſuch order and manner, as hereafter in this preſent Act his Highneſſe moſt gracious pleaſure is, ſhould bee declared and ſet forth, have made our humble ſuit by the aſſent of the Queenes Highneſſe, that his majeſtie would vouchſafe to accept and take upon him the rule, order, education, and governement of the ſaid iſſue or iſſues to bee borne, as is aforeſaid: upon which our ſuite, being of his ſaid Majeſty moſt graciouſly accepted, it hath pleaſed his Highneſſe not onely to declare, that like as for the moſt part his Majeſty verily truſteth that Almighty God (who hath hitherto preſerved the Queenes Majeſtie, to give this Realme ſo good an hope of certaine ſucceſſion in the blood Royall of the ſame Realme) will aſſiſt her Highneſſe with his graces and benedictions, to ſee the fruit of her body well brought forth, live and able to governe (whereof neither all this Realme, ne all the world beſides, ſhould or could receive more comfort than his Majeſtie ſhould and would) yet if ſuch chance ſhould happen, his Majeſtie at our humble deſires is pleaſed and contented, not onely to accept and take upon him the cure and charge of the education, rule, order, and governement of ſuch iſſues as of this moſt happy marriage ſhall be borne betweene the Queenes Highneſſe and him; but alſo, during the time of ſuch governement, would by all wayes and meanes, ſtudy, travaile, and imploy himſelfe to advance the weale both publike and private of this Realme and Dominion thereunto belonging, according to the ſaid truſt in his Majeſty repoſed, with no leſſe good will and affection, than if his Highneſſe had beene naturally borne amongſt us. In conſideration whereof, bee it enacted by the King and the Queenes moſt excellent Majeſties, by the aſſent of the Lords ſpirituall and temporall, and the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, and by the authority of the ſame, &c. as it is to be ſéene in the Act more at large ratified and confirmed at the ſame Parliament, to the ſame intent and purpoſe.

The iudgment of the Parliament deceived in Gods bleſſing.

Order taken by Parliament for Q. Maries childe.

Truſt diſappointed.

¶ Thus much out of the Act and Statute I thought to rehearſe, to the intent ẏ Reader may underſtand not ſo much how Parliaments may ſometimes be deceived (as by this child of Q. Mary may appeare) as rather what cauſe we Engliſhmen have to render moſt earneſt thanks unto Almighty God, who ſo mercifully againſt the opinion expectation, and working of our adverſaries, hath helped and delivered us in this caſe, which otherwiſe might have opened ſuch a window to the Spaniards, to have entred and repleniſhed this land, that peradventure by this time Engliſhmen ſhould have enioyed no great quiet in their owne countrey: the Lord therefore make us perpetually mindfull of his benefits, Amen.

Thus we ſee then how man doth purpoſe, but God diſposeth as pleaſeth him. For all this great labour, proviſion, and order taken in the Parliament houſe for their young Maſter long looked for, comming ſo ſurely into the world, in the end appeared neither young Maſter, nor young Miſtreſſe, that any man yet to this day can heare of. Furthermore, as the labour of the Lay-ſort was herein deluded; ſo no leſſe ridiculous it was to behold, what little effect the prayers of the Popes Churchmen had with almighty God, who travailed no leſſe with their Proceſſions, Maſſes and Collects, for the happy deliverance of this young Maſter to come, as here followeth to be ſeene.

The prayers of the Papiſts of what little effect they are with God.

A prayer made by Doctor Weſton Deane of Weſtminſter, daily to be ſaid for the Queenes deliverance.

A prayer for Queen Mary and her childe, turned out of Latine into Engliſh.

O Moſt righteous Lord God, which for the offence of the firſt woman, haſt threatned unto all women a common, ſharpe, and inevitable malediction, and hat injoyned them that they ſhould conceive in ſin, and being conceived, ſhould be ſubject to many and grievous torments; and finally, be delivered with the danger and jeopardy of their lives: We beſeech thee for thine exceeding great goodnes and bottomeleſſe mercy, to mitigate the ſtrictneſſe of that law. Aſſwage thine anger for a while, and cheriſh in the boſome of thy favour and mercy our moſt gracious Queene Mary, being now at the point to be delivered. So help her, that without danger of her life ſhee may overcome the ſorrow, and in due ſeaſon bring forth a child, in body beautifull and comely, in mind noble and valiant. So that afterward ſhe, forgetting the trouble may with joy laud and praiſe the bountifulneſſe of thy mercy, and together with us, praiſe and bleſſe both thee and thy holy Name world without end. This, O Lord, we deſire thee, we beſeech thee and moſt heartily crave of thee. Heare us, O Lord, and grant us our petition: let not the enemies of thy faith, and of thy Church ſay; Where is their God?

A ſolemne prayer made for King Philip and Queene Maries childe, that it may bee a male childe, welfavoured, and witty, &c.

A devout prayer made by the Catholikes for Queen Mary, being great & quick with childe.

O Moſt mighty Lord God, which regardeſt the prayer of the humble, and deſpiſeſt not their requeſt, bow downe from thine high habitation of the heavens, the eyes of thy mercy unto us wretched ſinners, bowing the knees of our hearts, and with many and deep ſighs bewailing our ſins and offences, humbly with eyes intent, and hands diſplayed, praying and beſeeching thee, with the ſhield of thy protection, to defend Mary thy ſervant, and our Queen, who hath none other helper but thee, and whom through thy grace thou haſt willed to be conceived with childe: and at the time of her travaile graciouſly with the help of thy right hand deliver her, and from all danger, with the child in her conceived, mercifully preſerve.

It hath ſeemed good in thy ſight mercifull father, by thy ſervant Mary, to worke theſe wonders, that is to ſay, in her hands to vanquiſh and overthrow the ſtout enemy, and to deliver us thy people out of the hands of “Heretikes, Infidels, enimies to thee, and to the Croſſe of thy beloved Son Jeſus Chriſt, that of thy ſervant thou mighteſt ſpeak in far countries. Therefore for theſe wonderfull workes, which thou doſt to thy ſervants, thou art magnified Lord God for ever, and wee thy people bleſſe thee the God of heaven, which hath wrought upon us this great mercy, and haſt excluded from us the Heretike, the enemy of truth, the perſecutor of thy Church. We know, we know, that we have grievouſly (Lord) ſinned, that we have been deceived by vanity, and that we have forſaken thee our God. Our iniquities be multiplyed on our head, and our ſinnes be increaſed up to heaven: and we our ſelves having offended, and our Princes and our Prieſts, for theſe our ſinnes, have deſerved an hypocrite to our Prince, our ſinnes have deſerved a tyrant to our Governor, that ſhould bring our life to bitterneſſe. We be not worthy to have ſo gentle and mercifull a Queen, ſo godly a Ruler, and finally, ſo vertuous a Prince: at the very beginning of whoſe reigne, a new light as it were of Gods religion ſeemed to us for to ſpring and riſe. The Jews did bleſſe the widow Judith with one voice, ſaying, Thou art the glory of Ieruſalem, thou art the joy of Iſrael, thou art the honour of our people, for that thou haſt loved chaſtity, and thou ſhalt be bleſſed for ever.

“The Papiſts call the Proteſtants Heretikes and enemies to the Croſſe of Chriſt, even as Achab called Elias the diſturber of Iſrael, when he was only the diſturber himſelfe.

Q. Mary compared of the Papiſts to widow Judith.

And we the Engliſh people with one agreeable conſent doe cry: Thou Mary art the glory of England, our joy, the honour of thy people, for that thou haſt embraced chaſtity; thine heart is ſtrengthened, for the hand of our Lord hath comforted thee, and therefore thou ſhalt be bleſſed for ever. But bow down, O moſt mercifull father thine eare, and open thine eyes, and behold our affliction, and our humble confeſſion. Thou knoweſt Lord, that againſt Philip, not by humane, but by thy ordinance our King, & againſt thy ſervant Mary by thy providence our Queen the reſtorers and maintainers of thy Teſtament and of the Faith, and moſt conſtant defenders of thy Church: Thou knoweſt, I ſay, that againſt theſe our two governours, the enemies of thy holy “Teſtament, and of the Church thy ſpouſe, be moſt rancke rebels and ſpitefull murmurers, walking after their luſts, whoſe mouth ſpeaketh words of pride, to the end they may ſet up the kingdome of Heretikes and Schiſmatikes. By the power of their hands they “would change thy promiſes, and deſtroy thine inheritance, and ſtop and ſhut up the mouthes of them that praiſe thee, and extinguiſh the glory of thy Catholike Church and Altar.

Mark how forgetting his prayer, he falleth to the praiſing of Q. Mary.

“The Teſtament ſetteth up only the glory of Chriſt.

“If the changing of Gods promiſes, deſtroying his inheritance, ſtopping the mouths of Gods people, it contentions, warres, and ſchiſmes be tokens of Heretikes, who ſo great Heretikes as the Papiſts?

It is manifeſt and plaine, how many contentions, how many conſpiracies and ſeditions, how great warres, what tumults, how many and how great troubleſome vexations, how many hereſies and ſchiſmes (for theſe be the moſt ready devices, and evident tokens of heretikes) for our ſins doe hang over us, if thy ſervant be taken from this life: for we acknowledge, that our Lord is omnipotent, who hath pitched his dwelling place in the midſt of his people, to the intent to deliver us out of the hands of our enemies. Turne therefore thy countenance unto us, ſhew unto us O Lord thy face. Puniſh us for our ſins according to thy will and pleaſure, only now deliver us. We bowing the knees of our heart beſeech thee, that thou wilt not reſerve unto us puniſhment for ever, and we ſhall praiſe thee all the dayes of our life. Heare our cry, and the prayer of thy people, and open to them the treaſure of thy mercy, thy gracious favour, the ſpring of lively water. Thou that haſt begun, make in the hand of thy ſervant a perfect worke. Suffer not, we pray thee, the "faithleſſe rebels to ſay of thy ſervant and her councellers, that they have deviſed matters which they cannot perform. And grant unto thy ſervant an happy and an eaſie travell. For it is not impoſſible to thy power, nor indecent to thy iuſtice, nor unwonted to thy mercy.

" Cry up louder you prieſts: peradventure your God is aſleep.

It is well known unto us, how marvellouſly thou diddeſt worke in Sarah of the age of 90. yeeres, and in Elizabeth the barren, and alſo far ſtricken in age: for thy counſell is not in the power of men. Thou Lord that art the ſearcher of hearts and thoughts, thou knoweſt that thy ſervant never luſted after man, never gave her ſelfe to wanton company, nor made her ſelf partaker with them that walke in lightneſſe: but ſhe conſented to take an husband with thy feare, and not with her luſt. Thou knoweſt that thy ſervant tooke an husband not for carnall pleaſure, but only for the deſire and love of poſterity, wherein thy Name might be bleſſed for ever and ever. Give therefore unto thy ſervants, Philip our King, and Mary our Queene, a male iſſue which may ſit in the ſeat of thy kingdome. Give unto our Queen thy ſervant, a little infant in faſhion and bodie comely and beautifull, in pregnant wit notable and excellent.

The Lord gave a promiſe to Sarah and Elizabeth: ſo did he not to Q. Mary.

Grant the ſame to be in obedience like "Abraham, in hoſpitality like Lot, in chaſtity and brotherly love like Joſeph, in meekneſſe and mildneſſe like Moſes, in ſtrength and valour like Sampſon. Let him be found faithfull as David after thy heart. Let him be wiſe among Kings as the moſt wiſe Salomon. Let him bee like Job, a ſimple and an upright man, fearing God, and eſchewing evill. Let him finally bee garniſhed with the comelines of all vertuous conditions, and in the ſame let him waxe old and live, that he may ſee his childrens children to the third and fourth generation. And give unto our Soveraign Lord and Lady, King Philip and Queene Mary, thy bleſſings and long life upon earth. And grant, that of them may come Kings and Queenes, which may ſtedfaſtly continue in faith, love, and holineſſe. And bleſſed be their ſeed of our God, that all nations may know, thou art only God in all the earth, which art bleſſed for ever and ever, Amen.

" It is not beſt ſuch one to be granted unto you, for being like Abraham, Joſeph, Moſes, and Salomon, he may chance to ſmell out your corrupt doctrine, and to deteſt your bloody tyranny, &c.

Another prayer for Queene Mary, and her conceived childe.

Another prayer for the ſame.

O Almighty Father, which diddeſt ſanctifie the bleſſed Virgin and Mother Mary in her conception, and in the birth of Chriſt our Saviour thine only Son; alſo by thy omnipotent power didſt ſafely deliver the Prophet Ionas out of the Whales belly: Defend O Lord, we beſeech thee, thy ſervant Mary our Queene, with childe conceived, and ſo viſit her in and with thy godly gift of health, that not only the childe thy creature, within her contained, may joyfully come from her into this world, and receive the bleſſed Sacraments of Baptiſme and Confirmation, enjoying therewith daily increaſe of all princely and gracious gifts both of body and ſoul, but that alſo ſhe the mother, through thy ſpeciall grace and mercy, may in time of her travell avoide all exceſſive dolour and paine, and abide perfect and ſure from all perill and danger of death, with long and proſperous life, through Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

Anno 1555. January 10.

It followeth now further in proceſſe of the ſtory, that upon the Tueſday, being the 10. of January, nineteene of the lower houſe of the Parliament with the Speaker, came to the Whitehall to the King, and offered him the governement of the Realm and of the Iſſue, if the Queen ſhould faile, which was confirmed by Act of Parliament within ten dayes after.

January 26. The Popes ſupremacy eſtabliſhed by Parliament.

Upon Wedneſday following, being the 26 of January, the Parliament was cleane diſſolved. In this Parliament amongſt other tidings, the Biſhop of Rome was eſtabliſhed, and all ſuch laws as were made againſt him ſince the twentieth yeer of King Henry the eighth, were repealed, and alſo Cardinall Poole, Biſhop Pates, Lilly, and other were reſtored to their blood. Alſo there was an Act made for ſpeaking of words; that whoſoever ſhould ſpeake any thing againſt the King or Queene, or that might move any ſedition or rebellion, at the firſt time to have one of his eares cut off, or to forfeit an hundred markes; and at the ſecond time to have both his eares cut off, or elſe to forfeit an hundred pound, and whoſoever ſhould write, cipher, or print any of the premiſſes, to have their right hand cut off.

Matters concluded in the Parliament.

Three ſtatutes againſt Heretikes revived.

Alſo in this Parliament three ſtatutes were revived for triall of hereſis: one made in the fifth yeere of Richard the ſecond; another in the ſecond yeer of Henry the fourth; and the third in the ſecond yeer of Henry the fifth. Alſo the doing of M. Roſe, and the other that were with him, was communed of in this Parliament, and upon that occaſion an Act was made, that certaine evill praiers ſhould bee treaſon againſt the Queenes Highneſſe. The prayers of theſe men were thus; God turne the heart of Q. Mary from Idolatrie, or elſe ſhorten her daies. Whereof read the Statute, An. 1. &. 2. Reg. Phil. & Mar. cap. 9

As touching the taking of Maſter Roſe and his fellowes, word was brought thereof to Maſter Hooper being then in the Fleet. Whereupon the ſaid M. Hooper ſendeth anſwer again, with a letter alſo of conſolation ſent to the ſaid priſoners; the copy whereof I thought here not to overpaſſe.

The anſwer of Maſter Hooper to a letter ſent unto him concerning certaine priſoners taken in Bowe Church-yard.

M. Hoopers anſwer to a certaine letter ſent unto him.

THe grace of God be with you, Amen. I perceive by your letter, how that upon New-yeeres day at night there were taken a godly company of Chriſtians, whileſt they were praying. I do rejoyce in that men can be ſo well occupied in this perillous time, and flee unto God for remedy by prayer, as well for their own lacks and neceſſities, as alſo charitably to pray for them that perſecute them. So doth the word of God command all men to pray charitably for them that hate them, and not to revile any Magiſtrate with words, or to meane him evill by force or violence. They alſo may rejoyce that in well doing they were taken to the priſon. Wherefore I have thought it good to ſend them this little writing of conſolation; praying God to ſend them patience, charity, and conſtancy in the truth of his moſt holy word. Thus fare you well, and pray God to ſend his true word into this realm again amongſt us, which the ungodly Biſhops have now baniſhed, Ian. 4. an. 1555.

A letter of conſolation ſent from Maſter Hooper to the godly brethren taken in Bowe Church-yard in prayer, and laid in the Counter in Breadſtreet.

A letter of M. Hooper full of moſt heavenly conſolation.

THe grace, favour, conſolation, and aide of the holy Ghoſt, be with you now and ever. So be it.

Dearly

Dearely beloved in the Lord, ever ſince your impriſonment I have beene marvellouſly moved with great affections and paſſions, as well of mirth and gladneſſe, as of heavineſſe and ſorrow. Of gladneſſe in this, that I perceived how ye be bent and given to prayer and invocation of Gods helpe in theſe darke and wicked proceedings of men againſt Gods glory: I have beene ſorry to perceive the malice and wickedneſſe of men to be ſo cruell, divelliſh, and tyrannicall, to perſecute the people of God for ſerving of God, ſaying and hearing of the holy Pſalmes, and the word of eternall life. Theſe cruell doings do declare, that the Papiſts Church is more bloody and tyrannicall, than ever was the ſword of the Ethnicks and Gentiles.

Of this perſeution read be-ore.

When I heard of your taking, and what yee were doing, wherefore, and by whom ye were taken, I remembred how the Chriſtians in the Primitive Church were uſed by the crueltie of unchriſtned Heathens, in the time of Traiane the Emperour, about 77. yeeres after Chriſts aſcenſion into heaven: and how the Chriſtians were perſecuted very ſore, as though they had beene traitors and movers of ſedition. Whereupon the gentle Emperor Traiane required to know the true cauſe of Chriſtian mens trouble. A great learned man called Plinius, wrote unto him, and ſaid, it was becauſe the Chriſtians ſaid certaine Pſalmes before day unto one called Chriſt, whom they worſhipped for God. When Traiane the Emperour underſtood it was for nothing but for conſcience and religion, hee cauſed by his commandements every where, that no man ſhould bee perſecuted for ſerving of God. But the Pope and his Church hath caſt you into priſon, being taken even doing the worke of God, and one of the excellenteſt workes that is required of Chriſtian men: that is to wit, whiles ye were in prayer, and not in ſuch wicked and ſuperſtitious prayers as the Papiſts uſe, but in the ſame prayer that Chriſt hath taught you to pray. And in his name only ye gave God thankes for that ye have received, and for his ſake yee asked for ſuch things as yee want. O glad may ye be that ever ye were born, to be apprehended whileſt ye were ſo vertuouſly occupied. Bleſſed be they that ſuffer for righteouſneſſe ſake. For if God had ſuffered them that tooke your bodies, then to have taken your life alſo, now had you beene following the Lamb in perpetual ioyes, away from the company and aſſembly of wicked men. But the Lord would not have you ſuddenly ſo to depart, but reſerveth you, glorioully to ſpeake and maintain his truth to the world.

The Pope
orſe than raianus the eathen Em-
erour.

Be ye not carefull what ye ſhall ſay; for God will goe out and in with you, and will be preſent in your hearts, and in your months to ſpeake his wiſdome, although it ſeemeth fooliſhneſſe to the world. He that hath begun this good worke in you, continue you in the ſame unto the end: and pray unto him that ye may feare him only, that hath power to kill both body and ſoule, and to caſt them into hell fire. Be of good comfort. All the haires of your head are numbred, & there is not one of them can periſh, except your heavenly Father ſuffer it to periſh. Now ye be in the field, and placed in the fore-front of Chriſts battel. Doubtleſſe it is a ſingular favour of God and a ſpeciall love of him towards you, to give you this foreward and preheminence, as a ſigne that he truſteth you before others of his people. Wherefore (deare brethren and ſiſters) continually fight this fight of the Lord: Your cauſe is moſt iuſt and godly, ye ſtand for the true Chriſt (who is after the fleſh in heaven) and for his true religion and honour, which is amply, fully, ſufficiently, and abundantly conteined in the holy Teſtament, ſealed with Chriſts owne blood, How much ye be bound to God who puts you in truſt with ſo holy and iuſt a cauſe?

Mat. 10.

The firſt onſet
f this perſecuon given in ow Church-
ard.

Remember what lookers on you have to ſee and behold you in your fight, God and all his Angels, who be ready alway to take you up into heaven, if yee bee ſlaine in his ſight. Alſo you have ſtanding at your backes all the multitude of the faithfull, who ſhall take courage, ſtrength, and deſire to follow ſuch noble and valiant Chriſtians as you be. Bee not affraid of your adverſaries: for he that is in you, is ſtronger than he that is in them, Shrink not although it be paine to you, your paines bee not now ſo great, as hereafter your ioyes ſhall be. Reade the comfortable Chapters to the Romanes 8. 10. 15, Hebrewes 11. 12. And upon your knees thank God that ever ye were accounted worthy to ſuffer any thing for his Names ſake. Reade the ſecond Chapter of S. Lukes Goſpell, and there you ſhall ſee how the Shepheards that watched upon their ſheep all night, as ſoone as they heard that Chriſt was born at Bethlem, by and by went to ſee him. They did not reaſon nor debate with themſelves, who ſhould keep the wolfe from the ſheep in the meane time, but did as they were commanded, and committed their ſheepe unto him, whoſe pleaſure they obeyed. So let us doe now wee bee called, commit all other things to him that calleth us. He will take heed that all things ſhall be well. He will helpe the huſband, he will comfort the wife, he will guide the ſervants, he will keep the houſe, he will preſerve the goods; yea, rather than it ſhould be undone, he will waſh the diſhes, and rocke the cradle. Caſt therefore all your care upon God for he careth for you.

1 Iohn 4.

Comfort taken out of the Scriptures.

True obedience putteth no doubts.

All carefulnes to be caſt upon the Lord.

Beſides this, you may perceive by your impriſonment, that your adverſaries weapons againſt you be nothing but fleſh, blood, and tyranny. For if they were able, they would maintaine their wicked religion by Gods word: but for lack of that, they would violently compell ſuch as they cannot by holy Scripture perſwade, becauſe the holy word of God, and all Chriſts doings be contrary unto them. I pray you, pray for me, and I will pray for you. And although we be aſſunder after the world, yet in Chriſt (I truſt) for ever ioyning in the ſpirit, and ſo ſhall meet in the palace of the heavenly ioyes, after this ſhort and tranſitory life is ended. Gods peace be with you, Amen. The 14. of Ianuary, 1555.

All the ſtrength of the Popes religion ſtandeth in outward force.

Upon the Friday following, being the 18. of Ianuary, all the Councell went unto the Tower, and there the ſame day diſcharged and ſet at liberty all the priſoners of the Tower, or the moſt part of them; namely, the late Duke of Northumberlands ſons, Ambroſe, Robert, and Henry, ſir Andrew Dudley, ſir Iohn Rogers, ſir Iames Crofts, ſir Nicholas Throgmorton, ſir Nicholas Arnall, ſir George Harper, ſir Edward Warner, ſir William Sentlow, ſir Gawen Carew, Maſter Gibbes, Cuthbert Vaugham, with many other.

Ianuary 18 Gentlemen delivered out of the Tower by the Queens pardon.

Upon the Tueſday following, being the 22. of Ianuary, all the Preachers that were in priſon were called before the biſhop of Wincheſter Lord Chancellor, and certaine other, at the Biſhops houſe at S. Mary Overies. From whence (after communication, being asked whether they would convert and enioy the Queens pardon, or els ſtand to that they had taught; they all anſwered, that they would ſtand to that they had taught) they were committed to ſtreighter priſon than before they were, with charge that none ſhould ſpeak with them.

Ianuary 22. The preachers called before the B. of Wincheſter at St. Mary Overies.

Amongſt the which number of priſoners, one

James George dyed in priſon, and was buried in the fields.

James George the ſame time died in priſon, being there in bands for religion and righteouſneſſe ſaks: who therefore was exempted to bee buried in the Popiſh Churchyard, and was buried in the field.

January 23.

Upon the Wedneſday following, being the 23. of January, all the biſhops with all the reſt of the Convocation houſe were before the cardinal at Lambeth, where he willed them to repaire every man where his cure and charge lay, exhorting them to intreat the people and their flocke with all gentleneſſe, and to endeavour themſelves to winne the people rather by gentleneſſe than by extremity and rigour, and ſo let them depart.

January 25. Generall Proceſſion for ioy of the Realms converſion.

Upon the Fri day following, being the 25. of January, and the day of the converſion of Saint Paul, there was a generall and ſolemne Proceſſion thorow London, to give God thankes for their converſion to the Catholike Church: wherein (to ſet out their glorious pomp) there were foureſcore and ten Croſſes, 160. Prieſts and Clerks, who had every one of them Copes upon their backs, ſinging very luſtily. There followed alſo for the better eſtimation of the ſight, eight Biſhops, and laſt of all came Boner the biſhop of London, carrying the Popiſh Pixe under a Canopie.

Beſides, there was alſo preſent the Maior, Aldermen, and all the Livery of every occupation. Moreover, the King alſo himſelfe, and the Cardinall came to Pauls Church the ſame day. From whence after Maſſe they returned to Weſtminſter again. As the King was entred yͤ Church, at the ſteps going up to the Quire, all the Gentlemen that of late were ſet at liberty out of the Tower, kneeled before the King, and offered unto him themſelvs and their ſervices.

After the Proceſſion there was alſo commandement given to make Bonefires at night. Whereupon did riſe among the people a doubtfull talke why all this was done. Some ſaid it was that the Queene, being (as they ſaid) with child, might have a ſafe delivery. Others thought that it was for ioy that the Realm was ioyned again to the Sea of Rome, which opinion, of both, ſeemed moſt true.

January 28 Commiſſion from the Cardinal to ſit upon the perſecuted Preachers for religion.

Upon the Munday following, being the 28. of January, the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and the other biſhops had commiſſion from the Cardinal to ſit upon, and order, according to the lawes, all ſuch Preachers and Heretikes (as they termed them) as were in priſon, and according to this Commiſſion, the ſame day the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the other Biſhops, with certaine of the Councell, ſate in S. Mary Overies Church, and called before them theſe three, M. Hooper, M. Rogers, and Maſter Cardmaker, who were brought thither by the Sheriffs; from whence after communication they were committed to priſon till the next day, but Cardmaker this day ſubmitted himſelf unto them.

January 29. M. Hooper and M. Rogers condemned.

Upon the Tueſday, being the 29. of January, Hooper, Rogers, Doctor Taylor, and Bradford were brought before them, where ſentence of excommunication and iudgement Eccleſiaſticall was pronounced upon M. Hooper and M. Rogers, by the biſhop of Wincheſter who ſate as iudge in Caiphas ſeat, who drave them out of the Church, according to their law and order. Doctor Taylor and Bradford were committed to priſon till the next day.

January 30. Doctor Ferrar D. Taylor and M. Saunders condemned.

Upon the Wedneſday, being the 30. of January, Doctor Taylor, Doctor Crome, M. Bradford, M. Saunders, and Doctor Ferrar, ſometime biſhop of S. Davids, were before the ſaid Biſhops, where three of them, that is to ſay, Doctor Taylor, maſter Saunders, and M. Bradford were likewiſe excommunicated, and ſentence pronounced upon them, and ſo committed to the Sheriffes. D. Crome deſired two moneths reſpite, and it was granted him; and M. Ferrar was againe committed to priſon till another time. All theſe men ſhewed themſelves to bee learned, as indeed they were no leſſe: but what availeth either learning, reaſon, or truth it ſelfe, where will beareth rule?

After the examination and condemnation of theſe good men and Preachers above recited, Commiſſions and Inquiſitors were ſent abroad likewiſe into all parts of the Realm: by reaſon whereof, a great number of moſt godly and true Chriſtians (out of all the quarters of the Realm, but eſpecially Kent, Eſſex, Northfolk, and Suffolke) were aprehended, brought up to London, caſt into priſon, and afterward (moſt of them) either conſumed cruelly by fire, or elſe through evill handling died in the priſons, and were buried on dung-hils abroad in the fields, or in ſome backſide of the priſon. Of all which matters, concerning the tragicall handling of theſe bleſſed Martyrs and Witneſſes of Jeſus Chriſt, of all the bloody perſecution of this time, now followeth (the Lord ſo granting) ſeverally and more particularly in this next book in order to be declared: after that I ſhal firſt recite a generall ſupplication, given up in the name of yͤ Preachers aforeſaid lying in priſon, unto the King & Queene during the time of the Parliament, as followeth.

Vnto the King and Queenes moſt excellent Majeſties, and to their moſt honourable and high Court of Parliament.

A ſupplication of the perſecuted Preachers to the King and Queene.

IN moſt humble and lamentable wiſe cōplaine unto your Majeſties, and to your high Court of Parliament, your poore deſolate and obedient ſubjects, H. F. T. B. P. R. S, &c. That whereas your ſaid ſubjects, living under the Lawes of God, and of this Realme in the dayes of the late moſt noble King Edward the ſixth, did in all things ſhew themſelves true, faithfull, and diligent ſubjects, according to their vocation, as well in the ſincere miniſtring of Gods moſt holy word, as in due obedience to the higher powers, and in the daily practice of ſuch vertues and good demeanour, as the lawes of God at all times, and the ſtatutes of the Realme did then allow: Your ſaid ſubjects nevertheleſſe, contrary to all lawes of juſtice, equity, and right, are in very extreme manner, not only caſt into priſon (where they have remained now theſe 15. or 16. moneths) but their livings alſo, their houſes and poſſeſſions, their goods and books taken from them, and they ſlandered to be moſt hainous Heretikes, their enemies themſelves being both witneſſes, accuſers, and Iudges, belying, ſlandering, and miſ-reporting your ſaid ſubjects at their pleaſure, whereas your ſaid ſubjects, being ſtreightly kept in priſon, cannot yet be ſuffered to come forth, and make anſwer accordingly.

The long impriſonment of the Chriſtian Preachers. Unorderly proceeding of the adverſaries againſt Gods people.

In conſideration whereof, it may pleaſe your moſt excellent Majeſties, and this your high Court of Parliament, graciouſly to tender the preſent calamity of your ſaid poore ſubjects, and to call them before your preſence, granting them liberty, either by mouth or writing in the plaine Engliſh tongue, to anſwer before you, or before indifferent arbiters to be appointed by your Majeſties, unto ſuch articles of controverſie in Religion as their ſaid adverſaries have already condemned them of, as of hainous hereſies: Provided, that all things may be done with ſuch moderation and quiet behaviour, as becommeth ſubjects and children of peace, and that your ſaid ſubjects may have the free uſe of all their owne bookes, and conference together among themſelves.

Request of the Preachers to ſtand to the triall of their doctrine before indifferent Judges.

Anno 1555.

Which thing being granted, your ſaid ſubjects doubt not but it ſhall plainly appeare, that your ſaid ſubjects are true and faithfull Chriſtians, and neither Heretikes, neither teachers of hereſie, nor cut off from the true Catholike univerſall Church of Chriſt: yea, that rather their adverſaries themſelves be unto your Majeſties as were the charmers of Egypt to Pharaoh, Zedechias and his adherents unto the King of Iſrael, and Barieſu to the Proconſull Sergius Paulus. And if your ſaid ſubjects be not able by the teſtimonie of Chriſt, his Prophets, Apoſtles, and godly Fathers of his Church, to prove, that the doctrine of the Church, Homilies, and Service taught and ſet forth in the time of our late moſt godly Prince and King, Edward the ſixth, is the true doctrine of Chriſts Catholike Church, and moſt agreeable to the Articles of the Chriſtian faith; your ſaid ſubjects offer themſelves then to to the moſt heavie puniſhment, that it ſhall pleaſe your Majeſtie to appoint.

Acts 13.

Wherefore for the tender mercy of God in Chriſt (which you looke for at the day of Iudgement) your ſaid poore ſubjects in bonds moſt humbly beſeech your moſt excellent Majeſties, and this your high Court of Parliament, benignely and graciouſly to heare and grant this their petition, tending ſo greatly to the glory of God, to the edifying of his Church, to the honour of your Majeſties, to the commendation and maintenance of juſtice, right, and equity both before God and man. And your ſaid ſubjects, according to their bounden dutie, ſhall not ceaſe to pray unto Almighty God for the gracious preſervation of your moſt excellent Majeſties long to endure.

The end of the tenth Booke.

HERE BEGINNETH THE Eleventh Booke, wherein is diſcourſed the bloody murthering of Gods Saints, with the particular Proceſſes and Names of ſuch good Martyrs, both Men and Women, as in this time of Queene Mary were put to death.

The Story, Life, and Martyrdome of M. John Rogers.

Febꝛuary 4. The life and ſtoꝛy of M. John Rogers.

The fourth day of Febꝛuary ſuffered the conſtant Martyꝛ of God M. John Rogers, concerning whoſe life, examinations, and ſuffering, here followeth in oꝛder ſet foꝛth. And firſt touching his life and bꝛinging up.

M. Rogers Chapleine to the Merchant Adventurers at Antwerpe.

John Rogers bꝛought up in the Univerſity of Cambꝛidge, where he pꝛofitably travailed in good learning, at the length was choſen and called by the Merchants Adventurers to bee their Chapleine at Antwerpe in Bꝛabant, whom he ſerved to their good contentation many yeeres. It chanced him there to fall in company with that woꝛthy Servant and Martyꝛ of God William Tindall, and with Miles Coverdale, which both foꝛ the hatred they bare to Popiſh ſuperſtition and Idolatry, and love to true Religion, had foꝛſaken their native Countrey. In conferring with them the Scriptures hee came to great knowledge in the Goſpell of God, inſomuch that he caſt off the heavie yoke of Popery, perceiving it to be impure and filthy Idolatry, and ioyned himſelf with them two in that painfull and moſt pꝛofitable labour of tranſlating the Bible into the Engliſh tongue, which is intituled, The tranſlation of Thomas Matthew. He knowing by the Scriptures, that unlawfull vowes may unlawfully be bꝛoken, and that matrimony is both honeſt and honourable among all men, ioyned himſelfe in lawfull matrimonie, and ſo went to Wittenberge in Saxony, where hee with much ſoberneſſe of living did not onely greatly increaſe in all good and godly learning, but alſo ſo much pꝛofited in the knowledge of the Dutch tongue, that the charge of a congregation was oꝛderly committed to his cure.

M. Rogers bꝛought to the Goſpel by M. W. Tindall, & M. Coverdale.

Of M. Rogers doing in this tranſlation reade afoꝛe.

M. Rogers goeth to Wittenberge.

In which miniſtry he diligently and faithfully ſerved many yeeres, untill ſuch time as it pleaſed God, by the faithfull travell of his choſen and deare ſervant King Edward the ſixth, utterly to baniſh all Popery foꝛth of England, and to receive in true Religion, ſetting Gods Goſpell at liberty. He then being oꝛderly called, having both a conſcience and a ready good will to help foꝛward the woꝛke of the Loꝛd in his native countrey, left ſuch honeſt and certaine conditions as hee had in Saxony, and came into England to pꝛeach the Goſpel, without certainty of any condition. In which office, after he had a ſpace diligently and faithfully travailed, Nicholas Ridley, then Biſhop of London, gave him a Pꝛebend in the Cathedꝛall Church of Pauls; and the Deane and the Chapter choſe him to be the Reader of the Divinity leſſon there, wherein he diligently travelled, untill ſuch time as Q. Mary obtaining the Crowne, baniſhed the Goſpell and true Religion, and bꝛought in the Antichꝛiſt of Rome, with his Idolatry and Superſtition.

M. Rogers returneth from Saxony into England in King Edwards time.

M. Rogers reader and Pꝛebendary in Pauls.

After the Queen was come to the Tower of London, he being oꝛderly called thereunto, made a godly and vehement Sermon at Pauls Croſſe, confirming ſuch true doctrine as he and other had there taught in King Edwards daies, exhoꝛting the people conſtantly to remaine in the ſame, and to beware of all peſtilent Popery, Idolatry, and Superſtition. The Councel being then overmatched with popiſh and bloodie Biſhops, called him to account foꝛ his Sermon: To whom he made a ſtout, wittie and godly anſwer, and yet in ſuch ſoꝛt handled himſelfe, that at that time hee was cleerly diſmiſſed. But after that Pꝛoclamation was ſet foꝛth by the Queene to pꝛohibite true pꝛeaching, hee was called againe befoꝛe the Councell; foꝛ the Biſhops thirſted after his blood. The Councell quarrelled with him concerning his doctrine, & in concluſion commanded him as pꝛiſoner to keep his own houſe, and ſo he did: although by

M. Rogers called to account foꝛ his ſermon at Pauls croſſe.

M. Rogers againe called befoꝛe the Councell, and commanded to keep his houſe.

he might eaſily have eſcaped their cruell hands, and many things there were which might have moved him thereunto. He did ſée the recovery of Religion in England, for that preſent deſperate: he knew he could not want a living in Germany, and he could not forget his wife and ten children, and to ſéeke meanes to ſuccour them. But all theſe things ſet apart, after he was called to anſwer in Chriſts cauſe, he would not depart, but ſtoutly ſtood in defence of the ſame, and for the tryall of that truth, was content to hazzard his life.

M. Rogers ſent to Newgate.

Thus he remained in his own houſe as priſoner a long time, till at the length, through the uncharitable procurement of Boner Biſhop of London, who could not abide ſuch honeſt neighbours to dwell by him, he was removed from his own houſe to the priſon called Newgate, where he was lodged among théeves and murderers for a great ſpace: during which time, what buſineſſe he had with the adverſaries of Chriſt, all is not known, neither yet any certainty of his examinations, further then he himſelf did leave in writing, which God would not to be loſt, but to remaine for a perpetuall teſtimony in the cauſe of Gods truth, as here followeth recorded and teſtified by his owne writing.

The examination and anſwer of Iohn Rogers made to the Lord Chancellor, and to the reſt of the Councell, the 22. of Ianuary, Anno 1555.

The Lord Chancellor.

Examination and anſwer of M. Iohn Rogers.

First the Lord Chancellor ſaid unto me thus: Sir, ye have heard the ſtate of the Realme in which it ſtandeth now.

Rogers. No, my Lord, I have béen kept in cloſe priſon; and except there have béen ſome generall thing ſaid at the table when I was at dinner or ſupper, I have heard nothing; and there have I heard nothing whereupon any ſpeciall thing might be grounded.

L. Chan. Then ſaid the Lord Chancellor; Generall things, generall things, mockingly: Yee have heard of my Lord Cardinals comming, and that the Parliament hath received his bleſſing, not one reſiſting unto it, but one man which did ſpeak againſt it. Such an unity, and ſuch a miracle hath not béen ſéene. And all they, of which there are eight ſcore in one houſe, ſaid one that was by (whoſe name I know not) have with one aſſent and " conſent received pardon of their offences, for the ſchiſme that wee have had in England, in refuſing the holy father of Rome to be head of the Catholike Church. How ſay ye? are ye content to unite and knit your ſelf to the faith of the Catholike Church with us, in the ſtate in which it is now in England? Will ye doe that?

" Full ſore againſt their wils, if they could otherwiſe have choſen.

Rog. The Catholike Church I never did nor will diſſent from.

L. Chan. Nay, but I ſpeak of the ſtate of the Catholike Church, in that wiſe in which we ſtand now in England, having received the Pope to be ſupreme head.

Rog. I know none other head but Chriſt of his Catholike Church, neither will I acknowledge the Biſhop of Rome to have any more authority than any other Biſhop hath by the word of God, and by the Doctrine of the old and pure Catholike Church 400. yéeres after Chriſt.

No head of the Catholike Church but Chriſt.

L. Chan. Why didſt thou then acknowledge king Henry the eighth to be ſupreme head of the Church, if Chriſt be the only head?

The ſupremacy of K. Henry the eighth, how it is to be taken

Rog. I never granted him to have any ſupremacy in ſpirituall things, as are the forgiveneſſe of ſins, giving of the holy Ghoſt, authority to be a Iudge above the word of God.

Anno 1555.

Tonſtal biſhop of Duriſme. N. biſhop of Worceſter.

L. Chan. " Yea, ſaid he, and Tonſtall Biſhop of Duriſme, and N. Biſhop of Worceſter, if thou hadſt ſaid ſo in his dayes (and they nodded the head at me with a laughter) thou hadſt not béen alive now.

Rog. Which thing I denied, & would have told how he was ſaid and meant to be ſupreme head. But they looked and laughed one upon another, and made ſuch a buſines, that I was conſtrained to let it paſſe. There lyeth alſo no great weight thereupon: for all the world knoweth what the meaning was. The L. Chancellor alſo ſaid to the L. William Haward, that there was no inconvenience therein, to have Chriſt to be ſupreme head and the B. of Rome alſo: and when I was ready to have anſwered that there could not bee two heads of one Church, and have more plainly declared the vanity of that his reaſon, the L. Chancellor ſaid; What ſaiſt thou? make us a direct anſwer whether thou wilt bee one of this Catholike Church or not, with us in that ſtate in which we are now?

The meaning why K. Henry was tituled ſupreme head.

Rog. My Lord, without fail I cannot believe, that ye your ſelves do think in your hearts that he is ſupreme head in forgiving of ſin, &c. (as is before ſaid) ſéeing you, and all the biſhops of the realme have now 20. yéeres long preached, and ſome of you alſo written to the contrary, and the Parliament hath ſo long agone condeſcended unto it. And there he interrupted me thus.

The biſhops contrary to their former doings and writings.

L. Chan. Tuſh, that Parliament was with moſt great cruelty conſtrained to aboliſh and put away the primacy from the Biſhop of Rome.

Rog. With cruelty? why then I perceive that you take a wrong way with cruelty to perſwade mens conſciences. For it ſhould appeare by your doings now, that the cruelty then uſed hath not perſwaded your conſciences. How would you then have our conſciences perſwaded with crueltie?

L. Chan. I talk to thée of no cruelty, but that they were ſo often and ſo cruelly called upon in that Parliament, to let the Act go forward; yea, and even with force driven thereunto, whereas in this Parliament it was ſo uniformely received, as is aforeſaid.

Rog. Here my Lord Paget told mee more plainly, what my Lord Chancellor meant. Unto whom I anſwered: My Lord, what will ye conclude thereby; that the firſt Parliament was of leſſe authority, becauſe but few condeſcended unto it? and this laſt Parliament of great authority, becauſe more condeſcended unto it? It goeth not my Lord, by the more or leſſer part, but by the wiſer, truer, and godlier part: and I would have ſaid more, but the Lord Chancellor interrupted me with his queſtion, willing mee once again to anſwer him. For, ſaid he, we have moe to ſpeake with than thou, which muſt come in after thee. And ſo there were indéed ten perſons mo out of Newgate, beſides two that were not called. Of which ten, one was a Citizen of London, which granted unto them, & nine were contrary: which all came to priſon again, and refuſed the Cardinals bleſſing, and the authority of his holy fathers Church, ſaving that one of theſe nine was not aſked the queſtion, otherwiſe than thus, whether he would be an honeſt man as his father was before him, and he anſwering yea, he was ſo diſcharged by the friendſhip of my L. William Haward, as I have underſtood. He bade me tell him what I would doe; whether I would enter into the one Church with the whole Realme as it is now or not? No ſaid I, I will firſt ſée it proved by the ſcriptures. Let me have pen, ink, and books, &c. And I ſhall take upon me Truth goeth not by number nor by the greater part.

10. Priſoners out of Newgate to be convented before Gardiner. Nine of theſe priſoners refuſed the Popes authority, the tenth yeelded.

plainly

Anno 1555.

plainly to ſet out the matter,ſo that the contrary ſhall be proved to be true, and let any man that will confer with me by writing.

Ste. Gardiner refuſed to have the truth to be tried by learning.

L.Chan. Nay,that ſhall not be permitted thee: Thou ſhal never have ſo much proferred thee as thou haſt now,if thou refuſe it and will not now condeſcend and agree to the Catholike Church. Here are two things, Mercy and Iuſtice: If thou refuſe the Queenes mercy now, then ſhalt thou have iuſtice miniſtred unto thee.

The Biſhops neither will ſtand by their aſſertion, nor yet will ſuffer other men ſo to do.

Rog. I never offended, nor was diſobedient unto her Grace, and yet I will not refuſe her mercy. But if this ſhall be denied me to confer by writing,and to try out the truth,then it is not well,but too far out of the way. Ye your ſelves (all the biſhops of the Realm) brought me to the knowledge of the pretended primacy of the Biſhop of Rome,when I was a young man twenty yeeres paſt: and will ye now without collation have me to ſay and do the contrary? I cannot be ſo perſwaded.

A fair pretence to excuſe your ignorance.

L.Chan. If thou wilt not receive the Biſhop of Rome to bee ſupreme head of the Catholike Church, then thou ſhalt never have her mercy thou mayeſt be ſure. And as touching conferring and tryall, I am forbidden by the Scriptures to uſe any conferring and tryall with thee. For S.Paul teacheth me, that I ſhould ſhun and eſchew an Heretike after one or two monitions, knowing that ſuch an one is overthrown, and is faulty, inſomuch as he is condemned by his own iudgement.

Rog. My Lord, I deny that I am an Heretike: prove yee that firſt, and then alledge the foreſaid text. But ſtill the L. Chancellor played on one ſtring, ſaying.

Gardiner will compell to that which he cannot teach to be true.

L.Chan. If thou wilt enter into one Church with us, &c. tell us that, or elſe thou ſhalt never have ſo much proferred thee againe as thou haſt now.

Rog. I will find it firſt in the Scripture, and ſee it tried thereby, before I receive him to be ſupreme head.

Wor. Why? Do ye not know what is in your Creed: Credo Eccleſiam ſanctam Catholicam, I believe the holy Catholike Church.

The Popes Church proved not to be Catholike.

Rog. I find not the Biſhop of Rome there. For (Catholike) ſignifieth not the Romiſh Church: It ſignifieth the conſent of all true teaching Churches of all times, and all ages. But how ſhould the Biſhop of Romes Church be one of them,which teacheth ſo many doctrines that are plainly and directly againſt the word of God? Can that Biſhop be the true head of the Catholike Church that doth ſo? that is not poſſible.

L.Chan. Shew me one of them, one, let mee heare one.

Rog. I remembred my ſelfe, that amongſt ſo many I were beſt to ſhew one, and ſaid, I will ſhew you one.

L.Chan. Let me heare that, let mee heare that.

Latin Service.

Rog. The Biſhop of Rome and his Church, ſay,read,and ſing, all that they doe in their congregations, in Latine, which is directly and plainly againſt the firſt to the Corinthians, the fourteenth chapter.

L.Chan. I deny that, I deny that that is againſt the word of God. Let me ſee you prove that, how prove you that?

Speaking in a ſtrange tongue againſt Saint Paul.

" Imperfection.

Rog. Thus I began to ſay the text from the beginning of the chapter, Qui loquitur lingua, &c. to ſpeak with tongue,ſaid I, is to ſpeake with a ſtrange tongue, as Latine or Greek, &c. and ſo to ſpeak, is not to ſpeak unto men, but to God. But yee ſpeake in Latine, which is a ſtrange tongue, wherefore ye ſpeake not unto men, but unto God" (meaning God only at the moſt.) This he granted, that they ſpake not unto men, but unto God.

L.Chan. Well,then it is in vain unto men.

Rog. No, not in vain. For one man ſpeaketh in one tongue, and another in another tongue, and all well.

L.Chan. Nay, I will prove then,that he ſpeaketh neither to God nor to man, but unto the winde.

1.Cor. 14. To ſpeake to God only. To ſpeak both to God & man. To ſpeake neither to God nor man,but the winde.

Rog I was willing to have declared how and after what ſort theſe two texts doe agree (for they muſt agree, they be both the ſayings of the holy Ghoſt, ſpoken by the Apoſtle Paul) as to wit, to ſpeak not to men, but unto God, and to ſpeake into the winde: and ſo to have gone forward with the proofe of my matter begun, but here aroſe a noiſe and a confuſion. Then ſaid the L. Chancellor.

L.Chan. To ſpeake unto God, and not unto God, were unpoſſible.

Rog. I will prove them poſſible.

L.Haward. No,ſaid my L.William Haward to my L. Chancellor: now will I beare you witnes that he is out of the way. For he granted firſt, that they which ſpeake in a ſtrange ſpeech ſpeake unto God:and now he ſaith the contrary, that they ſpeak neither to God nor to man.

Rog. I have not granted or ſaid (turning me to my Lord Haward) as you report. I have alledged the one text, and now I am come to the other. They muſt agree, and I can make them to agree. But as for you,you underſtand not the matter.

Secretary Bourne.

L.Haw. I underſtand ſo much, that that is not poſſible. This is a point of Sophiſtry, quoth Secretary Bourne.

A city in Suaven.

L.Chan. Then the Lord Chancellor began to tell the Lord Haward, that when hee was in high Dutchland, they at Hale, which had before prayed and uſed their Service all in Dutch, began then to turn part into Latine,and part into Dutch.

Worceſt. Yea, and at Wittenberge too.

M. Rogers could not be heard to ſpeak.

Rog. Yea (but I could not be heard for the noiſe) in an Univerſity, where men for the moſt part underſtand the Latine, and yet not all in Latine. And I would have told the order, and have gone forward both to have anſwered my Lord,and to have proved the thing that I had taken in hand: but perceiving their talk and noiſe to be too noiſome, I was fain to think this in my heart, ſuffering them in the mean while to talke one of them one thing, and another another. Alas,neither will theſe men heare me if I ſpeake, neither yet will they ſuffer me to write. There is no remedy,but let them alone,and commit the matter to God. Yet I began to go forward, and ſaid, that I would make the texts to agree, and to prove my purpoſe well enough.

L.Chan. No, no, thou canſt prove nothing by the Scripture. The Scripture is dead: it muſt have a lively expoſitor.

Rog. No, the Scripture is alive. But let me goe forward with my purpoſe.

Wor. All Heretikes have alledged the Scriptures for them, and therefore we muſt have a lively expoſitor for them.

Rog. Yea, all Heretikes have alledged the Scriptures for them: but they were confuted by the Scriptures, and by none other expoſitor.

Wor. But they would not confeſſe ẏ they were overcome by the Scriptures, I am ſure of that.

Confuſed talk without order.

Rog. I believe that: and yet were they overcome by them,and in all councels they were diſputed with and overthrown by the Scriptures. And here I would have declared how they ought to proceed in theſe dayes,and ſo have come again to my purpoſe, but it was unpoſſible: for one aſked one thing, another ſaid another, ſo that I was faine to hold my peace, and let them talke. And even when I would have taken hold on my proofe, the Lord Chancellor bade to priſon with me againe; and away, away, ſaid he, we have more to talke withall: if I would not be reformed (ſo he termed it) away, away. Then up I ſtood, for I had kneeled all the while.

Sir Richard Southwell ſpeaketh.

Then ſir Richard Southwell, who ſtood by in a window ſaid to me, Thou wilt not burn in this geare when it commeth to the purpoſe, I know well that.

Rog. Sir, I cannot tell, but I truſt to my Lord God yes, lifting up mine eyes unto heaven.

The Biſhop of Ely ſpeaketh.

B. of Ely. Then my Lord of Ely told me much of the Queens Maieſties pleaſure and meaning and ſet it out with large words, ſaying, that ſhe took them that would not receive the Biſhop of Romes ſupremacy, to be unworthy to have her mercy, &c.

Rogers. I ſaid, I would not refuſe her mercy, and yet I never offended her in all my life: And that I beſought her Grace and all their Honours to be good to me, reſerving my conſcience.

Divers ſpeake at once.

Divers ſpeake at once. No, quoth they then, a great ſort of them, and ſpecially Secretary Bourne, A, married Prieſt, and have not offended the law?

Rogers. I ſaid, I had not broken the Queenes law, nor yet any point of the law of the realme therein. For I married where it was lawfull.

Divers ſpeake at once.
Lawfulneſſe of Prieſts mariage.
M. Rogers brought eight children with him into England.

Divers at once. Where was that, ſaid they? thinking that to be unlawfull in all places.

Rogers. In Dutchland: And if yee had not here in England made an open law that prieſts might have had wives, I would never have come home againe; for I brought a Wife and eight children with mee: which thing yee might be ſure that I would not have done, if the lawes of the Realm had not permitted it before.

Then there was a great noiſe, ſome ſaying that I was come too ſoone with ſuch a ſort: I ſhould finde a ſower comming of it, and ſome one thing, and ſome another. And one ſaid (I could not well perceive who) that there was never a Catholike man or countrey, that ever granted that a Prieſt might have a wife.

Rogers. I ſaid, The Catholike Church never denied mariage to Prieſts, nor yet to any other man; and therewith was I going out of the chamber, the ſergeant which brought me thither having me by the arme.

Wor. Then the Biſhop of Worceſter turned his face towards me, and ſaid that I wiſt not where that Church was or is.

M. Rogers had away to priſon.

Rogers. I ſaid yes, that I could tell where it was, but therewith went the ſergeant with me out of the doore.

This was the very true effect of all that was ſpoken unto me, and of all that I anſwered thereunto.

And here would I gladly make a more perfect anſwer to all the former objections, as alſo a due proofe of that which I had taken in hand: but at this preſent I was informed that I ſhould to morrow come to further anſwer. Wherefore I am compelled to leave out that which I would moſt gladly have done, deſiring here the heartie and unfained helpe of the prayers of all Chriſts true members, the true impes of the true unfained Catholike Church, that the Lord God of all conſolation will now bee my comfort, aide, ſtrength, buckler and ſhield: as alſo of all my brethren that are in the ſame caſe and diſtreſſe, that I and they all may diſpiſe all manner of threats and cruelty, and even the bitter burning fire, and the dreadfull dart of death, and ſtick like true ſouldiers to our deare and loving Captain Chriſt, our only Redeemer and Saviour, and alſo the only true head of the Church, that doth all in us all, which is the very property of an head (and is a thing that all the biſhops of Rome cannot do) and that we do not traiterouſly run out of his tents, or rather out of the plain field from him, in the moſt ieopardy of the battell, but that we may perſevere in the fight (if he wil not otherwiſe deliver us) till we be moſt cruelly ſlain of his enemies. For this I moſt heartily, and at this preſent, with weeping tears moſt inſtantly and earneſtly deſire and beſeech you all to pray: And alſo if I dye, to be good to my poore and moſt honeſt wife, being a poore ſtranger, and all my little ſouls, hers and my children. Whom, with all the whole faithfull and true Catholike congregation of Chriſt, the Lord of life and death ſave, keep, and defend in all the troubles and aſſaults of this vain world, and bring at the laſt to everlaſting ſalvation the true and ſure inheritance of all croſſed Chriſtians, Amen, Amen.

M. Rogers carefull prayer for his wife and children.

The ſecond confeſſion of Iohn Rogers, made, and that ſhould have been made (if it might have been heard) the 28. and 29. day of Ianuary, 1555.

The 2. examination of Maſter Rogers.

FIrſt being aſked again by the Lord Chancellor, whether I would come into one Church with the Biſhops and whole Realme, as now was concluded by Parliament (in the which all the Realme was converted to the Catholike Church of Rome) and ſo receive the mercy before profered me, ariſing againe with the whole Realme out of the ſchiſme and errour in which we had long been, with recantation of my errors: I anſwered, that before I could not tell what his mercy meant, but now I underſtand that it was a mercy of the Antichriſtian Church of Rome, which I utterly refuſed, and that the riſing, which he ſpake of, was a very fall into error and falſe doctrine. Alſo that I had and would be able, by Gods grace, to proove that all the doctrine which I had ever taught was true and catholike, and that by the Scriptures and the authority of the Fathers that lived 400. yeeres after Chriſts death. He anſwered, that ſhould not, might not, nor ought not to be granted me: for I was but a private man, and might not be heard againſt the determination of the whole Realme. Should, quoth he, when a Parliament hath concluded a thing, one, or any private perſon have authority to diſcuſſe, whether they had done right or wrong? No, that may not be.

Wincheſters mercy, what it meaneth.

To riſe to the Pope is to fall from Chriſt.

Whatſoever is once concluded in a Parliament ought not to be reformed afterward by doctrine, nor the word of God, by the biſhops of Wincheſters divinity.

I anſwered ſhortly, that all the lawes of men might not, neither could rule the word of God, but, that they all muſt bee diſcuſſed and iudged thereby, and obey thereto: and neither my conſcience, nor any Chriſtian mans, could be ſatisfied with ſuch laws as diſagreed from that word: and ſo was willing to have ſaid much more, but the Lord Chancellor began a long tale to verie ſmall purpoſe, concerning mine anſwer, to have defaced me, that there was nothing in me wherefore I ſhould be heard, but arrogancy, pride, and vain-glory. I alſo granted mine ignorance to be greater than I could expreſſe, or than he took it: but yet that I feared not, by Gods aſſiſtance and ſtrength, to be able by writing to performe my word, neither was I (I thanked God) ſo utterly ignorant as he would make me, but all was of God, to whom be thanks rendred therfore. Proud man was I never, nor yet vain-glorious. All the world knew well, where and on which ſide pride, arrogancy, and vain-glory was. It was a poore

The biſhop of Wincheſter iudgeth M. Rogers by his owne diſeaſe.

Anno 1555

pride that was or is in us, God it knoweth.

Then ſaid he, that I at the firſt daſh condemned the Queene and the whole Realme to be of the Church of Antichriſt, and burdened me highly therewithall. I anſwered that the Queenes Maieſty (God ſave her Grace) would have done well enough, if it had not been for his counſell. He ſaid, the Queen went before him, and it was her owne motion. I ſaid without faile, I neither could, nor would I ever beleeve it.

D. Aldriſe witneſſeth with the B. of Wincheſter.

Then ſaid Doctor Aldriſe the Biſhop of Carliſle, that they the Biſhops would beare him witneſſe. Yea, quoth I, that I beleeve well, and with that the people laughed: For that day there were many, but on the morrow they kept the doores ſhut, and would let none in, but the Biſhops adherents and ſervants in a manner, yea, and the firſt day the thouſand man came not in. Then Maſter Comptroller and Secretary Bourne would have ſtood up alſo to beare witneſſe, and did.

I ſaid it was no great matter: and to ſay the truth, I thought that they were good helpers thereto themſelves: but I ceaſed to ſay any more therein, knowing that they were too ſtrong and mighty of power, and that they ſhould be beleeved before me, yea, and before our Saviour Chriſt, and all his Prophets and Apoſtles too, in theſe dayes.

The opinion of M. Rogers touching the ſacrament of the body of Chriſt, required.

Then after many words he aſked me what I thought concerning the bleſſed Sacrament, and ſtood up, and put off his cap, and all his fellow-biſhops (of which there were a great ſort, new men, of whom I knew few) whether I beleeved in the Sacrament to be the very body and blood of our Saviour Chriſt, that was borne of the virgin Mary, and hanged on the croſſe, really and ſubſtantially.

I anſwered, I had often told him that it was a matter in which I was no medler, and therfore ſuſpected of my Brethren to be of a contrary opinion. Notwithſtanding, even as the moſt part of your doctrine in other points is falſe, and the defence thereof onely by force and cruelty: ſo in this matter I thinke it to be as falſe as the reſt. For I cannot underſtand (really and ſubſtantially) to ſignifie otherwiſe than corporally: but corporally Chriſt is onely in heaven, and ſo cannot Chriſt be corporally alſo in your Sacrament. And here I ſomewhat ſet out his charity after this ſort: My Lord, quoth I, ye have dealt with me moſt cruelly: For ye have put me in priſon without law, and kept me there now almoſt a yeere and a halfe. For I was almoſt halfe a yeere in my houſe, where I was obedient to you, God knoweth, and ſpake with no man. And now have I beene a full yeere in Newgate at great coſts and charges, having a wife and ten children to find, and I had never a penny of my livings: which was againſt the Law.

Acts 3.

Cruelty ſhewed without a cauſe.

M. Rogers a yeare and a halfe in durance.

He anſwered, that Doctor Ridley which had given them me, was an uſurper, and therefore I was the uniuſt poſſeſſor of them.

Was the King then an uſurper, quoth I, which gave Doctor Ridley the Biſhoprick?

Yea, quoth he, and began to ſet out the wrongs that the King had done to the Biſhop of London, and to himſelfe alſo. But yet I doe miſuſe my termes, quoth he, to call the King uſurper. But the word was gone out of the abundance of the heart before: and I think that he was not very ſorry for it in heart. I might have ſaid more concerning that matter, but I did not.

Ste. Gardiner calleth King Edward an uſurper.

I aſked him wherefore he put me in priſon. He ſaid, becauſe I preached againſt the Queene.

I anſwered that it was not true: and I would be bound to prove it, and to ſtand to the triall of the Law, that no man ſhould be able to diſprove it, and thereupon would ſet my life. I preached (quoth I) a Sermon at the Croſſe, after the Queene came to the Tower; but therein was nothing ſaid againſt the Queene, I take witneſſe of all the audience, which was not ſmall. I alledged alſo that he had after examination let me go at liberty after the preaching of that Sermon.

Yea, but thou didſt read thy lectures after, quoth he, againſt the commandement of the Councell.

M. Rogers impriſoned againſt all law and right.

That did I not, quoth I, let that be proved, and let me die for it. Thus have you now againſt the Law of God and man handled me, and never ſent for me, never conferred with me, never ſpoke of any learning, till now that ye have gotten a whip to whip me with, and a ſword to cut off my necke, if I will not condeſcend to your minde. This charity doth all the world underſtand.

I might and would have added, if I could have beene ſuffered to ſpeake, that it had beene time enough to take away mens livings, and therto to have impriſoned them, after that they had offended lawes: For they be good Citizens that break not lawes, and worthy of praiſe and not of puniſhment. But their purpoſe is to keep men in priſon, untill they may catch them in their laws, and ſo kill them. I could and would have added the example of Daniel, which by a crafty deviſed law was caſt into the Lions den. Item, I might have declared, that I moſt humbly deſired to be ſet at liberty, ſending my wife to him with a ſupplication, being great with child, and with her eight honeſt women, or thereabout, to Richmond, at Chriſtmas was a twelve moneth, whiles I was yet in my houſe.

M. Rogers puniſhed before any law was broken.

Item, I wrote two ſupplications to him out of Newgate, and ſent my wife many times to him. M. Goſnold alſo that worthy man, who is now departed in the Lord, laboured for me, and ſo did divers other worthy men alſo take paines in the matter. Theſe things declare my Lord Chancellors antichriſtian charity, which is, that he hath and doth ſeeke my blood, and the deſtruction of my poore wife and my ten children.

M. Goſnold laboured for M. Rogers.

This is a ſhort ſumme of the words which were ſpoken on the 28. day of January at afternoone, after that M. Hooper had been the firſt, and M. Cardmaker the ſecond in examination before me. The Lord grant us grace to ſtand together, fighting lawfully in his cauſe, till we be ſmitten down together, if the Lords will be ſo to permit it. For there ſhall not a haire of our heads periſh againſt his will, but with his will. Whereunto the ſame Lord grant us to be obedient unto the end, and in the end, Amen: Sweet, mighty, and mercifull Lord Jeſus, the ſonne of David and of God: Amen, Amen, let every true Chriſtian ſay and pray.

Then the clocke being, as I gheſſed, about foure, the Lord Chancellor ſaid, that he and the Church muſt yet uſe charity with me (what manner of charity it is, all true Chriſtians doe well underſtand, as to wit, the ſame that the foxe doth with the chickens, and the wolfe with the lambs) and gave me reſpite till to morrow, to ſee whether I would remember my ſelfe well to morrow, and whether I would returne to the catholike Church (for ſo he calleth his Antichriſtian falſe Church) againe, and repent, and they would receive me to mercy.

Great mercy of Wincheſter no leſſe than the Foxe hath to the chickens, or the wolfe to ſucke the bloud of lambes.

I ſaid that I was never out of the true catholike Church, nor would be: but into his Church would I, by Gods grace, never come.

Well,

The Popes Church is the Church of Antichriſt.

Well, quoth he, then is our Church falſe and Antichriſtian.

Yea, quoth I.

And what is the doctrine of the Sacrament?

Falſe, quoth I, and caſt my hands abroad.

Then ſaid one, that I was a player. To whom I anſwered not; for I paſſed not upon his mock.

M. Rogers warned to appeare the next day.

Come againe, quoth the Lord Chancellor, to morrow between nine and ten.

I am ready to come againe, whenſoever ye call, quoth I.

And thus was I brought up by the Sheriffes to the Counter in Southwark, M. Hooper going before me, and a great multitude of people being preſent, ſo that we had much to doe to goe in the ſtreets.

Thus much was done the 28. day of January.

M. Rogers and M. Hooper brought againe before the Chancellor.

THe ſecond day, which was the 29. of January, we were ſent for in the morning about 9. of the clocke, and by the Sheriffes fetched from the Counter in Southwark to the Church again, as to wit, to S. Mary Overies, where we were the day before in the afternoone, as is ſaid. And when M. Hooper was condemned, as I underſtood afterward, then ſent they for me. Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid unto me:

Gardiners words to M. Rogers.

Rogers, quoth he, here thou waſt yeſterday, and we gave thee liberty to remember thy ſelfe this night, whether thou wouldeſt come to the holy catholike Church of Chriſt againe or not. Tell us now what thou haſt determined, whether thou wilt be repentant and ſorry, and wilt returne againe and take mercy.

Anſwer of M. Rogers to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

My Lord, quoth I, I have remembred my ſelfe right well, what you yeſterday ſaid to me, and deſire you to give me leave to declare my minde, what I have to ſay thereunto; and that done I ſhall anſwer you to your demanded queſtion.

M. Rogers not ſuffered here to defend himſelfe by writing.

When I yeſterday deſired that I might be ſuffered by the Scripture and authority of the firſt, beſt, and pureſt Church to defend my doctrine by writing (meaning not onely of the primacy, but alſo of all the doctrine that ever I had preached) ye anſwered me, that it might not, nor ought not to be granted me, for I was a private perſon; and that the Parliament was above the authority of all private perſons, and therfore the ſentence thereof might not be found faulty and valureleſſe by me being but a private perſon. And yet my Lord, quoth I, I am able to ſhew examples, that one man hath come into a generall Councell, and after the whole had determined and agreed upon an Act or Article, ſome one man comming in afterward, hath by the word of God declared ſo pithily, that the Councell had erred in decreeing the ſaid Article, that he cauſed the whole Councell to change and alter their Act or Article before determined. And of theſe examples, ſaid I, I am able to ſhew two. I can alſo ſhew the authority of S. Auguſtine; that when he diſputed with an heretike, he would neither himſelfe, nor yet have the heretike to leane unto the determination of two former Councels, of the which the one made for him, and the other for the heretike that diſputed againſt him: but ſaid that he would have the Scriptures to be their iudge, which were common and indifferent for them both, and not proper to either of them.

Whole Councels turned by private perſons.

Contra Maxent. l. 3. c. 14.

Item, I could ſhew, ſaid I, the authority of a learned Lawyer Panormitanus, which ſaith, that unto a ſimple Lay man that bringeth the word of God with him there ought more credit to be given, than to a whole Councell gathered together. By theſe things will I prove that I ought not to be denied to ſay my minde, and to be heard againſt a whole Parliament, bringing the word of God for me and the authority of the old Church 400. yeeres after Chriſt, albeit that every man in the Parliament had willingly and without reſpect of feare and favour agreed thereunto, which thing I doubt not a little of; ſpecially ſeeing the like had beene permitted in that old Church, even in generall Councels, yea and that in one of the chiefeſt Councels that ever was, unto which neither any acts of this Parliament, nor yet any of the late generall Councels of the Biſhops of Rome ought to be compared. For, ſaid I, if Henry the eighth were alive, and ſhould call a Parliament, and begin to determine a thing (and here I would have alledged the example of the Act of making the Queene a baſtard, and of making himſelfe the Superiour head; but I could not, being interrupted by one whom God forgive) then will ye (pointing to my Lord Chancellor) and ye and ye, and ſo ye all (pointing to the reſt of the Biſhops) ſay, Amen: yea, and it like your grace, it is meet that it be ſo enacted.

Extrav. de Appel. cap. Significaſti.

A caſe put to the B. of Wincheſter.

This was Sir Anthony Browne.

M. Rogers not ſuffered to ſpeake.

Here my Lord Chancellor would ſuffer me to ſpeak no more; but bade me ſit down mockingly, ſaying, that I was ſent for to be inſtructed of them, and I would take upon me to be their inſtructer.

My Lord, quoth I, I ſtand and ſit not: ſhall I not be ſuffered to ſpeak for my life?

Mark here the ſpirit of this Prelate.

Shall we ſuffer thee to tell a tale, and to prate, quoth he? and with that he ſtood up, and began to face me, after his old arrogant proud faſhion, for hee perceived that I was in a way to have touched them ſomewhat, which he thought to hinder by daſhing me out of my tale, and ſo he did. For I could never be ſuffered to come to my tale againe, no not to one word of it; but he had much like communication with me, as he had the day before, and as his manner is, taunt upon taunt, and check upon check. For in that caſe, being Gods cauſe, I told him he ſhould not make me afraid to ſpeak.

Lord Chan. See what a ſpirit this fellow hath, ſaid he, finding fault at mine accuſtomed earneſtneſſe, and hearty manner of ſpeaking.

The godly ſpirit of M. Rogers.

Rogers. I have a true ſpirit, quoth I, agreeing and obeying the word of God, and would further have ſaid, that I was never the worſe, but the better, to be earneſt in a iuſt and true cauſe and in my Maſter Chriſts matters; but I ought not be heard. And at the length he proceeded towards his excommunication and condemnation, after that I had told him that his Church of Rome was the Church of Antichriſt, meaning the falſe doctrine and tyrannicall lawes, with the maintenance thereof by cruell perſecutions uſed by the Biſhops of the ſaid Church (of which the Biſhop of Wincheſter and the reſt of his fellow Biſhops that are now in England, are the chiefe members:) Of Lawes I meane, quoth I, and not all men and women which are in the Popes Church. Likewiſe when I was ſaid to have denied their Sacrament (whereof he made his wonted reverent mention, more to maintaine his kingdome thereby, than for the true reverence of Chriſts inſtitution; more for his owne and his Popiſh generations ſake, than for Religion or Gods ſake) I told him after what order I did ſpeake of it (for the manner of his ſpeaking was not agreeing to my words, which are before recited in the communication that we had in the 28. of January) wherewith he was not contented, but he aſked the audience whether I had not ſimply denied the Sacrament. They would have ſaid, and did, what he luſted, for the moſt of them were of his owne ſervants at that day: the 29. of January I

The Church of Rome to the Church of Antichriſt, meaning the lawes and doctrine now uſed in Rome.

meane. At the laſt I ſaid, I will never deny that I ſaid, that is, that your doctrine of the Sacrament is falſe; but yet I tell you after what order I ſaid it.

To be ſhort, he read my condemnation before me, particularly mentioning therein but two Articles; firſt, that I affirmed the Romiſh Catholike Church to be the Church of Antichriſt; and that I denied the reality of their Sacrament. He cauſed me to be degraded and condemned, and put into the hands of the Laity, and ſo he gave me over into the Sherifs hands, which were much better than his.

The copie of which his condemnation here I thought good to put down in Engliſh, to the intent that the ſame, being here once expreſſed, may ſerve for all other ſentences condemnatory thorow the whole ſtory to be referred unto.

The ſentence condemnatorie againſt Maſter Rogers.

The ſentence definitive againſt Maſter Rogers.

IN the Name of God, Amen. We Steven by the permiſſion of God Biſhop of Wincheſter, lawfully and rightly proceeding with all godly favour by authority and vertue of our office, againſt thee John Rogers Prieſt, aliàs called Matthew, before us perſonally here preſent, being accuſed and detected, and notoriouſly ſlandered of hereſie, having heard, ſeen, and underſtood, and with all diligent deliberation weighed, diſcuſſed, and conſidered the merits of the cauſe, all things being obſerved, which by us in this behalfe in order of Law ought to be obſerved, ſitting in our judgement ſeat, the name of Chriſt being firſt called upon, and having God onely before our eyes, becauſe by the acts enacted, propounded, and exhibited in this matter, and by thine owne confeſſion judicially made before us, we doe finde that thou haſt taught, holden, and affirmed, and obſtinately defended divers errors, hereſies, and damnable opinions, contrary to the doctrine and determination of the holy Church, as namely theſe; That the catholike Church of Rome is the Church of Antichriſt: Item, that in the Sacrament of the Altar there is not ſubſtantially nor really the naturall body and blood of Chriſt.

His Articles.

The which aforeſaid hereſies and damnable opinions being contrary to the Law of God, and determination of the univerſall and Apoſtolicall Church, thou haſt arrogantly, ſtubbornely, and wittingly maintained, held and affirmed, and alſo defended before us, as well in this judgement, as alſo otherwiſe, and with the like obſtinacie, ſtubbornneſſe, malice and blindneſſe of heart, both wittingly and willingly haſt affirmed, that thou wilt beleeve, maintaine and hold, affirme and declare the ſame: We therefore S. Wincheſter Biſhop, Ordinary, and Dioceſan afore ſaid, by the conſent and aſſent as well of our reverend Brethren the Lord Biſhops here preſent and aſſiſtant, as alſo by the counſell and judgment of divers worſhipfull Lawyers and Profeſſors of Divinity, with whom we have communicated in this behalfe, do declare and pronounce thee the ſaid John Rogers, otherwiſe called Matthew, through thy demerits, tranſgreſſions, obſtinacies, and wilfulneſſes (which thou manifold wayes haſt incurred by thine owne wicked and ſtubborne obſtinacie) to have beene and to be guilty of the deteſtable, horrible, and wicked offence of hereticall pravity and execrable doctrine, and that thou haſt before us ſundry times ſpoken, maintained, and wittingly and ſtubbornly defended the ſaid curſed and execrable doctrine in thy ſundry confeſſions, aſſertions, and recognitions here judicially before us oftentimes repeated, and yet ſtill doſt maintaine, affirme and beleeve the ſame, and that thou haſt beene and art lawfully and ordinarily convicted in this behalfe: We therefore, I ſay, albeit following the example of Chriſt, Which would not the death of a ſinner, but rather that he ſhould convert and live; we have gone about oftentimes to correct thee, and by all lawfull meanes that we could, and all wholeſome admonitions that we did know, to reduce thee againe unto the true faith and unity of the univerſall catholike Church, notwithſtanding have found thee obſtinate and ſtiffe-necked, willingly continuing in thy damnable opinions and hereſies, and refuſing to return againe unto the true faith and unity of the holy mother Church, and as the child of wickedneſſe and darkneſſe ſo to have hardened thy heart, that thou wilt not underſtand the voice of thy ſhepheard, which with a fatherly affection doth ſeeke after thee, nor wilt be allured with his fatherly and godly admonitions: we therefore Steven the Biſhop aforeſaid, not willing that thou which art wicked ſhouldeſt now become more wicked, and infect the Lords flock with thine hereſie (which we are greatly afraid of) with ſorrow of mind and bitterneſſe of heart doe judge thee, and definitively condemne thee the ſaid John Rogers, otherwiſe called Matthew, thy demerits and faults being aggravated through thy damnable obſtinacy, as guilty of moſt deteſtable hereſies, and as an obſtinate impenitent ſinner, refuſing penitently to return to the lap and unity of the holy mother Church, and that thou haſt been and art by law excommunicate, and do pronounce and declare thee to be an excommunicate perſon. Alſo we pronounce and declare thee being an heretike to be caſt out from the Church, and left unto the judgment of the ſecular power, and now preſently ſo do leave thee as an obſtinate heretike, and a perſon wrapped in the ſentence of the great curſe, to be degraded worthily for thy demerits (requiring them notwithſtanding in the bowels of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that this execution and puniſhment worthily to be done upon thee, may ſo be moderated, that the rigor thereof be not too extreme, nor yet the gentleneſſe too much mitigated, but that it may be to the ſalvation of thy ſoule, to the extirpation, terror, and converſion of the heretikes, to the unity of the catholike faith) by this our ſentence definitive which we here lay upon and againſt thee, and doe with ſorrow of heart promulgate in this forme aforeſaid.

Theſe murderers pretend ſorrow of heart, and yet they will not ceaſe from murdering.

After this ſentence being read, he ſent us (M. Hooper I meane, and me) to the Clink, there to remaine till night: and when it was darke, they carried us, M. Hooper going before with the one Sheriffe, and I comming after with the other, with bils and weapons enow, out of the Clink, and led us thorow the Biſhops houſe, and ſo thorow S. Mary Overies Church-yard, and ſo into Southwark, and over the Bridge on proceſſion to Newgate through the City. But I muſt ſhew you this alſo, that when he had read the condemnation, he declared that I was in the great curſe, and what a vengeable dangerous matter it was to eat and drink with us that were accurſed, or to give us any thing: for all that ſo did, ſhould be partakers of the ſame great curſe.

M. Rogers and M. Hooper ſent to Newgate.

A vengeable thing to be in the Popes curſe.

Well my Lord, quoth I, here I ſtand before God and you, and all this honourable audience, and take him to witneſſe, that I never wittingly or willingly taught any falſe doctrine; and there-therefore have I a good conſcience before God and all good men. I am ſure that you and I ſhall come before a Iudge that is righteous, before whom I ſhall be as good a man as you: and I nothing doubt but that I ſhalbe found there a true member of the true catholike Church of Chriſt, and everlaſtingly ſaved. And as for your falſe Church, ye need not to excommunicate me forth of it. I have not been in it theſe twenty yeeres, the Lord be thanked therefore. But now ye have done what ye can, my Lord, I pray you yet grant me one thing.

What is that, quoth he?

M. Rogers requeſt, to have his wife come to him while he lived, could not be granted.

That my poore wife, being a ſtranger, may come and ſpeak with me ſo long as I live. For ſhe hath ten children that are hers and mine, and ſomwhat I would counſell her, what were beſt for her to do.

No, quoth he, ſhe is not thy wife.

Yes my Lord, quoth I, and hath been theſe 18. yeeres.

Should I grant her to be thy wife, quoth he?

Chuſe you, quoth I, whether ye will or not: ſhe ſhall be ſo neverthelеſſe.

She ſhall not come at thee, quoth he.

Then I have tried out all your charity, ſaid I. You make your ſelfe highly diſpleaſed with the matrimony of Prieſts, but you maintaine open whoredome: as in Wales, quoth I, where every Prieſt hath his whore openly dwelling with him, and lying by him: even as your holy Father ſuffereth all the Prieſts in Dutchland and in France to do the like. Thereto he anſwered not, but looked as it were a ſquint at it: and thus I departed, and ſaw him laſt.

Other good matter there is beſide penned by Maſter Rogers in the priſon, which he thought and would have anſwered, if he might have been permitted: which matter hereunder followeth to be ſeen by his own ſetting down.

Hitherto, dearely beloved, ye have heard what was ſaid: now heare what I purpoſed the night before to have ſaid, if I could have beene permitted. Two things I purpoſed to have touched. The one, how it was lawfull for a private man to reaſon and write againſt a wicked Act of Parliament, or ungodly Councell, which the Lord Chancellor the day before denied me. The other was to prove that proſperity was not alwayes a token of Gods love.

And this I purpoſed to ſpeake of, becauſe the Lord Chancellor boaſted of himſelf, that he was delivered forth of Priſon as it were by miracle, and preſerved of God to reſtore true Religion, and to puniſh me and ſuch other, whom he termed heretikes. Concerning theſe two points, in this matter I purpoſed to have proceeded. It is not unknowne to you, that King Henry the eighth in his time made his daughter the Queene that now is, a baſtard: he aboliſhed the authority of the Biſhop of Rome: he pulled downe Abbeyes: and all this he did by the conſent of Parliament.

King Edward the ſixth in his time made lawfull the marriage of Prieſts, turned the Service into Engliſh, aboliſhed the idolatrous Maſſe, with all like ſuperſtitious trumpery, ſet up the holy Communion, and all by conſent of Parliament.

The Queene that now is hath repealed the Act that made her Baſtard, hath brought in the Biſhop of Rome, and ſet him in his old authority, beginneth to ſet up Abbeyes againe, hath made the marriage of Prieſts unlawfull, hath turned the Engliſh Service into Latine again, hath ſet up the Maſſe againe, with like baggage, and pulled downe the holy Communion: and all this is done by conſent of Parliament.

If the Acts of Parliament, made in King Henries time and in King Edwards, had their foundation upon Gods word, whereupon all poſitive law ought to be grounded; then theſe which are ſtabliſhed in the Queenes time, being cleane contrary to the others, as they are not warranted by Gods word, ſo are they wicked, and therefore to be both ſpoken and written againſt of all men, as well of private as of publike perſons.

If your Acts, my Lord Chancellor, which you have lately coyned (I call them yours, becauſe ye only beare the ſwinge, deviſe, and decree what ye liſt, all other men are forced to follow) be good, and according to Gods word, then the former Acts were naught, which thing ye ſeeme to ſay, in utterly taking of them away, and ſetting up of the contrary: if the former were naught, why then did ye conſent unto them, and confirme them to be good by your voluntary and adviſed writing, as it appeareth, and will doe to the worlds end, in your Booke De vera obedientia, where you prove the Queene a Baſtard, and the Biſhop of Rome to be an uſurper, and to have no authority in the Realme of England.

Ye muſt needs confeſſe, that the moſt part of your Acts of Parliament in theſe later dayes have beene according to the fantaſies of a few. King Henry in his time eſtabliſhed by Parliament in a manner what he liſted, and many things that might well have been amended.

In King Edwards dayes the Dukes of Somerſet and Northumberland bare a great ſtroke in things, and did not all things ſincerely. Even ſo, ſince the Queene that now is came to the government of the Realme, all things are ordered by your device, and head, and the whole Parliament houſe is led as you liſt; by reaſon whereof they are compelled to condeſcend to things both contrary to Gods manifeſt word, and alſo contrary to their owne conſciences: ſo great is your cruelty.

For to bring your wicked purpoſes to paſſe, and to eſtabliſh your Antichriſtian kingdome (which, I truſt, the Lord with the breath of his mouth will ſpeedily blow over) ye have called three Parliaments in one yeere and an halfe, that, what ye could not compaſſe by ſubtill perſwaſion, ye might bring to paſſe by tyrannicall threatning: for if ye had not uſed cruell force in your doings, ye had never brought to paſſe ſuch things as this day ye have, to the utter defacing and aboliſhing of Gods true Religion, and to the caſting away and deſtruction of your naturall countrey, ſo much as in you lieth.

And as it is moſt true that Acts of Parliament have in theſe later dayes been ruled by the fantaſies of a few, and the whole Parliament houſe, contrary to their mindes, was compelled to conſent to ſuch things as a few have conceived: So it muſt needs be granted, that the Papiſts at all times were moſt ready to apply themſelves to the preſent world, and like men pleaſers to follow the fantaſies of ſuch as were in authority, and turne with the ſtate, which way ſoever it turned. Yea, if the ſtate ſhould change ten times in one yeere, they would ever be ready at hand to change with it, and ſo follow the cry, and rather utterly forſake God, and be of no Religion, than that they would forgoe luſt or living, for God or for Religion.

King Henry by Parliament, according to Gods word, put downe the Pope: the Clergie conſented, and all men openly by oath refuſed his uſurped ſupremacie, knowing by Gods word Chriſt to be head of the Church, and every King in his Realm to have under and next unto Chriſt the chiefe Soveraignty.

King

Anno 1555

King Edward alſo by Parliament, according to Gods word, ſet the marriage of Prieſts at liberty, aboliſhed the Popiſh and Idolatrous Maſſe, changed the Latine ſervice, and ſet up the holy Communion: the whole Clergie conſented hereunto; many of them ſet it forth by their preaching; and all they by practiſing confirmed the ſame.

Notwithſtanding now when the ſtate is altered, and the lawes changed, the Papiſticall Clergie, with other like worldlings, as men neither fearing God, neither flying worldly ſhame, neither yet regarding their conſciences, oaths, or honeſty, like wavering weather-cocks, turn round about, and putting on harlots foreheads, ſing a new ſong, and cry with an impudent mouth; Come againe, come againe to the catholike Church, meaning the Antichriſtian Church of Rome, which is the Synagogue of Satan, and the very ſink of all ſuperſtition, hereſie, and idolatry.

Of what force I pray you may a man thinke theſe Parliaments to be, which ſcantly can ſtand a yeere in ſtrength? Or what credit is to be given to theſe law-makers, which are not aſhamed to eſtabliſh contrary Lawes, and to condemne that for evill, which before (the thing in it ſelfe and the circumſtances remaining all one) they affirmed and decreed to be good. Truly ye are ſo ready, contrary to all right, to change and turne for the pleaſure of man, that at length I feare, God will uſe you like changelings, and both turne you forth of his kingdome, and out of your owne countrey.

Ye charge the Goſpell-Preachers with the undoing of this Realme: nay it is the turning Papiſts, which have not onely ſet a ſale their countrey like traytors, but alſo troubled the ſimple people, ſo that they cannot tell what they may beleeve. For that which they affirmed, and preached to be new doctrine in King Edwards dayes, now they cry againſt it, as it were moſt abominable hereſie. This fault I truſt ye ſhall never finde at our hands.

Therefore to conclude that which I purpoſed, forſomuch as the Acts of Parliament of theſe later times are one contrary to another, and thoſe which yee now have eſtabliſhed in your time are contrary to Gods moſt manifeſt word, as is the uſurped ſupremacie of the Biſhop of Rome, the idolatrous Maſſe, the Latine Service, the prohibiting of lawfull marriage (which S. Paul calleth the doctrine of divels) with many ſuch other: I ſay, it is not only lawfull for any private man, which bringeth Gods word for him, and the authority of the primitive and beſt Church, to ſpeake and write againſt ſuch unlawfull lawes, but it is his duty, and he is bound in very conſcience to doe it. Which thing I have proved by divers examples before, and now will add but one other, which is written in the fifth of the Acts, where it appeareth that the high Prieſts, the Elders, Scribes, and Phariſees, decreed in their Councell, and gave the ſame commandement to the Apoſtles, that they ſhould not preach in the name of Chriſt, as ye have alſo forbidden us; notwithſtanding when they were charged therewithall, they anſwered, Obedire oportet Deo magis quàm hominibus: that is, We ought more to obey God than man: even ſo we may, and do anſwer you. God is more to be obeyed than man; and your wicked lawes cannot ſo tongue-tie us, but we will ſpeake the truth.

The Apoſtles were beaten for their boldneſſe, and they rejoyced that they ſuffered for Chriſts cauſe. Ye have alſo provided rods for us, and bloody whips: yet when yee have done that which Gods hand and councell hath determined that ye ſhall doe, be it life or death, I truſt that God will ſo aſſiſt us by his holy ſpirit and grace, that we ſhall patiently ſuffer it, and praiſe God for it: and whatſoever become of me and others, which now ſuffer for ſpeaking and profeſſing of the truth, yet be ye ſure, that Gods word will prevaile and have the upper hand, when your bloody lawes and wicked decrees, for want of ſure foundation, ſhall fall in the duſt: and that which I have ſpoken of your Acts of Parliament, the ſame may bee ſaid of the generall Councels of theſe later dayes, which have beene within theſe five hundred yeeres, where the Antichriſt of Rome by reaſon of his uſurped authority ruled the roaſt, and decreed ſuch things as made for his gaine, not regarding Gods glory: and therefore are they to be ſpoken, written, and cryed out againſt of all ſuch as feare God and love his truth.

And thus much I purpoſed to have ſaid concerning the firſt point.

Now touching the ſecond point. That whereas my Lord Chancellor had the day before ſaid his pleaſure of them that ruled the Realme while he was in priſon, and alſo rejoyced as though God had made this alteration, even for his ſake and his catholike Church, as he called it, and to declare as it were by miracle, that we were before in a Schiſme and Hereſie, and the Realme was now brought unto an unity, and to a truth, and I cannot tell whereto: thereto was I fully purpoſed to have ſaid. Secondly, my Lord, whereas ye yeſterday ſo highly diſpraiſed the government of them that ruled in innocent King Edwards dayes, it may pleaſe your Lordſhip to underſtand, that wee poore Preachers, whom ye ſo evill allow, did moſt boldly and plainely rebuke their evill governance in many things, ſpecially their covetouſneſſe, and neglect and ſmall regard to live after the Goſpell, as alſo their negligence to occaſion other to live thereafter, with moe things than I can now rehearſe. This can all London teſtifie with us. I would alſo have told him, what I my ſelfe for my part did once at Pauls Croſſe, concerning the miſuſe of Abbeyes, and other Church goods: and I am aſſured right well, that never a Papiſt of them all did ever ſo much therein as I did, I thank the Lord therefore: I was alſo, as it is well knowne, faine to anſwer therefore before all the Councell, and many of my brethren did the like, ſo that we for the not rebuking of their faults, ſhall not anſwer before God, nor be blame-worthy before men. Therfore let the Gentlemen and Courtiers themſelves, and all the Citizens of London, teſtifie what we did.

But, my Lord, you could not abide them, for that which they did unto you, and for that they were of a contrary religion unto you. Wherefore in that you ſeeme ſo infeſt againſt them, it is neither any juſt or publike cauſe, but it is your owne private hate that maketh you to report ſo evill of their governance. And ye may now ſay what ye liſt of them, when they be partly dead and gone, and partly by you put out of office.

But what ſhall be ſaid of you when your fall ſhall follow, ye ſhall then heare. And I muſt ſay my conſcience to you: I feare me, ye have and will with your governance bring England out of Gods bleſſing into a warm ſun. I pray God you do not.

I am an Engliſh man borne, and, God knoweth, doe naturally wiſh well to my Countrey. And, my Lord, I have often proved that the things

therefore have I a good conſcience before God and all good men. I am ſure that you and I ſhall come before a Iudge that is righteous, before whom I ſhall be as good a man as you: and I nothing doubt but that I ſhalbe found there a true member of the true catholike Church of Chriſt, and everlaſtingly ſaved. And as for your falſe Church, ye need not to excommunicate me forth of it. I have not been in it theſe twenty yeeres, the Lord be thanked therefore. But now ye have done what ye can, my Lord, I pray you yet grant me one thing.

What is that, quoth he?

M. Rogers requeſt, to have his wife come to him while he lived, could not be granted.

That my poore wife, being a ſtranger, may come and ſpeak with me ſo long as I live. For ſhe hath ten children that are hers and mine, and ſomwhat I would counſell her, what were beſt for her to do.

No, quoth he, ſhe is not thy wife.

Yes my Lord, quoth I, and hath been theſe 18. yeeres.

Should I grant her to be thy wife, quoth he?

Chuſe you, quoth I, whether ye will or not: ſhe ſhall be ſo nevertheleſſe.

She ſhall not come at thee, quoth he.

Then I have tried out all your charity, ſaid I. You make your ſelfe highly diſpleaſed with the matrimony of Prieſts, but you maintaine open whoredome: as in Wales, quoth I, where every Prieſt hath his whore openly dwelling with him, and lying by him: even as your holy Father ſuffereth all the Prieſts in Dutchland and in France to do the like. Thereto he anſwered not, but looked as it were a ſquint at it: and thus I departed, and ſaw him laſt.

Other good matter there is beſide penned by Maſter Rogers in the priſon, which he thought and would have anſwered, if he might have been permitted: which matter hereunder followeth to be ſeen by his own ſetting down.

Hitherto, dearely beloved, ye have heard what was ſaid: now heare what I purpoſed the night before to have ſaid, if I could have beene permitted. Two things I purpoſed to have touched. The one, how it was lawfull for a private man to reaſon and write againſt a wicked Act of Parliament, or ungodly Councell, which the Lord Chancellor the day before denied me. The other was to prove that proſperity was not alwayes a token of Gods love.

And this I purpoſed to ſpeake of, becauſe the Lord Chancellor boaſted of himſelf, that he was delivered forth of Priſon as it were by miracle, and preſerved of God to reſtore true Religion, and to puniſh me and ſuch other, whom he termed heretikes. Concerning theſe two points, in this matter I purpoſed to have proceeded. It is not unknowne to you, that King Henry the eighth in his time made his daughter the Queene that now is, a baſtard: he aboliſhed the authority of the Biſhop of Rome: he pulled downe Abbeyes: and all this he did by the conſent of Parliament.

King Edward the ſixth in his time made lawfull the marriage of Prieſts, turned the Service into Engliſh, aboliſhed the idolatrous Maſſe, with all like ſuperſtitious trumpery, ſet up the holy Communion, and all by conſent of Parliament.

The Queene that now is hath repealed the Act that made her Baſtard, hath brought in the Biſhop of Rome, and ſet him in his old authority, beginneth to ſet up Abbeyes againe, hath made the marriage of Prieſts unlawfull, hath turned the Engliſh Service into Latine again, hath ſet up the Maſſe againe, with like baggage, and pulled downe the holy Communion: and all this is done by conſent of Parliament.

If the Acts of Parliament, made in King Henries time and in King Edwards, had their foundation upon Gods word, whereupon all poſitive law ought to be grounded; then theſe which are ſtabliſhed in the Queenes time, being cleane contrary to the others, as they are not warranted by Gods word, ſo are they wicked, and therefore to be both ſpoken and written againſt of all men, as well of private as of publike perſons.

If your Acts, my Lord Chancellor, which you have lately coyned (I call them yours, becauſe ye only beare the ſwinge; deviſe, and decree what ye liſt, all other men are forced to follow) be good, and according to Gods word, then the former Acts were naught, which thing ye ſeeme to ſay, in utterly taking of them away, and ſetting up of the contrary: if the former were naught, why then did ye conſent unto them, and confirme them to be good by your voluntary and adviſed writing, as it appeareth, and will doe to the worlds end, in your Booke De vera obedientia, where you prove the Queene a Baſtard, and the Biſhop of Rome to be an uſurper, and to have no authority in the Realme of England.

Ye muſt needs confeſſe, that the moſt part of your Acts of Parliament in theſe later dayes have beene according to the fantaſies of a few. King Henry in his time eſtabliſhed by Parliament in a manner what he liſted, and many things that might well have been amended.

In King Edwards dayes the Dukes of Somerſet and Northumberland bare a great ſtroke in things, and did not all things ſincerely. Even ſo, ſince the Queene that now is came to the government of the Realme, all things are ordered by your device, and head, and the whole Parliament houſe is led as you liſt; by reaſon whereof they are compelled to condeſcend to things both contrary to Gods manifeſt word, and alſo contrary to their owne conſciences: ſo great is your cruelty.

For to bring your wicked purpoſes to paſſe, and to eſtabliſh your Antichriſtian kingdome (which, I truſt, the Lord with the breath of his mouth will ſpeedily blow over) ye have called three Parliaments in one yeere and an halfe, that, what ye could not compaſſe by ſubtill perſwaſion, ye might bring to paſſe by tyrannicall threatning: for if ye had not uſed cruell force in your doings, ye had never brought to paſſe ſuch things as this day ye have, to the utter defacing and aboliſhing of Gods true Religion, and to the caſting away and deſtruction of your naturall countrey, ſo much as in you lieth.

And as it is moſt true that Acts of Parliament have in theſe later dayes been ruled by the fantaſies of a few, and the whole Parliament houſe, contrary to their mindes, was compelled to conſent to ſuch things as a few have conceived: So it muſt needs be granted, that the Papiſts at all times were moſt ready to apply themſelves to the preſent world, and like men pleaſers to follow the fantaſies of ſuch as were in authority, and turne with the ſtate, which way ſoever it turned. Yea, if the ſtate ſhould change ten times in one yeere, they would ever be ready at hand to change with it, and ſo follow the cry, and rather utterly forſake God, and be of no Religion, than that they would forgoe luſt or living, for God or for Religion.

King Henry by Parliament, according to Gods word, put downe the Pope: the Clergie conſented, and all men openly by oath refuſed his uſurped ſupremacie, knowing by Gods word Chriſt to be head of the Church, and every King in his Realm to have under and next unto Chriſt the chiefe Soveraignty.

Notwithſtanding now when the ſtate is altered, and the lawes changed, the Papiſticall Clergie, with other like worldlings, as men neither fearing God, neither flying worldly ſhame, neither yet regarding their conſciences, oaths, or honeſty, like wavering weather-cocks, turn round about, and putting on harlots foreheads, ſing a new ſong, and cry with an impudent mouth; Come againe, come againe to the catholike Church, meaning the Antichriſtian Church of Rome, which is the Synagogue of Satan, and the very ſink of all ſuperſtition, hereſie, and idolatry.

Of what force I pray you may a man thinke theſe Parliaments to be, which ſcantly can ſtand a yeere in ſtrength? Or what credit is to be given to theſe law-makers, which are not aſhamed to eſtabliſh contrary Lawes, and to condemne that for evill, which before (the thing in it ſelfe and the circumſtances remaining all one) they affirmed and decreed to be good. I am an Engliſh man borne, and, God knoweth, doe naturally wiſh well to my Countrey. And, my Lord, I have often proved that the things, which I have much feared aforehand ſhould come to paſſe, have indeed followed. I pray God I may faile of my gheſſing in this behalfe: but truly that will not be with expelling the true word of God out of the Realm, and with the ſhedding of innocent blood.

And as touching your reioycing, as though God had ſet you aloft to puniſh us by miracle (for ſo you report and brag openly of your ſelfe) and to miniſter Juſtice, if we will not receive your holy Fathers mercy, and thereby to declare your Church to be true, and ours falſe, to that I anſwer thus: Gods works be wonderfull, and are not to be comprehended and perceived by mans wiſedome, nor by the wit of the moſt wiſe and prudent. Yea, they are ſooneſt deceived, and do moſt eaſily iudge amiſſe of Gods wonderfull works, that are moſt worldly-wiſe. God hath made all the wiſedome of this world fooliſhneſſe, firſt to the Corinthians the firſt, and the ſecond Chapter.

Dedit dilectam animam ſuam in manus inimicorum ejus. Hierem. xii.

That is,

He hath put his beloved and deare heart into the hands of the enemies thereof.

This thing doth God, which thing all wiſe men accompt to be the moſt fooliſh and unwiſe part that can be. Will the wiſe of the world, trow ye, put their moſt dear friends and tenderly beloved children into their enemies hands, to kill, ſlay, burne? &c. that is unto them a madneſſe above all madneſſe. And yet doth God uſe this order, and this is an high and ſingular wiſedome in his ſight, which the world taketh to be moſt extreme madneſſe.

Can the world ſhew a cauſe why he ſuffered the great multitude of innocent children to be murdered of Herod of Aſcalon, or why he put that moſt holy man John Baptiſt into the hands of Herod his ſonne to be beheaded, and that in priſon ſecretly without open iudgement moſt tyrannouſly? Why he ſuffered his beloved Apoſtle James to be beheaded of another Herod, Acts 12? Why he ſuffered his beloved ſeed of Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, to be foure hundred yeeres in thraldome and bondage, and under Pharaoh? And all the ſtock of Juda and Beniamin his beloved children and church to come under the power, ſword, and tyranny of Nebuchadonoſor? No verily, but his true catholike Church knoweth divers cauſes thereof, which are now too long to rehearſe, and which I would right gladly ſhew, if I had time.

But this I am right ſure of, that it was not becauſe that the foreſaid godly men were in hereſies, and ſubiect to falſe gods ſervices, and idolatry, and that their adverſaries were men of God, and beloved of God. The contrary was true: John Baptiſt was beloved of God, and Herod hated, and ſo forth of the reſt: and John Baptiſt, the innocent children, James, the children of Iſrael in Egypt, and in Babylon, were the catholike members and people of God: and their adverſaries, into whoſe hands they were put and delivered, and that of God, by his good will and pleaſure, were Idolaters, and the people of the divell: but they would be called the chiefe members of God, and reioyced that they had the true God, and that it was now declared by miracle, that the Iſraelites had but a falſe god, and a falſe religion, ſeeing they were delivered into the Babylonians hands. And all the other (the Herods and Pharaoh I meane) plainly determined, that if the men, which they killed and handled evill, had beene Gods people, God would never have ſuffered them to come into their hands, but rather have done the contrary, and have let John Baptiſt kill Herod, and the Iſraelites Pharaoh, and Nebuchadonoſor. Even the like is now to be ſeene in us, and in our moſt cruell adverſaries.

They are not therefore the catholike Church, becauſe our mercifull God hath at this preſent given our lives into their hands: neither are we therefore heretikes, becauſe we ſuffer puniſhment at their hands, as the Lord Chancellor by his reioycing ſeemeth to gather: the contrary is hereby to be gathered, that we be the members of the true Catholike Church, becauſe we ſuffer for the ſame doctrine which John Baptiſt, James, the Iſraelites, yea Chriſt, and the Apoſtles did teach: of which none taught any thing of our adverſaries doctrine, namely, that the rotten Antichriſtian head of Rome ſhould be the head of Chriſts Church: but they have manifeſtly taught the contrary, ſpecially Paul, in the ſecond to the Theſſalonians, the ſecond chapter: John in the Apocalyps: Daniel 11. which thing, if I might have life and bookes, I would ſo (by Gods grace) ſet forth, that all the world ſhould ſee it: and that our adverſaries, with their Antichriſtian head, are the members of the divels church, as they undoubtedly are. And in like caſe, as the above mentioned holy men, though they in their dayes were counted to be heretikes, ſeditious, and diſturbers of the whole world; for unto John Baptiſt it was ſaid, Joh, 1. Wherefore baptizeſt thou, if thou be not Helias, nor that Prophet? &c. As who ſay, Thou haſt no ſuch authority to begin a new ceremony in the Church. For we be in ordinary poſſeſſion of the Church: and of us thou haſt received no ſuch power: we abide by our circumciſion: and the like could I declare of James, and of all the Apoſtles and Prophets, and of our Saviour Chriſt himſelfe, that were all condemned as heretikes, and blaſphemers of God, and diſturbers of the whole world. Paul and Silas, Acts the ſixteenth, heard like words of the Philippians; Theſe men trouble our City, ſeeing they are Jewes, and preach inſtitutions which are not lawfull for us to receive, ſeeing we be Romans. And in the ſeventeenth. In Athens, the wiſe men of this world, and ſuch as gave their endeavour, to wiſedome, ſaid by S. Paul; Quid vult ſpermologus hic dicere? that is, What will this prater (as my Lord Chancellor ſaid to me, Shall we ſuffer this fellow to prate, when I would faine have ſaid that thing that I have here written) trifler, newes-carrier, or bringer, that telleth whatſoever men will have him for gaine and advantage, that will for a peece of bread ſay what ye will have him, &c. And another ſaid in the ſame place, He ſeemeth to be a preacher of new divels, &c. And Acts 21. the Jewes ſay by Paul, laying hands on him, helpe O ye Iſraelites, ſay they, this is the man that teacheth all men every where againſt the people (meaning the Jewes) and the law and this place (meaning Jeruſalem) and yet was never a word of theſe true. And Acts 22. the ſame Jewes ſaid of Paul: Out of the earth with that man, or away with him. For it is not lawfull for him to live, or he is not worthy to live. And how many moe of theſe examples are to be found in the Bible? Although I ſay theſe men were in their dayes taken for heretikes of them that were then in authority, and of the great multitude of the world, yet it is now well knowne, yea and very ſhortly after their deaths this was knowne, yea, and even in their lives alſo unto the true Catholike Church, that they were not onely the chiefe and ſpeciall members of the true catholike Church, but alſo the founders and builders thereof (notwithſtanding the ſiniſter iudgment that the wiſe and mighty men, and the great multitude of the world had of them) and in their conſciences they were alwayes aſſuredly certified of the ſame. Even the ſame ſhall the world finde true in us, ſhortly after our deaths, as alſo there be at this houre (the Lord be thanked therefore) not a few that already know it, as we our ſelves alſo are by Gods grace aſſuredly certified in our conſciences, that we are no heretikes, but members of the true catholike Church, and that our adverſaries the Biſhops and Popiſh Clergy, which will have that title, are the members of Satans Church, and their Antichriſtian head of Rome with them.

But here they will cry out; Loe theſe men will be ſtill like John Baptiſt, the Apoſtles, and Prophets, &c.

I anſwer, We make not our ſelves like unto them, in the ſingular vertues and gifts of God given unto them; as of doing miracles, and of many other things. The ſimilitude and likenes of them and us conſiſteth not in all things, but onely in this, that is, that we be like them in doctrine, and in the ſuffering of perſecution and infamie for the ſame.

We have preached their very doctrine, and none other thing: that we are able ſufficiently to declare by their writings; and by writing for my part, I have profered to prove the ſame, as is now often ſaid. And for this cauſe we ſuffer the like reproach, ſhame, and rebuke of the world, and the like perſecution, loſing of our lives and goods, forſaking (as our Maſter Chriſt commandeth) father, mother, ſiſter, brethren, wives, children, and all that there is, being aſſured of a ioyfull reſurrection, and to be crowned in glory with them, according to the infallible promiſes made unto us in Chriſt, our onely and ſufficient Mediator, Reconciler, Prieſt, and Sacrifice, which hath pleaſed the Father, and quieted and pacified his wrath againſt our ſins, and made us without ſpot or wrinkle in his ſight by imputation, although we, of and in our ſelves, are beſpotted, and be-blotted with many filthy ſinnes, which if the great mercy granted in Chriſt did not put away, by not imputing them unto us of his meaſureleſſe unſpeakable mercy aud love to ſave us, they would have brought us to everlaſting damnation, and death perpetuall, Herein, and in no other, doe we affirme our ſelves to be like unto our head Chriſt, and all his Apoſtles, Prophets, Martyrs, and Saints. And herein ought all Chriſtian men to be like them, and herein are all true Chriſtian men and women like them every one, according to the meaſure of the faith that God hath dealt unto them, and to the diverſity of the gifts of the Spirit given unto them. But let us now conſider, that if it be Gods good will and pleaſure to give his owne beloved heart, that is his beloved Church, and the members thereof, into the hands of their enemies, to chaſten, try and prove them, and to bring them to the true unfained acknowledging of their owne naturall ſtubbornneſſe, diſobedience towards God and his commandements as touching the love of God and of their brethren or neighbours, and their naturall inclination, readineſſe, and deſire to love creatures, to ſeeke their owne luſts, pleaſures, and things forbidden of God, to obtaine a true and earneſt repentance, and ſorrowfulneſſe therefore, and to make them to ſigh and cry for the forgiveneſſe of the ſame, and for the aid of the Spirit, daily to mortifie and kill the ſaid evill deſires and luſts; yea, and often falling into groſſe outward ſins, as did David, Peter, Magdalen, and others, to riſe againe alſo thereout with a mighty crying for mercy, with many other cauſes: let us alſo conſider what he hereafter doth with the ſaid enemies, into whoſe hands he hath given his tenderly beloved dearelings to be chaſtened and tried. Forſooth, whereas he but chaſteneth his dearelings, and croſſeth them for a ſmall while, according to his good pleaſure, as all fathers doe with their children, Heb. 12. Proverbs 3. he utterly deſtroyeth, yea and everlaſtingly damneth the unrepentant enemies. Let Herod tell me what he wan by killing James, and perſecuting Peter, and Chriſts tender dearelings, and beloved ſpouſe and wife, his Church. Verily God thought him not worthy to have death miniſtred unto him by men or Angels, or any worthy creatures, but thoſe ſmall, and yet moſt vile vermine, lice, and wormes muſt conſume and kill his beaſtly, vile, and tyrannous body. Pharaoh and Nebuchadonoſor, for all their pride and moſt mighty power, muſt at the length let Gods dearelings goe freely away out of their land, yea out of their bands and tyranny. For when it could not be obtained at their hands, that Gods congregation might have true mercy miniſtred unto them, but the counterfeit mercy of theſe our dayes, that is to ſay, extreme cruelty, and even the very and that moſt horrible and cruell death, God aroſe and awoke out of his ſleepe, and deſtroyed thoſe enemies of his flocke with a mighty hand, and ſtretched out arme. Pharaoh did with moſt great and intolerable labors and burdens oppreſſe and bring under the poore Iſraelites, and yet did the courtiers undoubtedly noiſe abroad, that the King was mercifull unto them, to ſuffer them to live in the land, and to ſet them aworke, that they might get them their livings. If he ſhould thruſt them out of his land, whither ſhould they go, like a ſort of vagabonds and runnagates? This title and name of mercy would that tyrant have, and ſo did his flattering falſe Courtiers ſpread his vaine praiſe abroad. Have not we the like examples now adayes? O that I had now time to write certaine things pertaining to our Wincheſters mercy! How mercifull he hath been to me and to my good brethren I will not ſpeak of, neither yet unto the Duke of Suffolks moſt innocent daughter, and to her as innocent huſband. For although their fathers were faulty, yet had their youth and lack of experience deſerved a pardon by all true mercifull mens iudgements. O that I had time to paint out this matter aright! but there be many alive that can do it much better when I am dead. Pharaoh had his Plagues, and his moſt flouriſhing land was by counterfeit mercy, which was indeed right cruelty and abominable tyranny, utterly deſtroyed. And think ye that bloody butcherly Biſhop of Wincheſter and his moſt bloody brethren ſhall eſcape? Or that England ſhall for their offences, and ſpecially for the maintenance of their idolatry, and wilfull following of them, not abide a great brunt? yes undoubtedly.

Gods iuſtice upon his enemies and perſecutors.

Wincheſters mercy.

If God looke not mercifully upon England, the ſeeds of utter deſtruction are ſowne in it already by theſe hypocriticall tyrants, and Antichriſtian Prelates, Popiſh Papiſts, and double traytors to their naturall Countrey. And yet they ſpeake of mercy, of bleſſing, of the catholike Church, of unity, of power, and ſtrengthening of the Realme. This double diſſimulation will ſhew it ſelfe one day when the plague commeth, which will undoubtedly light upon thoſe crowne-ſhorne captaines, and that ſhortly, whatſoever the godly and the poore Realme ſuffer in the meane while by Gods good ſufferance and will.

Spite of Nebuchadonoſors beard, and maugre his heart, the captive, thrall, and miſerable Iewes muſt come home againe, and have their city and temple builded up againe by Zorobabel, Eſdras, and Nehemias, &c. And the whole Kingdome of Babylon muſt goe to ruine, and be taken in of ſtrangers, the Perſians and the Medes. So ſhall the diſperſed Engliſh flock of Chriſt be brought againe into their former eſtate, or to a better, I truſt in the Lord God, than it was in innocent King Edwards dayes, and our bloody Babylonicall Biſhops; and the whole crowne-ſhorne company brought to utter ſhame, rebuke, ruine, decay, and deſtruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not ſuffer for ever their abominable lying falſe doctrine, their hypocriſie, blood-thirſt, whoredome, idleneſſe, their peſtilent life, pampered in all kind of pleaſure, their thraſonicall boaſting pride, their malicious, envious, and poyſoned ſtomacks, which they beare towards his poore and miſerable Chriſtians. Peter truly warneth, that If judgement beginneth at the houſe of God, what ſhall bee the end of them that beleeve not the Goſpell? If the righteous ſhall ſcant be ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinnefull appeare? Some ſhall have their puniſhment here in this world and in the world to come; and they that do eſcape in this world, ſhall not eſcape everlaſting damnation. This ſhall be your ſawce, O ye wicked Papiſts, make ye merry here as long as ye may.

February.

M. Rogers warned to prepare for death.

M. Rogers degraded.

M. Rogers could not be ſuffered of Boner to ſpeak to his wife before his burning.

M. Rogers brought to Smithfield.

After that John Rogers, as ye have heard, had beene long and ſtraightly impriſoned, lodged in Newgate amongſt theeves, often examined, and very uncharitably intreated, and at length unjuſtly and moſt cruelly by wicked Wincheſter condemned: the fourth of February, in the yeere of our Lord 1555. being munday in the morning, he was warned ſuddenly, by the keepers wife of Newgate, to prepare himſelfe to the fire: who then being ſound aſleepe, ſcarce with much ſhogging could be awaked. At length being raiſed and waked, and bid to make haſte, then, ſaid he, if it be ſo, I need not to tie my points: and ſo was had downe, firſt to Boner to be degraded. That done, he craved of Boner but one petition. And Boner aſking what that ſhould be: nothing (ſaid he) but that he might talk a few words with his wife before his burning. But that could not be obtained of him. Then ſaid he, you declare your charity what it is: and ſo he was brought into Smithfield by Maſter Cheſter, and Maſter Woodrofe, then Sheriffs of London, there to be burnt; where he ſhewed moſt conſtant patience, not uſing many words, for he could not be permitted, but only exhorting the people conſtantly to remaine in that faith and true doctrine which he before had taught, and they had learned, and for the confirmation whereof he was not onely content patiently to ſuffer and beare all ſuch bitterneſſe and cruelty as had been ſhewed him, but alſo moſt gladly to reſigne up his life, and to give his fleſh to the conſuming fire, for the teſtimony of the ſame.

The copie of M. Rogers examinations by Gods providence preſerved.

Briefly, and in few words to comprehend the whole order of his life, doings and martyrdome: firſt, this godly M. Rogers was committed to priſon, as is aboveſaid, and there continued a yeere and halfe. In priſon he was merry, and earneſt in all he went about. He wrote much; his examinations he penned with his own hand, which elſe had never come to light. Wherein is to be noted by the way a memorable working of Gods providence. Ye heard a little above how M. Rogers craved of Boner, going to his burning, that he might ſpeake a few words before with his wife, which could not be granted. What theſe words were, which he had to ſay to his wife, it is for no man certainly to define. Likely it may be ſuppoſed that his purpoſe was, amongſt other things, to ſignifie unto her of the book written of his examinations and anſwers, which he had privily hid in a ſecret corner of the priſon where he lay. But where mans power lacketh, ſee how Gods providence worketh. For notwithſtanding that during the time of his impriſonment, ſtrait ſearch there was to take away his letters and writings; yet after his death his wife, and one of her ſonnes called Daniel, comming into the place where he lay, to ſeek for his books and writings, and now ready to go away; it chanced her ſonne aforenamed, caſting his eye aſide to ſpie a black thing, (for it had a blacke cover, belike becauſe it ſhould not be knowne) lying in a blinde corner under a paire of ſtaires. Who, willing his mother to ſee what it was, found it to be the book written with his own hand, containing theſe his examinations and anſwers, with other matter above ſpecified. In the later end whereof, this alſo was contained; which becauſe it concerneth a Propheticall forewarning of things pertaining to the Church, I thought to place the ſame his words, as they be there written, which are theſe: If God look not mercifully upon England, the ſeeds of utter deſtruction are ſowne in it already by theſe hypocriticall tyrants, and Antichriſtian Prelates, Popiſh Papiſts, and double traitors to their naturall Countrey. And yet they ſpeake of mercy, of bleſſing, of the catholike Church, of unity, of power, and ſtrengthning of the Realm. This double diſſimulation will ſhew it ſelfe one day when the plague commeth, which undoubtedly will light upon thoſe crowne-ſhorne captains, and that ſhortly, whatſoever the godly and the poore Realme ſuffer in the meane while by Gods ſufferance and will.

M. Rogers ſeemeth to propheſie here of England, and that truly.

He meaneth here of the returne of the Exiles into England.

Spite of Nebuchadonoſors beard, and maugre his heart, the captive, thrall, and miſerable Iewes muſt come home againe, and have their City and Temple builded up againe by Zorobabel, Eſdras, and Nehemias, &c. And the whole Kingdome of Babylon muſt go to ruine and be taken of ſtrangers, the Perſians and Medes. So ſhall the diſperſed Engliſh flock of Chriſt be brought againe into their former eſtate, or to a better, I truſt in the Lord God, than it was in innocent King Edwards dayes; and our bloody Babylonicall Biſhops, and the whole crowne-ſhorne company brought to utter ſhame, rebuke, ruine, decay, and deſtruction. For God cannot, and undoubtedly will not ſuffer for ever their abominable lying falſe doctrine, their hypocriſie, blood-thirſt, whoredome, idleneſſe, their peſtilent like pampered in all kinde of pleaſure, their thraſonicall boaſting pride, their malicious, envious, and poyſoned ſtomacks, which they beare towards his poore and miſerable Chriſtians. Peter truly warneth, that If judgement beginneth in the houſe of God, what ſhall bee the end of them that beleeve not the Goſpell? If the righteous ſhall ſcant bee ſaved, where ſhall the ungodly and ſinnefull appeare? Some ſhall have their puniſhment here in this world and in the world to come; and they that doe eſcape in this world, ſhall not eſcape everlaſting damnation. This ſhall be your ſawce, O ye wicked Papiſts, make ye merry as long as ye may.

1 Pet. 4.

M. Rogers propheſieth of the returne of the Goſpell.

Furthermore, amongſt other words and ſayings, which may ſeeme Prophetically to be ſpoken of him, this alſo may be added, and is notoriouſly to be marked, that he ſpake, being then in priſon, to the Printer of this preſent Booke, who then alſo was laid up for like cauſe of Religion: Thou, ſaid he, ſhalt live to ſee the alteration of this Religion, and the Goſpell to be freely preached againe: and therefore have me commended to my brethren, as well in exile as others, and bid them be circumſpect in diſplacing the Papiſts, and putting good Miniſters into Churches, or elſe their end will be worſe than ours. And for lack of good Miniſters to furniſh Churches, his device was (M. Hooper alſo agreeing to the ſame) that for every ten Churches ſome one good and learned ſuperintendent ſhould be appointed, which ſhould have under him faithfull Readers, ſuch as might well be got, ſo that Popiſh Prieſts ſhould cleane be put out, and the Biſhop once a yeere to overſee the profiting of the Pariſhes; and if the Miniſter did not his duty, as well in profiting himſelfe in his booke, and his Pariſhioners in good inſtructions, ſo that they may be trained by little and little to give a reckoning how they do profit, then he to be expelled, and another put in his place: And the Biſhop to do the like with the ſuperintendent: This was his counſell and requeſt: Shewing moreover, and proteſting in his commendations to his brethren by the Printer aforeſaid, that if they would not ſo doe, their end, he ſaid, would be worſe than theirs.

M. Rogers counſell in placing good Miniſters.

A note touching Prieſts caps.

Over and beſides divers other things touching M. Rogers, this is not to be forgotten, how in the days of King Edward the ſixth, there was a controverſie among the Biſhops and Clergy, for wearing of Prieſts caps, and other attyre belonging to that order. M. Rogers being one of that number which never went otherwiſe than in a round cap, during all the time of King Edward, affirmed that he would not agree to that decreement of uniformity, but upon this condition, that if they would needs have ſuch an uniformity of wearing the cap, tippet, &c. then it ſhould alſo be decreed withall, that the Papiſts, for a difference betwixt them and others, ſhould be conſtrained to weare upon their ſleeves a chalice with an hoaſt upon it. Whereunto if they would conſent, he would agree to the other, otherwiſe he would not, he ſaid, conſent to the ſetting forth of the ſame, nor ever weare the cap, as indeed he never did.

Proviſion by M. Rogers for the priſoners.

To proceed now further in deſcribing the doings of this man, during the time while he remained priſoner in Newgate, he was to the priſoners beneficiall and liberall; for whom he had thus deviſed, that he with his fellowes ſhould have but one meale a day, they paying notwithſtanding for the charges of the whole; the other meale ſhould be given to them that lacked on the other ſide of the priſon. But Alexander their keeper, a ſtrait man, and a right Alexander, a Copperſmith indeed, of whoſe doings more ſhall be ſaid God willing hereafter, would in no caſe ſuffer that. The Sunday before he ſuffered, he drunk to M. Hooper, being then underneath him, and bade them commend him unto him, and tell him, there was never little fellow better would ſtick to a man, than he would ſtick to him, preſuppoſing they ſhould both be burned together, although it happened otherwiſe: for M. Rogers was burnt alone. And thus much briefly concerning the life and ſuch acts of M. Rogers, as I thought worthy noting.

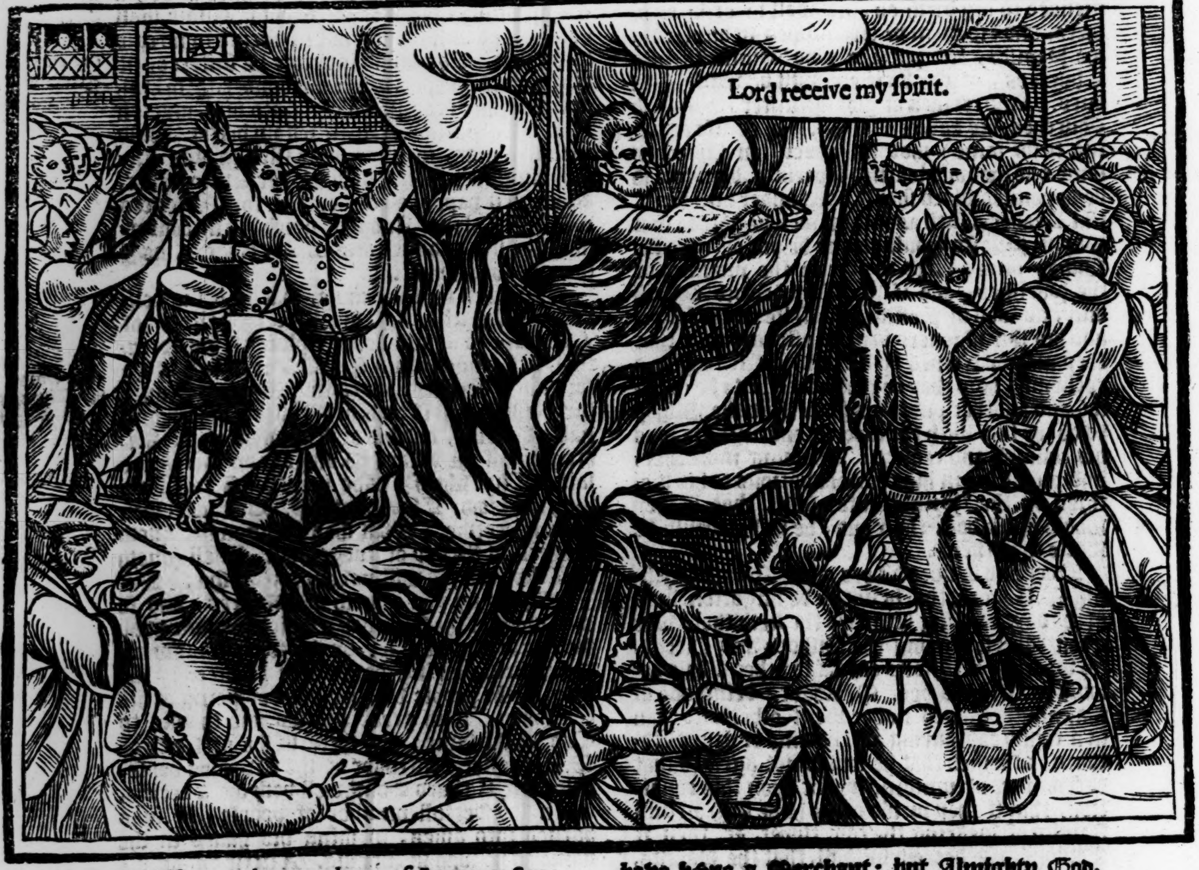
Alexander Andrew, Goaler of Newgate, compared to Alexander the Copperſmith.

The words of M. Woodroofe to M. Rogers.

Now when the time came, that he being delivered to the Sheriffs, ſhould be brought out of Newgate to Smithfield the place of his execution, firſt came to him M. Woodroofe one of the foreſaid Sheriffes, and calling M. Rogers unto him, aſked him if he would revoke his abominable doctrine, and his evill opinion of the Sacrament of the Altar. M. Rogers anſwered and ſaid: That which I have preached I will ſeale with my blood. Then, quoth M. Woodroofe, thou art an heretike. That ſhall be knowne, quoth Rogers, at the day of iudgement. Well (quoth M. Woodroofe) I will never pray for thee. But I will pray for you, quoth M. Rogers, and ſo was brought the ſame day, which was munday the fourth of February, by the Sheriffs toward Smithfield, ſaying the Pſalme Miſerere by the way, all the people wonderfully reioycing at his conſtancy, with great praiſes and thanks to God for the ſame: and there in the preſence of M. Rocheſter, controller of the Queenes houſehold, Sir Richard Southwell, both the Sheriffs, and a wonderfull number of people, he was burned into aſhes, waſhing his hands in the flame as he was in burning. A little before his burning at the ſtake, his pardon was brought if he would have recanted; but he utterly refuſed it. He was the firſt Protomartyr of all the bleſſed company that ſuffered in Queene Maries time, that gave the firſt adventure upon the fire. His wife and children, being xi. in number, x. able to go, and one ſucking on her breaſt, met him by the way as he went towards Smithfield: this ſorrowfull ſight of his owne fleſh and blood could nothing move him, but that he conſtantly and cheerfully tooke his death with wonderfull patience, in the defence and quarrell of Chriſts Goſpell.

M. Rogers refuſeth his pardon.

The burning of Maſter John Rogers, Vicar of S. Pulchers, and Reader of S. Pauls in London.



Lord receive my ſpirit.

The hiſtory and martyrdome of Laurence Saunders, burned for the defence of the Goſpell, at Coventry, Anno 1555. February 8.

Anno 1555

AFter that Quéene Mary, by publike Proclamation in the firſt yéere of her Reigne, had inhibited the ſyncere preaching of Gods holy word, as is before declared, divers godly Miniſters of the word which had the cure and charge of ſouls committed to them, did notwithſtanding, according to their bounden duty, féed their flock faithfully, not as Preachers authorized by publike authority (as the godly order of the Realme was in the happy dayes of bleſſed King Edward) but as the private Paſtors of particular flockes, among whom Laurence Saunders was one, a man of worſhipfull parentage. His bringing up was in learning from his youth, in places méet for that purpoſe, as namely, in the Schoole of Eaton. From whence (according to the manner there uſed) he was choſen to go to the Kings Colledge in Cambridge, where he continued ſchollar of the Colledge thrée whole yéeres, and there profited in knowledge & learning very much for that time: ſhortly after that, he did forſake the Univerſity, and went to his parents, upon whoſe advice he minded to become a Merchant, for yͤ his mother, who was a gentlewoman of good eſtimation, being left a widow, and having a good portion for him among his other brethren, ſhe thought to ſet him up wealthily, and ſo he comming up to London was bound prentice with a Merchant, named Sir William Cheſter (who afterward chanced to be Sheriffe of London the ſame yéer that Saunders was burned at Coventry.) Thus by the minde of his friends Laurence ſhould néeds have béene a Merchant; but Almighty God, which hath his ſecret working in all things, ſaw better for his ſervant, as it fell out in the end: for although that Saunders was bound by faſt Indenture to play the Merchant, yet the Lord ſo wrought inwardly in his heart, that he could finde no liking in that vocation: ſo that when his other fellowes were buſily occupied about that kinde of trade, he would ſecretly withdraw himſelfe into ſome privy corner, and there fall into his ſolitary lamentations, as one not liking with that kinde and trade of life.

The ſtory of Laurence Saunders, a martyr.

Schollers are taken out of Eaton Colledge into the Kings Colledge at Cambridge.

M. Saunders firſt bound prentice with M. Cheſter.

It happened that his Maſter, being a good man, and hearing his prentice thus in his ſecret prayers inwardly to mourne by himſelfe, called him unto him, to know what the cauſe was of that his ſolitarineſſe and lamentation: who then perceiving his minde nothing to fantaſie that kinde of life, (for ſo Saunders declared unto him) and perceiving alſo his whole purpoſe to be bent to the ſtudy of his book, and ſpirituall contemplation, like a good man directed his letters incontinently unto his friends, and giving him his Indenture ſo ſet him free, and thus Laurence Saunders being raviſhed with the love of learning, and eſpecially with the reading of Gods word, tarried not long time in the traffike of Merchandize, but ſhortly returned to Cambridge againe to his ſtudy, where he began to couple to the knowledge of the Latine, the ſtudy of the Gréek tongue, wherein he profited in ſmall time very much: Therewith alſo he ioyned the ſtudy of the Hebrew. Then gave he himſelfe wholly to the ſtudy of the holy Scripture, to furniſh himſelfe to the office of a Preacher.

M. Saunders appointed to the trade of Merchandiſe, could not away with that kind of life.

M. Saunders from merchandiſe returneth to his ſtudy.

In ſtudy he was diligent and painfull, in godly life he declared the fruits of a well exerciſed conſcience, he prayed often & with great fervor, and in

in his prayers as alſo at other times, he had his part of ſpirituall exerciſes, which his hearty ſighing to God declared. In which when any ſpeciall aſſault did come, by prayer he felt preſent reliefe: then was his company marvellous comfortable. For as his exerciſes were ſpeciall teachings, ſo in the end they proved ſingular conſolations: wherein he became ſo expert, that within ſhort ſpace he was able to comfort others which were in any affliction, by the conſolation wherewith the Lord did comfort him. Thus continued he in the Univerſity, till he proceeded maſter of Art, and a long ſpace after.

In the beginning of King Edwards reigne, when Gods true Religion was begun to be reſtored, after licence obtained, hee began to preach, and was ſo well liked of them which then had authority, that they appointed him to read a Divinity Lecture in the Colledge at Fothringa, where by doctrine and life he edified the godly, drew many ignorant to Gods true knowledge, and ſtopped the mouth of the adverſaries. He married about that time, and in the married eſtate led a life unblameable before all men. The College of Fothringa being diſſolved, he was placed to be reader in the minſter at Lichfield: where he ſo behaved himſelfe in teaching and living, that the very adverſaries did give him a full report as well of learning, as of much godlineſſe. After a certaine ſpace, he departed from Lichfield to a benefice in Leiceſter ſhire, called Churchlangton, whereupon he keeping reſidence taught diligently, and kept a liberall houſe. From thence he was orderly called to take a benefice in the City of London, named Alhallowes in Breadſtreet. Then minded he to give over his Cure in the countrey: and therfore after he had taken poſſeſſion of his benefice in London, he departed from London into the countrey, cleerely to diſcharge himſelfe thereof. And even at that time began the broyle about the claime that Queene Mary made to the Crowne, by reaſon whereof he could not accompliſh his purpoſe.

M. Saunders Reader in the Colledge of Fothringa.

Saunders after Reader at Lichfield.

The conſtant purpoſe of M. Saunders.

In this trouble, and even among the beginners of it, (ſuch I meane as were for the Queen) he preached at Northampton, nothing medling with the State, but boldly uttered his conſcience againſt Popiſh doctrine and Antichriſts damnable errors, which were like to ſpring up againe in England, as a iuſt plague for the little love which the Engliſh Nation did beare to the bleſſed word of God, which had been ſo plentifully offered unto them. The Queenes men, which were there and heard him, were highly diſpleaſed with him for his ſermon, and for it kept him among them as priſoner. But partly for love of his brethren and friends, which were chiefe doers for the Queene among them, partly becauſe there was no Law broken by his preaching, they diſmiſſed him. He, ſeeing the dreadfull dayes at hand, inflamed with the fire of godly zeale, preached with diligence at both thoſe benefices, as time could ſerve him, ſeeing he could reſigne neither of them now, but into the hand of a Papiſt.

Thus paſſed he to and fro preaching, untill that Proclamation was put forth, of which mention is made in the beginning. At which time he was at his benefice in the Countrey, where he (notwithſtanding the Proclamation aforeſaid) taught diligently Gods truth, confirming the people therein, and arming them againſt falſe doctrine, untill he was not onely commanded to ceaſe, but alſo with force reſiſted, ſo that he could not proceed there in preaching. Some of his friends, perceiving ſuch fearefull menacings, counſelled him to flie out of the realme, which he refuſed to do. But ſeeing he was with violence kept from doing good in that place, he returned towards London to viſit the flocke, of which he had there the charge.

M. Saunders refuſeth to flie the Realme.

On ſaturday, the 14. of October, as he was comming nigh to the City of London, ſir John Mordant, a Counſellor to Queene Mary, did overtake him, and aſked him whither he went. I have (ſaid Saunders) a Cure in London, and now I goe to inſtruct my people according to my duty. If you will follow my counſell, quoth maſter Mordant, let them alone, and come not at them. To this Saunders anſwered: how ſhall I then be diſcharged before God, if any be ſick, and deſire conſolation, if any want good counſell and need inſtruction, or if any ſhould ſlip into error and receive falſe doctrine? Did you not, quoth Mordant preach ſuch a day, and named the day, in Breadſtreet in London? Yes verily, ſaid Saunders, that ſame is my Cure. I heard you my ſelf, quoth maſter Mordant: and will you preach now there againe? If it pleaſe you, ſaid Saunders, to morrow you may heare me again in that ſame place, where I will confirme by the authority of Gods word, all that I ſaid then, and whatſoever before that time I taught them.

M. Mordant diſſwadeth Laurence Saunders from preaching

I would counſell you (quoth the other) not to preach. If you can and will forbid me by lawfull authority, then muſt I obey, ſaid Saunders. Nay (quoth he) I will not forbid you, but I doe give you counſell. And thus entred they both the city, and departed each from other. M. Mordant, of an uncharitable minde, went to give warning to Boner Biſhop of London, that Saunders would preach in his Cure the next day. Saunders reſorted to his lodging, with a minde bent to doe his duty. Where becauſe he ſeemed to be ſomewhat troubled, one which was there about him, aſked him how he did. In very deed (ſaith he) I am in priſon, till I be in priſon: meaning that his minde was unquiet untill he had preached, and that then he ſhould have quietnes of minde, though he were put in priſon.

M. Saunders in priſon, till he was in priſon.

The next day, which was ſunday in the forenoone, he made a ſermon in his Pariſh, entreating on that place which Paul writeth to the Corinthians: I have coupled you to one man, that ye ſhould make your ſelves a chaſte virgin unto Chriſt. But I feare leſt it come to paſſe, that as the Serpent beguiled Eve; even ſo your wits ſhould be corrupt from the ſingleneſſe which ye had towards Chriſt. He recited a ſumme of that true Chriſtian doctrine, through which they were coupled to Chriſt, to receive of him free iuſtification through faith in his blood. The Papiſticall doctrine he compared to the ſerpents deceiving: and leſt they ſhould be deceived by it, he made a compariſon betweene the voice of God, and the voice of the Popiſh ſerpent; deſcending to more particular declaration thereof, as it were to let them plainly ſee the difference that is betweene the order of the Church ſervice ſet forth by King Edward in the Engliſh tongue, and comparing it with the Popiſh ſervice then uſed in the Latine tongue.

M. Saunders Sermon at Alhallowes. 2 Cor. 11.

The firſt he ſaid was good, becauſe it was according to the word of God, Corinth. 14. and the order of the Primitive Church. The other he ſaid was evill, and though in that evill be intermingled ſome good Latine words; yet was it but as a little honey or milk mingled with a great deale of poyſon, to make them drink up all. This was the ſumme of his ſermon.

In the afternoone he was ready in his Church to have given another exhortation to his people. But the Biſhop of London interrupted him by ſending an officer for him. This officer charged him, upon the paine of diſobedience and contumacie, forthwith to come to the Biſhop his Maſter. Thus, as the Apoſtles were brought out of the Temple, where they were teaching, unto the Rulers of the Prieſts; ſo was Laurence Saunders brought before this Biſhop in his Palace of London, who had in his company the aforenamed Sir John Mordant and ſome of his Chaplaines. The Biſhop laid no more to Laurence Saunders charge but treaſon for breaking the Queenes Proclamation, hereſie and ſedition for his Sermon.

M. Saunders apprehended by B. Boner at his Sermon.

Sir John Mordant accuſer of Laurence Saunders.

The treaſon and ſedition his charity was content to let ſlip, untill another time. But an heretike he would now prove him, and all thoſe, he ſaid, which did teach and beleeve that the adminiſtration of the Sacraments and all orders of the Church are moſt pure, which doe come moſt nigh to the order of the primitive Church. For the Church was then but in her infancie, and could not abide that perfection which was afterward to be furniſhed with ceremonies. And for this cauſe Chriſt himſelfe, and after him the Apoſtles, did in many things beare with the rudeneſſe of that Church. To this Laurence Saunders anſwered with the authority of S. Auguſtine, That Ceremonies were even from the beginning invented and ordained for the rude infancy and weak infirmity of man, and therefore it was a token of the more perfection of the primitive Church, that it had few ceremonies, and of the rudeneſſe of the Church Papiſticall, becauſe it had ſo many ceremonies, partly blaſphemous, partly unſavoury and unprofitable.

Preaching of Gods word, made treaſon with Biſhop Boner.

Ceremonies invented onely for weake infirmity.

After much talke had concerning this matter, the biſhop willed him to write what he beleeved of Tranſubſtantiation. Laurence Saunders did ſo, ſaying; My Lord, ye doe ſeeke my blood, and ye ſhall have it: I pray God that ye may be ſo baptized in it, that ye may thereafter loath blood-ſucking, and become a better man. This writing the Biſhop kept for his purpoſe, even to cut the writers throat, as ſhall appear hereafter. The Biſhop, when he had his will, ſent Laurence Saunders to the Lord Chancellor, as Annas ſent Chriſt to Caiphas: and like favour found Saunders as Chriſt his Maſter did before him. But the Chancellor being not at home, Saunders was conſtrained to tarry for him by the ſpace of foure houres, in the utter chamber, where he found a Chaplaine of the Biſhops very merrily diſpoſed, with certaine Gentlemen playing at the Tables, with divers others of the ſame family or houſe occupied there in the ſame exerciſe.

B. Boner ſeeketh the blood of M. Saunders.

M. Saunders ſent from Annas to Caiphas.

All this time Saunders ſtood very modeſtly and ſoberly at the ſcreene or cupboord, bare headed, ſir John Mordant his guide or leader walking up and down by him: who (as I ſaid before) was then one of the Councell. At the laſt the Biſhop returned from the Court, whom, as ſoone as he was entred, a great many ſuters met and received: ſo that before he could get out of one houſe into another, half an houre was paſſed. At the laſt he came into the chamber where Saunders was, and went thorow into another chamber: where in the meane way Saunders leader gave him a writing, containing the cauſe, or rather the accuſation of the ſaid Saunders, which when he had peruſed, where is the man, ſaid the Biſhop? Then Saunders, being brought forth to the place of examination, firſt moſt lowly and meekly kneeled downe, and made curteſie before the table where the Biſhop did ſit; unto whom the Biſhop ſpake on this wiſe:

How happeneth it, ſaid he, that, notwithſtanding the Queens Proclamation to the contrary, you have enterpriſed to preach?

Wincheſters talk with M. Saunders.

Anno 1555.

Saunders denied not that he did preach: ſaying, that forſomuch as he ſaw the perillous times now at hand, he did but (according as he was admoniſhed, and warned by Ezechiel the Prophet) exhort his flock and pariſhioners to perſevere and ſtand ſtedfaſtly in the doctrine which they had learned, ſaying alſo, That he was moved and pricked forward thereunto by the place of the Apoſtle, wherein he was commanded rather to obey God than man; and moreover, that nothing more moved or ſtirred him thereunto, than his own conſcience.

M. Saunders anſwer to Ste. Wincheſter.

A goodly conſcience ſurely, ſaid the Biſhop. This your conſcience could make our Queene a baſtard, or miſbegotten: Would it not, I pray you?

Wincheſter.

Then ſaid Saunders, We, ſaid he, doe not declare or ſay, that the Queene is baſe, or miſbegotten, neither goe about any ſuch matter. But for that let them care whoſe writings are yet in the hands of men, witneſſing the ſame, not without the great reproach and ſhame of the Author: privily taunting the biſhop himſelf, which had before (to get the favour of Henry the viii.) written and ſet forth in print a book of true obedience, wherein he had openly declared Queene Mary to be a baſtard. Now maſter Saunders going forwards in his purpoſe, ſaid: We do only profeſſe and teach the ſyncerity and purity of the word; the which albeit it be now forbidden us to preach with our mouths, yet notwithſtanding I doe not doubt, but that our blood hereafter ſhall manifeſt the ſame. The Biſhop being in this ſort pretily nipped and touched, ſaid: Carry away this frenzie foole to priſon. Unto whom M. Saunders anſwered, that he did give God thanks, which had given him at the laſt a place of reſt and quietneſſe, whereas he might pray for the Biſhops converſion.

Note how Wincheſter confuteth M. Saunders.

Furthermore, he that did lie with him afterwards in priſon, in the ſame bed, reported that he heard him ſay, that even in the time of his examination he was wonderfully comforted, inſomuch as not onely in ſpirit, but alſo in body, he received a certaine taſte of that holy communion of Saints, whileſt a moſt pleaſant refreſhing did iſſue from every part and member of the body unto the ſeat and place of the heart, and from thence did ebbe and flow to and fro unto all the parts againe.

A notable example of the Lord comforting his ſervants in their troubles.

This Saunders continued in priſon a whole yeere and three moneths. In all which ſpace he ſent divers letters to divers men; as one to Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer; and other to his wife, and alſo to others, certifying them both of the publike calamity of the time, and alſo of his private afflictions, and of ſundry his conflicts with his adverſaries: as in writing to his friend he ſpeaketh of Weſton conferring with him in priſon, whereof ye ſhall heare anon (by the leave of the Lord) as followeth in the ſtory. In the meane time the Chancellor, after this little talk with maſter Saunders (as is aforeſaid) ſent him to the priſon of the Marſhalſey, &c. For the Caiphas (Wincheſter I meane) did nothing but bait him with ſome of his curriſh eloquence, and ſo committed him to the priſon of the Marſhalſey, where he was kept priſoner one whole yeere & a quarter. But of his cauſe & eſtate, thou ſhalt now ſee what L. Saunders himſelfe did write.

A parcell of a letter of Laurence Saunders ſent to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, as an anſwer to certaine things wherewith he had before charged him.

Touching the cauſe of my impriſonment, I doubt whether I have broken any law or proclamation. In my doctrine I did not, foraſmuch as at that time ir was permitted by the Proclamation to uſe, according to our conſciences,

A fragment of M. Saunders letter.

Anno 1555.

He meaneth the Proclamation, of which mention is made before.

Satis peccavit qui reſiſtere non potuit.

ſciences, ſuch ſervice as was then eſtabliſhed. My doctrine was then agreeable unto my conſcience, and the ſame ſervice then uſed. The act which I did (he meaneth publike teaching of Gods word in his owne Pariſh, called Alhallowes in Bread-ſtreete in the City of London) was ſuch as being indifferently weighed, ſounded to no breaking of the Proclamation, or at the leaſt no wilfull breaking of it, foraſmuch as I cauſed no bell to bee rung, neither occupied I any place in the Pulpit, after the order of Sermons or Lectures. But bee it that I did breake the Proclamation, this long time of continuance in priſon may bee thought to bee more than a ſufficient puniſhment for ſuch a fault.

Act. 24.

Touching the charging of mee with my Religion, I ſay with Saint Paul; this I confeſſe, that after the way which they call Hereſie, ſo worſhip I the God of my fore-fathers, believing all things which are written in the Law and the Prophets, and have hope towards God, &c. And herein ſtudie I to have alway a cleere conſcience towards God and towards men: ſo that God I call to witneſſe, I have a conſcience. And this my conſcience is not grounded upon vaine fantaſie, but upon the infallible verity of Gods word, with the witneſſing of his choſen Church agreeable unto the ſame.

A good teſtimony of a good conſcience.

John 10.

It is an eaſie thing for them, which take Chriſt for their true Paſtor, and bee the very ſheepe of his paſture, to diſcerne the voice of their true ſhepheard, from the voice of wolves, hirelings, and ſtrangers: foraſmuch as Chriſt ſaith; My ſheepe heare my voice: yea, and thereby they ſhall have the gift to know the right voice of the true ſhepheard, and ſo to follow him, and to avoide the contrary, as hee alſo ſaith; The ſheepe follow the ſhepheard, for they know his voice: A ſtranger they will not follow, but will flye from him; for they know not the voice of a ſtranger. Such inward inſpiration doth the Holy Ghoſt put into the children of God, being indeed taught of God, but otherwiſe unable to underſtand the true way of their ſalvation. And albeit that the Wolfe (as Chriſt ſaith) commeth in ſheepes cloathing, yet he ſaith; By their fruits yee ſhall know them. For there bee certaine fruits whereby the Wolfe is bewrayed, notwithſtanding that otherwiſe, in ſundry ſorts of devout holineſſe in outward ſhew, he ſeemeth never ſo ſimple a ſheep. That the Romiſh Religion is ravening and wolviſh, it is apparent in three principall points:

Mat. 7.

How the wolfe is knowne from the true Shepheard.

The inconvenience of the Romiſh religion in 3. points.

Firſt, it robbeth God of his due and only honour.

Secondly, it taketh away the true comfort of conſcience, in obſcuring, or rather burying of Chriſt, and his office of ſalvation.

Thirdly, it ſpoileth God of his true worſhip and ſervice in ſpirit and truth, appointed in his preſcript commandements, and driveth men unto that inconvenience, againſt the which Chriſt with the Prophet Eſay doth ſpeak ſharply; This people honoureth we with their lips, but their heart is far from me. They worſhip mee in vaine, teaching the doctrine and precepts of men. And in another place; Ye caſt aſide the commandement of God, to maintain your own traditions.

Eſay 26.

Mat. 25.

Wherefore I in conſcience weighing the Romiſh Religion, and by indifferent diſcuſſing thereof, finding the foundation unſtedfaſt, and the building thereupon but vaine: and on the other ſide having my conſcience framed after a right and uncorrupt religion, ratified and fully eſtabliſhed by the word of God, and the conſent of his true Church, I neither may, nor doe intend by Gods gracious aſſiſtance, to be pulled one jot from the ſame; no, though an Angell out of heaven ſhould preach another Goſpell than that which I have received of the Lord.

And although that for lacke either of ſuch deepe knowledge and profound judgement, or of expedite uttering of that I doe know and judge, as is required in an excellent Clerke, I ſhall not bee able ſufficiently to anſwer, for the convincing of the gaine-ſayer; yet nevertheleſſe this my proteſtation ſhall be of me premiſed, that for the reſpect of the grounds and cauſes before conſidered, albeit I cannot “ explicita fide, as they call it, conceive all that is to be conceived, neither can diſcuſſe all that is to be diſcuſſed, nor can effectually expreſſe all that can be expreſſed in the diſcourſe of the doctrine of this moſt true Religion, whereunto I am profeſſed: yet doe I binde my ſelfe, as by my humble ſimplicity, ſo by my fidem “ implicitam; that is, by faith in generality (as they call it) to wrap my beliefe in the credit of the ſame, that no authority of that Romiſh Religion repugnant thereunto, ſhall by any meanes remove me from the ſame, though it may hap that our adverſaries will labour to beguile us with inticing words, and ſeek to ſpoile us through Philoſophy and deceitfull vanity, after the traditions of men, and after the ordinances of the world, and not after Chriſt, &c.

“ Explicita fides, is when a man hath to anſwer to every point of his faith by ſufficient ground and learning.

“ Implicita fides is when a man without inſtruction in himſelf, groundeth only upon the faith of the Church, not able to render any reaſon of that which he beleeveth.

And thus much of M. Sanders letter, ſo much as remained thereof. The reſidue, becauſe it was rent away, I could not adioyne thereunto. Notwithſtanding, by this already expreſſed, it is ſufficient to underſtand how good was the cauſe and ſtate of this bleſſed child of God, being priſoner for Chriſts cauſe. For the defence whereof he wholly beſtowed and reſigned himſelf, in ſuch ſort, as he forbade his wife to ſue for his delivery: and when others of his friends had by ſuite almoſt obtained it, hee diſcouraged them, ſo that they did not follow their ſuite, as by his letter following may appeare.

A Letter of M. Sanders to his wife.

Grace, mercy, and peace in Chriſt our Lord. Entirely beloved wife, even as unto mine owne ſoule and body, ſo do I daily in my hearty prayer wiſh unto you; for I doe daily, twice at the leaſt, in this ſort remember you. And I doe not doubt (deare wife) but that both I and you, as we be written in the booke of life, ſo we ſhall together enioy the ſame everlaſtingly, through the grace and mercy of God our deare Father, in his Sonne our Chriſt. And for this preſent life, let us wholly appoint our ſelves to the will of our good God, to glorifie him either by life or by death; and even that ſame mercifull Lord make us worthy to honour him either way as pleaſeth him. Amen. I am merry, I thanke my God and my Chriſt, in whom and through whom I ſhall (I know) be able to fight a good fight, and finiſh a good courſe, and then receive the crowne which is laid up in ſtore for me, and all the true Souldiers of Chriſt. Wherefore wife, let us, in the Name of our God, fight luſtily to overcome the fleſh, the divell, and the world. What our harneſſe and weapons bee in this kinde of fight, looke in the ſixth chapter unto the Epheſians, and pray, pray, pray. I would that you make no ſuite for me in any wiſe. Thanke you know whom, for her moſt ſweet and comfortable putting me in remembrance of my iourney whither I am paſſing. God ſend us all good ſpeed, and a ioyful meeting. I have too few ſuch friends to further me in that iourney, which is indeed the greateſt friendſhip. The bleſſing of God be with you all, Amen.

A priſoner in the Lord, L. Sanders.

ded, and declared by his valiant buckling with two mighty enemies, Antichriſt and Death. To neither of theſe did he give place: but by ſuffering their malice got the victory over them both. One of the conflicts which he had with Antichriſt and his members, I have gathered out of a letter of his owne hand writing. It was with Doctor Weſton, a man, whom though I ſhould praiſe, yet would all good and godly men worthily diſpraiſe. Of this the ſaid Laurence Sanders thus writeth in a letter which hee ſent to one of his friends, which wrote to him to know what Doctor Weſton did at the Marſhalſey: wherunto he thus anſwereth.

This Doctor Weſton and M. Grimoald died both about the Coronation of Q. Elizabeth.

M. Weſton came to confer with maſter Grimoald. What hee hath concluded with him I know not: I wiſh it may be to Gods glory, Amen, Amen. M. Weſton of his gentleneſſe viſited me, and offered me friendſhip in his worldly wily ſort, &c. I had not ſo much good manners, as to take it at his hand: for I ſaid, that I was well enough, and ready cheerefully to abide the extremity, to keep there by a good conſcience. Yee be not aſleep in ſin, ſaid he. I would awake (quoth I) and do not forget Vigilate & Orate, i. Watch and Pray. What Church was there, thirty yeeres paſt? What Church was there quoth I, in Helias time? Ioane of Kent, ſaid he, was of your Church. No. quoth I, we did condemn her as an heretike.

The church goeth not alwaies by number.

Who was of your Church, ſaid he, thirty yeers paſt? Such (quoth I) as that Romiſh Antichriſt, and his rabble have reputed and condemned as Heretikes: Wickliffe, ſaid he, Thorpe, Oldcaſtle, &c. Yea, quoth I, with many moe, as ſtories do tell.

Winchesters Booke De vera obedientia.

The Biſhop of Rome hath, ſaid he, long time played a part in your railing Sermons: but now be ye ſure he muſt play another manner of part. The more pity, quoth I, and yet ſome comfort it is to ſee how that the beſt learned, wiſeſt, and holieſt of you all, have heretofore had him to play a part likewiſe in your ſermons and writings, though now to pleaſe the world, you doe turne with the Weather-cocke. Did you ever, ſaid he, heare me preach againſt the Biſhop of Rome? No (quoth I) for I never heard you preach. But I trow you have beene no wiſer than other, &c. with more about the ſacrament. Pray, pray. God keep your family, and bleſſe it.

What a bleſſed taſte Maſter Sanders had of Chriſts comforts.

What bleſſed taſte this good man had of Gods holy ſpirit, by divers and ſundry his letters may right well appeare to him that is diſpoſed to peruſe the ſame: whereof certaine we have here thought good, the Lord willing, to expreſſe; firſt beginning with that which he wrote out of the Marſhalſey to D. Cranmer, Ridley and Latimer, priſoners for the like cauſe of Chriſt in Oxford.

To the Archbiſhop Cranmer, Biſhop Ridley, and Maſter Latimer, being priſoned in Oxford.

M. Sanders writeth to Doctor Cranmer, Ridley, &c.

In my moſt humble wiſe I ſalute you moſt reverend fathers in Chriſt Ieſus our Lord. Immortall thanks and everlaſting praiſes be given unto that our Father of mercies, Which hath made us meete to bee partakers of the inheritance of Saints in light, which hath delivered us from the power of darkneſſe, and hath tranſlated us into the Kingdome of his beloved Sonne, by whom wee have redemption through his blood, &c. O moſt happy eſtate, that in an unſpeakable wiſe our life is hid with Chriſt in God: But whenſoever Chriſt which is our life ſhall ſhew himſelfe, then ſhall we alſo appeare with him in glory. In the meane ſeaſon as our ſight is but in a glaſſe, even in a darke ſpeaking, ſo wee walke in faith, not after outward appearance: the which faith although for want of outward appearance, reaſon reputeth but as vaine, yet the choſen of God doe know the effect thereof, to bring a more ſubſtantiall taſte and lively fruition of very felicity and perfect bleſſedneſſe, than reaſon can reach or ſenſes receive. By this faith we have in our poſſeſſion all good things, yea, even them which the eye hath not ſeene, and the eare hath not heard, neither hath entred the heart of man, &c. Then if hereby we do enioy all good things, it followeth that we muſt needs poſſeſſe, have and enioy you moſt reverend fathers, who be no ſmall part of our ioy and good things given us of God.

We heretofore have had the fruition of you by bodily preſence to our inexplicable benefit, praiſed be that our gracious God therfore. And now in ſprit we have the experience of unſpeakable comfort by your reverend fatherhoods, for that in this ſo glorious ſort ye become a towne ſet upon a hill, a candle upon a candleſtick, a ſpectacle unto the world, both to the Angels and unto men. So that as we to our great comfort do feele, you alſo may aſſuredly ſay with S. Paul, that the things which happen unto us, doe chance unto the great fartherance of the Goſpel; ſo that our bonds in Chriſt are manifeſt, not only throughout all the iudgement hall, but in all whole Europe, inſomuch that many of the brethren in the Lord, being incouraged through our bonds, dare more boldly ſpeak the word without feare. And herein as you have with S. Paul greatly to reioyce, ſo we reioyce with you, and we doe indeed with you give thankes for this worthy excellent favour of our God towards you, that Chriſt is thus magnified in you, yea, and hereafter ſhall bee magnified in your bodies, whether it bee through life or death. Of which thing truly wee are aſſured in our prayers for you, and miniſtring of the ſpirit. And although for our owne parts, Chriſt is unto you life, and death advantage, and that your deſire is (as indeed it were better for you) to bee looſed, and to bee with Chriſt, yet for the Church of Chriſt were it much more neceſſarie, that ye ſhould abide in the fleſh. Yea, that mercifull God, even for his Chriſts ſake, grant that yee may abide and continue for the furtherance of the Church, and reioycing of faith, that the reioycing thereof may be the more abundant through Chriſt by your reſtoring, Amen, Amen.

But if it ſeeme better otherwiſe unto the divine wiſdome, that by ſpeedy death he hath appointed you to glorifie him, the Lords will bee done. Yea, even as we doe reioyce both on your behalfes, and alſo on our owne, that God is magnified by life, and ſhould be more abundantly glad for the continuance thereof; ſo we ſhall no leſſe reioyce to have the ſame wrought by death. We ſhall give thanks for this honor given unto you, reioycing that ye are accounted worthy to ſuffer for the Name of Chriſt, and that it is given to you of God, not only that ye ſhould believe in him, but alſo that ye ſhould ſuffer for his ſake. And herein we ſhall have to reioyce in the behalfe of the Church of Chriſt, whoſe faith may be the faſter fixed upon Gods verity being confirmed with three ſuch worthy witneſſes. O thanks bee to God for this his unſpeakable gift.

And now moſt reverend Fathers, that you may underſtand the truth of us, and our eſtate how we ſtand in the Lord, I do aſſure your Reverences, partly by ẏ I perceive by ſuch of our brethren as be here in bonds with me, partly by that I hear of them which be in other places, and partly by that inward experience which I moſt

GRace and comfort in Chriſt Ieſus, our only comfort in all extreeme aſſaults, Amen.

Faine would this fleſh make ſtrange of that which the ſpirit doth embrace. Oh Lord, how loth is this loytering ſluggard to paſſe forth in Gods path? It fantaſieth forſooth much feare of fray-bugs: and were it not for the force of faith which pulleth it forward by the reine of Gods moſt ſweet promiſe, and of hope which pricketh on behind, great adventurers there were of fainting by the way. But bleſſed, and everlaſtingly bleſſed be that heavenly Father of ours, who in his Chriſt, our ſufficient Saviour, hath vouchſafed to ſhine in our hearts, that hee giveth us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Ieſus Chriſt: and having this treaſure in our earthen veſſels, that the excellency of the power might be Gods, and not ours, wee are (according to his good will) troubled on every ſide, yet are wee not without ſhift; wee are in povertie, but yet not without that is ſufficient; wee ſuffer perſecution, but are not forſaken therein; we are caſt downe, nevertheleſſe wee periſh not; we beare in the body the dying of the Lord Ieſus, that the life of Ieſus might alſo appeare in our body. Wherefore by the grace of our Chriſt we ſhall not be wearied, neither be diſmaied by this our probation through the fire of affliction, as though ſome ſtrange thing had happened unto us: but by his power we ſhall reioyce, inaſmuch as wee are partakers of Chriſts paſſion, that when he doth appeare, wee may bee merry and glad, knowing that our tribulation, which is momentany and light, prepareth an exceeding and an eternall weight of glory unto us, while we looke not on the things which are ſeene, but on the things which are not ſeene. They that ſowe in teares, ſhall reape in joy. For hee that goeth on his way weeping and ſcattering his good ſeed, ſhall doubtleſſe come againe with joy, and bring his whole ſheaves with him. Then, then ſhall the Lord wipe away all teares from our eyes. Then, then ſhall bee brought to paſſe that ſaying which is written; Death is ſwallowed up in victory. Death, where is thy ſting? Hell, where is thy victory? Yea, thankes be to God, which hath given us victory through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, Amen.

In the mean ſeaſon it remaineth for us to follow Saint Peters bidding; Let them (ſaith he) that are troubled, according to the will of God, commit their ſoules to him with well doing, as a faithfull Creator and Maker. He is our Maker, we are his handy-worke and creatures, whom now when he hath made, he doth not leave and forſake, as the Shipwright doth the ſhip, leaving it at all adventures to be toſſed in the tempeſt, but hee comforteth us his creatures, and in him we live, move and have our being: Yea, not only that, but now that he hath in his dear Chriſt repaired us, being before utterly decayed, and redeemed us, purging us unto himſelfe as a peculiar people by the blood of his Sonne, hee hath put on a moſt tender good will and fatherly affection towards us, never to forget us: unto whom by ſuch promiſes hee hath plighted ſuch faith, that though it were poſſible that the mother could forget her infant, and not be tender hearted to the child of her womb, yet may not it be that his faithful believers ſhould be forgotten of him. He biddeth us to caſt our care on him, and ſaith, that aſſuredly he careth for us. And what though for a ſeaſon he doth ſuffer us to be turmoiled in the troublous tempeſts of temptation, and ſeemeth as in much anger to have given us over, and forgotten us? let not us for all that leave off to put our truſt in him, but let us with godly Iob conclude in our ſelves and ſay; Even though he kil me, yet will I put my truſt in him. M. Sanders wife not ſuffered to ſpeake with him in priſon.

As the ſaid Maſter Sanders was in priſon, ſtreight charge was given to the Keeper that no perſon ſhould ſpeake with him. His wife yet came to the priſon gate with her young child in her armes, to viſit her husband. The Keeper, though for his charge he durſt not ſuffer her to come into the priſon, yet did hee take the little babe out of her armes, and brought him unto his father, Laurence Sanders ſeeing him, reioyced greatly, ſaying, that he reioyced more to have ſuch a boy, than he ſhould if two thouſand pound were given him. And unto the ſtanders by, which praiſed the goodlineſſe of the child, he ſaid: What man fearing God, would not loſe this life preſent, rather than by prolonging it here, he ſhould adiudge this boy to be a baſtard, his wife a whore and himſelf a whoremonger? Yea, if there were no other cauſe, for which a man of my eſtate ſhould loſe his life yet who would not give it, to avouch this child to be legitimate, and his marriage to be lawfull and holy?

I doe, good Reader, recite this ſaying, not only to let thee ſee what he thought of Prieſts marriage: but chiefly to let all married couples and parents learne to beare in their boſome true affections: naturall, but yet ſeaſoned with the true ſalt of the ſpirit, unfainedly and throughly mortified to doe the naturall workes and offices of married couples and parents, ſo long as with their doing they may keep Chriſt with a free confeſſing faith in a conſcience unſoile: otherwiſe both they and their owne lives are ſo to be forſaken, as Chriſt required them to be denied, and given in his cauſe.

M. Sanders brought to examination.

And now to come to the examination of this good man, after that the Biſhops had kept him one whole yeere and a quarter in priſon, at the length they called him, as they did the reſt of his fellowes, openly to be examined. Of the which his firſt examination the effect and purport thus followeth.

The examination of Laurence Sanders.

Praiſed be our gracious God who preſerveth his from evill, and doth give them grace to avoide all ſuch offences as might hinder his honour, or hurt his Church. Amen.

Anno 1555.

The firſt examination of M. Sanders.

Being convented before the Queens moſt honourable Councell, ſundry Biſhops being preſent, the L. Chancellor began to ſpeake in ſuch forme as followeth:

L. Chan. It is not unknowne that you have been a priſoner, for ſuch abominable hereſies and falſe doctrine as hath beene ſowne by you: and now it is thought good that mercy be ſhewed to ſuch as ſeek for it. Wherefore if now you will ſhew your ſelfe conformable, and come home again, mercy is ready. Wee muſt ſay that wee have fallen in manner all: but now we be riſen againe, and returned to the Catholike Church; you muſt riſe with us, and come home unto it. Give us forthwith a direct anſwer.

Sand. My Lord, and my Lords all, may it pleaſe your honours to give me leave to anſwer with deliberation.

Chan. Leave off your painting and pride of ſpeech: for ſuch is the faſhion of you all, to pleaſe your ſelves in your glorious words. Anſwer yea or nay.

Sand. My Lord, it is no time for me now to paint. And as for pride, there is no great cauſe why it ſhould be in me. My learning I confeſſe to be but ſmall: and as for riches or worldly wealth I have none at all. Notwithſtanding, it ſtandeth me in hand to anſwer to your demand circumſpectly, conſidering that one of theſe two extreme perils are like to fall upon me: the loſing of a good conſcience, or the loſing of this my body and life. And I tell you truth, I love both life and liberty, if I could enioy them without the hurt of my conſcience.

M. Sanders ſtandeth upon his conſcience.

Chan. Conſcience? you have none at all, but pride and arrogancy, (a) dividing your ſelves by ſingularity from the Church.

(a) Of this dividing ſpeaketh S. Paul 2 Cor. 6. & Ier. 50. Come out and divide your ſelves from them, &c.

Sand. The Lord is the knower of all mens conſciences. And where your Lordſhip layeth to my charge this dividing my ſelfe from the Church (as you doe meane, and is now among you concluded upon, as I do underſtand) I doe aſſure you, that I live in the faith wherein I have beene brought up ſince I was fourteene yeeres old: being taught that the power of the Biſhop of Rome is but uſurped, with many other abuſes ſpringing thereof. Yea, this I have received even at your hands that are here preſent, as a thing agreed upon by the Catholike Church and publike authority.

Argument. Conſcience ought never to ſtand upon things uncertaine. Time and authority be things of themſelves alwayes uncertaine: Ergo, conſcience ought never to ſtand upon time and authority.

Chan. Yea marry, but I pray you, have you received by conſent and authority all your hereſies of the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar.

Sand. My Lord, it is leſſe offence to cut off an arme, hand, or ioynt of man, than to cut off the head. For the man may live though he doe lacke an arme, hand, or ioynt, and ſo he cannot without his head. But you, all the whole ſort of you have agreed to cut off the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, whom now you will have to be the head of the Church againe.

Si non inſanit ſatis ſua ſponte, inſtigat.

B. of Lond. And if it like your Lordſhip, I have his hand againſt the bleſſed ſacrament. How ſay you to that?

Sanders. What I have written, that I have written, and farther I will not accuſe my ſelfe. Nothing have you to burden mee withall, for breaking of your lawes ſince they were in force.

Chan. Well, you be obſtinate, and refuſe liberty.

A lawfull requeſt, but it could not be heard.

Sand. My Lord, I may not buy liberty at ſuch a price: but I beſeech your honours to be means to the Queenes Maieſty for ſuch a pardon for us, that wee may live and keepe our conſciences unclogged, and we ſhall live as moſt obedient ſubiects. Otherwiſe, I muſt ſay for my ſelf, that by Gods grace I will abide the moſt extremity that man may do againſt me, rather than to doe againſt my conſcience.

To live as the Scripture leadeth us, is not to live as we liſt.

The Papiſts deſire the pope, the proteſtants Chriſt only to be their head: Now which of theſe two be moſt like the Donatiſts?

Chan. Ah Sirra, you will live as you liſt. The Donatiſts did deſire to live in ſingularity; but indeed they were not meet to live on earth: no more be you, and that ſhall you underſtand within theſe ſeven dayes; and therefore away with him.

Sand. Welcome be it, whatſoever the will of God ſhall be, either life or death. And I tell you truly, I have learned to die. But I exhort you to beware of ſhedding of innocent blood. Truly it will cry. The ſpirit of God reſt upon all your honours, Amen. This is the ſumme and form of my firſt examination, Pray, &c.

This examination being ended, the Officers led him out of the place, and ſo ſtayed untill the reſt of his fellowes were likewiſe handled, that they might have them altogether to priſon. Laurence Saunders ſtanding among the Officers, ſeeing there a great multitude of people, opened his mouth and ſpake freely, warning them all of that which by their falling from Chriſt to Antichriſt they did deſerve; and therefore exhorting them by repentance to riſe again, and to embrace Chriſt with ſtronger faith, to confeſſe him to the end, in the defiance of Antichriſt, ſin, death, and the divell: ſo ſhould they retain the Lords favour and bleſſing.

M. Sanders freely preacheth Chriſt.

The ſecond examination here lacketh.

The copies of his other examinations and excommunication came to the hands of ſuch as do keep them ſtill in ſecret. But in them as he defended Chriſts cauſe ſtoutly; ſo warned he the Phariſaicall Biſhops and Papiſts of their hypocriſie and tyranny freely, and cleered himſelf of their uniuſt quarrellings truly. After he was excommunicate and delivered to the ſecular power, he was brought by the Sheriffe of London to the priſon called the Counter, in his owne Pariſh in Breadſtreet: whereat he reioyced greatly, both becauſe hee found there a fellow priſoner, M. Cardmaker, with whom he had chriſtian and comfortable conference, and alſo becauſe out of priſon, as before out of a Pulpit, he might preach to his Pariſhioners; as by his letter hereafter ſhall be declared.

M. Sanders delivered to the ſecular power.

M. Sanders degraded by B. Boner.

The fourth day of February, the Biſhop of London did come to the priſon where he was, to degrade him: which when he had done, Laurence Sanders ſaid to him, I thank God I am none of your Church.

M. Sanders carried to Coventry.

The day following in the morning, the Sheriff of London delivered him to certaine of the Queens Guard, which were appointed to carry him to the City of Coventry, there to be burned. The firſt night they came to S. Albons, where Maſter Grimoald (a man who had more ſtore of good gifts, than of great conſtancy) did ſpeake with him.

After Maſter Sanders had given him a leſſon meet for his lightneſſe, he took a cup in his hand, and asked him if hee would pledge him of that cup, of which he would begin to him. Grimoald, by his ſhrugging and ſhrinking ſhewing what he was, ſaid; Of that cup which is in your hand I will pledge you: but of that other which you meane, I will not promiſe you. Well, ſaid Maſter Sanders, my deare Lord Jeſus Chriſt hath begun to me of a more bitter cup than mine ſhall be, and ſhall I not pledge my moſt ſweet Saviour? Yes, I hope.

A good Shoomaker of Coventry.

After they were come to Coventry, the ſame night a poore Shoomaker, which was wont to ſerve him of ſhooes, came to him after this manner, and ſaid; O my good Maſter, God ſtrengthen and comfort you. Gramercies good Shoomaker, quoth Maſter Sanders, and I pray thee to pray for me: for I am the unmeeteſt man for this high office, that ever was appointed to it: but my gracious God and deare Father is able to make me ſtrong enough. That ſame night he was put into the common Goale among other priſoners, where he ſlept little, but ſpent the night in prayer, and inſtructing of others.

M. Sanders put to the common Goale in Coventry.

February 8. M. Sanders brought to the place of execution.

The next day, which was the eighth of February, hee was led to the place of execution in the Park without the City, going in an old gowne and a ſhirt, bare-footed, and oft times fell flat on the ground, and prayed. When he was come nigh to the place, the Officer, appointed to ſee the execution done, ſaid to maſter Sanders, that he was one of them which marred the Queenes Realm with falſe doctrine and hereſie: wherefore thou haſt deſerved death, quoth he, but yet if thou wilt revoke thine hereſies, the Queen hath pardoned thee: if not, yonder fire is prepared for thee. To whom Maſter Sanders anſwered; it is not I, nor my fellow Preachers of Gods truth that have hurt the Queenes Realme, but it is your ſelfe, and ſuch as you are, which have alwaies reſiſted Gods holy word; it is you which have and do marre the Queenes Realme. I do hold no hereſies; but the doctrine of God, the bleſſed Goſpel of Chriſt; that hold I, that believe I, that have I taught, and that will I never revoke. With that, this Tormentor cryed, Away with him. And away from him went M. Sanders with a merry courage towards the fire. Hee fell to the ground, and prayed: he roſe up again, and took the ſtake to which he ſhould be chained, in his armes, and kiſſed it, ſaying: Welcome the croſſe of Chriſt, welcome everlaſting life: and being faſtned to the ſtake, and fire put to him, full ſweetly he ſlept in the Lord.

Achab accuſeth Elias for troubling Iſrael.

A compariſon between Laurence Sanders & S. Laurence.

And thus have ye the full hiſtory of Laurence Sanders, whom I may well compare to S. Laurence, or any other of the old Martyrs of Chriſts Church; both for the fervent zeale of the truth and Goſpell of Chriſt, and the moſt conſtant patience in his ſuffering, as alſo for the cruell torments that he in his patient body did ſuſtain in the flame of fire. For ſo his cruell enemies handled him, that they burned him with greene wood, and other ſmothering rather than burning fewell, which put him to much more paine, but that the grace and moſt plentifull conſolation of Chriſt, which never forſaketh his ſervants, and gave ſtrength to S. Laurence, gave alſo patience to this Laurence, above all that his torments could work againſt: which well appeared by his quiet ſtanding, and ſweet ſleeping in the fire, as is above declared.

Strength to ſtand in Chriſt commeth not of our ſelves, but it is the gift of God.

And to the intent to give the Reader to underſtand the better, what the grace of Chriſt worketh in his ſervants; and againe, how feeble and weak man is of himſelf without this grace given from above, though he ſeeme otherwiſe never ſo ſtout in himſelfe: here therefore have we added to the foreſaid ſtorie of Laurence Sanders, the communication which in the beginning of his trouble was betweene him and Doctor Pendleton, by the example whereof, ſuch as ſtand, may learne to underſtand to take heed with due feare, and not to bragge; to leane to the grace of the Lord, and not to preſume in themſelves.

A certaine communication betweene Laurence Sanders and Doctor Pendleton, in the beginning of Queene Maries time.

Talk between M. Sanders and Doctor Pendleton.

D. Pendleton a ſtout preacher of the Goſpell in King Edwards time.

AT the change of Religion in this Realme, and the beginning of Queen Maries reign, Doctor Pendleton and Maſter Sanders, men knowne to the world, not only to be learned, but alſo earneſt preachers of Gods word in the time of bleſſed King Edward, met together in the countrey, where by occaſion they were at that time, and as the caſe required (by reaſon of the perſecution that was then at hand) fell to debate what was beſt for them to do in ſo dangerous a ſeaſon. Whereunto Maſter Sanders, whether through very frailty of his weake fleſh, that was loth to taſte the bitter cup, though his ſpirit were ready thereunto; or whether it were upon the miſtruſt of his owne ſtrength, that hee might receive the greater power from above; or whether it were not for any one of the ſaid cauſes alone, but for both together, or ſuch like; ſeemed ſo fearfull and feeble ſpirited, that he ſhewd himſelf in appearance, like either to fall quite from God and his word, which he had taught, or at leaſt to betake him to his heeles, and to flye the land, rather than to ſticke to his profeſſion and abide by his tacle: ſo as Doctor Pendleton (who on the contrary ſide appeared not ſo big of body, but as bold in courage, nor ſo earneſt before in Pulpit, but as ready now to ſeale the ſame with his blood) took upon him to comfort M. Sanders all that he might, admoniſhing him, as he could do it very well, not to forſake cowardly his flock when he had moſt need to defend them from the Wolfe; neither having put his hand to Gods plough, to ſtart now aſide and give it over, nor yet (that is worſt of all) having once forſaken Antichriſt, to fall either himſelf, or ſuffer others by his example to returne to their vomit againe.

M. Sanders timerous in Chriſts cauſe at the firſt beginning.

After which and ſuch like perſwaſions bidding him be of good comfort, and to take a good heart unto him; What man, quoth he, there is a great deal more cauſe in me to be affraid than in you, foraſmuch as you ſee, I carry a greater maſſe of fleſh upon my backe than you doe, and being ſo laden with a heavier lumpe of this vile carkaſe, ought therefore of nature to be more fraile than you: and yet, ſaid he, I will ſee the uttermoſt drop of this greaſe of mine molten away, and the laſt gobbet of this fleſh conſumed to aſhes, before I will forſake God and his truth. Whereunto the other anſwering but little, and wiſhing that almighty God would give him more ſtrength than he preſently felt in himſelf, acknowledging his own weaknes, conſented notwithſtanding, though it were ſomewhat faintly, to ioyne with him in the profeſſion of the Goſpell, and ſo to go up to London, and ſet forth the ſame: whereupon they gave each other their hands.

The ſtout brags of D. Pendleton at the firſt beginning.

God giveth ſtrength where feebleneſſe is confeſſed.

Now when they were come to London, Lord, what a great change was there betweene theſe two perſons! The poore feeble faint-hearted Sanders, by the goodneſſe of almighty God, taking heart of grace to him, ſeeking the ſame in humility, boldly and ſtoutly confirmed his flocke out of the Pulpit, where his charge lay, mightily beating downe Antichriſt, and luſtily preaching Chriſt his Maſter, for the which hee afterward ſuffered moſt willingly, as is before declared. Whereas on the other ſide, Pendleton the proud (who as it appeared by the ſequele, had beene more ſtout in words than conſtant in deedes, and a greater bragger than a good Warriour) followed Peter ſo iuſtly in crackes, howſoever he did in repentance (which god only knoweth) that he came not ſo ſoon to London but he changed his tippet, and plaied the Apoſtata, preaching in ſtead of ſound doctrine nothing almoſt but errours and lies, advancing Antichriſt, and overthrowing poore Chriſt with all his maine: ſo his former boldnes come to nothing, unleſſe it were a contrary key, becomming of a faithfull paſtor a falſe runnagate, and of a true preacher a ſworn enemy to Gods everlaſting Teſtament, to the great offence of his brethren, the hurt of his flock, and the utter undoing, without Gods greater mercy, of his own ſoul. Wherein are ſpecially to bee conſidered the deepe and marvellous iudgements of God, who as he can and doth make ſtrong whom it pleaſeth him, when he ſeeth his time, and moſt commonly ſuch as appeare moſt feeble: even ſo contrariwiſe, throweth hee down other ſome, ſeem they never ſo ſtout, ſtand they never ſo much in their owne conceits. Wherefore let him that ſtandeth take heed hee fall not, and let us pray continually to almighty God though we have faith, that he will help and increaſe our faith, that in him it may be made ſtrong, which of it ſelf is ſo weak, that it is ſoone overthrown.

Example how feeble man is of himſelf, without the Lord ſupport him.

He that ſtandeth let him take heed he fall not. Rom. 13.

This bleſſed man of God induring long time in priſon, did not paſſe all this time in unfruitfull idleneſſe, but ſtill from time to time did viſit his friends (as is ſaid) and eſpecially his wife, with many letters full of godly inſtruction and conſolation. All which letters it ſhall not bee greatly needfull here to inſert, partly becauſe they are to be found in the book of letters, partly becauſe we intend alſo (if God will) to proſecute the ſame more at large. In the meane time it ſhall not be out of place here preſently to comprehend certain of them as in order followeth.

GRace, mercy, and peace in Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, &c. Good fathers, and deare brethren, be thankfull unto our moſt gracious God, which hath preſerved us, and ſhall (I doubt not) from blaſpheming his bleſſed Name: yea, not only that, but alſo Ex ore Iufantium & Lactantium perficiet laudem, &c. i. Out of the mouths of very Babes and Sucklings ſhall be ſet forth his praiſe. They offer us (forſooth) our liberty and pardon, ſo that wee will riſe with them unto that faith which we with them were fallen from. Yea, or no, muſt be anſwered in haſte. They will not admit any needfull circumſtances, but all (as heretofore) moſt deteſtable and abominable. Riſe with them we muſt unto the unity. And pardon (ſay I) of me muſt not ſo dearely purchaſed. A pardon I deſire, to live with an unclogged conſcience. The Donatiſts (ſay they) ſought for ſuch ſingularity, but they were not meete to live in a commonwealth, no more be you, as you ſhall ſhortly underſtand. Wherefore away with him; yea, the time was named within this ſevennight. There be 12. houres in the day. Death ſhall be welcome (ſay I) as being looked for long ſince, and yet doe juſtice ye were beſt, for Abels blood cryed, ye wot what. The Spirit of God be upon you, and God ſave your Honours. Thus departed I from them. Pray, pray. Ah, ah, Puer ſum, neſcio loqui i. I am a child, I cannot ſpeak. My brother P. ſhall ſhew you more herein. By him ſend mee word what you have done. Fare ye well, and pray, pray. I would gladly meet with my good brother Bradford on the backſide about eleven of the clock. Before that time I cannot ſtart out, we have ſuch out-walkers, but then will they be at dinner.

Yours as you know, L. Sanders.

A Letter which Laurence Sanders did write to his wife, and others of the faithfull, after his condemnation to the fire, written the laſt of Ianuary, An. 1555. out of the Counter in Breadſtreet.

A comfortable letter of maſter Sanders to his wife and other of the faithfull flock

THe grace of Chriſt, with the conſolation of the holy Ghoſt, to the keeping of the faith and a good conſcience, confirm and keep you for ever veſſels to Gods glory, Amen.

Oh, what worthy thankes can be given to our gracious God for his unmeaſurable mercies plentifully powred upon us? And I moſt unworthy wretch cannot but powre forth at this preſent, even from the bottome of my heart, the bewailing of my great ingratitude and unkindneſſe towards ſo gracious a good God and loving Father. I beſeech you all, as for my other many ſins, ſo ſpecially for that ſin of my unthankfulneſſe, crave pardon for me in your earneſt prayers, commending me to Gods great mercies in Chriſt.

To number theſe mercies in particular, were to number the drops of water which are in the ſea, the ſands on the ſhore, the ſtarres in the ſkie. O my deare wife, and ye the reſt of my friends, reioyce with me, I ſay reioyce with thankſgiving for this my preſent promotion, in that I am made worthy to magnifie my God, not only in my life, by my ſlow mouth and uncircumciſed lips, bearing witneſſe unto his truth, and alſo by my blood to ſeale the ſame, to the glory of my God, and confirming of his true Church: And as yet I teſtifie unto you, that the comfort of my ſweet Chriſt doth drive from my fantaſie the feare of death. But if my deare husband Chriſt doth for my tryall leave me alone a little to my ſelf, alas, I know in what caſe I ſhall bee then: but if for my proofe hee doe ſo, yet I am ſure he will not be long or far from me. Though he ſtand behind the wall and hide himſelfe (as Salomon ſaith in his myſticall Ballet) yet will he peep in by a creſt to ſee how I do. He is a very tender-hearted Ioſeph: though he ſpeak roughly to his brethren, and handle them hardly; yea, threaten grievous bondage to his beſt beloved brother Beniamin: yet can he not contain himſelfe from weeping with us and upon us, with falling on our neckes, and ſweetly kiſſing us. Such, ſuch a brother is our Chriſt unto all. Wherefore haſten to goe unto him as Iacob did with his ſons and family, leaving their countrey and acquaintance. Yea, this our Ioſeph hath obtained for us, that Pharaoh the Infidell ſhall miniſter unto us chariots, wherein at eaſe we may bee carried to come unto him: as wee have experience how our very adverſaries doe helpe us unto our everlaſting bliſſe by their ſpeedy diſpatch; yea, and how all things have beene helpings hereunto; bleſſed bee our God. Be not afraid of fray-bugs which lye in the way. Feare rather the everlaſting fire: feare the ſerpent which hath that deadly ſting, of which by bodily death they ſhal be brought to taſte which are not grafted in Chriſt, wanting faith and a good conſcience, and ſo are not acquainted with Chriſt the killer of death. But oh my deare wife and friends, we, we whom God hath delivered from the power of darkneſſe, and hath tranſlated us into the Kingdome of his deare Sonne, by putting off the old man, and by faith putting on the new; even our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, his wiſedome, holineſſe, righteouſnes, and redemption, we, I ſay, have to triumph againſt the terrible ſpitefull Serpent the divell, ſinne, hell, death, and damnation. For Chriſt our brazen Serpent hath pulled away the ſting of this Serpent, ſo that now we may boldly, in beholding it ſpoiled of his ſting triumph, and with our Chriſt and all his elect ſay; Death, where is thy ſting? Hell where is thy victory? Thanks be to God, who hath given (Vs) the victory through our Lord Ieſus Chriſt.

The ſweet comfort of Chriſt taketh away the feare of death from Sanders. Cant. 22.

Ioſephs handling of his brethren applyed to Chriſt

Chriſt a ſweet brother unto us

The ſting of death pluckt out. 1 Cor. 15.

Wherefore be merry my deare wife and all my deare fellow heires of the everlaſting Kingdome, alwaies remember the Lord. Reioyce in hope, be patient in tribulation, continue in prayer, and pray for us now appointed to the ſlaughter, that wee may be unto our heavenly father a fat offering, and an acceptable ſacrifice. I may hardly write to you. Wherefore let theſe few words be a witneſſe of commendations to you and all them which love us in the faith: and namely unto my flock, among whom I am reſident by Gods providence, but as a priſoner.

To this his flock the pariſh of Alhallowes in Breadſtreet he wrote alſo a fruitfull letter, exhorting and charging them to beware of the Romiſh religion, and conſtantly to ſtick to the truth which they had confeſſed.

And although I am not ſo among them, as I have beene to preach to them out of a Pulpit, yet doth God now preach unto them by me, by this my impriſonment and captivity which now I ſuffer among them for Chriſts Goſpell ſake, bidding them to beware of the Romiſh Antichriſtian religion and kingdome, requiring and charging them to abide in the truth of Chriſt, which is ſhortly to bee ſealed with the blood of their Paſtor: who though hee bee unworthy of ſuch a miniſtery, yet Chriſt their high paſtour is to be regarded, whoſe truth hath beene taught them by me, is witneſſed by my chaines, and ſhall be by my death, through the power of that high Paſtor. Bee not carefull good wife, caſt your care upon the Lord, and commend me unto him in repentant prayer, as I doe you and our Samuel; whom, even at the ſtake, I will offer as my ſelf unto God. Fare ye well all in Chriſt, in hope to be joyned with you in joy everlaſting. This hope is put up in my boſome, Amen, Amen, Amen, Pray, pray.

Another Letter to Miſtris Lucie Harrington, a godly Gentlewoman, and friendly to him in his troubles.

Another comfortable letter of maſter Sanders.

YOur moſt gentle commendations, whereof this meſſenger made remembrance unto mee, was for two cauſes very comfortable: Firſt, for that thereby I underſtood of the ſtate of your health and bodily welfare, for the which I give thankes unto God, who grant the long continuance thereof to his honour and fatherly good will, whereunto I will daily ſay, Amen. And further, I was refreſhed by the expreſſing of your mindfull friendſhip towards mee farre unworthy thereof. Wherein I take occaſion of much rejoycing in our ſo gracious a God and mercifull Father, who as he hath in his unmeaſurable mercy by faith handfaſted us his choſen children unto his deare Sonne our Chriſt, as the ſpirituall ſpouſe of ſuch an heavenly Husband: ſo he linketh us by love one unto another, being by that bond compact together with charitable readineſſe to doe good one to another: ſo that firſt to the glory of our God and his Chriſt, then to our owne joying in the teſtimony of a good conſcience, and laſt of all to the ſtopping of the mouthes and confuſion of our adverſaries, wee beare the badge as the right ſpouſe of our Chriſt, which himſelfe noted in this ſaying; Herein ſhall all men know that yee bee my Diſciples, if yee love one another. Then farther by this bond of mutuall love is ſet forth the fatherly providence of God toward us his children; that though it bee hee that careth for us, in whom wee live, move, and bee, who feedeth all fleſh with bodily ſuſtenance, yet hath hee appointed us in theſe preſent neceſſities to ſtand in his ſtead one unto another. Wherein is not only ſet forth our dignity, but alſo that unſpeakable accord and unity among us the many members of his myſticall body. And though that either for lacke of ability, or elſe through diſtance of place, power and opportunity of helping one another doe faile: yet wonderfull is the working of Gods children through the ſpirit of prayer as whereby they fetch all heavenly influence from Chriſt their celeſtiall head by his ſpirit, to be meaſured ſeverally as may ſerve to the maintenance of the whole body.

The true badge of Chriſt. John 13.

Thus doth our faithfull prayer, which we make one for another, diſtribute and ſcatter Gods bountifull bleſſings both ghoſtly and bodily, when ordinary ability lacketh, and when the arme may not reach forth ſuch Gods riches. According hereunto I well perceive and underſtand your readineſſe to do good unto all, and eſpecially I have experience of your ready good will towards me in your hearty deſire to ſtretch out your helping hand to relieve my lacke; and of your helpe to be extended to me in the other ſpirituall ſort, by your good prayer, I doubt not; as alſo therein aſſure you of my helpe, being all that I may do, and yet the ſame not ſo much as I would do.

John 15. Prayer diſtributeth Gods bleſſings from one to another.

My need concerning bodily neceſſaries is as yet furniſhed by Gods proviſion, ſo that I am not driven to any extremity, wherefore to be burdenous to you, as your gentle benevolence provoketh me, the Lord reward you therefore. If God make mee worthy to be his witneſſe at this preſent, in giving this corruptible body to burne for the teſtimony of his truth, it is enough for me to ſay to you that I have a poore wife and child whom I love in the Lord, and whom I know for my ſake you will tender when I am departed hence, &c.

Another Letter to Miſtreſſe Lucie Harrington.

Another letter of M. Sanders.

GRace and mercy, &c. It happeneth oftentimes that abundance of matter bringeth with it much vehemency of friendly affection, maketh men dumb, and even then chiefly, when there is moſt eager purpoſe of ſpeaking, ſilence doth ſuppreſſe, and cauſeth the party ſo affected unperfectly to expreſſe that hee goeth about to utter. Such impediment by much matter, mingled with fervency of affection, feele I ſometimes in my ſelf, letting the utterance, either by tongue or writing, of the abundance of the heart. The love of our moſt gracious God and heavenly father, beſtowed upon us in the merits of Chriſt our Saviour, who may by conceit of mind comprehend, paſſing indeed all underſtanding: much leſſe may the ſame by any meanes bee expreſly uttered. And as ſuch heavenly bleſſings which by faith we fetch from above, be inexplicable, ſo is it hard to utter, when the faithfull are ſet on fire by love, their readineſſe to reach forth and to give by charity, as by faith they have received. But (alas) we carry this treaſure in earthen veſſels. Many times faith is feeble, and then love loſeth her fervour. Pray we therefore, Lord increaſe our faith, and love forthwith will be on fire. And immortall thanks be given unto our God, who in our Chriſt hath beſtowed upon us the firſt fruits of his ſpirit, who crieth in our hearts, Abba, Father. And (as S. Paul ſaith) ſeeing we have the ſame ſpirit of faith, according as it is written; I believed, and therefore I have ſpoken: wee alſo believe, and therefore we ſpeak. Yea, God knoweth, this ſpirit putteth in us a mind to ſpeak, but in attempting thereof we are driven with Moſes to ſay; O Lord, I am ſlow mouthed and of uncircumciſed lips: and with Jeremy, O Lord, I cannot ſpeake.

Exod. 8. Ier. 1.

Albeit that this infancy reſtraineth the opening of ſuch abundance of heart in my tender chriſtian dutie to be declared towards you, yet I beſeech you, let this be ſetled in your underſtanding; that as S. Paul expreſſeth unto his Corinthians that they were in his heart either to live or to dye, with many other ſuch ſayings uttered unto them and the Galathians, expreſſing his vehement affection towards them: ſo in ſome part I would be like affected towards all Gods children, and eſpecially towards you whom I know in Chriſt, and to whom I will not ſay how much I am indebted. I thank you for your great friendſhip and tender good will towards my wife: yea, that good gracious God recompence you, which may worthily with the more countervaile the ſame, and fulfill that which lacketh of thankfull duty in us. And becauſe of that which heretofore I have conceived of you, and of your more than natural love towards me and mine; I make my ſelfe thus bold to lay this burden upon you, even the care and charge of my ſaid poore wife I mean, to be unto her a mother and miſtreſſe to rule and direct her by your diſcreet counſell. I know ſhee conceiveth of you the ſame that I doe, and is thankfull unto God with me for ſuch a friend; and therfore I beſeech you even for Chriſts ſake, put never from you this friendly charge over her, whether I live longer, or ſhortly depart. But to charge you otherwiſe, thankes be to God, neither I, neither ſhe have any ſuch extreeme neede: if we had, I would be as bold with you as mine owne mother, I beſeech you give my hearty ſalutations unto Maſter Fitz-williams, and my good Lady, with thanks alſo for my poore wife and child, the Lord recompence them.

M. Saunders commendeth the care of his wife to miſtreſſe Harrington.

L. Sanders.

Furthermore, as touching his fatherly care and affection to his wife and his little childe, the ſame is lively ſet forth in another letter which he did write to his wife: wherein he admoniſhed her that ſhee ſhould not reſort much to the priſon where he was, for danger of trouble that might inſue, the tenour of whoſe letter here followeth.

Another letter to his wife, with a certain remembrance to Maſter Harrington, and Maſter Hurland.

Another letter of M. Sanders to his wife.

GRace and comfort, &c. Wife, you ſhall doe beſt not to come often unto the grate where the Porter may ſee you. Put not your ſelfe in danger where it needs not: you ſhall, I thinke, ſhortly come farre enough into danger by keeping faith and a good conſcience: which (deare wife) I truſt you do not ſlacke to make reckoning and account upon, by exerciſing your inward man in meditation of Gods moſt holy word, being the ſuſtenance of the ſoul, and alſo by giving your ſelfe to humble prayer: for theſe two things be the very meanes how to be made members of our Chriſt, meet to inherit his kingdome.

Doe this, deare wife, in earneſt, and not leaving off, and ſo we two ſhall with our Chriſt and all his choſen children, enjoy the merry world in that everlaſting immortality, whereas here will nothing elſe bee found but extreme miſery, even of them which moſt greedily ſeeke this worldly wealth: and ſo, if wee two continue Gods children graffed in our Chriſt, the ſame Gods bleſſing which wee receive ſhall alſo ſettle upon our Samuel. Though we do ſhortly depart hence and leave the poore Infant (to our ſeeming) at all adventures, yet ſhall hee have our gracious God to be his God: for ſo hath he ſaid, and he cannot lye; I will be thy God, ſaith he and the God of thy ſeed. Yea, if you leave him in the wilderneſſe deſtitute of all helpe, being called of God to doe his will, either to dye for the confeſſion of Chriſt, either any work of obedience: that God which heard the cry of the little poore infant of Agar Sarahs hand-maiden, and did ſuccour it, will do the like to the child of you or any other fearing him, and putting your truſt in him.

And if we lack faith, as we do indeed many times let us call for it and wee ſhall have the increaſe both of it, and alſo of any other good grace needfull for us: and be merry in God, in whom alſo I am very merry and joyfull. O Lord, what great cauſe of rejoycing have wee, to thinke upon that Kingdome, which he voucheth ſafe for his Chriſts ſake freely to give us, forſaking our ſelves and following him? Deare wife, this is truly to follow him, even to take up our croſſe and follow him; and then as we ſuffer with him, ſo ſhall we reigne with him everlaſtingly, Shortly, Amen.

Care of children in time of neceſſity ought to be left to God, who will not ſee them forſaken.

What it is to follow Chriſt.

Another letter to his wife, to M. Robert Harrington and maſter Hurland, &c.

Another letter of M. Sanders to his wife and other friends.

GRace and comfort, &c. Deare wife, rejoyce in our gracious God, and his and our Chriſt; and give thankes moſt humbly and heartily to him for this daies worke, that in any part I moſt unworthy wretch ſhould be made worthy to beare witneſſe unto his everlaſting verity, which Antichriſt with his, by maine force (I perceive) and by moſt impudent pride and boaſting will goe about to ſuppreſſe. Remember God alway my deare wife, and ſo ſhall Gods bleſſing light upon you and our Samuel. O remember alway my words for Chriſts ſake, be merry, and grudge not againſt God, and pray, pray. We be all merry here thankes be unto our God, who in his Chriſt hath given us great cauſe to bee merry, by whom he hath prepared for us ſuch a kingdome, and doth and will give unto us ſome little taſte therof, even in this life, and to all ſuch as are deſirous to take it. Bleſſed (ſaith our Chriſt) be they which hunger and thirſt after righteouſnes, for ſuch ſhall be ſatiſfied. Let us goe, yea, let us run to ſeeke ſuch treaſure, and that with whole purpoſe of heart to cleave unto the Lord, to finde ſuch riches in his heavenly word through his Spirit obtained by prayer. My deare friends and brethren, Maſter Harrington and Maſter Hurland, pray, pray, Spiritus quidem promptus eſt, caro autem infirma, that is, The ſpirit is ready, but the fleſh is weake. When I look upon my ſelfe, Quid ego ſtupidus & attonitus habeo quod dicam, niſi illud Petri, Exi a me Domine, quia homo peccator ſum? i. Being aſtoniſhed and confounded, what have I elſe to ſay but thoſe words of Peter, Lord goe from me, for I am a ſinfull man? But then feele I that ſweet comfort, Lucerna pedibus meis verbum Domini, lumen ſemitis meis, & hæc mea eſt conſolatio in humilitate mea, i. The word of the Lord is a lanterne unto my feet, and a light unto my pathes; and this is my comfort in my trouble. Then ware I bold with the ſame Peter to ſay, Domine, ad quem ibimus? verba vitæ æternæ habes, i. Lord to whom ſhall we goe? thou haſt the words of everlaſting life. This comfort have I when the giver thereof doth give it. But I look for battailes, which the roote of unfaithfulneſſe, the which I feele in me, will moſt eagerly give unto my conſcience, when we come once to the combate. We be (I weene) within the ſound of the trumpe of our enemies. Play ye that be abroad the part of Moſes, Orantes in omni loco, ſuſtollentes puras manus, i. Praying in all places, lifting up pure hands, and Gods pleople ſhall prevaile: yea, our blood ſhall bee their perdition who doe moſt triumphantly ſpill it, and wee then being in the hands of our God, ſhall ſhine in his kingdome, and ſhall ſtand in great ſtedfaſtnes againſt them which have dealt extremely with us: And when theſe our enemies ſhall thus ſee us, they ſhall be vexed with horrible feare, and ſhall wonder at

A letter of Laurence Sanders to his wife.

He writeth for a ſhirt wherein he ſhould be burned.

GRace and comfort in Chriſt, Amen. Deare wife, be merry in the mercies of our Chriſt, and ye alſo my deare friends. Pray, pray for us every body. We bee ſhortly to bee diſpatched hence unto our good Chriſt, Amen, Amen. Wife, I would you ſent me my ſhirt, which you know whereunto it is conſecrated. Let it be ſowed downe on both ſides, and not open. O my heavenly Father, looke upon me in the face of thy Chriſt, or elſe I ſhall not be able to abide thy countenance; ſuch is my filthines. He will doe ſo, and therefore I will not be affraid what ſin, death, hell, and damnation can do againſt me. O wife, alwaies remember the Lord. God bleſſe you, yea, he will bleſſe thee, good wife, and thy poore boy alſo: only cleave thou unto him, and he will give thee all things. Pray, pray, pray.

Another letter to M. Robert and Iohn Glover, written the ſame morning that he was burnt.

GRace and conſolation in our ſweet Saviour Chriſt. Oh my deare brethren whom I love in the Lord, being loved of you alſo in the Lord, be merry and reioyce for mee, now ready to go up to that mine inheritance, which I my ſelfe indeed am moſt unworthy of, but my deare Chriſt is worthy, who hath purchaſed the ſame for mee with ſo dear a price. Make haſt my dear brethren to come unto me, that we may be merry, eo gaudio quod nemo tollet à nobis, i. with that joy which no man ſhall take from us. O wretched ſinner that I am, not thankfull unto this my father, who hath vouchſafed mee worthy to be a veſſell unto his honour. But O Lord now accept my thankes, though they proceed out of a not enough circumciſed heart. Salute my good ſiſters your wives, and good ſiſters feare the Lord, Salute all other that love us in the truth. Gods bleſſing bee with you alwaies. Amen. Even now towards the offering of a burnt ſacrifice. O my Chriſt help, or elſe I periſh.

Laurence Sanders.

After theſe godly letters of M. Sanders diverſly diſperſed and ſent abroad to divers of the faithfull congregation of Chriſt, as is afore to be ſeen, now in the latter end we will adioyne two other letters not written by M. Sanders the Martyr, but by Maſter Ed. Sanders the Iuſtice his brother, ſent to this our Sanders in priſon, although containing no great matter worthy to be knowne, yet to this intent that the Reader may ſee in theſe two brethren ſo ioyned in nature, and ſo divided in religion, that word of the Lord verified, truly ſaying; Brother ſhall be againſt brother, &c. as by the contents of theſe two letters following may appeare.

A Letter of Iuſtice Sanders to his brother Laurence.

A letter of Iuſtice Sanders to Laurence Sanders his brother.

AFter my moſt hearty commendations, theſe beene to aſcertaine you, that I have ſpoken with Maſter Baſſet, who hath ſhewed me, that foure pound (all deductions being allowed) is the whole that hath come to his hands of the profit of the Prebendary at Yorke, the which you ſhall have, although as he thinketh, it was not due unto you by reaſon of your deprivation before it was due. As concerning your conſcience in religion, I beſeech God it may be lightned by the holy Ghoſt, and that you may alſo have the grace of the holy Ghoſt to follow the counſell of Saint Paul to Timoth. 2. Rectè tractare verbum veritatis, that is, To handle rightly the word of truth. Wherein you diſſenting from many holy and catholike men, eſpecially in the ſacrament, it maketh mee in my conſcience to condemne yours. For although I have not hitherto fancied to reade Peter Martyr, and other ſuch &c. Yet have I had great deſire to ſee Theophylact and divers others of this ſort and opinion, both notable and holy fathers (if any credit bee to be given to the writings of our ancient Fathers before us) and ſurely the ſentences and iudgements of two or three of them have more confirmed my conſcience, than 300 of the Zuinglians, or as many of the Lutherans can or ſhould doe. Thus in haſte willing to relieve you, to the end you might convert, if you ſhall neede towards your finding, if you ſhall require it of me, you ſhall unfainedly finde my money ready, as knoweth our Lord, who ſend us all things good for us. Scribled this Thurſday by your brother and petitioner to God.

Iuſtice ſaith, Audi alteram partem.

Ed. Sanders.

Another letter of Iuſtice Sanders to his brother, wherein he ſeeketh to winne him to Poperie.

Greeting with proteſtation.

AS nature and brotherly love with godly charity requireth, I ſend you by theſe letters (quantum licet) moſt hearty commendation, being ſorry for your fault and your diſobedient handling of your ſelfe towards my Lord Chancellor, who, I aſſure you, mindeth your good and preſervation, if you can ſo conſider and take it. I would be glad to know whether you have not had with you of late ſome learned men to talke with you by my Lord Chancellors appointment, and how you can frame your ſelfe to reforme your errour in the opinion of the moſt bleſſed and our moſt comfortable ſacrament of the altar. Wherein I aſſure you, I was never in all my life better affected than I am at this preſent, uſing to my great comfort hearing of Maſſe, and ſomewhat before the ſacring time, the meditation of S. Bernard, ſet forth in the third leafe of this preſent booke. The accuſtomable uſing whereof I am fully profeſſed unto, during my life, and to give more faith unto that confeſſion of holy Bernard, than to Luther, &c. or Latimer, &c. for that the antiquity, the univerſality of the open Church, and the conſent of all Saints and Doctors doe confirme the ſame, aſcertaining you, that I have been earneſtly moved in mine owne conſcience theſe ten or twelve days paſt, and alſo betweene God and my ſelfe, to move you to the ſame, moſt earneſtly deſiring you, and as you tender my naturall, godly, and friendly love towards you, that you would reade over this book this holy time, at my requeſt, although you have already ſeen it, and let me know wherein you cannot ſatisfie your owne conſcience. Thus fare you well for this time.

He meaneth peradventure when the ſanctus is ſinging, for then the Organs pipe merrily, and that may give ſome comfort. The meditations of S. Bernard ſent by Iuſtice Sanders to his brother.

By yours, from Serjeants Inne,

Anno 1555

The life and martyrdome of Maſter Iohn Hooper Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter, burnt for the defence of the Goſpell at Gloceſter, An. 1555.

Febr. 9.

The ſtory, life, & martyrdome of M. Iohn Hooper martyr.

JOhn Hooper Student and Graduate in the Univerſity of Oxford, after the ſtudy of the Sciences, wherein hee had abundantly profited and proceeded, through Gods ſecret vocation was ſtirred with fervent deſire to the love and knowledge of the Scriptures. In the reading and ſearching whereof, as there lacked in him no diligence, joyned with earneſt prayer: ſo neither wanted unto him the grace of the holy Ghoſt to ſatiſfie his deſire, and to open unto him the light of true Divinity.

Thus M. Hooper growing more and more, by Gods grace, in ripeneſſe of ſpirituall underſtanding, and ſhewing withall ſome ſparckles of his fervent ſpirit, being then about the begining of the ſix Articles, in the time of King Henry the eighth, fell eftſoones into diſpleaſure and hatred of certain Rabbines in Oxford, who by and by began to ſtirre coales againſt him, whereby, and eſpecially by the procurement of Doctor Smith, he was compelled to voide the Univerſity, and ſo removing from thence, was retained in the houſe of Sir Thomas Arundel, and there was his Steward, till the time that Sir Thomas Arundel, having intelligence of his opinions and religion, which he in no caſe did favour, and yet exceedingly favouring the perſon and conditions of the man, found the meanes to ſend him in a meſſage to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, writing his letter privily to the Biſhop, by conference of learning to doe ſome good upon him, but in any caſe requiring him to ſend home his ſervant to him againe.

M. Hooper ſent to the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

Wincheſter after long conference with maſter Hooper, foure or five dayes together, when he at length perceived that neither he could do that good which he thought to him, nor that he would take any good at his hand, according to M. Arundels requeſt, hee ſent home his ſervant againe, right well commending his learning and wit, but yet bearing in his breſt a grudging ſtomack againſt M. Hooper ſtill.

M. Hooper forced to avoid the houſe of ſir Thomas Arundell.

M. Hooper flieth out of England.

It followed not long after this, as malice is alwaies working miſchiefe, that intelligence was given to maſter Hooper to provide for himſelfe, for danger that was working againſt him. Whereupon maſter Hooper leaving maſter Arundels houſe, and borrowing an horſe of a certaine friend (whoſe life he had ſaved a little before from the gallowes) tooke his journey to the Sea ſide to goe to France, ſending backe the horſe againe by one, which indeed did not deliver him to the owner. Maſter Hooper being at Paris, tarried there not long, but in ſhort time returned into England againe, and was retained of maſter Sentlow, till the time that he was againe moleſted and laid for: whereby hee was compelled (under the pretence of being Captain of a ſhip going to Ireland) to take the ſeas, and ſo eſcaped he (although not without extreme perill of drowning) through France to the higher parts of Germany. Where he, entring acquaintance with the learned men, was of them friendly and lovingly entertained, both at Baſil, and eſpecially at Zurick of Maſter Bullinger, being his ſingular friend. Where alſo hee married his wife, which was a Burgonian, and applyed very ſtudiouſly the Hebrew tongue.

Great friendſhip between M. Bullinger & M. Hooper.

At length, when God ſaw it good to ſtay the bloudy time of the ſixe Articles, and to give us King Edward to reigne over this Realm, with ſome peace and reſt unto the Goſpell, amongſt many other Engliſh exiles, which then repaired homeward, maſter Hooper alſo, moved in conſcience, thought not to abſent himſelfe, but ſeeing ſuch a time and occaſion, offered to help forward the Lords worke, to the uttermoſt of his ability. And ſo comming to Maſter Bullinger, and other of his acquaintance in Zurick, (as duty required) to give them thankes for their ſingular kindneſſe and humanity toward him manifold waies declared, with like humanity again purpoſed to take his leave of them at his departing, and ſo did. Unto whom M. Bullinger again (who had alwaies a ſpeciall favour to maſter Hooper) ſpake on this wiſe; M. Hooper, ſaid he, although we are ſorry to part with your company for our owne cauſe, yet much greater cauſes we have to rejoyce, both for your ſake, and eſpecially for the cauſe of Chriſts true religion, that you ſhall now returne out of long baniſhment into your native countrey again, where not only you may enjoy your owne private liberty, but alſo the cauſe and ſtate of Chriſts Church by you may fare the better, as we doubt not but it ſhall.

M. Bullingers words to maſter Hooper at his departing from Zurich.

Another cauſe moreover why we rejoyce with you and for you, is this, that you ſhall remove not only out of exile into liberty: but you ſhall leave here a barren, a ſowre, and an unpleaſant countrey, rude and ſavage, and ſhall goe into a land flowing with milke and honey, repleniſhed with all pleaſure and fertility. Notwithſtanding with this our rejoycing one feare and care wee have, leſt you being abſent, and ſo farre diſtant from us, or elſe comming to ſuch abundance of wealth and felicity, in your new welfare and plenty of all things, and in your flouriſhing honours, where ye ſhall come peradventure to bee a Biſhop, and where ye ſhall finde ſo many new friends, you will forget us your old acquaintance and welwillers. Nevertheleſſe, howſoever you ſhall forget and ſhake us off, yet this perſwade your ſelfe, that we will not forget our old friend and fellow M. Hooper. And if you will pleaſe not to forget us againe, then I pray you let us heare from you.

The anſwer of M. Hooper to M. Bullinger.

Whereunto M. Hooper anſwering again, firſt gave to maſter Bullinger and the reſt right hearty thankes, for that their ſingular good will, and undeſerved affection, appearing not only now, but at all times towards him: declaring moreover that as the principall cauſe of his removing to his countrey was the matter of religion; ſo touching the unpleaſantnes and barrennes of that countrey of theirs, there was no cauſe therein, why he could not find in his heart to continue his life there, as ſoon as in any place in the world, and rather than in his owne native countrey, if there were nothing elſe in his conſcience that moved him ſo to doe. And as touching the forgetting of his old friends, although, ſaid hee, the remembrance of a mans countrey naturally doth delight him, neither could he deny, but God had bleſſed his countrey of England with many great commodities: yet neither the nature of countrey, nor pleaſure of commodities, nor newneſſe of friends ſhould ever induce him to the oblivion of ſuch friends and benefactors, whom hee was ſo intirely bound unto: and therefore you ſhall be ſure, ſaid he from time to time to heare from me, and I will write unto you how it goeth with me. But the laſt newes of all I ſhall not be able to write: for there, ſaid he, (taking M. Bullinger by the hand) where I ſhall take moſt paines, there ſhall you heare of mee to bee burned to aſhes; and that ſhall be the laſt newes, which I ſhall not be able to write unto you, but you ſhall heare of me, &c.

M. Hooper propheſieth of himſelfe.

To this alſo may bee added another like propheticall demonſtration, fore-ſhewing before the manner of his martyrdome wherewith he ſhould glorifie God, which was this: When Maſter Hooper being made Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter ſhould have his armes given him by the Herald, as the manner is here in England, every Biſhop to have his Armes aſſigned unto him (whether by the appointment of M. Hooper, or by the Herald, I have not certainly to ſay) but the Armes which were to him allotted was this: A Lamb in a fiery buſh, and the Sun beams from heaven deſcended down upon the Lamb, rightly denoting, as it ſeemed, the order of his ſuffering, which afterward followed.

A note of maſter Hoopers Armes preſignifying his Martyrdome.

But now to the purpoſe of our ſtory againe. Thus when M. Hooper had taken his farewell of M. Bullenger and his friends in Zurick, hee made his repaire again into England in the reigne of King Edward the ſixth, where he coming to London uſed continually to preach, moſt times twice, at leaſt once every day, and never failed.

M. Hooper returneth againe into England.

In his Sermons, according to his accuſtomed manner, he corrected ſinne, and ſharply inveighed againſt the iniquity of the world, and corrupt abuſes of the Church: the people in great flockes and companies daily came to heare his voice, as the moſt melodious ſound and tune of Orpheus harpe, as the Proverbe ſaith: Inſomuch that oftentimes when he was preaching, the Church would be ſo full, that none could enter further than the dores thereof. In his doctrine he was earneſt, in tongue eloquent, in the Scriptures perfect, in paines indefatigable.

The notable diligence of M. Hooper in preaching.

Moreover, beſides other his gifts and qualities, this is in him to be marvelled, that even as he began, ſo he continued ſtill unto his lives end. For neither could his labour and paine-taking breake him, neither promotion change him, neither dainty fare corrupt him. His life was ſo pure and good, that no kind of ſlander (although divers went about to reprove it) could faſten any fault upon him. Hee was of body ſtrong, his health whole and ſound, his wit very pregnant, his invincible patience able to ſuſtaine whatſoever ſiniſter fortune and adverſity could doe. He was conſtant of judgement, a good Juſtice, ſpare of diet, ſparer of words, and ſpareſt of time. In houſ-keeping very liberall, and ſometime more free than his living would extend unto. Briefly, of all thoſe vertues and qualities required of S. Paul in a good Biſhop, in his Epiſtle to Timothy, I know not one in this good Biſhop lacking. He bare in countenance and talk alwayes a certain ſevere and grave grace, which might peradventure bee wiſhed ſometime to have been a little more popular and vulgarlike in him; but he knew what he had to do beſt himſelf.

The ſingular vertues of maſter Hooper deſcribed.

This by the way I thought to note, for that there was once an honeſt Citizen, and to mee not unknowne, which having in himſelfe a certaine conflict of conſcience, came to his dore for counſell, but being abaſhed at his auſtere behaviour durſt not come in, but departed, ſeeking remedy of his troubled mind at other mens hands, which hee afterward by the helpe of almighty God did find and obtaine. Therefore in my judgement, ſuch as are appointed and made governours over the flock of Chriſt, to teach and inſtruct them, ought ſo to frame their life, manners, countenance, and externall behaviour, as neither they ſhew themſelves too familiar and light, whereby to be brought into contempt, nor on the other ſide again, that they appeare more lofty and rigorous, than appertaineth to the edifying of the ſimple flock of Chriſt. Neverthelеſſe as every man hath his peculiar gift wrought in him by nature, ſo this diſpoſition of fatherly gravity in this man neither was exceſſive, neither did hee beare that parſonage that was in him, without great conſideration. For it ſeemed to him peradventure, that this licentious and unbridled life of the common ſort ought to be chaſtened, not only with words and diſcipline, but alſo with the grave and ſevere countenance of good men.

Direction how Miniſters and Preachers ought to behave themſelves.

After hee had thus practiſed himſelfe in this popular and common kinde of preaching: at length, and that not without the great profit of many, he was called to preach before the Kings Majeſty, and ſoon after made Biſhop of Gloceſter by the Kings commandement. In that office he continued two yeeres and behaved himſelf ſo well, that his very enemies (except it were for his good doings, and ſharpe correcting of ſin) could find no fault with him; and after that hee was made biſhop of Worceſter.

M. Hooper made biſhop of Gloceſter and Worceſter.

But I cannot tell what ſiniſter and unluckie contention concerning the ordering and conſecration of Biſhops, and of their apparell, with ſuch other like trifles, began to diſturbe the good and luckie beginning of the godly Biſhop. For notwithſtanding that godly reformation of religion that begun in the Church of England, beſides other ceremonies more ambitious than profitable, or tending to edification, they uſed to weare ſuch garments and apparell as the Popiſh Biſhops were wont to doe: Firſt a Chymere, and under that a white Rochet, then a Mathematicall cap with foure Angles, dividing the whole world into foure parts. Theſe trifles, tending more to ſuperſtition than otherwiſe, as he could never abide, ſo in no wiſe could he bee perſwaded to weare them. For this cauſe he made ſupplication to the Kings Majeſty, moſt humbly deſiring his Highneſſe, either to diſcharge him of the Biſhopricke, or elſe to diſpenſe with him for ſuch ceremoniall orders. Whoſe petition the King granted immediately, writing his letter to the Archbiſhop after this tenour.

The Kings letters or grant for the diſpenſation of Iohn Hooper elected Biſhop of Gloceſter, written to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury and other Biſhops.

Right reverend father, and right truſty and welbeloved, we greet you well. Whereas we, by the advice of our Councell, have called and choſen our right welbeloved and well worthy, M. Iohn Hooper, profeſſor of divinity, to be our Biſhop of Gloceſter, as well for his great Knowledge, deepe judgement, and long ſtudy both in the Scriptures and other prophane learning, as alſo for his good diſcretion, ready utterance, and honeſt life for that kind of vocation: to the intent all our loving ſubjects, which are in his ſaid charge, and elſewhere, might by his ſound and true doctrine learn the better their duty towards God, their obedience towards us, and love towards their neighbours: from conſecrating of whom we underſtand you doe ſtay, becauſe he would have you omit and let paſſe certaine rites and ceremonies offenſive to his conſcience, whereby yee thinke ye ſhould fall in Premunire of Lawes; we have thought good, by the advice aforeſaid, to diſpenſe and diſcharge you of all manner of dangers, penalties and forfeitures you ſhould run and be in any manner of way, by omitting any of the ſame. And theſe our letters ſhall be your ſufficient warrant and diſcharge therefore.

Beſides this letter of the King, alſo the Earle of Warwick (which was afterward Duke of Northumberland) adioyned his letter to the foreſaid Archbiſhop of Canterbury to this purpoſe and effect, that M. Hooper might not be burdened with the oath uſed then commonly in the conſecration of Biſhops, which was againſt his conſcience, as by the purport of the letter here is to be ſeene, as followeth.

A letter of the Earle of Warwick to the Archbiſhop in the behalfe of M. Hooper.

After my moſt hearty commendations to your grace, theſe may be to deſire the ſame, that in ſuch reaſonable things, wherein this bearer, my Lord elect of Glocester, craveth to be borne withall at your hands, you would vouchſafe to ſhew him your graces favour, the rather at this my inſtance: which thing partly, I have taken in hand by the Kings Majeſties own motion. The matter is weighed by his highneſſe, none other but that your grace may facily condeſcend unto. The principall cauſe is, that you would not charge this ſaid bearer with an oath burdenous to his conſcience. And ſo for lack of time I commit your grace to the tuition of Almighty God. From Weſtminſter the 23. of Iuly, 1550.

Your graces moſt aſſured loving friend,

I. Warwick.

Both this grant of the King, and alſo the Earles letters aforeſaid notwithſtanding, the Biſhops ſtill ſtood earneſtly in the defence of the aforeſaid ceremonies, ſaying it was but a ſmall matter, and that the fault was in the abuſe of the things, and not in the things themſelves: adding moreover, that he ought not to be ſo ſtubborne in ſo light a matter, and that his wilfulneſſe therein was not to be ſuffered.

The Kings requeſt nor the Earles could take effect.

Diſcord about rituall garments of Churchmen. M. Hooper faine to agree to the Biſhops. M. Hooper compelled to preach before the King in Biſhops apparell.

To be ſhort, whileſt both parties thus contended about this matter more than reaſon would, in the meane time occaſion was given, as to the true Chriſtians to lament, ſo to the adverſaries to reioyce. In concluſion, this Theologicall contention came to this end, that the Biſhops having the upper hand, Maſter Hooper was faine to agree to this condition, that ſometimes he ſhould in his Sermon ſhew himſelfe apparelled as the other Biſhops were. Wherfore, appointed to preach before the King, as a new Player in a ſtrange apparell, he cometh forth on the ſtage. His upper garment was a long ſcarlet Chymere downe to the foot, and under that a white linnen Rochet that covered all his ſhoulders. Upon his head he had a Geometricall, that is, a foure-ſquared cap, albeit that his head was round. What cauſe of ſhame the ſtrangeneſſe hereof was that day to that good Preacher, every man may eaſily iudge. But this private contumely and reproach in reſpect of the publike profit of the Church, which he onely ſought, he bare and ſuffered patiently. And I would to God in like manner, they, which tooke upon them the other part of that tragedy, had yeelded their private cauſe whatſoever it was to the publike concord and edifying of the Church: for no man in all the City was one haire the better for that hot contention.

The croſſe maketh peace.

I will name no body, partly for that his oppugners being afterwards ioyned in the moſt ſure bond of friendſhip with him, in one and for one cauſe ſuffered Martyrdome; and partly for that I commonly uſe, according to my accuſtomed manner, to keepe my pen from preſumptuous iudging of any perſon, yet I thought to note the thing for this conſideration, to admoniſh the Reader hereby how wholſome and neceſſary the croſſe of Chriſt is ſometime in the Church of Chriſt, as by the ſequele hereof did afterward appeare. For as in a civill governance and common wealth, nothing is more occaſion of warre, than overmuch peace: ſo in the Church and among Churchmen, as nothing is more pernicious than too much quietneſſe, ſo nothing more ceaſeth private contentions oftentimes riſing amongſt them, than the publike croſſe of perſecution.

The falls and infirmities of holy Saints and Martyrs left for our conſolation.

Furthermore, ſo I perſwaded my ſelfe, the ſame not to be unexpedient, to have extant ſuch examples of holy and bleſſed men. For if it do not a little appertaine to our publike conſolation and comfort, when we read in the Scriptures of the foule diſſention betweene Paul and Barnabie; of the fall of Peter, and of Davids murder and adultery: why may or ſhould it not be as well profitable for our poſterity, to heare and know the fals of theſe godly Martyrs, whereby we may the leſſe deſpaire in our infirmity, conſidering the ſame or greater infirmities to reigne in the holy Saints of God, both Prophets, Apoſtles, and Martyrs?

Note how diſcord and reconciliation happeneth many times amongſt good men.

And thus by the way thou haſt heard, good Reader, hitherto the weakeneſſe of theſe good men, plainly and ſimply, as the truth was, declared unto thee, to the end their fall may miniſter occaſion to us either of eſchewing the like, or elſe to take heart and comfort in the like fall and fraileneſſe of ours. Now againe on the other part it remaineth to record, after the foreſaid diſcord, the godly reconciliations of theſe good men in time of perſecution, who afterward, being in priſon for the truths ſake, reconciled themſelves againe with moſt godly agreement, as appeareth by this letter ſent by B. Ridley to the ſaid Biſhop of Gloceſter. The copie whereof, as it was written with his own hand in Latin, hereafter followeth tranſlated into Engliſh.

To my deare brother and reverend fellow Elder in Chriſt, Iohn Hooper, grace and peace.

A letter of reconciliation ſent by D. Ridley to Biſhop Hooper.

My dearely beloved brother and fellow elder, whom I reverence in the Lord, pardon me, I beſeech you, that hitherto ſince your captivity and mine, I have not ſaluted you by my letters: whereas I do indeed confeſſe, I have received from you (ſuch was your gentleneſſe) two letters at ſundry times: but yet at ſuch time as I could not be ſuffered to write unto you againe; or if I might, yet was I in doubt how my letters might ſafely come unto your hands. But now, my deare brother, foraſmuch as I underſtand by your works, which I have but ſuperficially ſeene, that we throughly agree and wholly conſent together in thoſe things which are the grounds and ſubſtantiall points of our Religion, againſt the which the world ſo furiouſly rageth in theſe our dayes, howſoever in time paſt by certaine by-matters and circumſtances of Religion, your wiſdome and my ſimplicity (I grant) hath a little jarred, each of us following the abundance of his owne ſenſe and judgement; now, I ſay, be you aſſured, that even with my whole heart, God is my witneſſe, in the bowels of Chriſt I love you in the truth, and for the truths ſake, which abideth in us, and as I am perſwaded ſhall, by the grace of God, abide in us for evermore.

1 Cor. 10.

And becauſe the world, as I perceive, brother, ceaſeth not to play his pageant, and buſily conſpireth againſt Chriſt our Saviour, with all poſſible force and power, Exalting high things againſt the knowledge of God; let us joyne hands together together in Chriſt, and if we cannot overthrow, yet to our power, and as much as in us lyeth, let us ſhake thoſe high altitudes, not with carnall, but with ſpirituall weapons: and withall brother, let us prepare our ſelves to the day of our diſſolution, by the which, after the ſhort time of this bodily affliction, by the grace of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt we ſhall triumph together with him in eternall glory.

B. Ridley and B. Hooper ioyne hands together.

I pray you brother ſalute in my name your reverend fellow priſoner, and venerable father, D. C. by whom ſince the firſt day that I heard of his moſt godly and fatherly conſtancy, in confeſſing the truth of the Goſpell, I have conceived great conſolation and joy in the Lord. For the integrity and uprightneſſe of that man, his gravity and innocency all England I think hath knowne long ago. Bleſſed be God therefore, which in ſuch abundance of iniquity and decay of all godlineſſe, hath given unto us, in this reverend old age, ſuch a witneſſe for the truth of his Goſpell. Miſerable and hard hearted is he, whom the godlineſſe and conſtant confeſſion of ſo worthy, ſo grave, and innocent a man, will not move to acknowledge and confeſſe the truth of God.

I do not now, brother, require you to write any thing to me againe: for I ſtand much in feare, leſt your letters ſhould be intercepted before they can come to my hands. Nevertheleſſe know you, that it ſhall be to me great joy to heare of your conſtancy and fortitude in the Lords quarrell. And albeit I have not hitherto written unto you, yet have I twice, as I could, ſent unto you my minde touching the matter which in your letters you required to know. Neither can I yet, brother, be otherwiſe perſwaded: I ſee me thinks ſo many perils, whereby I am earneſtly moved to counſell you not to haſten the publiſhing of your works, eſpecially under the title of your owne name. For I feare greatly leſt by this occaſion both your mouth ſhould be ſtopped hereafter, and all things taken away from the reſt of the priſoners, whereby otherwiſe, if it ſo pleaſe God, they may be able to do good to many. Farewell in the Lord my moſt deare brother; and if there be any moe in priſon with you for Chriſts cauſe, I beſeech you, as you may, ſalute them in my name. To whoſe prayers I doe moſt humbly and heartily commend my ſelfe and my fellow priſoners and concaptives in the Lord, and yet once againe, and for ever in Chriſt, my moſt deare brother, farewell.

N. Ridley.

M. Hoper, after all theſe tumults and vexations ſuſtained about his inveſting and Prieſtly veſtures, at length entring into his dioceſſe, did there imploy his time which the Lord lent him under King Edwards reigne, with ſuch diligence, as may be a ſpectacle to all Biſhops, which ſhall ever hereafter ſucceed him, not only in that place, but in whatſoever Dioceſſe through the whole realme of England: ſo carefull was he in his Cure, that he left neither paines untaken nor wayes unſought, how to traine up the flock of Chriſt in the true word of ſalvation, continually labouring in the ſame. Other men commonly are wont, for lucre or promotions ſake, to aſpire to Biſhopricks, ſome hunting for them, and ſome purchaſing or buying them, as men uſe to purchaſe Lordſhips, and when they have them are loth to leave them; and thereupon alſo loth to commit that thing by worldly lawes, whereby to loſe them.

The diligent care of B. Hooper in his dioceſſe.

To this ſort of men M. Hoper was clean contrary, who abhorred nothing more than gaine, labouring alwayes to ſave and preſerve the ſoules of his flock. Who, being Biſhop of two Dioceſſes, ſo ruled and guided either of them, and both together, as though he had in charge but one family. No Father in his houſhold, no Gardiner in his garden, nor huſbandman in his vineyard, was more or better occupied, than he in his Dioceſſe amongſt his flock, going about his townes and villages in teaching and preaching to the people there.

M. Hooper B. of two Dioceſſes.

That time that he had to ſpare from preaching, he beſtowed either in hearing publike cauſes, or elſe in private ſtudy, prayer, and viſiting of ſchooles: with his continuall doctrine he adioyned due and diſcreet correction, not ſo much ſevere to any, as to them which for abundance of riches, and wealthy ſtate, thought they might do what they liſted. And doubtleſſe he ſpared no kind of people, but was indifferent to all men, as well rich as poore, to the great ſhame of no ſmall number of men now adayes. Whereof many we ſee ſo addicted to the pleaſing of great and rich men, that in the mean time they have no regard to the meaner ſort of poore people, whom Chriſt hath bought as dearely as the other.

M. Hooper a light to all Churchmen.

But now againe we will returne our talk to M. Hoper, all whoſe life in fine was ſuch, that to the Church and all Churchmen, it might be a light and example, to the reſt a perpetuall leſſon and ſermon. Finally, how vertuous and good a Biſhop he was, ye may conceive and know evidently by this; that even as he was hated of none but of them which were evill, ſo yet the worſt of them all could not reprove his life in any one iot.

The order and governance of M. Hoopers houſe.

I have now declared his uſage and behaviour abroad in the publike affaires of the Church: and certainly there appeared in him at home no leſſe example of a worthy Prelats life. For although he beſtowed and converted the moſt part of his care upon the publike flocke and congregation of Chriſt, for the which alſo he ſpent his blood: yet nevertheleſſe there lacked no proviſion in him, to bring up his own children in learning and good manners; inſomuch that ye could not diſcerne whether he deſerved more praiſe for his fatherly uſage at home, or for his biſhoplike doings abroad. For every where he kept one religion in one uniforme doctrine and integrity. So that if you entred into the Biſhops Palace, you would ſuppoſe your ſelfe to have entred into ſome Church or Temple. In every corner thereof there was ſome ſmell of vertue, good example, honeſt converſation, and reading of holy Scriptures. There was not to bee ſeene in his houſe any courtly ryoting or idleneſſe: no pomp at all, no diſhoneſt word, no ſwearing could there be heard.

The care of M. Hooper in inſtructing his family.

As for the revenues of both his Biſhopricks, although they did not greatly exceed, as the matter was handled, yet if any thing ſurmounted thereof, he purſed nothing, but beſtowed it in hoſpitality. Twice I was, as I remember, in his houſe in Worceſter, where in his common hall I ſaw a table ſpread with good ſtore of meat, and beſet full of beggers and poore folke: and I aſking his ſervants what this meant, they told me that every day their Lord and Maſters manner was, to have cuſtomably to dinner a certain number of poore folke of the ſaid City by courſe, who were ſerved by foure at a meſſe, with whole and wholeſome meats: and when they were ſerved (being afore examined by him or his deputies of the Lords prayer, the Articles of their faith, and ten Commandements) then he himſelf ſate down to dinner, and not before.

The hoſpitality of M. Hooper.

After this ſort and manner M. Hoper executed the office of a moſt carefull and vigilant Paſtor, by the ſpace of two years & more, ſo long as the

M. Hooper called up to London at Queene Maries comming in.

the ſtate of religion in K. Edwards time did ſafely flouriſh and take place: and would God that all other Biſhops would uſe the like diligence, care, and obſervance in their function. After this, K. Edward being dead, and Mary being crowned Queene of England, Religion being ſubverted and changed, this good Biſhop was one of the firſt that was ſent for by a purſevant to be at London, and that for two cauſes:

Two cauſes why M. Hooper was called up.

Firſt, to anſwer to D. Heath then appointed Biſhop of that Dioceſſe, who was before in King Edwards dayes deprived thereof for Papiſtry.

Secondarily, to render account to D. Boner Biſhop of London, for that he in King Edwards time was one of his accuſers, in that he ſhewed himſelfe not conformable to ſuch ordinances as were preſcribed to him by the King and his Councell, openly at Pauls croſſe. And although the ſaid M. Hooper was not ignorant of the evils that ſhould happen towards him (for he was admoniſhed by certaine of his friends to get him away, and ſhift for himſelfe) yet he would not prevent them, but tarried ſtill, ſaying: Once I did flee, and take me to my feet, but now, becauſe I am called to this place and vocation, I am throughly perſwaded to tarry, and to live and die with my ſheep.

M. Hooper refuſed to flie away.

M. Hooper commeth up to London.

And when at the day of his appearance, which was the firſt of September, he was come to London, before he could come to the aforeſaid D. Heath and Boner, he was intecepted, and commanded violently againſt his wil to appeare before the Queene and her Councell, to anſwer to certaine bonds and obligations, wherein they ſaid he was bound unto her. And when he came before them, Wincheſter by and by received him very opprobriouſly, and, railing and rating of him, accuſed him of Religion. He againe freely and boldly told his tale, and purged himſelf. But in fine it came to this concluſion, that by them he was commanded to ward (it being declared unto him at his departure, that the cauſe of his impriſonment was only for certaine ſummes of money, for the which he was indebted to the Queene, and not for Religion.) This how falſe and untrue it was, ſhall hereafter in his place more plainly appeare.

M. Hooper charged to anſwer the queen for bonds of debt.

M. Hooper commanded to ward.

The next yeere, being 1554. the 19. of March, he was called againe to appeare before Wincheſter and other the Queenes Commiſſioners: where, what for the Biſhop, and what for the unruly multitude, when he could not be permitted to plead his cauſe, he was deprived of his Biſhopricks. Which how, and in what order it was done, here now followeth to be ſeen by the teſtimony and report of one, which, being preſent at the doing, committed the ſame to writing.

M. Hooper deprived of his Biſhopricks.

A letter or report of a certain godly man, declaring the order of M. Hoopers deprivation from his Biſhopricks. Anno 1554. March 19.

A letter reporting the order of M. Hoopers deprivation.

FOrſomuch as a rumor is ſpread abroad of the talk had at my Lord Chancellours, between him with other Commiſſioners there appointed, and Maſter Hooper, cleane contrary to the verity and truth thereof indeed, and therefore to be judged rather to be riſen of malice, for the diſcrediting of the truth by falſe ſuggeſtions and evill reports, than otherwiſe: I thought it my duty, being preſent thereat my ſelfe, in writing to ſet forth the whole effect of the ſame: partly that the verity thereof may be knowne to the doubtfull people, and partly alſo to advertiſe them, how uncharitably Maſter Hooper was handled at their hands, which with all humility uſed himſelfe towards them, deſiring that with patience he might have beene permitted to ſpeake, aſſuring all men, that where I ſtood in a mammering and doubt, which of theſe two Religions to have credited, either that ſet forth by the Kings Majeſty, that dead is, or elſe that now maintained by the Queenes Majeſty, their unreverend behaviour towards Maſter Hooper doth move me the rather to credit his doctrine, than that which they with railing and cruell words defended, conſidering that Chriſt was ſo handled before. And that this, which I have written here, was the effect of their talk, as I acknowledge it to be true my ſelfe: ſo I appeale to all the hearers conſciences, that there were preſent (ſo they put affection away) for the witneſſe of the ſame.

The Biſhops of Wincheſter, of London, of Dureſme, of Landaffe, of Chicheſter, ſate as Commiſſioners.

Lord Chancellor.

AT Maſter Hoopers comming in; the Lord Chancellor aſked whether he was married.

M. Hooper examined before the commiſſioners.

Hooper. Yea my Lord, and will not be unmarried, till death unmarry me.

Dureſme. That is matter enough to deprive you.

Hooper. That it is not, my Lord, except ye do againſt the law.

The matter concerning marriage was no more talked of then for a great ſpace: but as well the Commiſſioners, as ſuch as ſtood by, began to make ſuch out-cries, and laughed, and uſed ſuch geſture as was unſeemly for the place, and for ſuch a matter. The Biſhop of Chicheſter, Doctor Day, called M. Hooper hypocrite, with vehement words, and ſcornefull countenance. B. Tonſtall called him beaſt; ſo did Smith, one of the Clerks of the Councell, and divers other that ſtood by. At length the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſaid, that all men might live chaſte that would, and brought in this Text, Caſtraverunt ſe propter regnum cœlorum, That is, there be that have gelded themſelves for the Kingdome of heaven, Math. 19.

Bleſſed be you when they ſhall ſpeak all reviling words againſt you for my names ſake

Maſter Hooper ſaid, that Text proved not that all men could live chaſt, but ſuch only to whom it was given; and read that which goeth before in the Text. But there was a clamour and cry, mocking and ſcorning, with calling him beaſt, that the Text could not be examined. Then M. Hooper ſaid, that it did appeare by the old Canons, that marriage was not forbidden unto Prieſts, and named the Decrees. But the Biſhop of Wincheſter ſent for another part, namely, the Clementines, or the Extravagants. But Biſhop Hooper ſaid, that booke was not it which he named.

Prieſts marriage not forbid by the old Canons.

Then cried out the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſaid; You ſhall not have any other, untill ye be judged by this. And then began ſuch a noiſe, tumult, and ſpeaking together of a great many that favoured not the cauſe, that nothing was done, ne ſpoken orderly, nor charitably. Afterwards Judge Morgan began to raile at Maſter Hooper a long time, with many opprobrious and foule words of his doing at Glouceſter, in puniſhing of men, and ſaid, there was never ſuch a tyrant as he was. After that, D. Day Biſhop of Chicheſter ſaid, that the Councell of Ancyra, which was before the Councell of Nice, was againſt the marriage of Prieſts.

This Morgan ſhortly after fell into a frenzie and madneſſe, and died of the ſame.

Then cried out my Lord Chancellor, and many with him, that M. Hooper had never read the Councels.

Yes my Lord, quoth Maſter Hooper, and my

Lord

The Councell of Nice permitteth prieſts marriage.

Lord of Chicheſter Doctor Day knoweth, that the great Councell of Nice, by the meanes of one Paphnutius, decreed that no Miniſter ſhould be ſeparated from his wife. But ſuch clamours and cries were uſed, that the Councell of Nice was not ſeene.

After this long brutiſh talke, Tonſtall Biſhop of Dureſme asked M. Hooper, whether he beleeved the corporall preſence in the Sacrament. And M. Hooper ſaid plainly, that there was none ſuch, neither did he beleeve any ſuch thing.

The corporall preſence.

Then would the Biſhop of Dureſme have read out of a booke, for his purpoſe belike (what book it was, I cannot tell:) but there was ſuch a noiſe and confuſed talke on every ſide, that he did not read it. Then asked Wincheſter of M. Hooper, what authority moved him not to beleeve the corporall preſence? He ſaid, the authority of Gods word, and alledged this Text, Quem oportet cœlum ſuſcipere, uſque ad tempus reſtaurationis omnium: i. Whom heaven muſt hold untill the later day.

Then the Biſhop of Wincheſter would have made that Text have ſerved nothing for his purpoſe: and he ſaid, he might be in heaven, and in the Sacrament alſo.

Articles taken againſt maſter Hooper.

Maſter Hooper would have ſaid more to have opened the Text, but all men that ſtood next about the Biſhop, allowed ſo his ſaying with clamors and cries, that maſter Hooper was not permitted to ſay any more againſt the Biſhop. Whereupon they bade the Notaries write that he was married, and ſaid, that he would not goe from his wife, and that he beleeved not the corporall preſence in the Sacrament, wherefore he was worthy to be deprived of his Biſhopricke.

This is the truth of the matter (as farre as I can truly remember) of the confuſed and troubleſome talk that was betweene them, and, except it were haſty and uncharitable words, this is the whole matter of their talk at that time. Atque hæc ille hactenus.

The true report of M. Hoopers entertainment in the Fleet, written with his owne hand the ſeventh of Ianuary 1554.

M. Hoopers report of his impriſonment in the Fleet.

The firſt of September, 1553. I was committed unto the Fleet from Richmond, to have the liberty of the priſon: and within ſixe dayes after I paid for my liberty five pounds ſterling to the Warden for fees: who, immediately upon the paiment thereof, complained unto Steven Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, and ſo was I committed to cloſe priſon one quarter of a yeere, in the Tower chamber of the Fleet, and uſed very extremely. Then by the meanes of a good Gentlewoman, I had liberty to come down to dinner and ſupper, not ſuffered to ſpeake with any of my friends: but as ſoone as dinner and ſupper was done, to repaire to my chamber againe. Notwithſtanding whileſt I came down thus to dinner and ſupper, the Warden and his wife picked quarrels with me, and complained untruly of me to their great friend the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

This good gentlewoman is thought to be miſtreſſe Wilkinſon.

Babington Warden of the Fleet, a wicked tyrant to Gods people.

After one quarter of a yeere and ſomewhat more, Babington the Warden and his wife fell out with me for the wicked Maſſe: and thereupon the Warden reſorted to the Biſhop of Wincheſter, and obtained to put me into the Wards where I have continued a long time, having nothing appointed to me for my bed, but a little pad of ſtraw and a rotten covering, with a ticke and a few feathers therein, the chamber being vile and ſtinking, untill by Gods meanes good people ſent me bedding to lie in. Of the one ſide of which priſon is the ſink and filth of the houſe, and on the other ſide the towne ditch, ſo that the ſtinch of the houſe hath infected me with ſundry diſeaſes.

The barbarous cruelty of the Warden of the Fleet.

During which time I have been ſick; and the doores, bars, haſps, and chaines being all cloſed, and made faſt upon me, I have mourned, called and cryed for helpe. But the Warden when hee hath known me many times ready to dye, and when the poore men of the Wards have called to helpe me, hath commanded the doores to be kept faſt, and charged that none of his men ſhould come at me, ſaying; Let him alone, it were a good riddance of him. And, amongſt many other times, he did thus the 18. of October, 1553. as many can witneſſe.

I paid alwaies like a Baron to the ſaid Warden, as well in fees, as for my board, which was 20. ſhillings a weeke, beſides my mans table, untill I was wrongfully deprived of my Biſhoprick, and ſince that time I have payed him as the beſt Gentleman doth in his houſe; yet hath hee uſed mee worſe, and more vilely than the verieſt ſlave that ever came to the hall Commons.

W. Downton M. Hoopers man.

The ſaid Warden hath alſo impriſoned my man William Downton, and ſtripped him out of his clothes to ſearch for letters, and could find none but only a little remembrance of good peoples names, that gave me their almes to relieve me in priſon; and to undoe them alſo, the Warden delivered the ſame bill unto the ſaid Steven Gardiner, Gods enemy and mine.

M. Hooper 18 moneths in priſon. Q. Mary indebted to M. Hooper.

I have ſuffered impriſonment almoſt eighteen moneths, my goods, living, friends, and comfort taken from me; the Queene owing me by iuſt account 80. pounds or more. She hath put me in priſon, and giveth nothing to finde me, neither is there ſuffered any one to come at me, whereby I might have reliefe. I am with a wicked man and woman, ſo that I ſee no remedy (ſaving Gods helpe) but I ſhall bee caſt away in priſon before I come to iudgement. But I commit my iuſt cauſe to God, whoſe will be done, whether it be by life or death.

Thus much wrote he himſelfe of this matter.

Another examination of M. Hooper.

M. Hooper againe convented before the Biſhop of Wincheſter.

The xxii. of Ianuary following, 1555. Babington the Warden of the Fleet was commanded to bring M. Hooper before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, with other Biſhops and Commiſſioners at the ſaid Wincheſters houſe at Saint Mary Overies, whereas in effect thus much was done.

Gardiner exhorteth M. Hooper to returne to the Popes church.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter in the name of himſelfe and the reſt, moved maſter Hooper earneſtly to forſake the evill and corrupt doctrine (as he termed it) preached in the dayes of King Edward the ſixth, and to returne to the unity of the Catholike Church, and to acknowledge the Popes Holineſſe to be head of the ſame Church, according to the determination of the whole Parliament, promiſing, that as he himſelf, with other his brethren, had received the Popes bleſſing, and the Queenes mercy; even ſo mercy was ready to be ſhewed to him and others, if he would ariſe with them, and condeſcend to the Popes holineſſe.

The Pope not worthy to be a member of Chriſts church.

M. Hooper anſwered, that foraſmuch as the Pope taught doctrine altogether contrary to the doctrine of Chriſt, he was not worthy to be accounted as a member of Chriſts Church, much leſſe to be head thereof, wherefore he would in no wiſe condeſcend to any ſuch uſurped iuriſdiction, neither eſteemed he the Church, whereof they call him head, to bee the Catholike Church

Anno 1555

Church of Chriſt: for the Church only heareth the voice of her ſpouſe Chriſt, and flieth the ſtrangers. Howbeit (ſaith he) if in any point, to me unknowne, I have offended the Queenes Maieſty, I ſhall moſt humbly ſubmit my ſelfe to her mercy, if mercy may be had with ſafety of conſcience, and without the diſpleaſure of God.

Q. Mary will ſhew no mercy but to the Popes friends.

Anſwer was made, that the Queene would ſhew no mercy to the Popes enemies. Whereupon Babington was commanded to bring him to the Fleet againe: who did ſo, and ſhifted him from his former chamber into another, neere unto the Wardens owne chamber, where he remained vi. daies: and in the meane time, his former chamber was ſearched by D. Martin and others, for writings and bookes, which maſter Hooper was thought to have made, but none was found.

Here followeth another examination of Maſter Hooper.

Another examination of M. Hooper before the B. of Wincheſter and his fellowes.

THe 28. of January, Wincheſter and other the Commiſſioners ſate in iudgement at S. Mary Overies, whereas M. Hooper appeared before them at afternoone againe, and there, after much reaſoning and diſputation to and fro, he was commanded aſide, till M. Rogers (which was then come) had been likewiſe examined. Examinations being ended, the two Sheriffes of London were commanded, about foure of the clocke, to carry them to the Counter in Southwarke, there to remaine till the morrow at nine a clock, to ſee whether they would relent and come home againe to their catholike Church. So M. Hooper went before with one of the Sheriffes, and maſter Rogers came after with the other, and being out of the Church doore, maſter Hooper looked backe, and ſtayed a little till maſter Rogers drew neere, unto whom he ſaid; Come brother Rogers, muſt we two take this matter firſt in hand, and begin to frie theſe fagots? Yea ſir, ſaid maſter Rogers, by Gods grace. Doubt not, ſaid maſter Hooper, but God will give ſtrength. So going forwards, there was ſuch a preaſe of people in the ſtreets, which reioyced at their conſtancy, that they had much adoe to paſſe.

M. Hoopers words to maſter Rogers.

By the way the Sheriffe ſaid to M. Hooper, I wonder that ye were ſo haſty and quicke with my Lord Chancellor, and did uſe no more patience. He anſwered, maſter Sheriffe, I was nothing at all impatient, although I was earneſt in my Maſters cauſe, and it ſtandeth me ſo in hand, for it goeth upon life and death, not the life and death of this world onely, but alſo of the world to come. Then were they committed to the keeper of the Counter, and appointed to ſeverall chambers, with commandement that they ſhould not be ſuffered to ſpeak one with another, neither yet any other permitted to come at them that night.

M. Hooper earneſt in his maſters cauſe.

Upon the next day following, the 29. of January, at the houre appointed they were brought againe by the Sheriffs before the ſaid Biſhop and Commiſſioners in the Church, where they were the day before. And after long and earneſt talk, when they perceived that maſter Hooper would by no meanes condeſcend unto them, they condemned him to be degraded, and read unto him his condemnation. That done, maſter Rogers was brought before them, and in like manner intreated, and ſo they delivered both of them to the ſecular power, the two Sheriffs of London, who were willed to carry them to the Clinke, a priſon not far from the Biſhop of Wincheſters houſe, and there to remaine till night.

The third and laſt examination of maſter Hooper.

M. Hooper condemned.

When it was dark, maſter Hooper was led by one of the Sheriffes, with many bils and weapons, firſt thorow the Biſhop of Wincheſters houſe, and ſo over London Bridge, thorow the City to Newgate. And by the way ſome of the Sergeants were willed to goe before, and put out the Coſtermongers candles, who uſe to ſit with lights in the ſtreets: either fearing of likelihood that the people would have made ſome attempt to have taken him away from them by force, if they had ſeen him go to that priſon; or elſe, being burdened with an evill conſcience, they thought darkneſſe to be a moſt fit ſeaſon for ſuch a buſineſſe.

Darkneſſe beſt for the Papiſts.

But notwithſtanding this device, the people having ſome foreknowledge of his comming, many of them came forth of their doores with lights, and ſaluted him, praiſing God for his conſtancy in the true doctrine which he had taught them, and deſiring God to ſtrengthen him in the ſame to the end. Maſter Hooper paſſed by, and required the people to make their earneſt prayers to God for him, and ſo went thorow Cheapeſide to the place appointed, and was delivered as cloſe priſoner to the keeper of Newgate, where he remained ſix dayes, no body being permitted to come to him, or to talk with him, ſaving his keepers, and ſuch as ſhould be appointed thereto.

The people reioycing at the conſtancy of maſter Hooper and maſter Rogers.

M. Hooper ſent to Newgate.

During this time, Boner Biſhop of London, and others at his appointment, as Fecknam, Chedſey, and Harpsfield, &c. reſorted divers times unto him, to aſſay if by any meanes they could perſwade him to relent, and become a member of their Antichriſtian Church. All the wayes they could deviſe, they attempted. For, beſides the diſputations and allegations of teſtimonies of the Scriptures, and of ancient writers wreſted to a wrong ſenſe, according to their accuſtomed manner, they uſed alſo all outward gentleneſſe and ſignifications of friendſhip, with many great proffers and promiſes of worldly commodities, not omitting alſo moſt grievous threatnings, if with gentleneſſe they could not prevaile, but they found him alwayes the ſame man, ſtedfaſt and immoveable. When they perceived that they could by no meanes reclaime him to their purpoſe, with ſuch perſwaſions and offers as they uſed for his converſion, then went they about by falſe rumors and reports of recantations (for it is well known, that they and their ſervants did ſpread it firſt abroad) to bring him and the doctrine of Chriſt which he profeſſed, out of credit with the people. So the brute being a little ſpread abroad, and beleeved of ſome of the weaker ſort, by reaſon of the often reſort of the Biſhop of London and others, it increaſed more, and at the laſt came to maſter Hoopers eares. Wherewith he was not a little grieved, that the people ſhould give ſo light credit unto falſe rumors, having ſo ſimple a ground, as it may appeare by a letter which he wrote upon that occaſion, the copie whereof followeth.

B. Boner and his Chaplains reaſon with M. Hooper in priſon.

Falſe rumors of M. Hoopers recantation.

A letter of Maſter Hooper for the ſtopping of certaine falſe rumors ſpread abroad of his recantation.

THe grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with all them that unfainedly look for the coming of our Saviour Chriſt, Amen.

A purgation of M. Hooper againſt falſe rumors ſpread of his recantation

Deare brethren and ſiſters in the Lord, and my fellow priſoners for the cauſe of Gods Goſpell, I do much reioyce and give thanks unto God for your conſtancy and perſeverance in affliction, unto whom I wiſh continuance unto the end. And as I do reioyce in your faith and conſtancy in afflictions that be in priſon; even ſo do I mourne and lament to heare of our deare brethren that yet have not felt ſuch dangers for Gods truth, as we have, and doe feele, and be daily like to ſuffer more, yea, the very extreme and vile death of the fire: yet ſuch is the report abroad (as I am credibly informed) that I John Hooper, a condemned man for the cauſe of Chriſt, ſhould now after ſentence of death (being in Newgate priſoner, and looking daily for execution) recant and abiure that which heretofore I have preached. And this talk ariſeth of this, that the Biſhop of London and his Chaplaines reſort unto me. Doubtleſſe, if our brethren were as godly as I could wiſh them, they would thinke, that in caſe I did refuſe to talke with them, they might have iuſt occaſion to ſay, that I were unlearned, and durſt not ſpeake with learned men, or elſe proud and diſdained to ſpeake with them. Therefore to avoid iuſt ſuſpicion of both, I have, and doe daily ſpeake with them when they come, not doubting but that they report that I am neither proud nor unlearned. And I would wiſh all men to do as I do in this point. For I feare not their arguments, neither is death terrible unto me, praying you to make true report of the ſame, as occaſion ſhall ſerve; and that I am more confirmed in the truth which I have preached heretofore, by their comming.

The occaſion of this rumor how it riſeth.

Therefore, ye that may ſend to the weak brethren, pray them that they trouble me not with ſuch reports of recantations as they do. For I have hitherto left all things of the world, and ſuffered great paines and impriſonment, and I thank God I am as ready to ſuffer death, as a mortall man may be. It were better for them to pray for us, than to credit or report ſuch rumors that be untrue. We have enemies enow of ſuch as know not God truly. But yet the falſe report of weak brethren is a double croſſe. I wiſh you eternall ſalvation in Jeſus Chriſt, and alſo require your continuall prayers, that he which hath begun in us, may continue it to the end.

Falſe reports a grievous croſſe.

I have taught the truth with my tongue, and with my pen heretofore, and hereafter ſhortly will confirme the ſame by Gods grace with my blood. Forth of Newgate the ſecond of February, Anno 1554.

Your brother in Chriſt,
Iohn Hooper.

Upon munday morning the Biſhop of London came to Newgate, and there degraded maſter Hooper, the ſentence of which his degradation here followeth.

Degradatio Hooperi.

The ſentence of degradation againſt maſter Hooper.

IN nomine ✠ patris, ✠ filii, ✠ & ſpiritus ſancti. Amen. Quoniam per ſententiam definitivam à reverendo in Chriſto patre & Domino Stephano permiſſione divina, Winton. After the ſentence of degradation thus declared, now let us ſee the forme and manner of their degrading, which here alſo followeth. But firſt here is to be noted, that they, degrading this bleſſed Biſhop, did not proceed againſt him as againſt a Biſhop, but as only againſt a Prieſt, as they termed him; for ſuch as he was, theſe Baalamites accounted for no Biſhop.

Here followeth the forme and manner uſed in the degrading of B. Hooper.

The forme and manner of degrading Biſhop Hooper. Alexander Andrew Goaler of Newgate, a cruell enemy to Gods people.

THe fourth day of February, the yeere above mentioned, in the Chappell in Newgate, the Biſhop of London there ſitting with his Notary and certaine other witneſſes, came Alexander Andrew the Goaler, bringing with him maſter Hooper and maſter Rogers, being condemned before by the Chancellor: where the ſaid Biſhop of London, at the requeſt of the foreſaid Wincheſter, proceeded to the degradation of the parties above mentioned, maſter Hooper and maſter Rogers, after this forme and manner: Firſt, he put upon them all the veſtures and ornaments belonging to a Prieſt, with all other things to the ſame order appertaining, as though (being reveſted) they ſhould ſolemnly execute their office. Thus they being apparelled and reveſted, the Biſhop beginneth to pluck off, firſt the uttermoſt veſture, and ſo by degree and order comming downe to the loweſt veſture, which they had only in taking Bennet and Collet; and ſo being ſtript and depoſed, he deprived them of all order, benefit and priviledge belonging to the Clergie; and conſequently that being done, pronounced, decreed, and declared, the ſaid parties ſo degraded to be given perſonally to the ſecular power, as the Sheriffes being for that yeare, maſter Davy Woodrofe, and maſter William Cheſter: who, receiving firſt the ſaid maſter Rogers at the hands of the Biſhop, had him away with them, bringing him to the place of execution where he ſuffered. The witneſſes there preſent were maſter Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, Robert Coſin, and Robert Willerton, Canons of Pauls, Thomas Mountague, and George How Clerks, Triſtram Swadocke, and Richard Clunney Sumner, &c.

M. Hooper and M. Rogers degraded together.

Davy Woodroofe, and William Cheſter Sheriffes.

The ſame munday at night, being the 4. of February, his Keeper gave him an inkling that he ſhould be ſent to Glocester to ſuffer death, whereat he reioyced very much, lifting up his eyes and hands unto heaven, and praiſing God that he ſaw it good to ſend him amongſt the people,

M. Hooper glad that he ſhould ſuffer amongſt his own flock.

over

Anno 1555

over whom he was Paſtor, there to confirme with his death the truth which he had before taught them; not doubting but the Lord would give him ſtrength to performe the ſame to his glory: and immediately he ſent to his ſervants houſe for his boots, ſpurs and cloke, that he might be in a readines to ride when he ſhould be called.

M. Hooper carried to Gloceſter to be burned.

The next day following, about foure of the clock in the morning before day, the keeper with others came to him and ſearched him, and the bed wherein he lay, to ſee if he had written any thing, and then he was led by the Sheriffes of London and other their officers forth of Newgate to a place appointed, not farre from S. Dunſtans Church in Fleetſtreet, where ſixe of the Queenes Guard were appointed to receive him, and to carry him to Gloceſter, there to be delivered unto the Sheriffe, who with the Lord Shandoys, M. Wicks, and other Commiſſioners, were appointed to ſee execution done. The which Guard brought him to the Angell, where he brake his faſt with them, eating his meat at that time more liberally than he had uſed to do a good while before. About the breake of the day he went to horſe, and leapt cheerfully on horſeback without help, having a hood upon his head under his hat, that he ſhould not be known, and ſo took his iourney ioyfully towards Gloceſter, and alwayes by the way the Guard learned of him where he was accuſtomed to bait or lodge, and ever carried him to another Inne.

A woman of Ciceter confirmed by the conſtancy of M. Hooper, which railed at him before.

Upon the Thurſday following, he came to a towne in his Dioceſſe called Ciceter, xv. miles from Gloceſter, about eleven of the clock, and there dined at a womans houſe which had alwayes hated the truth, and ſpoken all evill ſhe could of M. Hooper. This woman, perceiving the cauſe of his comming, ſhewed him all the friendſhip ſhe could, and lamented his caſe with teares, confeſſing that ſhe before had often reported, that if he were put to the triall, he would not ſtand to his doctrine.

M. Hooper commeth to Gloceſter.

After dinner he rode forwards, and came to Gloceſter about five of the clocke, and a mile without the towne was much people aſſembled, which cried and lamented his eſtate: inſomuch that one of the Guard rode poſt into the towne, to require aid of the Maior and Sheriffes, fearing leſt he ſhould have beene taken from them. The Officers and their retinue repaired to the Gate with weapons, and commanded the people to keepe their houſes, &c. but there was no man that once gave any ſignification of any ſuch reſcue or violence. So was he lodged at one Ingrams houſe in Gloceſter, and that night (as he had done all the way) he did eat his meat quietly, and ſlept his firſt ſleep ſoundly, as it was reported by them of the Guard and others. After his firſt ſleep he continued all that night in prayer untill the morning, and then he deſired that he might goe into the next chamber (for the Guard were alſo in the chamber where he lay) that there being ſolitary he might pray and talk with God: ſo that all the day, ſaving a little at meat, and when he talked at any time with ſuch as the Guard licenced to ſpeak with him, he beſtowed in prayer.

The quiet minde of M. Hooper in his troubles.

Amongſt other that ſpake with him, Sir Anthony Kingſton, Knight, was one. Who, ſeeming in times paſt his very friend, was then appointed by the Queenes letters to be one of the Commiſſioners, to ſee execution done upon him. M. Kingſtone being brought into the chamber found him at his prayers: and as ſoone as he ſaw M. Hooper, he burſt forth in teares. M. Hooper at the firſt bluſh knew him not. Then ſaid Maſter Kingſton, Why my Lord, do you not know me an old friend of yours, Anthony Kingſton?

Sir Anthony Kingſton commeth to maſter Hooper.

Yes M. Kingſton, I doe now know you well, and am glad to ſee you in health, and do praiſe God for the ſame.

Sir Anthony Kingſtons perſwaſions.

But I am ſorry to ſee you in this caſe; for as I underſtand you be come hither to die. But (alas) conſider that life is ſweet, and death is bitter. Therefore ſeeing life may be had, deſire to live; for life hereafter may do good.

M. Hooper replieth.

Indeed it is true M. Kingſton, I am come hither to end this life, and to ſuffer death here, becauſe I will not gainſay the former truth that I have theretofore taught amongſt you in this Dioceſſe, and elſwhere; and I thank you for your friendly counſell, although it be not ſo friendly as I could have wiſhed it. True it is M. Kingſton, that death is bitter, and life is ſweet: but (alas) conſider that the death to come is more bitter, and the life to come is more ſweet. Therefore for the deſire and love I have to the one, and the terror and feare of the other; I do not ſo much regard this death, nor eſteem this life, but have ſetled my ſelfe, through the ſtrength of Gods holy Spirit, patiently to paſſe through the torments and extremities of the fire now prepared for me, rather than to deny the truth of his word, deſiring you and others, in the meane time, to commend me to Gods mercy in your prayers.

Life compared with life, and death with death.

Sir Anthony Kingſton.

Well my Lord, then I perceive there is no remedy, and therefore I will take my leave of you: and I thank God that ever I knew you, for God did appoint yͧ to call me being a loſt child: and by your good inſtructions, where before I was both an adulterer and a fornicator, God hath brought me to the forſaking and deteſting of the ſame.

Sir Anthony Kingſton converted by M. Hooper.

M. Hooper.

If you have had the grace ſo to do, I do highly praiſe God for it: and if you have not, I pray God ye may have, and that you may continually live in his feare. After theſe and many other words the one took leave of the other, M. Kingſton with bitter tears, M. Hooper with tears alſo trickling down his cheeks. At which departure M. Hooper told him, that all the troubles he had ſuſtained in priſon had not cauſed him to utter ſo much ſorrow.

A blinde boy commeth to M. Hooper

The ſame day in the afternoone, a blinde boy, after long interceſſion made to the Guard, obtained licence to be brought unto Maſter Hoopers ſpeech. The ſame boy not long afore had ſuffered impriſonment at Gloceſter for confeſſing of the truth. Maſter Hooper after he had examined him of his faith, and the cauſe of his impriſonment, beheld him ſtedfaſtly, and (the water appearing in his eyes) ſaid unto him: Ah poore boy, God hath taken from thee thy outward ſight, for what conſideration he beſt knoweth: but he hath given thee another ſight much more precious, for he hath indued thy ſoule with the eye of knowledge and faith. God give thee grace continually to pray unto him, that thou loſe not that ſight, for then ſhouldeſt thou be blind both in body and ſoule.

Gods grace upon a blinde boy at Gloceſter.

After that another came to him, whom he knew to be a very Papiſt and a wicked man, which appeared to be ſorry for M. Hoopers trouble, ſaying; Sir I am ſorry to ſee you thus. To ſee me? Why, ſaid he, art thou ſorry? To ſee you, ſaith the other, in this caſe. For I heare ſay you are come hither to die, for the which I am ſorry. Be ſorry for thy ſelf man, ſaid M. Hooper, and lament thine own wickedneſſe: for I am well, I thank God, & death to me for Chriſts ſake is welcome.

M. Hooper committed to the Sheriffes of Gloceſter.

The ſame night he was committed by the Guard, their commiſſion being then expired, unto the cuſtody of the Sheriffs of Gloceſter. The name of the one was Jenkins, the other Bond, who with the Maior and Aldermen repaired to M. Hoopers lodging, and at the firſt meeting ſaluted him, and took him by the hand. Unto whom

M Hoopers petition to the Sheriffes.

Hooper ſpake on this manner. Maſter Maior, I giue moſt hearty thankes to you, and to the reſt of your brethren, that you haue vouchſafed to take me a priſoner and a condemned man by the hand; whereby to my reioycing it is ſome deale apparent that your old loue and friendſhip towards me is not altogether extinguiſhed: and I truſt alſo that all the things I haue taught you in times paſt are not utterly forgotten, when I was here, by the godly King that dead is, appointed to be your Biſhop and Paſtor. For the which moſt true and ſincere doctrine, becauſe I will not now account it falſhood and hereſie, as many other men do, I am ſent hither (as I am ſure you know) by the Queenes commandement, to die, and am come where I taught it, to confirme it with my blood. And now Maſter Sheriffes, I underſtand by theſe good men, and my very friends (meaning the Guard) at whoſe hands I haue found ſo much favor and gentleneſſe by the way hitherward, as a priſoner could reaſonably require (for the which alſo I moſt heartily thank them) that I am committed to your cuſtody, as unto them that muſt ſee me brought to morrow to the place of execution. My requeſt therefore to you ſhall be onely, that there may be a quicke fire, ſhortly to make an end; and in the meane time I will be as obedient unto you, as your ſelves would wiſh. If you thinke I doe amiſſe in any thing, hold up your finger, and I haue done. For I am not come hither as one inforced or compelled to die: for it is well knowne, I might haue had my life with worldly gaine: but as one willing to offer and giue my life for the truth, rather than to conſent to the wicked Papiſticall Religion of the Biſhop of Rome, receiued and ſet forth by the Magiſtrates in England, to Gods high diſpleaſure and diſhonour; and I truſt by Gods grace to morrow to die a faithfull ſeruant of God, and a true obedient ſubiect to the Queene.

The Guard ſpeaketh for M. Hooper.

M. Hooper ſpendeth the night in prayer.

Theſe and ſuch like words in effect uſed Maſter Hooper to the Maior, Sheriffs, and Aldermen, whereat many of them mourned and lamented. Notwithſtanding the two Sheriffes went aſide to conſult, and were determined to haue lodged him in the common Goale of the towne called Northgate, if the Guard had not made earneſt interceſſion for him: who declared at large, how quietly, mildly and patiently he had behaued himſelfe in the way, adding thereto, that any child might keepe him well enough, and that they themſelues would rather take paines to watch with him, than that he ſhould be ſent to the common priſon. So it was determined at the length he ſhould ſtill remaine in Robert Ingrams houſe; and the Sheriffes and the Sergeants and other Officers did appoint to watch with him that night themſelues. His deſire was that he might go to bed that night betimes, ſaying, that he had many things to remember: and ſo did at fiue of the clock, and ſlept one ſleepe ſoundly, and beſtowed the reſt of the night in prayer. After he gate up in the morning, he deſired that no man ſhould be ſuffered to come into the chamber, that he might be ſolitary till the houre of execution.

Sir John Bridges, L. Shandoys, Sir Edmund Bridges, Sir Anthony Kingſton, Commiſſioners.

About eight of the clocke came Sir John Bridges Lord Shandoys, with a great band of men, Sir Anthony Kingſton, Sir Edmund Bridges, and other Commiſſioners appointed to ſee execution done. At nine of the clock Maſter Hooper was willed to prepare himſelf to be in a readineſſe, for the time was at hand. Immediately he was brought down from his chamber by the Sheriffes, who were accompanied with bils, gleiues and weapons. When he ſaw the multitude of weapons, he ſpake to the Sheriffs on this wiſe; Maſter Sheriffes (ſaid he) I am no traytor, neither needed you to haue made ſuch a buſineſſe to bring me to the place where I muſt ſuffer: for if ye had willed me, I would haue gone alone to the ſtake, and haue troubled none of you all. Afterward looking upon the multitude of people that were aſſembled, being by eſtimation to the number of ſeuen thouſand (for it was market day, and many alſo came to ſee his behauiour towards death) he ſpake unto thoſe that were about him, ſaying; Alas, why be theſe people aſſembled and come together? Peraduenture they think to heare ſomething of me now, as they haue in times paſt, but alas ſpeech is prohibited me. Notwithſtanding the cauſe of my death is well knowne unto them. When I was appointed here to be their Paſtor, I preached unto them true and ſincere doctrine, and that out of the word of God. Becauſe I will not now account the ſame to be hereſie and untruth, this kinde of death is prepared for me.

M. Hooper for preaching true doctrine put to death.

M. Hooper forbidden to ſpeak to the people.

His cheerfull going to death.

So he went forward led betweene the two Sheriffs (as it were a Lamb to the place of ſlaughter) in a gown of his hoſts, his hat upon his head, and a ſtaffe in his hand to ſtay himſelfe withall. For the griefe of the Sciatica, which he had taken in priſon, cauſed him ſomewhat to halt. All the way, being ſtraitly charged not to ſpeake, he could not be perceiued once to open his mouth, but beholding the people all the way, which mourned bitterly for him, he would ſomtimes lift up his eyes towards heauen, and looke very cheerfully upon ſuch as he knew: and he was neuer knowne, during the time of his being amongſt them, to looke with ſo cheerfull and ruddie a countenance as he did at that preſent. When he came to the place appointed where he ſhould die, ſmilingly he beheld the ſtake and preparation made for him, which was neere unto the great Elme tree ouer againſt the Colledge of Prieſts, where he was wont to preach. The place round about the houſes, and the boughs of the tree were repleniſhed with people; and in the chamber ouer the Colledge gate ſtood the Prieſts of the Colledge. Then kneeled he down (foraſmuch as he could not be ſuffered to ſpeake unto the people) to prayer, and beckned ſixe or ſeuen times unto one whom he knew well, to heare the ſaid Prayer, to make report thereof in time to come (powring teares upon his ſhoulders and in his boſome) who gaue attentiue eares unto the ſame: the which prayer he made upon the whole Creed, wherein he continued the ſpace of halfe an houre. Now after he was ſomwhat entred into his prayer, a boxe was brought and laid before him upon a ſtoole, with his pardon (or at the leaſtwiſe it was fained to be his pardon) from the Queene, if he would turne. At the ſight whereof he cried, If you loue my ſoule, away with it, if you loue my ſoule, away with it. The boxe being taken away, the Lord Shandoys ſaid, Seeing there is no remedy, diſpatch him quickly. M. Hooper ſaid, Good my Lord, I truſt your Lordſhip will giue me leaue to make an end of my prayers.

M. Hooper brought to the place of martyrdome.

M. Hooper refuſeth the Queens pardon.

Then ſaid the Lord Shandoys to Sir Edmund Bridges his ſonne, which gaue eare before to M. Hoopers prayer at his requeſt: Edmund, take heed that he doe nothing elſe but pray: if he do, tell me, and I ſhall quickly diſpatch him. Whiles this talk was, there ſtepped one or two uncalled, which heard him ſpeak theſe words following.

M. Hoopers prayer.

Lord, ſaid he, I am hell, but thou art heaven; I am ſwill and a ſinke of ſinne, but thou art a gracious God and a mercifull Redeemer. Have mercy therefore upon mee moſt miſerable and wretched offender, after thy great mercy, and according to thine ineſtimable goodneſſe. Thou art aſcended into heaven, receive me hell to be partaker of thy joyes, where thou ſitteſt is equall glory with thy Father. For well knoweſt thou, Lord, wherefore I am come hither to ſuffer, and why the wicked do perſecute this thy poore ſervant; not for my ſinnes and tranſgreſſions committed againſt thee, but becauſe I will not allow their wicked doings, to the contaminating of thy bloud, and to the deniall of the knowledge of thy truth, wherewith it did pleaſe thee by thy holy Spirit to inſtruct me: the which with as much diligence as a poore wretch might (being thereto called) I have ſet forth to thy glory. And well ſeeſt thou, my Lord and God, what terrible paines and cruell torments be prepared for thy creature: ſuch, Lord, as without thy ſtrength none is able to beare, or patiently to paſſe. But all things, that are impoſſible with man, are poſſible with thee. Therefore ſtrengthen me of thy goodneſſe, that in the fire I break not the rules of patience; or els aſſwage the terror of the paines, as ſhall ſeeme moſt to thy glory.

M. Hooper undreſſeth himſelfe to the fire.

As ſoone as the Maior had eſpied theſe men which made report of the former words, they were commanded away, and could not be ſuffered to heare any more. Prayer being done, he prepared himſelfe to the ſtake, and put off his Hoſts gowne, and delivered it to the Sheriffs, requiring them to ſee it reſtored unto the owner, and put off the reſt of his geere, unto his doublet and hoſe, wherein he would have burned. But the Sheriffes would not permit that (ſuch was their greedineſſe) unto whoſe pleaſures (good man) he very obediently ſubmitted himſelfe; and his doublet, hoſe, and waſtcoat were taken off. Then being in his ſhirt, he took a point from his hoſe himſelfe, and truſſed his ſhirt betweene his legges, where he had a pound of gun-powder in a bladder, and under each arme the like quantity delivered him by the Guard. So deſiring the people to ſay the Lords prayer with him and to pray for him (who performed it with tears, during the time of his paines) he went up to the ſtake. Now when he was at the ſtake, three Irons, made to binde him to the ſtake, were brought; one for his neck, another for his middle, and the third for his legges. But he refuſing them, ſaid, Ye haue no need thus to trouble your ſelves. For I doubt not, but God will give ſtrength ſufficient to abide the extremity of the fire, without bands: notwithſtanding, ſuſpecting the frailty and weakneſſe of the fleſh, but having aſſured confidence in Gods ſtrength, I am content ye do as ye ſhall think good.

M. Hooper bound to the ſtake.

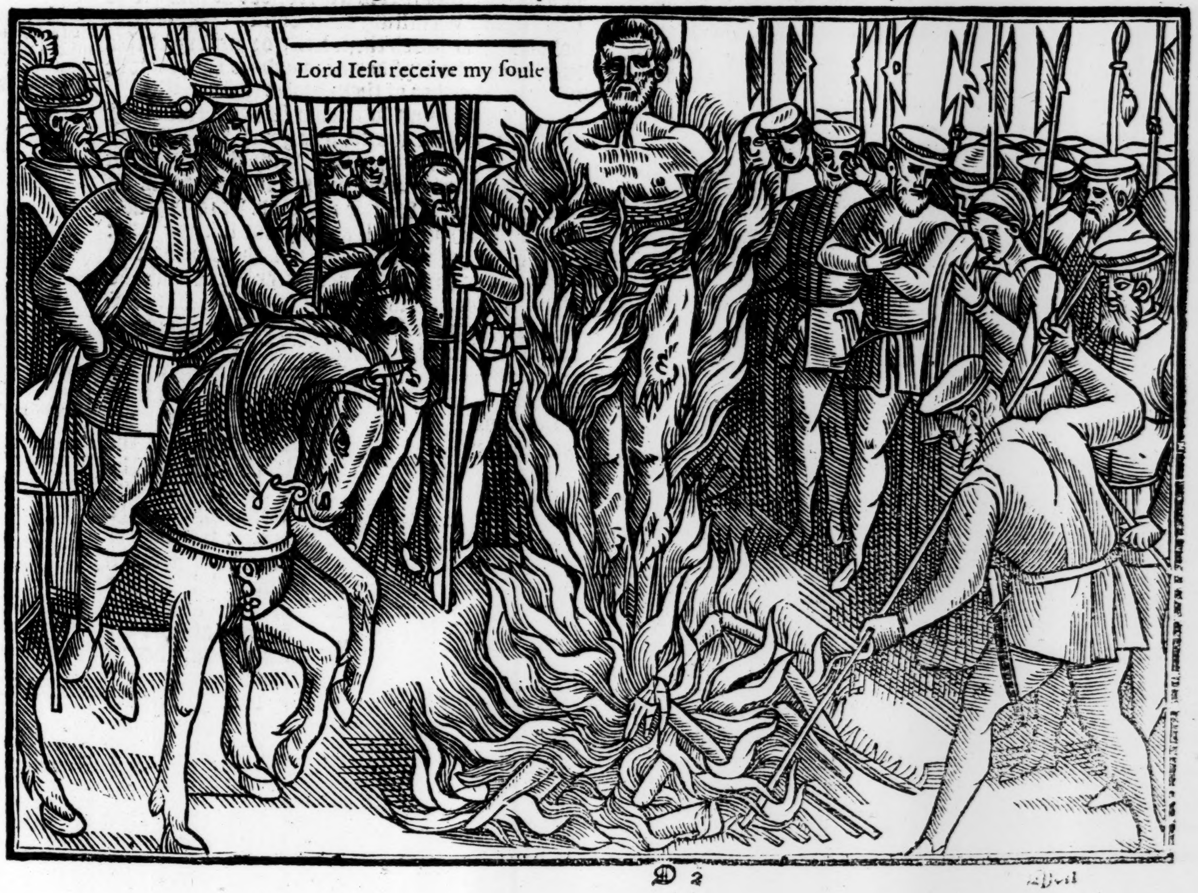
So the hoope of iron prepared for his middle, was brought, which being made ſomewhat too ſhort (for his belly was ſwolne with impriſonment) he ſhrank and put in his belly with his hand, untill it was faſtened: and when they offered to have bound his neck and legs with the other two hoopes of iron, he utterly refuſed them, and would have none, ſaying, I am well aſſured I ſhall not trouble you.

The weeping of the people at M. Hoopers burning.

He forgiveth his executioner

Thus being ready, he looked upon the people, of whom he might be well ſeene (for he was both tall, and ſtood alſo on an high ſtoole) and beheld round about him: and in every corner there was nothing to be ſeene but weeping and ſorrowfull people. Then lifting up his eyes and hands unto heaven, he prayed to himſelfe. By and by he that was appointed to make the fire, came to him, and did aſke him forgiveneſſe. Of whom he aſked why he ſhould forgive him, ſaying, that he knew never any offence he had committed againſt him. O Sir (ſaid the man) I am appointed to make the fire. Therein (ſaid Maſter Hooper) thou doeſt nothing offend me; God forgive thee thy ſinnes, and doe thine office, I pray thee.

The burning of M. Iohn Hooper, at Gloceſter. Anno 1555. February 9.



Lord Ieſu receive my ſoule

Then the reeds were caſt up, and he received two bundles of them in his owne hands, imbraced them, kiſſed them, and put under either arme one of them, and ſhewed with his hand, how the reſt ſhould be beſtowed, and pointed to place where any did lack.

Fire put to M. Hooper.

Anon commandement was given that the fire ſhould be ſet to, and ſo was. But becauſe there were put to no fewer greene fagots than two horſes could carry upon their backs, it kindled not by and by, and was a pretty while alſo before it tooke the reeds upon the fagots. At length it burned about him, but the wind having full ſtrength in that place (it was alſo a lowring & a cold morning) it blew the flame from him, ſo that he was in a maner no more but toucht by the fire.

A new fire made to Maſter Hooper.

Within a ſpace after, a few dry fagots were brought, and a new fire kindled with fagots (for there were no more reeds) and that burned at the neather parts, but had ſmall power above, becauſe of the wind, ſaving that it did burne his haire, and ſcorch his ſkin a little. In the time of which fire, even as at the firſt flame, he prayed, ſaying mildly and not very lowd, (but as one without paines) O Ieſus the ſon of David have mercy upon me, and receive my ſoule. After the ſecond was ſpent, he did wipe both his eyes with his hands, and beholding the people, he ſaid with an indifferent lowd voice; For Gods love (good people) let me have more fire. And all this while his neather parts did burne: for the fagots were ſo few, that the flame did not burne ſtrongly at his upper parts.

M. Hooper called for more fire.

The third fire was kindled within a while after, which was more extreme than the other two: and then the bladders of gun-powder brake, which did him ſmall good, they were ſo placed, and the wind had ſuch power. In the which fire he prayed with ſomewhat a lowd voice; Lord Ieſus have mercy upon me; Lord Ieſus have mercy upon me: Lord Ieſus receive my ſpirit. And theſe were the laſt words he was heard to utter. But when he was black in the mouth, and his tongue ſwolne, that he could not ſpeake, yet his lips went till they were ſhrunk to the gummes: and he knocked his breaſt with his hands, untill one of his armes fell off, and then knocked ſtill with the other, what time the fat, water, and blood dropped out at his fingers ends, untill by renewing of the fire his ſtrength was gone, and his hand did cleave faſt in knocking to the iron upon his breaſt. So immediately, bowing forwards, he yeelded up his ſpirit.

The laſt words of M. Hooper.

Anno 1555

The patient end of this holy Martyr.

Thus was he three quarters of an houre or more in the fire. Even as a Lamb, patiently he abode the extremity thereof, neither moving forwards, backwards, or to any ſide: but having his neather parts burned, and his bowels fallen out, he died as quietly as a child in his bed: and he now reigneth as a bleſſed Martyr, in the ioyes of heaven prepared for the faithfull in Chriſt, before the foundations of the world: for whoſe conſtancy all Chriſtians are bound to praiſe God.

A letter which M. Hooper did write out of priſon to certaine of his friends.

A letter exhortatory of Maſter Hooper to certaine of his friends.

THe grace of God be with you. Amen. I did write unto you of late, and told you what extremity the Parliament had concluded upon concerning Religion, ſuppreſſing the truth, and ſetting forth the untruth, intending to cauſe all men by extremity to forſweare themſelves, and to take again, for the head of the Church, him that is neither head nor member of it, but a very enemy, as the word of God and all ancient writers do record: and for lack of law and authority, they will uſe force and extremity, which have beene the arguments to defend the Pope and Popery, ſince this authority firſt began in the world. But now is the time of triall, to ſee whether we feare more God or man. It was an eaſie thing to hold with Chriſt whiles the Prince and world held with him: but now the world hateth him, it is the true triall who be his.

The Popes religion ſtandeth only by force and extremity.

Wherefore in the name and in the vertue, ſtrength, and power of his holy Spirit, prepare your ſelves in any caſe to adverſity & conſtancy. Let us not run away when it is moſt time to fight. Remember none ſhalbe crownd, but ſuch as fight manfully: & he that endureth to the end ſhall be ſaved. Ye muſt now turn all your cogitations from the perill you ſee, and mark the felicity that followeth the perill; either victory in this world of your enemies, or els a ſurrender of this life to inherit the everlaſting Kingdome. Beware of beholding too much the felicity or miſery of this world; for the conſideration and too earneſt love or feare of either of them draweth from God.

Neither the felicity nor the miſery of this world to be looked upon.

Wherfore think with your ſelves as touching the felicity of the world, it is good: but yet none otherwiſe than it ſtandeth with the favour of God. It is to be kept; but yet ſo farre forth, as by keeping of it we loſe not God. It is good abiding and tarrying ſtill among our friends here: but yet ſo, that we tarry not therewithall in Gods diſpleaſure, and hereafter dwell with the divels in fire everlaſting. There is nothing under God but may be kept, ſo that God, being above all things we have, be not loſt.

Adverſity compared with adverſity.

Of adverſity iudge the ſame. Impriſonment is painfull, but yet liberty upon evill conditions is more painfull. The priſons ſtink: but yet not ſo much as ſweet houſes, whereas the feare and true honor of God lacketh. I muſt be alone and ſolitary. It is better ſo to be and have God with me, than to be in company with the wicked. Loſſe of goods is great: but loſſe of Gods grace and favour is greater. I am a poore ſimple creature, and cannot tell how to anſwer before ſuch a great ſort of noble learned and wiſe men: it is better to make anſwer before the pomp and pride of wicked men, than to ſtand naked in the ſight of all heaven and earth before the iuſt God at the latter day. I ſhall die then by the hands of the cruell man: he is bleſſed that loſeth his life full of miſeries, and findeth the life of eternall ioyes. It is paine and griefe to depart from goods and friends: but yet not ſo much, as to depart from grace and heaven it ſelfe. Wherefore there is neither felicity Antitheſis betwen ioyes and paines in this world and in the world to come.

nor

Anno 1555.

nor adverſity of this world, that can appeare to be great, if it be weighed with the ioyes or pains in the world to come.

I can do no more, but pray for you; doe the ſame for me, for Gods ſake. For my part (I thanke the heavenly Father) I have made mine accompts, and appointed my ſelfe unto the will of the heavenly Father: as he will, ſo I will by his grace. For Gods ſake, as ſoone as ye can, ſend my poore wife and children ſome letter from you, and my letter alſo which I ſent of late to D. As it was told me, ſhe never had letter from me ſithence the comming of M. S. unto her, the more to blame the meſſengers, for I have written divers times. The Lord comfort them, and provide for them; for I am able to do nothing in worldly things. She is a godly and wiſe woman. If my meaning had been accompliſhed, ſhe ſhould have had neceſſary things: but what I meant, God can performe, to whom I commend both her and you all. I am a precious Iewell now and daintily kept, never ſo daintily: for neither mine owne man, nor any of the ſervants of the houſe may come to me, but my keeper alone: a ſimple rude man, God knoweth, but I am nothing carefull thereof. Fare you well. The 21. of Ianuary 1555.

M. Hoopers care and commendation of his wife.

Yours bounden, Iohn Hooper.

Amongſt many other memorable acts and notes worthy to be remembred in the hiſtory of Maſter Hooper, this alſo is not to be forgotten which happned betweene him, and a bragging Frier, a little after the beginning of his impriſonment: the ſtory whereof here followeth.

A Frier came from France to England with great vaunt, aſking who was the greateſt heretike in all England, thinking belike to doe ſome great act upon him. To whom anſwer was made; that Maſter Hooper had then the greateſt name to be the chiefeſt ringleader, who was then in the Fleet. The Frier comming to him, aſked why he was committed to priſon. He ſaid for debt. Nay, ſaid he, it was for hereſie, which when the other had denied. What ſaiſt thou, quoth he, to Hoc eſt corpus meum? M. Hooper, being partly moved at the ſudden queſtion, deſired that he might aſk of him againe another queſtion, which was this: What remained after the conſecration in the Sacrament, any bread or no? No bread at all, ſaith he. And when ye break it, what do ye break; whether bread or the body, ſaid M. Hooper? No bread, ſaid the Frier, but the body onely. If ye do ſo, ſaid M. Hooper, ye do great iniury, not only to the body of Chriſt, but alſo ye break the Scriptures, which ſay; Ye ſhall not breake of him one bone, &c. With that the Frier, having nothing belike to anſwer, recoyled backe, and with his circles and croſſes began to uſe exorciſme againſt Maſter Hooper, as though, &c.

Talk between M. Hooper and a Frier in the priſon.

If the material body of Chriſt be broken in the ſacrament, then is the commandement of Gods word broken.

This and more wrote M. Hooper to Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon in a letter, which letter was read unto her by Iohn Kelke.

Compariſon between M. Hooper and Polycarpus.

A compariſon betweene M. Hooper and Polycarpus.

When I ſee and behold the great patience of theſe bleſſed Martyrs in our dayes, in their ſufferings ſo quietly and conſtantly abiding the torments that are miniſtred unto them of Princes for Gods cauſe: me thinks I may well and worthily compare them unto the old Martyrs of the Primitive Church. In the number of whom, if compariſon be to be made betweene Saint and Saint, Martyr and Martyr: with whom might I match this bleſſed Martyr Iohn Hooper better, through the whole Catalogue of the old Martyrs, than with Polycarpus the ancient Biſhop of Smyrna, of whom Euſebius maketh mention in the Eccleſiaſticall ſtory? For as both agreed together in one kinde of puniſhment, being both put to the fire, ſo which of them ſhewed more patience and conſtancy in the time of their ſuffering, it is hard to be ſaid. And though Polycarpus being ſet in the flame (as the ſtory ſaith) was kept by miracle from the torment of the fire, till he was ſtriken down with weapon, and ſo diſpatched: yet Hooper by no leſſe miracle, armed with patience and fervent ſpirit of Gods comfort, ſo quietly deſpiſed the violence thereof, as though he had felt little more than did Polycarpus in the fire flaming round about him.

Euſeb. lib. 4. cap. 15.

Moreover, as it is written of Polycarpus when he ſhould have beene tied to the ſtake, he required to ſtand untied, ſaying theſe words: Sinite me, qui namque ignem ferre poſſe dedit, dabit etiam ut ſine veſtra clavorum cautione immotus in rogo permaneam. That is, Let me alone I pray you, for he that gave me ſtrength to come to this fire, will alſo give me patience to abide in the ſame without your tying. So likewiſe Hooper, with the like ſpirit, when he ſhould have been tied with three chaines to the ſtake, requiring them to have no ſuch miſtruſt of him, was tied but with one; who if he had not been tied at all, yet (no doubt) would have no leſſe anſwered to that great patience of Polycarpus.

Of this Polycarpus read before.

And as the end of them was both much agreeing, ſo the life of them both was ſuch, as might ſeeme not farre diſcrepant. In teaching, like diligent both, in zeale fervent, in life unſpotted, in manners and converſation inculpable, Biſhops and alſo Martyrs both. Briefly, in teaching ſo pithy and fruitfull, that as they both were ioyned together in one Spirit, ſo might they be ioyned in one name together of πολύκαρπος, to wit, much fruitfull; to which name alſo ὄπωρος is not much unlike. In this the martyrdome of M. Hooper may ſeeme in ſuffering to go before, though in time it followed the martyrdome of Polycarpus, for that he was both longer in priſon, and there alſo ſo cruelly handled by the malice of his keepers, as I think none of the old Martyrs ever ſuffered the like. To this alſo add how he was degraded by Boner, with ſuch contumelies and reproaches, as I think in Polycarpus time was not uſed to any.

M. Hooper compared to Polycarpus in life.

πολύκαρπος. ὄπωρος.

The cruell handling of M. Hooper.

And as we have hitherto compared theſe two good Martyrs together, ſo now if we ſhould compare the enemies and authors of their death one with the other, we ſhould finde no inequality betwixt them both, but that the adverſaries of M. Hooper ſeemed to be more cruell and unmercifull. For they that put Polycarpus to death, yet miniſtred to him a quick diſpatch, moved belike by ſome compaſſion not to have him ſtand in the torment: where the tormentors of M. Hooper ſuffered him without all compaſſion to ſtand three quarters of an houre in the fire. And as touching the chiefe doers and authors of his Martyrdome, what Conſull or Proconſull was there to be conferred with the Chancellor here, which brought this Martyr to burning? Let this ſuffice.

The enemies of M. Hooper and of Polycarpus compared together.

This good Biſhop and ſervant of God, being in priſon, wrote divers Books and Treatiſes, to the number of xxiiii. whereof ſome he wrote to the Parliament in Latine, and one to the Biſhop of Chicheſter D. Day: beſides he wrote of the Sacraments, of the Lords Prayer, and of the ten Commandements, with divers others.

Books and Treatiſes written by M. Hooper.

Here follow certaine of M.Hoopers letters.

More of his letters ye ſhall read in the book of letters of the martyrs.

As you have heard the whole ſtory of the life and martyrdome of this good man declared; ſo now let us conſequently adioyne ſome part of his letters, written in the time of his impriſonment, moſt fruitfull and worthy to be read, eſpecially in theſe dangerous dayes, of all true Chriſtians, which by true mortification ſeeke to ſerve and follow the Lord thorow all tempeſts and ſtormes of this malignant world, as by the reading and peruſing of the ſaid letters, you ſhall better feele and underſtand.

A letter of M.Hooper.

The grace, mercy, and peace of God the Father through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, be with you my deare brethren, and with all thoſe that unfainedly love and imbrace his holy Goſpell. Amen.

The favourers of Gods word ſecluded out of the parliament both in the higher houſe and lower, againſt all right and reaſon.

It is told me, that the wicked Idol the Maſſe is eſtabliſhed againe by a law, and paſſed in the Parliament houſe. Learne the truth of it, I pray you, and what penalty is appointed in the Act to ſuch as ſpeake againſt it: alſo whether there be any compulſion to conſtraine men to be at it. The ſtatute throughly known, ſuch as be abroad and at liberty may provide for themſelves, and avoid the danger the better. Doubtleſſe there hath not beene ſeen before our time ſuch a Parliament as this is, that as many as were ſuſpected to be favourers of Gods word, ſhould be baniſhed out of both houſes. But we muſt give God thanks for that truth he hath opened in the time of his bleſſed ſervant K. Edward the ſixth, and pray unto him that we deny it not, nor diſhonour it with idolatry; but that we may have ſtrength and patience rather to die ten times, than to deny him once. Bleſſed ſhall we be, if ever God make us worthy of that honour to ſhed our blood for his names ſake: and bleſſed then ſhall we think the Parents which brought us into this world, that we ſhould from this mortality be carried into immortality. If we follow the commandement of S. Paul, that ſaith, If ye then be riſen againe with Chriſt, ſeek thoſe things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God. We ſhall neither depart from the vaine tranſitory goods of this world, nor from this wretched and mortall life, with ſo great paines as others do.

Coloſ. 3.

Let us pray to our heavenly Father, that we may know and love his bleſſed will, and the glorious ioy prepared for us in time to come, and that we may know and hate all things contrary to his bleſſed will, and alſo the pain prepared for the wicked in the world to come. There is no better way to be uſed in this troubleſome time for your conſolation, than many times to have aſſemblies together of ſuch men and women as be of your religion in Chriſt, and there to take and renew amongſt your ſelves the truth of your religion, to ſee what ye be by the word of God, and to remember what ye were before ye came to the knowledge thereof, to weigh and conferre the dreames and falſe lies of the Preachers, that now preach, with the word of God that retaineth all truth: and by ſuch talk and familiar reſorting together, ye ſhall the better find out all their lyes that now go about to deceive you, and alſo both know and love the truth that God hath opened to us. It is much requiſite, that the members of Chriſt comfort one another, make prayers together, conferre one with another; ſo ſhall ye be the ſtronger, and Gods ſpirit ſhall not be abſent from you, but in the middeſt of you, to teach you, to comfort you, to make you wiſe in all godly things, patient in adverſity, and ſtrong in perſecution.

He exhorteth the brethren to reſort and conferre among themſelves together.

Conference among brethren comfortable.

Ye ſee how the Congregation of the wicked by helping one another, make their wicked Religion and themſelves ſtrong againſt Gods truth and his people. If ye may have ſome learned man, that can out of the Scriptures ſpeake unto you of faith, and true honoring of God, alſo that can ſhew you the deſcent of Chriſts Church from the beginning of it untill this day, that ye may perceive by the life of our forefathers theſe two things: the one, that Chriſts words, which ſaid that all his muſt ſuffer perſecution and trouble in the world, be true: the other, that none of all his, before our time, eſcaped trouble; then ſhall ye perceive that it is but a folly for one that profeſſeth Chriſt truly, to looke for the love of the world.

John 16.

Thus ſhall ye learne to beare trouble, and to exerciſe your Religion, and feele indeed that Chriſts words be true, In the world ye ſhall ſuffer perſecution. And when ye ſhall feele your Religion in deed, ſay, We be no better than your forefathers; but be glad, that ye may be counted worthy ſouldiers for this warre: and pray to God when ye come together, that he will uſe and order you and your doings in theſe three ends, which ye muſt take heed to: the firſt, that ye glorifie God; the next, that ye edifie the Church and Congregation; the third, that ye profit your owne ſoules.

Three things to be taken heed to.

In all your doings beware ye be not deceived. For although this time be not yet ſo bloody and tyrannous as the time of our forefathers, that could not beare the name of Chriſt, without danger of life and goods; yet is our time more perillous both for body and ſoule. Therefore of us Chriſt ſaid, Thinke ye when the ſonne of man commeth, he ſhall finde faith upon the earth? He ſaid not, Think ye he ſhall finde any man or woman chriſtened, and in name a Chriſtian: but he ſpake of the faith that ſaveth the Chriſtian man in Chriſt: and doubtleſſe the ſcarcity of faith is now more (and will, I feare, increaſe) than it was in the time of the greateſt tyrants that ever were; and no marvell why. Read the ſixth chapter of S. Johns Revelation, and ye ſhall perceive amongſt other things, that at the opening of the fourth Seale came out a pale horſe, and he that ſate upon him was called death, and hell followed him. This horſe is the time wherein Hypocrites and Diſſemblers entred into the Church under the pretence of true Religion, as Monks, Friers, Nunnes, Maſſing Prieſts, with ſuch others, that have killed more ſoules with hereſie and ſuperſtition, than all the tyrants that ever were killed bodies by fire, ſword, or baniſhment, as it appeareth by his name that ſitteth upon the horſe, who is called death: for all ſoules that love Chriſt, and truſt to theſe hypocrites, live to the Divell in everlaſting paine, as is declared by him that followeth the pale horſe which is hell.

word, are turned into blood, priſons, and chains, that their light cannot ſhine unto the world as they would: whereupon it cometh to paſſe, that the Stars, that is to ſay, Chriſtian people fall from heaven, that is to wit, from Gods moſt true word to hypocriſie, moſt diviliſh ſuperſtition and idolatry. Let ſome learned man ſhew you all the Articles of your beliefe and monument of Chriſtian faith, from the time of Chriſt hitherto, and ye ſhall perceive that there was never mention of ſuch Articles as theſe hypocrites teach. God bleſſe you, and pray for me as I do for you.

Another letter of M. Hooper.

THe grace of God be with you, Amen. I am advertiſed by divers, as well ſuch as love the truth, as alſo by ſuch as yet be not come unto it, that ye and I ſhall be carried ſhortly to Cambridge, there to diſpute for the faith, and for the religion of Chriſt (which is moſt true) that wee have and doe profeſſe. I am (as I doubt not ye be) in Chriſt ready, not onely to goe to Cambridge, but alſo to ſuffer, by Gods help, death it ſelfe in the maintenance thereof. Weſton and his complices have obtained forth the commiſſion already, and ſpeedily (moſt like) he will put it in execution. Wherefore, deare brethren, I do advertiſe you of the thing before for divers cauſes. The one to comfort you in the Lord, that the time draweth neer and is at hand, that we ſhall teſtifie before Gods enemies Gods truth. The next, that yee ſhould prepare your ſelvs the better for it. The third, to ſhew you what waies I think our ſelves were beſt to uſe in this matter, and alſo to heare of every one of you your better advice, if mine be not good. Ye know ſuch as ſhall be Cenſors and Judges over us breath and thirſt for our blood, and whether we, by Gods help, evercome after the word of God, or by force and ſubtilty of our adverſaries be overcome, this will be the concluſion; our adverſaries will ſay, they overcome, and ye perceive how they report of thoſe great learned men and godly perſonages at Oxford.

Commiſſion given out for M. Hooper and other to diſpute at Cambridge.

The counſell of M. Hooper, how and upon what cautions to diſpute with the adverſaries

Wherefore I mind never to anſwer them, except I have bookes preſent, becauſe they uſe not only falſe allegation of the Doctors, but alſo a peece of the Doctors againſt the whole courſe of the Doctors mind. The next, that we may have ſworn Notaries, to take things ſpoken indifferently: which will be very hard to have, for the adverſaries will have the overſight of all things and then make theirs better than it was; and ours worſe than it was. Then if we ſee that two or three, or more will ſpeake together, or with ſcoffs and taunts illude and mock us: I ſuppoſe it were beſt to appeale, to be heard before the Queen and the whole Councell, and that would much ſet forth the glory of God. For many of them know already the truth, many of them err rather of zeal than malice, and the others that bee indurate ſhould bee anſwered fully to their ſhame (I doubt not) although to our ſmart and blood ſhedding. For of this I am aſſured, that the Commiſſioners appointed to heare us and iudge us, meane nothing leſſe than to heare the cauſe indifferently; for they be enemies unto us and our cauſe, and be at a point already to give ſentence againſt us: ſo that if it were poſſible with Saint Stephen to ſpeake ſo that they could not reſiſt us, or to uſe ſuch ſilence and patience as Chriſt did, they will proceed to revenging.

Wherefore, my deare brethren, in the mercy of Jeſus Chriſt, I would be glad to know your advice this day or to morrow; for ſhortly we ſhal be gone, and I verily ſuppoſe that we ſhall not company together, but be kept one abroad from another. They will deny our appeale, yet let us challenge the appeal, and take witneſſe thereof, of ſuch as be preſent, and require for indifferency of hearing and iudgement, to bee heard either before the Queen and the Councell, or elſe before all the Parliament, as they were uſed in King Edwards dayes. Further, for my part I will require both books and time to anſwer. We have been priſoners now three quarters of a yeer, and have lacked our books, and our memories by cloſe keeping, and ingratitude of their parts, be not ſo preſent and quick as theirs be. I truſt God will bee with us, yea, I doubt not but hee will, and teach us to do all things in his cauſe godly and conſtantly. If our adverſaries, that ſhall be our Judges, may have their purpoſe, wee ſhall diſpute one day, be condemned the next day and ſuffer the third day. And yet is there no law to condemn us (as far as I know) and ſo one of the Convocation houſe ſaid this week to Doctor Weſton. To whom Weſton made this anſwer; It forceth not (quoth he) for a law, we have commiſſion to proceed with them, when they bee diſpatched, let their friends ſue the law.

Note how the Papiſts proceed againſt all order and law.

Now how ſoon a man may have ſuch a a commiſſion at my Lord Chancellors hand, you know. It is as hard to be obtained as an inditement for Chriſt at Caiphas hand. Beſides that the Biſhops having the Queen ſo upon their ſides, may doe all things both without the advice, and alſo the knowledge of the reſt of the Lords of the temporalitie: who at this preſent have found out the marke that the Biſhops ſhot at, and doubtleſſe be not pleaſed with their doings. I pray you helpe, that our brother Sanders and the reſt in the Marſhalſey may underſtand theſe things, and ſend me your anſwer betime. Iudas non dormit; nec ſcimus diem deque horam. Judas ſleepeth not; neither know we the day nor the houre. Dominus Ieſus Chriſtus ſuo ſancto numine nos omnes conſoletur & adjuvet. Amen. The Lord Jeſus Chriſt with his holy ſpirit comfort and ſtrengthen us all. Amen. May 6. An. 1554.

An effectuall letter of maſter Hooper ſent to his wife

OUr Saviour Jeſus Chriſt (dearely beloved, and my godly wife) in S. Matthewes Goſpel ſaid to his Diſciples, That it was neceſſary ſcandals ſhould come: and that they could not be avoided, he perceived as well by the condition of thoſe that ſhould periſh and be loſt for ever in the world to come, as alſo by their affliction that ſhould be ſaved. For he ſaw the greateſt part of the people ſhould contemne and neglect whatſoever true doctrine or godly ways ſhould be ſhewed unto them, or els receive and uſe it as they thought good to ſerve their pleaſures, without any profit to their ſouls at all, not caring whether they lived as they were commanded by Gods word or not; but would think it ſufficient to be counted to have the name of a Chriſtian man, with ſuch workes and fruits of his profeſſion and Chriſtianity, as his fathers and elders, after their cuſtoms

Iohn 8. 9.

ſtome and manner, eſteme and take to be good fruits and faithfull works, and will not try them by the word of God at all. Theſe men, by the iuſt iudgement of God, bee delivered unto the craft and ſubtilty of the divell, that they may be kept by one ſcandalous ſtumbling block or other, that they never come unto Chriſt, who came to ſave thoſe that were loſt; as ye may ſee how God delivereth wicked men up unto their owne luſts, to doe one miſchiefe after another, careleſſe, untill they come into a reprobate minde, that forgetteth it ſelf, and cannot know what is expedient to be done, or to be left undone, becauſe they cloſe their eyes, and will not ſee the light of Gods word offered unto them: and being thus blinded, they preferre their own vanities before the truth of Gods word. Where ſuch corrupt mindes be, there is alſo corrupt election and choiſe of Gods honour: ſo that the mind of man taketh falſhood for truth, ſuperſtition for true religion, death for life, damnation for ſalvation, hell for heaven, and perſecution of Chriſts members for Gods ſervice and honour. And as theſe men wilfully and voluntarily reiect the word of God; even ſo God moſt iuſtly delivereth them into the blindneſſe of minde and hardneſſe of heart, that they cannot underſtand, nor yet conſent to any thing that God would have preached, and ſet forth to his glory, after his owne will and word: therefore they hate it mortally, and of all things moſt deteſt Gods holy word. And as the Divell hath entred into their hearts, that they themſelves cannot nor will not come to Chriſt, to be inſtructed by his holy word: even ſo can they not abide any other man to be a Chriſtian man, and to leade his life after the word of God, but hate him, perſecute him, robbe him, impriſon him, yea, and kill him, whether he be man or woman, if God ſuffer it. And ſo much are theſe wicked men blinded, that they paſſe of no law, whether it be Gods or mans, but perſecute ſuch as never offended, yea, doe evill to thoſe that daily have prayed for them, and wiſh them Gods grace.

No reſpect of nature with the perſecuting adverſaries.

Mat. 18.

Gen. 21.
Gal. 4.

Luk. 21.
Patience in troubles, only the Chriſtian mans remedy.

In their Pharaonical and blind fury they have no reſpect to nature. For the brother perſecuteth the brother, the father the ſonne; and moſt deare friends, in divelliſh ſlander and offence, are become moſt mortall enemies. And no marvell; for when they have choſen ſundry maſters, the one the Divell, the other God, the one ſhall agree with the other, as God and the Divel agree betweene themſelves. For this cauſe (that the more part of the world doth chuſe to ſerve the divel under cloaked hypocriſie of Gods title) Chriſt ſaid, It is expedient and neceſſarie that ſcandals ſhould come, and many meanes bee deviſed to keep the little babes of Chriſt from the heavenly Father. But Chriſt ſaith, Woe be unto him by whom the offence commeth: Yet is there no remedy, man being of ſuch corruption and hatred towards God, but that the evill ſhall be deceived, and perſecute the good, and the good ſhall underſtand the truth, and ſuffer perſecution for it untill the worlds end. For as he that was borne after the fleſh, perſecuted in times paſt him that was borne after the ſpirit, even ſo it is now. Therefore forſomuch as we live in this life amongſt ſo many great perils and dangers, we muſt be wel aſſured by Gods word how to beare them, and how patiently to take them as they be ſent to us from God. We muſt alſo aſſure our ſelves, that there is no other remedy for Chriſtians in the time of trouble, than Chriſt himſelf hath appointed us. In S. Luke he giveth us this commandement, Yee ſhall poſſeſſe your lives in patience, ſaith he. In the which words hee giveth us both commandement what to do, and alſo great comfort and conſolation in all troubles. He ſheweth alſo what is to be done, and what is to be hoped for in troubles: and when troubles happen hee biddeth us be patient; and in no caſe violently nor ſeditiouſly to reſiſt our perſecutors, becauſe God hath ſuch care and charge of us, that he will keep in the midſt of all troubles the very haires of our head, ſo that one of them ſhall not fall away without the will and pleaſure of our heavenly Father. Whether the hair therfore tarry on the head, or fall from the head, it is the will of the father. And ſeeing he hath ſuch care for the haires of our head, how much more doth he care for our life it ſelf? Wherefore let Gods adverſaries doe what they luſt, whether they take life or take it not, they can do us no hurt: for their crueltie hath no further power than God permitteth them; and that which cometh unto us by the will of our heavenly Father can bee no harme, no loſſe, neither deſtruction unto us, but rather gain wealth and felicity. For all troubles and adverſitie that chance to ſuch as be of God, by the will of the heavenly Father, can be none other but gaine and advantage.

Rom. 8.

Prayer neceſſary.
Iames 1.
1 Cor. 8. 1.

That the ſpirit of man may feel theſe conſolations, the giver of them the heavenly Father muſt bee prayed unto for the merits of Chriſts paſſion: for it is not the nature of man that can be contented, untill it be regenerated and poſſeſſed with Gods ſpirit, to beare patiently the troubles of the mind or of the body. When the mind and heart of a man ſeeth on every ſide ſorrow and heavines, and the worldly eye beholdeth nothing but ſuch things as be troublous and wholly bent to rob the poore of that he hath, and alſo to take from him his life: except the man weigh theſe brittle and uncertain treaſures that be taken from him, with the riches of the life to come, and this life of the body with the life in Chriſts blood, and ſo for the love and certainty of the heavenly ioyes contemne all things preſent, doubtleſſe he ſhall never bee able to beare the loſſe of goods, life, or any other thing of this world.

Coloſſ. 3.
A leſſon how to beare trouble.

Therefore S. Paul giveth a godly and neceſſary leſſon to all men in this ſhort and tranſitory life, and therein ſheweth how a man may beſt beare the iniquities and troubles of this world; If ye be riſen againe with Chriſt (ſaith he) ſeek the things which are above, where Chriſt ſitteth at the right hand of God the Father. Wherefore the Chriſtian mans faith muſt be alwaies upon the reſurrection of Chriſt when he is in trouble; and in that glorious reſurrection he ſhall not only ſee continual and perpetuall ioy and conſolation, but alſo the victory and triumph over all perſecution, trouble, ſin, death, hell, the divell, and all other tyrants and perſecutors of Chriſt and of Chriſts people, the teares and weepings of the faithfull dried up, their wounds healed, their bodies made immortall in ioy, their ſoules for ever prayſing the Lord, and coniunction and ſociety everlaſting with the bleſſed company of Gods elect in perpetuall ioy. But the words of Saint Paul in that place, if they be not marked, ſhall doe little profit to the reader or hearer, and give him no patience at all in this impatient and cruell world.

Two things commanded by S. Paul writing to the Coloſſians.
The firſt is, to ſee and know what things are above, and what things are beneath, and to diſcerne rightly betweene them.

In this firſt part S. Paul commandeth us, to thinke or ſet our affections on things that are above. When he biddeth us ſeek the things that are above, he requireth that our mindes never ceaſe from prayer and ſtudy in Gods word, untill we ſee, know, and underſtand the vanities of this world, the ſhortneſſe and miſery of this life, and the treaſures of the world to come, the immortality thereof, the ioyes of that life, and ſo never ceaſe ſeeking, untill ſuch time as we know certainly and be perſwaded what a bleſſed man he is, that ſeeketh the one and findeth it, & careth not not for the other though he loſe it: and in ſeeking, to have right iudgement betweene the life preſent and the life to come, we ſhall find how little the paines, impriſonment, ſlanders, lies and death it ſelfe is in this world, in reſpect of paines everlaſting, the priſon infernall, and dungeon of hell, the ſentence of Gods iuſt iudgement, and everlaſting death.

The ſecond is to ſet our affection upon them that are above, and not upon the other. And this leſſon is harder than the other.

When a man hath, by ſeeking the word of God, found out what the things above be: then muſt he (as S. Paul ſaith) ſet his affections upon them. And this commandement is more hard than the other. For mans knowledge many times ſeeth the beſt, and knoweth that there is a life to come, better than this life preſent, as you may ſee how daily men and women can praiſe and commend, yea, and wiſh for heaven, and to be at reſt there; yet they ſet not their affection upon it: they doe more affect and love indeed a trifle of nothing in this world that pleaſeth their affection, than the treaſure of all treaſures in heaven, which their own iudgement ſaith is better than all worldly things. Wherfore we muſt ſet our affections upon the things that be above; that is to ſay, when any thing, worſe than heaven upon the earth, offereth it ſelfe to be ours, if we will give our good wils to it, and love it in our hearts, then ought we to ſee by the iudgement of Gods word, whether we may have the world without offence of God, and ſuch things as be for this worldly life without his diſpleaſore. If we cannot, S. Pauls commandement muſt take place, Set your affections on things that are above. If the riches of this world may not be gotten nor kept by Gods law, neither our lives bee continued without the denyal of his honor, we muſt ſet our affection upon the riches and life that is above, and not upon things that be on the earth. Therefore this ſecond commandement of Saint Paul requireth, that as our mindes iudge heavenly things to be better than things upon the earth, and the life to come better than the life preſent; ſo we ſhould chuſe them before other, and preferre them, and have ſuch affection to the beſt, that in no caſe we ſet the worſt before it, as the moſt part of the world doth and hath done, for they chuſe the beſt and approve it, and yet follow the worſt.

How things of this world may be poſſeſſed and how not.

Scriptures would be muſed upon rather than talked upon.

But theſe things (my godly wife) require rather cogitation, meditation, and prayer, than words or talke. They be eaſie to be ſpoken of, but not ſo eaſie to be uſed and practiſed. Wherefore ſeeing they be Gods gifts, and none of ours, to have as our owne when we would, we muſt ſeeke them at our heavenly Fathers hand, who ſeeth and is privie how poor and wretched we be, and how naked, how ſpoiled, and deſtitute of all his bleſſed gifts we be by reaſon of ſinne. He did command therefore his Diſciples when he ſhewed them that they ſhould take patiently the ſtate of this preſent life full of troubles and perſecution, to pray that they might well eſcape thoſe troubles that were to come, and be able to ſtand before the Sonne of man. When you find your ſelfe too much oppreſſed (as every man ſhall be ſometime with the feare of Gods iudgement) uſe the 77. Pſalm that beginneth, I will cry unto God with my voice, and he ſhall hearken unto me. In which Pſalme is both godly doctrine and great conſolation unto the man or woman that is in anguiſh of mind.

Pſal.77.
Read alſo M. Hoopers expoſition upon this Pſalme, moſt comfortable for all broken and afflicted hearts.

Uſe alſo in ſuch trouble the 88. Pſalm, wherein is contained the prayer of a man, that was brought into extreme anguiſh and miſery, and being vexed with adverſaries and perſecutions, ſaw nothing but death and hell. And although he felt in himſelf, that he had not only man, but alſo God angry towards him: yet he by prayer humbly reſorted unto God, as the only port of conſolation, and in the midſt of his deſperate ſtate of trouble, put the hope of his ſalvation in him, whom he felt his enemy. Howbeit no man of himſelfe can do this, but the ſpirit of God, that ſtriketh the mans heart with feare, prayeth for the man ſtricken and feared, with unſpeakable groanings. And when you feel your ſelf or know any other oppreſſed after ſuch ſort, be glad for after that God hath made you to know what you be of your ſelf, he will doubtleſſe ſhew you comfort, and declare unto you what you be in Chriſt his only Son; and uſe prayer often, for that is the means whereby God will be ſought unto for his gifts. Theſe Pſalmes be for the purpoſe, when the minde can take no underſtanding, nor the heart any ioy of Gods promiſes: and therefore were theſe Pſalmes alſo made, 6. 22. 30. 31. 38. 69. from the which you ſhall learn both patience and conſolation. Remember, that although your life (as all Chriſtian mens bee) bee hid, and appeareth not what it is, yet it is ſafe (as S. Paul ſaith) with God in Chriſt: and when Chriſt ſhall appeare, then ſhall our lives bee made open with him in glory. But in the mean time with ſeeking and ſetting our affections upon the things that be above, we muſt patiently ſuffer whatſoever God ſhall ſend unto us in this mortall life. Notwithſtanding, it might fortune ſome would ſay, Who is ſo perfect, that can let all things paſſe as they come, and have no care of them; ſuffer all things and feel nothing; be tempted of the Divell, the world, and the fleſh, and be not troubled? Verily no man living. But this I ſay, that in yͤ ſtrength of Jeſus Chriſt things that come may paſſe with care, for we be worldly, and yet are we not carried with them from Chriſt, for we bee in him godly. We may ſuffer things, and feel them as mortall men, yet bear them and overcome them as Chriſtian men. Wee may be tempted of the Divell, the fleſh, and the world: but yet although thoſe things pinch, they doe not pierce, and although they work ſin in us, yet in Chriſt no damnation to thoſe that bee grafted in him. Hereof may the Chriſtian man learne both conſolation and patience. Conſolation, in that he is compelled both in his body and goods to feele paine and loſſe, and in the ſoule heavineſſe and anguiſh of mind: howbeit none of them both ſhall ſeparate him from the love that God beareth him in Chriſt. He may learn patience, foraſmuch as his enemies both of the body and ſoul, and the pains alſo they vex us withal for the time, if they tarry with us as long as we live, yet when death commeth they ſhall avoid, and give place to ſuch ioyes as be prepared for us in Chriſt: for no paines of the world be perpetual, and whether they ſhall afflict us for all the time of our mortall life, wee know not; for they be ſervants of God to go and come, as he commandeth them. But we muſt take heed we meddle not forcibly nor ſeditiouſly to put away the perſecution appointed unto us by God, but remember Chriſts ſaying, Poſſeſs you your lives by your patience. And in this commandement God requireth in every man and woman this patient obedience. He ſaith not it is ſufficient that other holy Patriarks, Prophets, Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, and Martyrs continued their lives in patience, and patient ſuffering the troubles of this world: but Chriſt ſaith to every one of his people, By your own patience ye ſhall continue your life: not that man hath patience in himſelf, but that he muſt have it for himſelf of God, yͤ only giver of it, if he purpoſe to be a godly man. Now therfore as our profeſſion and religion requireth patience outwardly, without reſiſtance and force; ſo requireth it patience of the mind, and not to be angry with God, although he uſe us that bee his owne creatures as him liſteth.

We may not alſo murmure againſt God, but ſay alwaies his iudgements bee right and iuſt, and reioyce that it pleaſeth him by troubles to uſe us, as he uſed heretofore ſuch as he moſt loved in this world, and have a ſingular care to this commandement, Gaudete, & exultate, Be glad, and reioyce: for hee ſheweth great cauſe why; Your reward (ſaith he) is great in heaven. These promiſes of him that is the truth it ſelf ſhall (by Gods grace) worke both conſolation and patience in the afflicted chriſtian perſon. And when our Saviour Chriſt hath willed men in trouble to be content and patient, becauſe God in the end of trouble in Chriſt hath ordained eternall conſolation; he uſeth alſo to take from us all ſhame and rebuke, as though it were not an honour to ſuffer for Chriſt, becauſe the wicked world doth curſe and abhorre ſuch poore troubled Chriſtians. Wherefore Chriſt placeth all his honorably, and ſaith, Even ſo perſecuted they the Prophets that were before you. We may alſo ſee with whom the afflicted for Chriſts ſake be eſteemed by S. Paul to the Hebrewes, where as the number of the bleſſed and glorious company of Saints appear now to our faith in heaven in ioy: yet in the letter, for the time of this life, in ſuch paines and contempt as was never more. Let us therefore conſider both them and all other things of the world ſince the fal of man, and we ſhall perceive nothing to come to perfection, but with ſuch confuſion and diſorder to the eye of the world, as though things were rather loſt for ever, than like to come to any perfection at all. For of godly men, who ever came to heaven (no not Chriſt himſelf) until ſuch time as the world had thought verily that both he and all his had been clean deſtroyed and caſt away? as the wiſe man ſaith of the wicked people, We thought them to be fooles, but they be in peace.

Example taken of our meat and drink how things never come to their perfection before they be utterly waſted.

Wee may learne by things that nouriſh and maintaine us, both meat and drinke, what loathſomneſſe and (in manner) abhorring they come unto, before they worke their perfection in us. From life they be brought to the fire, and cleane altered from that they were when they were alive; from the fire to the trencher and knife, and all to hacked; from the trencher to the mouth, and as ſmall ground as the teeth can grinde them; and from the mouth into the ſtomacke, and there ſo boiled and digeſted before they nouriſh, that whoſoever ſaw the ſame, would loath and abhor his owne nouriſhment, before it come to his perfection.

Unmortified men be no people for God.

Mat. 10.

Is it then any marvell if ſuch Chriſtians as God delighteth in, be ſo mangled and defaced in this world, which is the kitchin and mill to boile and grind the fleſh of Gods people in, till they atchieve their perfection in the world to come? And as a man looketh for the nutriment of his meate when it is full digeſted, and not before: So muſt he look for his ſalvation when hee hath paſſed this troublous world, and not before. Rawe fleſh is not meat wholeſome for man: and unmortified men and women be not creatures meet for God. Therefore Chriſt ſaith, that his people muſt be broken, and all to torne in the mill of this world, and ſo ſhall they be moſt fine meale unto the heavenly Father. And it ſhall be a Chriſtian mans part, and the duty of a mind repleniſhed with the ſpirit of God, to marke the order of God in all his things, how hee dealeth with them, and how they ſuffer, and be content to let God doe his will upon them as S. Paul ſaith, They waite untill the number of the elect be fulfilled, and never bee at reſt, but looke for the time when Gods people ſhall appeare in glory.

Rom. 8.

Example of Abraham.

Example of Ioſeph.

We muſt therefore patiently ſuffer, and willingly attend upon Gods doings, although they ſeeme cleane contrary, after our iudgement, to our wealth and ſalvation: As Abraham did, when he was bid to offer his ſonne Iſaac, in whom God promiſed the bleſſing and multiplying of his ſeed. Ioſeph at the laſt came to that which God promiſed him, although in the meane time, after the iudgement of the world, he was never like to be (as God ſaid he ſhould be) Lord over his brethren. When Chriſt would make the blind man to ſee, he put clay upon his eyes, which after the iudgement of man, was a meanes rather to make him double blinde, than to give him his ſight; but he obeyed, and knew that God could worke his deſire, what meanes ſoever hee uſed contrary to mans reaſon: and as touching this world, he uſeth all his after the ſame ſort. If any ſmart, his people be the firſt; if any ſuffer ſhame, they begin; if any be ſubiect to ſlander, it is thoſe that he loveth; ſo that hee ſheweth no face or favour, nor love almoſt in this world outwardly to them, but layeth clay upon their ſore eyes that bee ſorrowfull: yet the patient man ſeeth (as S. Paul ſaith) life hid under theſe miſeries and adverſities, and light under foule clay, and in the mean time he hath the teſtimony of a good conſcience, and believeth Gods promiſes to be his conſolation in the world to come, which is more worthy unto him, than all the world is worth beſides: and bleſſed is that man in whom Gods ſpirit beareth record that hee is the ſonne of God, whatſoever troubles hee ſuffer in this troubleſome world.

Mat. 24.

And to iudge things indifferently (my good wife) the troubles be not yet generally, as they were in our good fathers time, ſoone after the death and reſurrection of our Saviour Chriſt Ieſus, whereof he ſpake in S. Matthew. Of the which place you and I have taken many times great conſolation, and eſpecially of the latter part of the chapter, wherein is contained the laſt day and end of all troubles (I doubt not) both for you and me, and for ſuch as love the comming of our Saviour Chriſt to iudgement. Remember therefore that place, and marke it againe, and ye ſhall in this time ſee this great conſolation, and alſo learn much patience. Was there ever ſuch troubles, as Chriſt threatned upon Ieruſalem? was there ſince the beginning of the world ſuch affliction? who was then beſt at eaſe? The Apoſtles that ſuffered in body perſecution, and gathered of it eaſe and quietneſſe in the promiſes of God. And no marvaile, for Chriſt ſaith, Lift up your heads: for your redemption is at hand, that is to ſay, Your eternall reſt approacheth and draweth neere. The world is ſtark blind, and more fooliſh than fooliſhneſſe it ſelfe, and ſo be the people of the world. For when God ſaith, trouble ſhall come, they will have eaſe. And when God ſaith, Be merry, and reioyce in trouble, wee lament and mourne, as though wee were caſt-awaies. But this our fleſh (which is never merry with vertue, nor ſorry with vice, never laugheth with grace nor ever weepeth with ſin) holdeth faſt with the world, and letteth God ſlip. But (my dearly beloved wife) you know how to perceive and to beware of the vanity and crafts of the Divell well enough in Chriſt. And that ye may the better have patience in the ſpirit of God, reade againe the 24. chapter of S. Matthew, and mark what difference is betweene the deſtruction of Ieruſalem, and the deſtruction of the whole world and you ſhall ſee, that then here were left alive many offenders to repent: but at the later day there ſhall be abſolute iudgement, and ſentence (never to be revoked) of eternall life and eternall death upon all men, and yet towards the Further, I do heartily pray you, to conſider the ſtate of your widowhood, and if God ſhall put in your mind to change it, remember the ſaying of S. Paul, 1 Cor. 7. It is lawful for the widow or maiden to marry to whom they liſt, ſo it be in the Lord, that is to ſay, to ſuch an one as is of Chriſts religion. Dearely beloved in Chriſt, remember theſe words, for you ſhall find thereby great ioy and comfort, if you change your ſtate. Whereof I will, when I have better leiſure (as now I have none at all) further advertiſe you. In the mean time I commend you to God, and the guiding of his good ſpirit, who ſtabliſh and confirm you in all well doing, and keep you blameles to the day of the Lord. To all my deare brethren, my relievers and helpers in the City of London.

Another letter of M. Hooper to his friends in London.

The grace of God be with you. Amen. I have received from you (dearly beloved in our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt) by the hands of my ſervant William Downton, your liberality, for the which I moſt heartily thanke you, and I praiſe God highly in you for you, who hath moved your hearts to ſhew this kindneſſe towards me, praying him to preſerve you from all famine, ſcarcity, and lacke of the truth of his word, which is the lively food of your ſoules, as you preſerve my body from hunger, and other neceſſities which ſhould happen unto me; were it not cared for by the benevolence and charity of godly people. Such as have taken all worldly goods and lands from me and ſpoiled me of all that I had, have impriſoned my body, and appointed not one half penny to feed or relieve me with all: but I doe forgive them, and pray for them daily in my poor prayer unto God, and from my heart I wiſh their ſalvation, and quietly and patiently beare their iniuries, wiſhing no farther extremity to be uſed towards us. Yet if the contrary ſeeme beſt unto our heavenly Father, I have made my reckoning, and fully reſolved my ſelf to ſuffer the uttermoſt that they are able to do againſt mee, yea, death it ſelf by the aid of Chriſt Ieſus, who died the moſt vile death of the Croſſe for us wretches and miſerable ſinners. But of this I am aſſured, that the wicked world, with all his force and power, ſhall not touch one of the haires of our heads without leave and licence of our heavenly father, whoſe will be done in all things. If he will life, life be it: if he will death, death be it. Only we pray, that our wils may be ſubiect unto his will, and then although both we and all the world ſee none other thing but death, yet if he think life beſt, we ſhall not dye, no, although the ſword be drawne out over our heads: as Abraham thought to kill his ſon Iſaac, yet when God perceived that Abraham had ſurrendred his will to Gods will, and was content to kill his ſonne, God then ſaved his ſon.

The Chriſtian charity of Maſter Hooper to his enemies.

M. Hooper fully reſolved to ſuffer.

Dearely beloved, if we be contented to obey Gods will, and for his commandements ſake to ſurrender our goods and our lives to bee at his pleaſure, it maketh no matter whether we keepe goods and life, or loſe them. Nothing can hurt us that is taken from us for Gods cauſe, nor can any thing at length do us good, that is preſerved contrary unto Gods commandement. Let us wholly ſuffer God to uſe us and ours after his holy wiſdome, and beware wee neither uſe nor governe our ſelves contrary to his will by our owne wiſdome: for if we doe, our wiſdome will at length prove fooliſhneſſe. It is kept to no good purpoſe, that we keep contrary unto his commandements. It can by no meanes be taken from us that he would ſhould tarry with us. He is no good Chriſtian that ruleth himſelf and his, as worldly meanes ſerveth: for he that ſo doth ſhall have as many changes as chanceth in the world. To day with the world he ſhall like and praiſe the truth of God, to morrow as the world will, ſo will hee like and praiſe the falſhood of man; to day with Chriſt, and to morrow with Antichriſt. Wherefore dear brethren, as touching your behaviour towards God, uſe both your inward ſpirits, and your outward bodies, your inward and your outward man (I ſay) not after the manners of men, but after the infallible word of God.

Gods will is to be obeyed in all things.

Difference between the true Chriſtian, and the worldling.

Reſtrain from evill in both; and glorifie your heavenly Father in both. For if ye think ye can inwardly in the heart ſerve him, and yet outwardly ſerve with the world in external ſervice the thing that is not God, ye deceive your ſelvs; for both the body and the ſoul muſt together concurre in the honour of God, as S. Paul plainly teacheth, 1 Corinth. 6. For if an honeſt wife bee bound to give both heart and body to faith and ſervice in marriage, and if an honeſt wives faith in the heart cannot ſtand with an whoriſh or defiled body outwardly; much leſſe can the true faith of a Chriſtian in the ſervice of Chriſtianity, ſtand with the bodily ſervice of externall idolatry: for the myſterie of marriage is not ſo honourable betweene man and wife, as it is between Chriſt and every Chriſtian man, as ſaint Paul ſaith.

Both inward man and outward man muſt concurre in the honour of God.

Therefore (dear brethren) pray to the heavenly Father, that as he ſpared not the ſoule nor the body of his dearly beloved Son, but applyed both of them with extreme pain, to work our ſalvation both of body and ſoul; ſo he will give us all grace to apply our bodies and ſoules to be ſervants unto him: for doubtleſſe hee requireth as well the one as the other, and cannot be diſcontented with the one and well pleaſed with the other. Either he hateth both, or loveth both; hee divideth not his love to one, and his hatred to the other. Let not us therefore, good brethren, divide our ſelves, and ſay our ſouls ſerve him, whatſoever our bodies do to the contrary for civill order and policie.

Gods enemies can do no more than he giveth them leave.
Mat. 20.

But(alas) I know by my ſelf, what troubleth you,that is,the great danger of the world, that will revenge (ye thinke) your ſervice to God with ſword and fire,with loſſe of goods and lands. But (dear brethren) weigh of the other ſide,that your enemies and Gods enemies ſhall not doe ſo much as they would,but as much as God ſhal ſuffer them, who can trap them in their owne counſels,and deſtroy them in the middeſt of their furies. Remember ye be the workmen of the Lord, and called into his vineyard, there to labour till evening tide,that you may receive your penny, which is more worth than all the Kingdomes of the earth. But he that calleth us into his vineyard, hath not told us how ſore and how fervently the Sunne ſhall trouble us in our labour: but hath bid us labour, and commit the bitterneſſe thereof unto him;who can and will ſo moderate all afflictions, that no man ſhall have more laid upon him, than in Chriſt he ſhall be able to beare. Unto whoſe mercifull tuition and defence I commend both your ſouls and bodies. Septemb. 2. Anno 1554.

Yours with my poore prayer,
Iohn Hooper.

Another letter of M. Hooper to a helper of his.

GRace, mercy, and peace in Chriſt Jeſus our Lord. I thanke God and you for the great help and conſolation I have received in the time of adverſity by your charitable means,but moſt reioyce that you bee not altered from truth, although falſhood cruelly ſeeketh to diſtaine her. Judge not, my brother, truth by outward appearance; for truth now worſe appeareth and more vilely is reiected than falſhood. Leave the outward ſhew, and ſee by the word of God what truth is, and accept truth, and diſlike her not though man call her falſhood. As it is now, ſo hath it been heretofore, the truth reiected and falſhood received. Such as have profeſſed truth, for truth have ſmarted, and the friends of falſhood laughed them to ſcorn. The tryall of both hath beene by contrary ſucceſſe: the one having the commendation of truth by man,but the condemnation of falſhood by God, flouriſhing for a time with endleſſe deſtruction;the other afflicted a little ſeaſon,but ending with immortall ioyes. Wherefore, deare brother, aſke and demand of your book, the Teſtament of Jeſus Chriſt, in theſe wofull and wretched daies what you ſhould thinke, and what you ſhould ſtay upon for a certaine truth,and whatſoever you heare taught,try it by your book, whether it be true or falſe. The dayes be dangerous, and full of perill, not only for the world and worldly things,but for heaven and heavenly things. It is a trouble to loſe the treaſure of this life, but yet a very pain, if it be kept with the offence of God. Cry, call, pray, and in Chriſt daily require help,ſuccour, mercy, wiſedome, grace, and defence, that the wickedneſſe of this world prevaile not againſt us. We began well, God preſerve us untill the end. I would write more often unto you, but I do perceive you be at ſo much charges with me,that I fear you would thinke when I write, I crave. Send me nothing till I ſend to you for it;and ſo tell the good men your partners:and when I need I will be bold with you. Decemb. 3. An. 1554.

Yours with my prayer, Iohn Hooper.

Truth is not to be eſteemed by outward appearance.

To Miſtreſſe Wilkinſon, a woman hearty in Gods cauſe, and comfortable to his afflicted members.

This miſtreſſe Wilkinſon afterward dyed in exile at Frankford.

THe grace of God, and the comfort of his holy Spirit be with you, Amen.

I am very glad to hear of your health,and do thank you for your loving tokens. But I am a great deale more glad to heare how chriſtianly you avoid Idolatry, and prepare your ſelfe to ſuffer the extremity of the world, rather than to endanger your ſelfe to God. You doe as you ought to doe in this behalfe, and in ſuffering of tranſitory paines, you ſhall avoide permanent torments in the world to come. Uſe your life, and keep it with as much quietneſſe as you can, ſo that you offend not God. The eaſe that commeth with his diſpleaſure, turneth at length to unſpeakable pains; and the gaines of the world, with the loſſe of his favour,is beggery and wretchedneſſe. Reaſon is to be amended in this cauſe of Religion: For it will chooſe and follow an errour with the multitude if it may be allowed,rather than turn to faith and follow the truth with the people of God. Moſes found the ſame fault in himſelfe, and did amend it, chooſing rather to be afflicted with the people of God, than to uſe the liberty of the Kings daughter,that accounted him as her ſon. Pray for contentation and peace of the ſpirit,and reioyce in ſuch troubles as ſhall happen unto you for the truths ſake: for in that part Chriſt ſaith,you be happy. Pray alſo for me, I pray you,that I may doe in all things the will of our heavenly Father:to whoſe tuition and defence I commend you.

Gaines with Gods diſpleaſure is beggery.

To my deare friends in God, Maſter Iohn Hall and his wife.

Another letter exhorting to ſtand faſt in the truth.

THe grace of God be with you,Amen. I thank you for your loving and gentle friendſhip at all times, praying to God to ſhew unto you ſuch favour that whatſoever trouble and adverſity happen,ye go not back from him. Theſe days be dangerous and full of perill, but yet let us comfort our ſelves in calling to remembrance the daies of our forefathers, upon whom the Lord ſent ſuch troubles,that many hundreds,yea,many thouſands dyed for the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt,both men and women,ſuffering with patience and conſtancy as much cruelty as tyrants could deviſe, and ſo departed out of this miſerable world to the bliſſe everlaſting, whereas now they remaine for ever, looking alwaies for the end of this ſinfull world, when they ſhall receive their bodies againe in immortalitie,and ſee the number of the elect aſſociated with them in full and conſummate ioyes: and as vertuous men ſuffering martyrdom,and tarrying a little while in this world with pains,by and by reſted in ioys everlaſting, and as their pains ended their ſorrowes, and began eaſe; ſo did their conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſſe animate and confirm all good people in the truth, and gave them incouragement and luſt to ſuffer the like,rather than to fall with the world to conſent unto wickedneſſe and idolatry. Wherfore my dear friends,ſeeing God of his part hath illuminated you with the ſame gift and knowledge of true faith, wherein the Apoſtles, and Evangeliſts, and all martyrs ſuffered moſt cruell death, thank him for his grace in knowledge, and pray unto him for ſtrength and perſeverance,that through your own fault ye be not aſhamed nor afraid to confeſſe it. Ye be in the truth, and the gates of hell ſhall never prevail againſt it, nor Antichriſt with all his impes prove it to be falſe. They may kill and perſecute, but never overcome. Bee of good comfort,and feare God more than man. This life is ſhort and miſerable; happy be they that can ſpend it to the glory of God. Pray for me as I doe for you, and commend me to all good men and women. December. 22. Anno 1554.

Your brother in Chriſt, Iohn Hooper.

To

To my dearely beloved ſiſter in the Lord, Miſtriſſe Anne Warcop.

Another letter written to one Miſtreſſe Warcop by M. Hooper.

The grace of God be with you Amen. I thank you for your loving token. I pray you burden not your ſelfe too much. It were meet for me rather to beare a paine, than to bee a hinderance to many. I did reioyce at the comming of this bearer, to underſtand of your conſtancy, and how that you bee fully reſolved, by Gods grace, rather to ſuffer extremity, than to goe from the truth of God which you have profeſſed. Hee that gave you grace to begin ſo infallible a truth, will follow you in the ſame unto the end. But my loving ſiſter, as you be travelling this perillous iourney, take this leſſon with you, practiſed by wiſe men: whereof you may reade in the ſecond of S. Matthewes Goſpel. Such as travelled to find Chriſt, followed onely the Starre, and as long as they ſaw it, they were aſſured they were in the right way, and had great mirth in their iourney. But when they entred into Ieruſalem, whereas the ſtarre led them not thither, but unto Bethelem, and there aſked the Citizens the thing that the ſtarre ſhewed before: as long as they tarried in Ieruſalem, and would be inſtructed where Chriſt was born, they were not only ignorant of Bethelem, but alſo loſt the ſight of the ſtarre that led them before. Whereof we learn, in any caſe whiles we be going in this life to ſeeke Chriſt that is above, to beware wee loſe not the ſtarre of Gods word, that only is the marke that ſheweth us where Chriſt is, and which way we may come unto him. But as Ieruſalem ſtood in the way, & was an impediment, to theſe wiſe men; ſo doth the Synagogue of Antichriſt, that beareth the name of Ieruſalem, which by interpretation in called the viſion of peace, and amongſt the people now is called the Catholike Church, ſtand in the way that Pilgrims muſt go by through this world to Bethelem the houſe of ſaturity and plentifulneſſe, and is an impediment to all Chriſtian travellers; yea, and except the more grace of God be, will keepe the pilgrimes ſtill in her, that they ſhall not come where Chriſt is at all. And to ſtay them indeed, they take away the ſtar of light, which is Gods word, that it cannot be ſeen: as ye may ſee how the celeſtiall ſtarre was hid from the wiſe men, when they aſked of the Phariſes at Ieruſalem, where Chriſt was born. Yee may ſee what great dangers happened unto theſe wiſe men, whiles they were learning of liars, where Chriſt was. Firſt, they were out of their way, and next they loſt their guide and conductor the heavenly ſtar. Chriſt is mounted from us into heaven, and there we ſeeke him (as we ſay) and let us go thitherward by the ſtar of his word, beware we happen not to come into Ieruſalem, the Church of men, and aſk for him. If we do, we go out of the way, and loſe alſo our conductor and guide that only leadeth us ſtraight thither.

The ſureſt way is ever to follow the Star.

Ieruſalem ſignifieth the viſion of peace.

Bethelem ſignifieth the houſe of bread, or of ſaturity.

Chriſt is not to be ſought, nor asked for, but only by the Scriptures.

Example of Iaſon and Phaeton.

The Poets write in fables, that Iaſon, when hee fought with the Dragon in the Iſle of Colchis, was preſerved by the medicines of Medes, and ſo wan the golden Fleece. And they write alſo that Phaeton, whom they feigne to be ſon and heire of the high god Iupiter, would needs upon a day have the conduction of the Sunne round about the world; but as they feigne, he miſſed of the accuſtomed courſe: whereupon when he went too high, he burned heaven, and when he went too lowe he burned the earth and the water. Theſe prophane hiſtories doe ſhame us that bee Chriſtian men. Iaſon againſt the poyſon of the Dragon uſed only the medicine of Medea. What a ſhame is it for a Chriſtian man againſt the poyſon of the Divell, hereſie, and ſinne, to uſe any other remedy, than Chriſt and his word? Phaeton for lacke of knowledge, was affraid of every ſigne of the Zodiacke, that the ſun paſſeth by: wherefore he now went too low, and now too high, and at length fell down and drowned himſelf in the ſea. Chriſtian men for lacke of knowledge, and for feare of ſuch dangers as Chriſtian men muſt needs paſſe by, go cleane out of order, and at length fall into the pit of hell.

Siſter, take heed: you ſhall in your iourney towards heaven meete with many a monſtrous beaſt: have ſalve of Gods word therfore ready. You ſhall meete huſband, children, lovers, and friends, that ſhall, if God be not with them (as God be praiſed he is, I would it were with all other alike) be very lets and impediments to your purpoſe. You ſhall meet with ſlander and contempt of the world, and be accounted ungracious and ungodly; you ſhall heare and meete with cruell tyranny to doe you all extremities; you ſhall now and then ſee the troubles of your owne conſcience, and feele your own weakneſſe; you ſhall hear that you be curſed by the ſentence of the Catholike Church, with ſuch like terrors: but pray to God, and follow the ſtar of his word, and you ſhall arrive at the port of eternall ſalvation, by the merits only of Ieſus Chriſt; to whom I commend you and all yours moſt heartily.

Lets in the way to the Kingdome of heaven.

Yours in Chriſt, Iohn Hooper.

¶ Unto theſe letters of M. Hooper heretofore recited, we thought not inconvenient to annexe alſo another certaine epiſtle, not of M. Hoopers, but written to him by a famous learned man Henry Bullinger, chiefe Superintendent in the City of Zuricke. Of whoſe ſingular love and tender affection toward M. Hooper ye heard before in the beginning of M. Hoopers life diſcourſed. Now how lovingly he writeth unto him, ye ſhall heare by this preſent letter, as followeth.

To the moſt Reverend Father Maſter Iohn Hooper, Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter, and now priſoner for the Goſpell of Ieſus Chriſt, my fellow Elder, and moſt deare brother in England.

A letter of M. Bullinger to M. Hooper, tranſlated out of Latine into English.

The heavenly Father grant unto you, and to all thoſe which are in bands and captivity for his Name ſake, grace and peace through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, with wiſdome, patience, and fortitude of the holy Ghoſt.

I have received from you two letters, my moſt deare brother, the former in the moneth of September of the yeere paſt, the later in the moneth of May of this preſent yeer, both written out of priſon. But I doubting leſt I ſhould make anſwer to you in vaine, whilſt I feared that my letters ſhould never come into your hands, or elſe increaſe and double your ſorrow, did refrain from the duty of writing. In the which thing I doubt not but you will have me excuſed, eſpecially ſeeing you did not vouchſafe, no not once in a whole yeer, to anſwer to my whole libels rather than letters, whereas I continued ſtill notwithſtanding in writing unto you: as alſo at this preſent, after I heard that you were caſt in priſon, I did not refrain from continuall prayer, beſeeching our heavenly Father, through our onely Mediator Ieſus Chriſt, to grant unto you and to your fellow priſoners, faith and conſtancy unto the end. Now is that thing happened unto you (my brother) the which we did oftentimes propheſie unto our ſelvs, at your being with us, ſhould come to paſſe, eſpecially when wee did talke of the power of Antichriſt, and of his felicity and victories. For you know the ſaying of Daniel: His power ſhall be mighty, but not in his ſtrength, and he ſhall wonderfully deſtroy and make havocke of all things, and ſhall proſper and practiſe, and he ſhall deſtroy the mighty and the holy people after his owne will. You know what the Lord warned us of before hand by Matthew, in the 10 chapter, by John, in the 15. chapter, and the 16. and alſo what that choſen veſſell S. Paul hath written in the ſecond of Timothy, and the third chapter. Wherefore I doe nothing doubt (by Gods grace) of your faith and patience, whileſt you know that thoſe things which you ſuffer are not looked for, or come by chance, but that you ſuffer them in the beſt, trueſt, and moſt holy quarrell: for what can bee more true and holy than our doctrine, which the papiſts, thoſe worſhippers of Antichriſt, do perſecute? All things touching ſalvation we attribute unto Chriſt alone, and to his holy inſtitutions, as wee have beene taught of him and of his Diſciples: but they would have even the ſame things to be communicated as well to their Antichriſt, and to his inſtitutions. Such we ought no leſſe to withſtand than we read that Elias withſtood the Baalites. For if Jeſus be Chriſt, then let them know, that he is the fulnes of his Church, and that perfectly: but if Antichriſt be King and Prieſt, then let them exhibit unto him that honor. How long doe they halt on both ſides? Can they give unto us any one that is better than Chriſt? or who ſhall be equall with Chriſt, that may be compared with him, except it be hee whom the Apoſtle calleth the adverſary? But if Chriſt be ſufficient for his Church, what needeth this patching and piecing? But I know well enough, I need not to uſe theſe diſputations with you which are ſincerely taught, and have taken root in Chriſt, being perſwaded that you have all things in him, and that we in him are made perfect.

Gods wrath upon the beaſt and them that take his mark.

In this time of Antichriſt is the patience & faith of Gods children tried, whereby they ſhall overcome all his tyranny. Read Mat. 24

Go forwards therefore conſtantly to confeſſe Chriſt, and to defie Antichriſt, being mindfull of this moſt holy and moſt true ſaying of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; He that overcommeth, ſhall poſſeſſe all things, and I will be his God, and he ſhall be my ſonne: but the fearfull, and the unbelieving, and the abominable, and the murtherers, and whoremongers, and ſorcerers, and idolaters and all liers, ſhall have their part in the Lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death. The firſt death is ſoone overcome, although a man muſt burne for the Lords ſake: for they ſay well that doe affirme this our fire to be ſcarcely a ſhadow of that which is prepared for unbelievers, and them that fall from the truth. Moreover, the Lord granteth unto us, that wee may eaſily overcome by his power the firſt death, the which he himſelfe did taſte and overcome; promiſing withall ſuch ioyes as never ſhall have end, unſpeakable, and paſſing all underſtanding, the which we ſhall poſſeſſe ſo ſoon as ever we do depart hence. For ſo again ſaith the Angell of the Lord; If any man worſhip the Beaſt and his Image, and receive his mark in his forehead, or on his hand, the ſame ſhall drink of the wrath of God; yea, of the wine which is poured into the cup of his wrath, and he ſhall be tormented in fire and brimſtone before the holy Angels, and before the Lambe: and the ſmoake of their torments ſhall aſcend evermore, and they ſhall have no reſt day nor night which worſhip the Beaſt and his Image, and whoſoever receiveth the print of his name. Here is the patience of Saints; here are they that keepe the commandements of God, and the faith of Jeſus. To this he addeth by and by; I heard a voice ſaying to me, write; Bleſſed be the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth, or ſpeedily, they be bleſſed, John 5. even ſo ſaith the Spirit; for they reſt from their labours, but their works follow them: for our labor ſhall not be fruſtrate, or in vaine.

Therefore ſeeing you have ſuch a large promiſe, be ſtrong in the Lord, fight a good fight, be faithfull to the Lord unto the end: conſider that Chriſt the Son of God is your Captaine, and fighteth for you, and that all the Prophets, Apoſtles, and Martyrs, are your fellow ſouldiers. They that perſecute and trouble us, are men, ſinfull and mortall, whoſe favour a wiſe man would not buy with the value of a farthing: and beſides that our life is fraile, ſhort, brittle, and tranſitory. Happy are wee, if we depart in the Lord, who grant unto you, and to all your fellow priſoners, faith and conſtancy. Commend me to the moſt reverend Fathers and holy Confeſſors of Chriſt, D. Cranmer Biſhop of Canterbury, D. Ridley Biſhop of London, and the good old Father Doctor Latimer. Them and all the reſt of the priſoners with you for the Lords cauſe, ſalute in my name, and in the name of all my fellow Miniſters, the which do ſpeak unto you the grace of God, and conſtancy in the truth.

Concerning the ſtate of our Church, it remaineth even as it was when you departed from us into your country. God grant we may be thankfull to him, and that we doe not only profeſſe the faith with words, but alſo expreſſe the ſame effectually with good workes, to the praiſe of our Lord. The word of God increaſeth daily in that part of Italy that is neere unto us, and in France.

M. Thomas Lever.

In the meane while the godly ſuſtaine grievous perſecutions, and with great conſtancy and glory, through torments they goe unto the Lord. I and all my houſhold, with my ſonnes-in law and kinſmen, are in good health in the Lord. They doe ſalute you, and pray for your conſtancy, being ſorrowfull for you and the reſt of the priſoners. There came to us Engliſhmen Students, both godly and learned. They be received of our Magiſtrate; Ten of them dwel together, the reſt remain here and there with good men. Amongſt other, M. Thomas Lever is dear unto me, and familiar. If there be any thing wherein I may doe any pleaſure to your wife and children, they ſhall have mee wholly at commandement: whereof I will write alſo to your wife, for I underſtand ſhee abideth at Frankford. Bee ſtrong and merry in Chriſt, waiting for his deliverance, when, and in what ſort it ſhall ſeeme good unto him. The Lord Jeſus ſhew pitie upon the Realme of England, and illuminate the ſame with his holy ſpirit, to the glory of his name, and the ſalvation of ſoules. The Lord Jeſus preſerve and deliver you from all evill, with all them that call upon his Name. Farewell, and farewell eternally. The 10. of October. Anno 1554. From Zurich.

The Hiſtory of Doctor Rowland Taylor, which ſuffered for the truth of Gods word, under the tyranny of the Romane Biſhop, Anno 1555. The 9. day of February.

Hadley towne commended.

Tho. Bilney.

THe towne of Hadley was one of the firſt that received the word of God in all England, at the preaching of Maſter Thomas Bilney: by whoſe induſtry the Goſpel of Chriſt had ſuch gracious ſucceſſe, and tooke ſuch root there, that a great number in that pariſh became exceeding well learned in the holy Scriptures, as wel women women as men: ſo that a man might haue found among them many, that had often read the whole Bible through, and that could haue ſaid a great ſort of S. Pauls Epiſtles by heart, and very well and readily haue giuen a godly learned ſentence in any matter of controuerſie, Their children and ſeruants were alſo brought vp and trained ſo diligently in the right knowledge of Gods word, that the whole town ſeemed rather an vniuerſity of the learned, than a town of Cloth-making or labouring people. And that moſt is to be commended, they were for the more part faithfull followers of Gods word in their liuing.

Anno 1555

D. Taylor, a Doctor in both lawes, and a Diuine.

In this town was Doctor Rowland Taylor, Doctor in both the Ciuill and Canon lawes, and a right perfect Diuine, Parſon. Who, at his firſt entring into his Benefice, did not, as the common ſort of beneficed men doe, let out his Benefice to a Farmer, that ſhall gather vp the profits, and ſet in an ignorant vnlearned prieſt to ſerue the Cure, and ſo they haue the fleece, little or nothing care for feeding the flock: But contrarily, hee forſooke the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, with whom he before was in houſhold, and made his perſonall abode and dwelling in Hadley among the people committed to his charge. Where hee as a good Shepheard, abiding and dwelling among his ſheep, gaue himſelf wholly to the ſtudy of holy Scriptures, moſt faithfully endeauouring himſelf to fulfill that charge, which the Lord gaue vnto Peter ſaying; Peter loveſt thou me: Feed my lambs, Feed my ſheep, feed my ſheep. This loue of Chriſt ſo wrought in him, that no Sunday nor Holy day paſſed, nor other time when he might get the people together, but he preached to them the word of God, the doctrine of their ſaluation.

Tho. Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

A good Shepheard and his conditions. Iohn 20. Feed with word.

Feed with example.

Not only was his word a preaching vnto them but all his life and conuerſation was an example of vnfained Chriſtian life and true holineſſe. He was void of all pride, humble and meeke, as any child: ſo that none were ſo poore, but they might boldly, as vnto their father, reſort vnto him, neither was his lowlineſſe childiſh or fearfull, but as occaſion time and place required, he would be ſtout in rebuking the ſinfull and euill doers, ſo that none was ſo rich but he would tell him plainly his fault, with ſuch earneſt and graue rebukes as became a good Curate and Paſtor. He was a man very mild, void of all rancour, grudge or euill will, ready to do good to all men, readily forgiuing his enemies, and neuer ſought to doe euill to any.

Feed with almes.

To the poore that were blind, lame, ſick, bedred, or that had many children, he was a very father, a carefull patron, and diligent prouider; inſomuch that hee cauſed the Pariſhioners to make a generall prouiſion for them: and he himſelfe (beſide the continuall reliefe that they alwaies found at his houſe) gaue an honeſt portion yeerly to the common almes bore. His wife alſo was an honeſt diſcreet, and ſober matron, and his children well nurtured, brought vp in the feare of God and good learning.

Cōmendation of D. Taylors wife and his children.

To conclude, he was a right & liuely image or pattern of all thoſe vertuous qualities deſcribed by S. Paul in a true Biſhop, a good ſalt of the earth, ſauourly biting the corrupt manners of euill men, a light in Gods houſe ſet vpon a candleſtick for all good men to imitate and follow.

Thus continued this good Shepheard among his flock, gouerning and leading them thorow the wilderneſſe of this wicked world, all the daies of the moſt innocent and holy King of bleſſed memory, Edward the ſixth. But after it pleaſed God to take King Edward from this vale of miſery vnto his moſt bleſſed reſt, the papiſts, who euer ſembled and diſſembled, both with King Henry the eighth, and K. Edward his ſon, now ſeeing the time conuenient for their purpoſe vttered their falſe hypocriſie, openly refuſing all good reformation made by the ſaid two moſt godly Kings: and contrary to that they had all theſe two Kings dayes preached, taught, written and ſworn, they violently ouerthrew the true doctrine of the Goſpell, and perſecuted with ſword and fire all thoſe that would not agree to receiue again the Romane biſhop as ſupreme head of the Vniuerſall Church, and allow all the errors, ſuperſtitions, and idolatries, that before by Gods word were diſproued and iuſtly condemned, as though now they were good doctrine, vertuous, and true religion.

The Papiſts & their naturall workes.

Foſter a Lawyer, and Iohn Clerk of Hadley, two notorious Papiſts.

In the beginning of this rage of Antichriſt, a certaine petie Gentleman after the ſort of a Lawyer, called Foſter, being a Steward and Keeper of Courts, a man of no great ſkill, but a bitter perſecutor in thoſe dayes, with one Iohn Clerk of Hadley, which Foſter had euer been a ſecret fauourer of all Romiſh idolatry, conſpired with the ſaid Clerk to bring in the Pope and his maumetrie again into Hadley Church. For as yet D. Taylor, as a good ſhepheard, had retained and kept in his Church the godly Church ſeruice and reformation made by K. Edward and moſt faithfully and earneſtly preached againſt the popiſh corruptions, which had infected the whole countrey round about.

Iohn Auerth a right Popiſh Prieſt.

Therefore the foreſaid Foſter and Clerke hired one Iohn Auerth, Parſon of Aldam, a very money Mammoniſt, a blind leader of the blinde, a popiſh Idolater, and an open Aduouterer and whoremonger, a very fit miniſter for their purpoſe, to come to Hadley, and there to giue the onſet to begin again the popiſh Maſſe.

Mark how vnwilling the people were to receiue the Papacy againe.

To this purpoſe they builded vp with all haſte poſſible the altar, intending to bring in their Maſſe againe, about the Palme Monday. But this their deuice tooke none effect: for in the night the altar was beaten down. Wherfore they built it vp againe the ſecond time, and laid diligent watch, leſt any ſhould again break it down.

On the day following came Foſter and Iohn Clerk, bringing with them their popiſh ſacrificer, who brought with him all his implements and garments to play his popiſh pageant, whom they and their men guarded with ſwords and bucklers, leſt any man ſhould diſturbe him in his miſſall ſacrifice.

D. Taylors cuſtome to ſtudy.

When Doctor Taylor, who (according to his cuſtome) ſate at his booke ſtudying the word of God, heard the bels ring, hee aroſe and went into the Church, ſuppoſing ſomething had beene there to be done, according to his paſtorall office: and comming to the Church, he found the Church doores ſhut and faſt barred, ſauing the Chancell doore, which was only latched. Where he entring in, and comming into the Chancell, ſaw a popiſh ſacrificer in his robes, with a broad new ſhauen crown, ready to begin his popiſh ſacrifice, beſet round about with drawne ſwords and bucklers, leſt any man ſhould approach to diſturbe him.

Maſſe brought into Hadley with ſwords and bucklers.

D. Taylor rebuketh the Diuell.

The papiſts call all their trumpery the Queenes proceedings.

For you muſt remember that Antichriſt reigneth by another arm, and not by his own power. Reade Daniel of the king of Faces, the 8. chapter.

Then ſaid Doctor Taylor, Thou Diuell, who made thee ſo bold to enter into this Church of Chriſt to prophane and defile it with this abominable idolatry? With that ſtart vp Foſter, and with an irefull and furious countenance ſaid to Doctor Taylor; Thou Traitor, what dooſt thou here, to let and diſturbe the Queenes proceedings? Doctor Taylor anſwered, I am no Traitor, but I am the ſhepheard that God my Lord Chriſt hath appointed to feed this his flock: wherefore I haue good authority to bee here; and I command thee thou Popiſh Wolf, in the Name of God to avoid hence, and not to preſume here with ſuch Popiſh Idolatry to poiſon Chriſts flock.

D. Taylor here playeth a right Elias. 3 Reg. 18.

Then ſaid Foſter, Wilt thou traitrouſly Heretike make a commotion, and reſiſt violently the Queens proceedings?

D. Taylor anſwered, I make no commotion, but it is you Papiſts that make commotions and tumults. I reſiſt only with Gods word againſt your popiſh idolatries, which are againſt Gods word, the Queens honour, and tend to the utter ſubverſion of this Realme of England. And further, thou doſt againſt the law, which commandeth, that no Maſſe be ſaid but at a conſecrate altar.

When the Parſon of Aldam heard that, he began to ſhrink back, and would have left his ſaying of Maſſe: then ſtart up John Clerk, and ſaid, Maſter Averth, be not affraid, you have a “ſuper-altare. Goe forth with your buſineſſe man.

“Super altare is a ſtone conſecrated by the Biſhops, commonly of a foot long, which the Papiſts carry in ſtead of an altar, when they maſſe for mony in Gentlemens houſes.

Then Foſter, with his armed men, tooke D. Taylor, and led him with ſtrong hand out of the Church, and the Popiſh Prelate proceeded in his Romiſh Idolatry. D. Taylors wife, who followed her husband into the Church, when ſhe ſaw her husband thus violently thruſt out of his Church, ſhe kneeled down and held up her hands, and with a loud voice ſaid; I beſeech God the righteous Judg to avenge this iniury, that this Popiſh Idolater to this day doth to the blood of Chriſt. Then they thruſt her out of the Church alſo, and ſhut the doors; for they feared that the people would have rent their ſacrificer in peeces. Notwithſtanding one or two threw in great ſtones at the windowes, and miſſed very little the Popiſh Maſſer.

The Papiſts arguments wherewith they maintaine their doctrine.

Thus you ſee how without conſent of the people the popiſh Maſſe was again ſet up with battell array, with ſwords and bucklers, with violence and tyranny: which practice the Papiſts have ever yet uſed. As for reaſon, law, or Scripture, they have none on their part. Therefore they are the ſame that ſay; The law of unrighteouſneſſe is our ſtrength: Come, let us oppreſſe the righteous without any feare, &c.

Within a day or two after, with all haſte poſſible, this Foſter and Clerke made a complaint of D. Taylor, by a letter written to Ste. Gardiner Biſhop of Wincheſter, and L. Chancellor.

D. Taylor cited by a letter miſſive.

When the biſhop heard this, hee ſent a letter miſſive to D. Taylor, commanding him within certain dayes to come and to appear before him upon his allegeance, to anſwer ſuch complaints as were made againſt him.

D. Taylors friends would have him to flie.

When Doctor Taylors friends heard of this, they were exceeding ſorry and agrieved in mind: which when foreſeeing to what end the ſame matter would come, ſeeing alſo all truth and juſtice were trodden under foote, and falſhood with cruell tyranny were ſet aloft and ruled all the whole rout: his friends, I ſay, came to him and earneſtly counſelled him to depart and flye, alledging and declaring unto him, that he could neither be indifferently heard to ſpeak his conſcience and mind, nor yet look for juſtice or favor at the ſaid Chancellors hands, who, as it was well knowne, was moſt fierce and cruell; but muſt needs (if he went up to him) wait for impriſonment and cruell death at his hands.

The valiant courage of Doctor Taylor in Chriſts cauſe.

Then ſaid D. Taylor to his friends, Deare friends, I moſt heartily thank you, for that you have ſo tender a care over mee. And although I know that there is neither juſtice nor truth to be looked for at my adverſaries hands, but rather impriſonment and cruell death: yet know I my cauſe to be ſo good and righteous, and the truth ſo ſtrong upon my ſide, that I will by Gods grace go and appear before them, and to their beards reſiſt their falſe doings.

Mat. 10.

Then ſaid his friends, Maſter Doctor, we think it not beſt ſo to doe. You have ſufficiently done your duty, and teſtified the truth both by your godly Sermons, and alſo in reſiſting the Parſon of Aldam, with other that came hither to bring in againe the popiſh Maſſe. And foraſmuch as our Saviour Chriſt willeth and biddeth us, that when they perſecute us in one City, we ſhould fly into another: we thinke in flying at this time ye ſhould do beſt, keeping your ſelfe againſt another time, when the Church ſhall have great need of ſuch diligent Teachers, and godly Paſtors.

D. Taylor refuſeth to flye.

Oh (quoth D. Taylor) what will yee have me to do? I am now old, and have already lived too long to ſee theſe terrible and moſt wicked daies. Flie you, and doe as your conſcience leadeth you. I am fully determined (with Gods grace) to go to the Biſhop, and to his beard to tell him that he doth naught. God ſhall wel hereafter raiſe up teachers of his people, which ſhall with much more diligence and fruit teach them, than I have done. For God will not forſake his Church, though now for a time he trieth and correcteth us, and not without a juſt cauſe.

The Papacies kingdome of lyes.

As for me, I believe before God, I ſhall never be able to doe God ſo good ſervice, as I may do now; nor I ſhall ever have ſo glorious a calling as I now have, nor ſo great mercy of God proferred me, as is now at this preſent. For what Chriſtian man would not gladly dye againſt the Pope and his adherents? I know that the Papacy is the kingdome of Antichriſt, altogether full of lies, altogether full of falſhood, ſo that all their doctrine, even from Chriſts Croſſe bee my ſpeed, and ſaint Nicholas, unto the end of their Apocalypſe, is nothing but idolatry, ſuperſtition, errours, hypocriſie and lies.

Wherefore I beſeech you, and all other my friends, to pray for me, and I doubt not but God will give me ſtrength and his holy Spirit, that all mine adverſaries ſhall have ſhame of their doings.

Sir Richard Yeoman, D. Taylors Curate and Martyr of Chriſt.

When his friends ſaw him ſo conſtant, and fully determined to go, they with weeping eyes commended him unto God; and he within a day or two prepared himſelf to his journey, leaving his Cure with a godly old prieſt, named ſir Richard Yeoman, who afterwards for Gods truth was burnt at Norwich.

John Alcocke, of Hadley troubled for Gods truth, & dyed in priſon.

There was alſo in Hadley one Alcocke, a very godly man, well learned in the holy Scriptures, who after ſir Richard Yeoman was driven away) uſed daily to read a Chapter, and to ſay the Engliſh Letany in Hadley Church. But him they fetcht up to London, and caſt him in priſon in Newgate; where after a yeeres impriſonment he died.

D. Taylors journey. John Hull a faithful ſervant to D. Taylor.

But let us return to Doctor Taylor againe, who being accompanied with a ſervant of his owne, named John Hull, tooke his journey towards London. By the way, this John Hull laboured to counſell and perſwade him very earneſtly to fly, and not to come to the biſhop, and proferred himſelfe to go with him to ſerve him; and in all perils to venture his life for him and with him.

D. Taylor again adviſed to flie, but he refuſed ſo to do.

But in no wiſe would Doctor Taylor conſent or agree thereunto, but ſaid, Oh John, ſhall I give place to this thy counſell and worldly perſwaſion, and leave my flocke in this danger? Remember the good Shepheard Chriſt, which not alone fed his flocke, but alſo died for his flock. Him muſt I follow, and with Gods grace will do.

There-

Anno 1555.

The firſt meeting between Wincheſter and D. Taylor.

Therefore good John pray for me and if thou ſeeſt me weak at any time, comfort me, and diſcourage me not in this my godly enterpriſe and purpoſe. Thus they came up to London and ſhortly after D. Taylor preſented himſelf to for Biſhop of Wincheſter Steven Gardiner, then Lord Chancellor of England.

A great abuſe in England and three miſchiefes coming thereof.

For this hath bin one great abuſe in England theſe many yeers, that ſuch offices as have been of moſt importance and weight, have commonly been committed to biſhops and other ſpirituall men, whereby three divelliſh miſchiefes and inconveniences have happened in this Realme, to the great diſhonour of God, and utter neglecting of the flock of Chriſt; the which three be theſe.

The firſt miſchief.

Firſt, they have had ſmall leiſure to attend to their Paſtorall Cures, which thereby have beene utterly neglected and undone.

The ſecond miſchief.

Secondly, it hath alſo puft up many Biſhops and other ſpirituall perſons into ſuch haughtineſſe and pride, that they have thought no noble man in the Realm worthy to be their equall and fellow.

The third miſchiefe.

Thirdly, where they by this means knew the very ſecrets of Princes, they being in ſuch high offices, have cauſed the ſame to bee knowne in Rome, afore the Kings could accompliſh and bring their intents to paſſe in England. By this meanes hath the Papacy beene ſo maintained, and things ordered after their wils and pleaſures, that much miſchief hath happened in this Realme and others, ſometime to the deſtruction of Princes, and ſometime to the utter undoing of many Common-wealths.

Now when Gardiner ſaw D. Taylor, he, according to his common cuſtome, all to reviled him, calling him Knave, Traitor, Heretike, with many other villanous reproaches; which all D. Taylor heard patiently, and at the laſt ſaid unto him:

D. Taylors patience and magnanimity.

My Lord, quoth he, I am neither Traitor nor Heretike, but a true Subiect, and a faithfull Chriſtian man, and am come, according to your commandement, to know what is the cauſe that your Lordſhip hath ſent for me.

Then ſaid the biſhop, Art thou come, thou Villain? How dareſt thou looke mee in the face for ſhame? Knoweſt thou not who I am?

Steven Gardiners Lordly looks.

The notable anſwer of D. Taylor to the biſhop of Wincheſter.

Yes, quoth D. Taylor, I know who you are. Yee are Doctor Steven Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, and Lord Chancellor, and yet but a mortall man I trow. But if I ſhould be affraid of your Lordly lookes, why feare you not God, the Lord of us all? How dare ye for ſhame look any Chriſtian man in the face, ſeeing yee have forſaken the truth, denied our Saviour Chriſt and his word and done contrary to your owne oath and writing? With what countenance will ye appear before the iudgement ſeat of Chriſt, and anſwer to your oath made firſt unto that bleſſed K. Henry the eighth of famous memory, and afterward unto bleſſed King Edward the ſixth his ſon?

Herods oath. Here the Biſhop confeſſeth unlawfull oathes ought not to be kept.

The biſhop anſwered, Tuſh, tuſh, that was Herods oath, unlawfull; and therefore worthy to be broken. I have done well in breaking it; and I thank God, I am come home againe to our mother the Catholike Church of Rome, and ſo I would thou ſhouldeſt do.

Doctor Taylor anſwered, Should I forſake the Church of Chriſt, which is founded upon the true foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, to approve thoſe lies, errours, ſuperſtitions, and idolatries, that the Popes and their company at this day ſo blaſphemouſly do approve? Nay, God forbid.

The true Church of Chriſt, whereunto all men ought to turn.

Let the Pope and his return to our Saviour Chriſt and his word, and thruſt out of the Churches ſuch abominable idolatries as hee maintaineth, and then will Chriſtian men turne unto him. You wrote truly againſt him, and were ſworn againſt him.

I tell thee, quoth the biſhop of Wincheſter, it was Herods oath, unlawfull; and therfore ought to be broken, and not kept: and our holy father the Pope hath diſcharged me of it.

Chriſt will require lawfull oathes and promiſes.

Then ſaid D. Taylor, But you ſhall not ſo be diſcharged before Chriſt, who doubtleſſe will require it at your hands, as a lawfull oath made to your Leige and Soveraigne Lord the King, from whoſe obedience no man can aſſoile you, neither the Pope nor any of his.

Gardiner again railing.

I ſee, quoth the biſhop, thou art an arrogant knave, and a very foole.

Railing words become not a Magiſtrate. Mat. 5.

My Lord, quoth Doctor Taylor, leave your unſeemely railing at me, which is not ſeemly for ſuch an one in authority as you are. For I am a Chriſtian man, and you know, that he that ſaith to his brother, Racha, is in danger of a councell, and he that ſaith, Thou Foole, is in danger of hell fire.

The biſhop anſwered, Ye are falſe, and lyars all the ſort of you. Nay, quoth Doctor Taylor, we are true men, and know that it is written, Os quod mentitur, occidit animam: And againe, Perdes omnes qui loquuntur mendacium, i. The mouth that lieth, ſlayeth the ſoul: And againe, Lord God thou ſhalt deſtroy all that ſpeak lies. And therfore we abide by the truth of Gods word which ye contrary to your own conſciences deny and forſake.

Marriage obiected to D. Taylor. Marriage defended.

Thou art married (quoth the biſhop.) Yea, (quoth Doctor Taylor) that I thank God I am, and have had nine children, and all in lawfull matrimony, and bleſſed be God that ordained matrimony and commanded that every man, that hath not the gift of continency, ſhould marry a wife of his own, and not live in adultery or whoredome.

One Idolater holdeth with another.

Then ſaid the biſhop, Thou haſt reſiſted the Queens proceedings, and wouldeſt not ſuffer the Parſon of Aldam, a very vertuous and devout Prieſt, to ſay Maſſe in Hadley. D. Taylor anſwered, My Lord, I am Parſon of Hadley, and it is againſt all right, conſcience and laws, that any man ſhould come into my charge, and preſume to infect the flock committed unto me, with venome of the Popiſh Idolatrous Maſſe.

The Maſſe.

With that the biſhop waxed very angry, and ſaid, Thou art a blaſphemous Heretike indeed, that blaſphemeſt the bleſſed Sacrament (and put off his cap) and ſpeakeſt againſt the holy Maſſe, which is made a ſacrifice for the quicke and the dead. D. Taylor anſwered, Nay, I blaſpheme not the bleſſed ſacrament which Chriſt inſtituted, but I reverence it as a true Chriſtian man ought to doe, and confeſſe, that Chriſt ordained the holy communion in the remembrance of his death and paſſion, which when we keep according to his ordinance, we (through faith) eat the body of Chriſt, and drink his blood, giving thanks for our redemption, and this is our ſacrifice for the quick and the dead, to give thanks for his mercifull goodneſſe ſhewed to us, in that he gave his Son Chriſt unto the death for us.

The Communion.

The true ſacrifice for the quick and dead what it is.

Thou ſayſt well (quoth the Biſhop.) It is all that thou haſt ſaid, and more too; for it is a propitiatory ſacrifice for the quick and the dead. Then anſwered D. Taylor. Chriſt gave himſelf to die for our redemption upon the Croſſe, whoſe body there offered was the propitiatory ſacrifice, full, perfect, and ſufficient unto ſalvation, for all them that believe in him. And this ſacrifice did our Saviour Chriſt offer in his own perſon himſelfe once for all, neither can any Prieſt any more Propitiatory ſacrifice offered never more than once.

Our ſacrifice is only memorative.

offer him, nor wee need any more propitiatorie ſacrifice; and therefore I ſay with Chryſoſtome, and all the Doctors: Our ſacrifice is only memorative, in the remembrance of Chriſts death and paſſion, a ſacrifice of thankſgiving; and therefore the Fathers called it Euchariſtia: And other ſacrifice hath the Church of God none.

Winchesters ſtrong argument, Carry him to priſon.

It is true, quoth the Biſhop, the Sacrament is called Euchariſtia, a thankſgiving, becauſe we there give thanks for our redemption, and it is alſo a ſacrifice propitiatory for the quick and the dead, which thou ſhalt confeſſe ere thou and I have done. Then called the Biſhop his men, and ſaid, Have this fellow hence, and carry him to the Kings Bench, and charge the Keeper hee be ſtreightly kept.

D. Taylors prayer againſt the Pope and his deteſtable enormities.

Then kneeled Doctor Taylor downe, and held up both his hands, and ſaid, Good Lord I thank thee; and from the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and all his deteſtable errours, idolatries, and abominations, good Lord deliver us: And God be praiſed for good King Edward. So they carried him to priſon to the Kings Bench, where he lay priſoner almoſt two yeeres.

This is the ſumm of that firſt talk, as I ſaw it mentioned in a letter that D. Taylor wrote to a friend of his, thanking God for his grace, that he had confeſſed his truth, and was found worthy for truth to ſuffer priſon and bands, beſeeching his friends to pray for him, that he might perſevere conſtant unto the end.

The godly behaviour and converſation of D. Taylor in the priſon.

Being in priſon, Doctor Taylor ſpent all his time in prayer, reading the holy Scriptures, and writing, and preaching, and exhorting the priſoners, and ſuch as reſorted to him, to repentance and amendment of life.

Priſons turned into Churches and Churches into dens of theeves.

Within a few daies after, were divers other learned and godly men in ſundry countries of England committed to priſon for religion, ſo that almoſt all the priſons in England were become right Chriſtian Schools and Churches; ſo that there was no greater comfort for Chriſtian hearts, than to come to the priſons to behold their vertuous converſation, and to heare their praiers, preachings, moſt godly exhortations, and conſolations.

Now were placed in Churches blind and ignorant Maſſemongers, with their Latine bablings and Apiſh ceremonies; who like cruell Wolves ſpared not to murther all ſuch, as any thing at all but once whiſpered againſt their Popery. As for the godly Preachers which were in King Edwards time, they were either fled the Realm, or els as the Prophets did in King Achabs daies, they were privily kept in corners. As for as many as the Papiſts could lay hold on, they were ſent into priſon, there as Lambes waiting when the Butchers would call them to the ſlaughter.

The lamentable diſtreſſe of Gods true worſhippers in thoſe dayes

John Bradford and D. Taylor priſon-fellows in the Kings Bench.

When Doctor Taylor was come into the priſon called the Kings Bench, he found therein the vertuous and vigilant Preacher of Gods word, maſter Bradford: which man for his innocent and godly living, his devout and vertuous preaching, was worthily counted a miracle of our time, as even his adverſaries muſt needs confeſſe. Finding this man in priſon, he began to exhort him to faith, ſtrength, and patience, and to perſevere conſtant unto the end. Maſter Bradford hearing this, thanked God that he had provided him ſuch a comfortable priſon-fellow; and ſo they both together lauded God, and continued in praier, reading, and exhorting one the other: Inſomuch that Doctor Taylor told his friends that came to viſit him, that God had moſt graciouſly provided for him, to ſend him to that priſon where he found ſuch an angell of God, to be in his companie to comfort him.

Anno 1555

Doctor Taylor brought forth to be deprived.

After that Doctor Taylor had lien in priſon a while, he was cited to appeare in the Arches at Bow Church, to anſwer unto ſuch matter as there ſhould be objected againſt him. At the day appointed he was led thither, his Keeper waiting upon him. Where when he came, he ſtoutly and ſtrongly defended his marriage, affirming by the Scriptures of God, by the Doctors of the Primitive Church, by both lawes civill and canon, that it is lawfull for Prieſts to marry, and that ſuch as have not the gift of continency are bound in paine of damnation to marry. This did he ſo plainly prove, that the judge could give no ſentence of divorce againſt him, but gave ſentence he ſhould be deprived of his Benefice, becauſe he was married.

D. Taylor defendeth marriage of Prieſts.

D. Taylor deprived of his Benefice becauſe of his marriage.

You do me wrong then (quoth Doctor Taylor) and alledged many laws and conſtitutions for himſelfe, but all prevailed not. For he was againe carried into priſon, and his livings taken away, and given to other. As for Hadley Benefice, it was given or ſould, I wot not whether, to one Maſter Newealle, whoſe great vertues were altogether unlike to Doctor Taylor his predeceſſor, as the poore Pariſhioners full well have found.

Doctor Taylor brought againe before Winchester, and other Biſhops.

The Papiſts rule & reigne.

After a yeere and three quarters, or there about, in the which time the Papiſts got certain old tyrannous lawes, which were put down by King Henry the eighth, and by King Edward, to be again revived by parliament: ſo that now they might, Ex officio, cite whom they would, upon their owne ſuſpition, and charge him with what Articles they luſted, and except they in all things agreed to their purpoſe, burne them: When theſe lawes were once eſtabliſhed, they ſent for Doctor Taylor with certaine other priſoners, which were againe convented before the Chancellor and other Commiſſioners about the 22. of January. The purport and effect of which talke betweene them, becauſe it is ſufficiently deſcribed by himſelfe in his owne letter written to a friend of his, I have annexed the ſaid letter here under, as followeth.

A Letter of Doctor Taylor, containing and reporting the talke had betweene him and the Lord Chancellor and other Commiſſioners the 22. of January.

The pardon is proferred.

WHereas you would have mee to write the talke betweene the King and Queens moſt honourable Councell and mee on Tueſday, the 22. of Ianuary, ſo far as I remember: Firſt, my L. Chancellor ſaid, You among other are at this preſent time ſent for, to enjoy the Kings and Queens Majeſties favour and mercy, if you will now riſe again with us from the fall which we generally have received in this Realme, from the which (God bee praiſed) we are now cleerly delivered, miraculouſly. If you will not riſe with us now, and receive mercy now offered, you ſhall have judgement according to your demerits. To this I anſwered, that ſo to riſe, ſhould be the greateſt fall that ever I could receive: for I ſhould ſo fall from my deare Saviour Chriſt to Antichriſt. For I doe believe, that the Religion ſet forth in King Edwards daies, was according to the veine of the holy Scripture, which containeth fully all the rules of our Chriſtian

Note this anſwer.

The religion ſet forth in K. Edwards dayes.

Anno 1555

Secretary Bourne cavilleth againſt the Religion ſet forth in K. Edwards dayes.

Chriſtian Religion, from the which I do not intend to decline ſo long as I live, by Gods grace.

Then Maſter Secretary Bourne ſaid; Which of the Religions meane yee of in King Edwards dayes? For ye know there were diverſe Bookes of Religion ſet forth in his dayes. There was a Religion ſet forth in a Catechiſme by my Lord of Canterbury. Doe you meane that you will ſtick to that?

A teſtimony of the booke of ſervice ſet out in K. Edwards dayes.

I anſwered, My Lord of Canterbury made a Catechiſme to be tranſlated into Engliſh, which Booke was not of his owne making: yet he ſet it forth in his owne name; and truly that Booke for the time did much good. But there was after that ſet forth by the moſt innocent King Edward (for whom God bee praiſed everlaſtingly) the whole Church-ſervice, with great deliberation, and the advice of the beſt learned men in the Realme, and authoriſed by the whole Parliament, and received and publiſhed gladly by the whole Realme: which booke was never reformed but once, and yet by that one reformation it was ſo fully perfected, according to the rules of our Chriſtian Religion in every behalfe, that no Chriſtian conſcience could be offended with any thing therein contained; I meane of that book reformed.

Then my Lord Chancellour ſaid, Diddeſt thou never read the booke that I ſet forth of the Sacrament?

I anſwered, that I had read it.

His right name might be Sir John Clawbacke.

Then hee ſaid, How likeſt thou that booke? With that one of the Councell (whoſe name I know not) ſaid, My Lord, that is a good queſtion: for I am ſure, that booke ſtoppeth all their mouths. Then ſaid I, My Lord, I thinke many things be farre wide from the truth of Gods word in that booke.

Math. 5.

Then my Lord ſaid, Thou art a very varlet. To that I anſwered, That is as ill as Racha or Fatue. Then my Lord ſaid, Thou art an ignorant Beetle brow.

D. Taylor learned in Divinity, and alſo in the civill law.

To that I anſwered, I have read over and over againe the holy Scriptures, and S. Auguſtines works through, S. Cyprian, Euſebius, Origene, Gregory Nazianzene, with divers other books through; once therefore, I thank God, I am not utterly ignorant. Beſides theſe, my Lord, I profeſſed the civill Laws, as your Lordſhip did, and I have read over the Canon law alſo.

Gardiners booke de vera obedientia.

Then my Lord ſaid, With a corrupt judgement thou readeſt all things: Touching my profeſſion it is Divinity, in which I have written diverſe bookes. Then ſaid I, My Lord, ye did write one booke, De vera obedientia; I would you had beene conſtant in that: for indeed you never did declare a good conſcience that I heard of, but in that one booke.

Then my Lord ſaid, Tut, tut, tut, I wrote againſt Bucer in Prieſts mariages: but ſuch books pleaſe not ſuch wretches as thou art, which haſt beene married many yeeres.

Prieſts marriage confirmed by D. Taylor.

To that I anſwered, I am married indeed, and I have had nine children in holy matrimony, I thank God: and this I am ſure of, that your proceedings now at this preſent in this Realme againſt Prieſts marriages, is the maintenance of the doctrine of Divels, againſt naturall law, civill law, Canon law, generall Councels, Canons of the Apoſtles, ancient Doctors, and Gods lawes.

Then ſpake my Lord of Dureſme, ſaying, You have profeſſed the civill law, as you ſay. Then you know that Iuſtinian writeth that Prieſts ſhould at their taking of orders ſweare, that they were never married; and he bringeth in to prove that, Canones Apoſtolorum.

To that I anſwered, That I did not remember any ſuch law of Iuſtinian. But I am ſure, that Iuſtinian writeth in Titulo de indicta viduitate, in Cod. that if one would bequeath to his wife in his Teſtament a legacie, under a condition that ſhee ſhould never marry againe, and take an oath of her for accompliſhing the ſame, yet ſhe may marry againe if he die, notwithſtanding the aforeſaid conditions, and oath taken and made againſt marriage: and an oath is another manner of obligation made to God, than is a Papiſticall vow made to man.

Iuſtinians law approveth marriage, and condemneth oaths made againſt it.

Tonſtall throughly anſwered by the Civill law.

Moreover, in the Pandects it is contained, that if a man doth manumit his handmaid, under a condition that ſhe ſhall never marry; yet ſhe may marry, and her Patrone ſhall loſe jus Patronatus, for his adding of the unnaturall and unlawfull condition againſt matrimony.

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Thou ſayeſt that Prieſts may be married by Gods law. How proveſt thou that?

Scripture approveth prieſts marriage, but the Pope muſt be heard before the Scripture. Chryſoſtome calleth it an hereſie to ſay that a Prieſt may not be married.

I anſwered, By the plaine words and ſentences of S. Paul, both to Timothy and to Titus, where hee ſpeakes moſt evidently of the marriage of Prieſts, Deacons and Biſhops. And Chryſoſtome writing upon the Epiſtle to Timothy, ſaith, It is an hereſie to ſay that a Biſhop may not be married.

Then ſaid my Lord Chancellor, Thou lieſt of Chryſoſtome. But thou doeſt, as all thy companions doe, belie ever without ſhame both the Scriptures and the Doctors. Diddeſt thou not alſo ſay, that by the Canon law Prieſts may be married? which is moſt untrue, and the contrary is moſt true.

Canon law approveth prieſts marriages.

I anſwered, We read in the decrees, that the foure generall Councels, Nicene, Conſtantinopolitane, Epheſine, Chalcedone, have the ſame authority that the foure Evangeliſts have. And we read in the ſame decrees (which is one of the chiefe books of the Canon law) that the Councell of Nice, by the meanes of one Paphnutius, did allow Prieſts and Biſhops marriages. Therefore by the beſt part of the Canon law, Prieſts may be married.

Wincheſter belyeth the Councell.

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Thou falſifieſt the generall Councell. For there is expreſſe mention in the ſaid decree, that Prieſts ſhould be divorced from their wives, which be married.

Then ſaid I, if thoſe words be there, as you ſay, then am I content to loſe this great head of mine. Let the book be fetched.

Tonſtall helpeth Wincheſter at need.

Then ſpake my Lord of Dureſme; Though they be not there, yet they may be in Eccleſiaſtica hiſtoria, which Euſebius wrote, out of which book the decree was taken.

To that ſaid I, It is not like that the Pope would leave out any ſuch ſentence, having ſuch authority, and making ſo much for his purpoſe.

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Gratian was but a patcher, and thou art glad to ſnatch up ſuch a patch as maketh for thy purpoſe.

I anſwered, my Lord, I cannot but marvell that you doe call one of the chief Papiſts that ever was, but a patcher.

Gardiner denieth his owne Canoniſt and calleth it a patched law.

Then my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Nay I call thee a ſnatcher and a patcher. To make an end, Wilt thou not returne againe with us to the Catholike Church? and with that he roſe.

D. Taylor ſent againe to priſon.

And I ſaid, by Gods grace I will never depart from Chriſts Church. Then I required that I might have ſome of my friends to come to me in priſon: and my Lord Chancellor ſaid, Thou ſhalt have judgement within this weeke: and ſo was I delivered againe unto my keeper. My Lord of Dureſme would that I ſhould beleeve as my father and my mother did. I alledged S. Auguſtine that wee ought to preferre Gods word before all men.

And thus much was contained in the foreſaid letter of D. Taylor for that matter.

Beſides this letter, moreover he directed another writing in like manner to another friend of his concerning the cauſes wherefore he was condemned, which we thought likewiſe here to expreſſe as followeth.

The copie of another letter to his friend touching his aſſertions of the marriage of Prieſts, and other cauſes for the which he was condemned.

The Biſhop of Wincheſter and his fellowes proved to be open heretikes, by Scripture, and by the true definition of hereſie.

1. Tim. 4.

IT is hereſie to defend any doctrine againſt the holy Scripture. Therefore the Lord Chancellor and Biſhops conſenting to his ſentence againſt me, be heretikes. For they have given ſentence againſt the marriage of Prieſts, knowing that S. Paul to Timothy and Titus writeth plainly, that Biſhops, Prieſts, and Deacons, may be married; knowing alſo that, by S. Pauls doctrine, it is the doctrine of divels to inhibit matrimony. And S. Paul willeth every faithfull Miniſter to teach the people ſo, leſt they be deceived by the marked Merchants, 1 Tim. 4.

Biſhops ſinne againſt their own conſcience and that for 9. or 10. cauſes.

These Biſhops are not ignorant, that it is not onely Saint Pauls counſell, and lawfull, but Gods commandement alſo to marry, for ſuch as cannot otherwiſe live chaſte, neither avoid fornication.

1 Cor. 7.

They know that ſuch as do marry do not ſin.

Gen. 2.

They know that God, before ſin was, ordained matrimony, and that in Paradiſe, betweene two of his principall creatures, man and woman.

Gen. 2.

They know what ſpirit they have, which ſay it is evill to marry (ſeeing God ſaid, It is not good for man to be alone without a wife) having no ſpeciall gift, contrary to the generall commandement and ordinance, diverſe times repeated in the booke of Geneſis, which is, To increaſe and multiply.

Gen. 12. Marriage is no impediment for a good man to walk in the obedience of Gods commandement.

They know that Abraham carried into the land of Canaan his old and yet barren wife, the vertuous woman Sara with him, leaving father and mother, and countrey the while, at Gods commandement. For though father and mother, and other friends are deare and neere, yet none are ſo dearely and neerely ioyned together, as man and wife in matrimony, which muſt needs be holy, for that is a figure and ſimilitude of Chriſt and his Church.

Epheſ. 5.
Heb. 13.

They know that S. Paul giveth a great praiſe to matrimony, calling it honourable, and that not only to and among many, but to and among all men without exception, whoſoever have need of that Gods remedy, for mans and womans infirmity.

They know that if there were any ſin in matrimony, it were chiefly to be thought to be in the bed-company. But S. Paul ſaith, that the bed-company is undefiled.

Gen. 18.
Exod. 18.
Gen. 25.
Gen. 31.
2 Reg. 7.
Matth. 1.

They know that the having of a wife was not an impediment for Abraham, Moſes, Iſaac, Jacob, David, &c. to talk with God, neither to the Levites, Biſhops, and Prieſts office in the time of the old Teſtament or the new.

They know that Chriſt would not be conceived, or borne of his bleſſed mother, the virgin Mary, before ſhe was eſpouſed in marriage, his owne ordinance.

They know, by S. Cyprian and S. Auguſtine, that a vow is not an impediment ſufficient to let matrimony or to divorce the ſame.

Chryſoſtome. It is hereſie to deny Prieſts marriage.

They know yͤ S. Chryſoſtome ſaith, it is hereſie to affirm that a biſhop may not have a wife.

Ambroſe 3. Qui integritat.

They know that Ambroſe will have no commandement but counſell only to be given, touching the obſerving of Virginity.

They know that Chriſt with his bleſſed mother and the Apoſtles were at a marriage, and beautified and honoured the ſame with his preſence, and firſt miracle.

To be ſhort, they know that all that I have here written touching the marriage of Prieſts, is true: and they know that the Papiſts themſelves doe not obſerve, touching that matter, their owne lawes and canons, and yet they continue marked in conſcience with an hot iron, as deteſtable heretikes in this behalfe. The Lord give them grace to repent, if it be his good will, Amen.

The ſecond cauſe of Doctor Taylors condemnation. Tranſubſtantiation and Concomitation, two iugling words of the Papiſts.

My ſecond cauſe why I was condemned an heretike is, that I denied Tranſubſtantiation and Concomitation, two iugling words of the Papiſts, by the which they doe beleeve and will compell all others to beleeve, that Chriſts naturall body is made of bread, and the Godhead by and by to be ioyned thereunto, ſo that immediatly after the words (called the words of conſecration) there is no more bread and wine in the Sacrament, but the ſubſtance onely of the body and blood of Chriſt together with his Godhead: ſo that the ſame being now Chriſt, both God and man, ought to be worſhipped with godly honour, and to be offered to God, both for the quicke and the dead, as a ſacrifice propitiatory and ſatisfactory for the ſame. This matter was not long debated in words: but becauſe I denied the foreſaid Papiſticall doctrine (yea rather, plaine, moſt wicked idolatry, blaſphemy and hereſie) I was iudged an heretike.

The 3. Article againſt Doctor Taylor.

I did alſo affirme the Pope to be Antichriſt, and Popery Antichriſtianity.

The 4. article againſt Doctor Taylor.

And I confeſſed the doctrine of the Bible to be ſufficient doctrine, touching all and ſingular matters of Chriſtian Religion, and of ſalvation.

The 5. article againſt Doctor Taylor.

I alſo alledged, that the oath againſt the ſupremacy of the Biſhop of Rome, was a lawfull oath, and ſo was the oath made by us all, touching the Kings or Queenes preheminence. For Chryſoſtome ſaith, that Apoſtles, Evangeliſts, and all men in every Realme were ever, and ought to be ever, touching both body and goods, in ſubiection to the Kingly authority, who hath the ſword in his hand, as Gods principall Officer and Governour in every Realme. I deſired the Biſhops to repent for bringing the Realme from Chriſt to Antichriſt, from light to darknes, from verity to vanity.

All men muſt obey Kings.

Thus you know the ſumme of my laſt examination and condemnation. Pray for me, and I will pray for you.

D. Taylor never afraid of death.

God be praiſed: ſince my condemnation I was never afraid to die; Gods will be done. If I ſhrink from Gods truth, I am ſure of another manner of death than had Iudge Hales. But God be praiſed, even from the bottome of heart, I am unmoveably ſetled upon the rock, nothing doubting but that my deare God will performe and finiſh the worke that he hath begun in me, and others. To him be all honour both now and ever through Chriſt our only and whole Saviour, Amen.

And thus much wrote D. Taylor, concerning this matter, to his friend.

You heard in the former anſwers a little before, certaine allegations touched of D. Taylor out of S. Cyprian, Auguſtine, Chryſoſtome, and Ambroſe, touching the lawfulneſſe of Prieſts marriage. Now ye ſhall heare the places of the ſaid Doctors cited and produced out of their own bookes, as here enſueth.

The places of the Doctors alledged before in Doctor Taylors letter.

Cyprian. l. 1. Epiſt. 11.

THis queſtion was asked of S. Cyprian, what ſhould be done with thoſe religious perſons, that

A Deacon or virgin or any other that hath dedicate himſelfe to virginity, if he cannot live chaſte, by S. Cyprians judgement ought to marry.

that could not keep their chaſtity as they had vowed. He anſwered thus: Thou doeſt ask what we do judge of Virgins, which, after they had decreed to live chaſtly, are afterward found in one bed with a man. Of the which thou ſayſt that one of them was a Deacon. We doe with great ſorrow ſee the great ruine of many perſons, which commeth by the reaſon of ſuch unlawfull and perillous companying together. Wherefore, if they have dedicated themſelves unto Chriſt in faith, to live purely and chaſtly, then let them ſo remaine without any fable, and ſtrongly and ſtedfaſtly abide the reward of virginity. But if they will not abide, or elſe cannot abide; then it is better to marry, than to fall into the fire of concupiſcence: And let them give to them to the brethren and ſiſters none occaſion of ſlander, &c. Cyprian in his 11. Epiſtle, Lib. 1.

Aug. de bono conjugali, ad Iulianum.

Certaine men doe affirme, Thoſe men to be advouterers, that doe marry, after that they have vowed chaſtity. But I doe affirme, That thoſe men doe grievouſly ſinne, the which doe ſeparate them, &c. Auguſtine, in his Booke, De bono conjugali, ad Julianum.

The Pope and his Biſhops commandeth and counſelleth not to marry, yea and to burn men for marrying.

Chaſtity of the body ought to be deſired of us: which thing I do give for a counſell, and do not command it imperiouſly. For Virginity is a thing that alonely ought to be counſelled, but not to be commanded: it is rather a thing of voluntary will, and not a precept. Ambroſe 32. Quæſt. 1. Cap Integritas.

A briefe recapitulation out of Doctor Taylors cauſes afore touched, for the Reader more evidently to ſee how the Papiſts doe againſt their own knowledge in forbidding Prieſts marriage.

The Popes Clergy, forbidding Eccleſiaſticall perſons to marrie, doe againſt their conſcience and knowledge, as may well be proved by theſe cauſes hereunder following.

1 Firſt, they know that matrimony in the old Teſtament, De jure inſtitutionis, is indifferently permitted to all men without any exception.

2 Secondly, they know that in the old Teſtament, De facto, both Prieſts, Levites, Prophets, Patriarchs, and all others had their wives.

3 Thirdly, they know that Matrimony was permitted and inſtituted of God for two principall ends; to wit, for procreation, and avoiding of ſin.

4 Fourthly, they know that in the old Teſtament God not onely inſtituted and permitted Matrimony to be free, but alſo induceth and appointeth men to marry and take wives, in theſe words, It is not good for a man to be alone, &c.

5 Fifthly, they know that in the new Teſtament S. Paul permitteth the ſtate of Matrimony free to all men, having not the gift of continency, and forbiddeth none.

6 Sixthly, they know that in the new Teſtament the ſaid S. Paul not onely permitteth, but alſo expreſly willeth and chargeth men having not the gift, to marry, ſaying, For avoiding fornication, let every man have his wife, &c.

7 Seventhly, they know that in the new Teſtament the ſaid S. Paul not only permitteth and commandeth, but alſo commendeth and praiſeth the ſtate of Matrimony, Heb. 13. Calling it honourable, and the bed company to be undefiled, &c.

8 Eighthly, they know that in the new Teſtament Chriſt himſelfe not only was not conceived nor borne of the Virgin before ſhe was eſpouſed in Matrimony, but alſo that both he and his bleſſed mother did beautifie and honour the ſtate of Matrimony with their preſence: yea in the ſame began his firſt miracle

9 Ninthly, they know both by the old Teſtament and new, that marriage is no impediment to walke in the obedience of Gods commandement; for both Abraham carried into the land of Canaan his old, yea and barren wife, the vertuous woman Sara, with him: and alſo to Iſaac, Jacob, Moſes, David, and others, their mariage was no impediment to them to talk with God; neither to other Levites, Biſhops, and Prieſts in the time both of the old Teſtament, and of the new. Againe, neither was it a let to Peter, Philip, and others, both to have their wives with them, and alſo to ſupply the office of Apoſtleſhip.

10 Tenthly, they know both by the old Teſtament and new, that ſinfull fornication and adultery depriveth man of Gods favour and graces of the holy Ghoſt, which graces eſpecially be requiſite in men of the Church.

11 Eleventhly, they know in their own ſecret conſcience, and by experience, that neither they which enioyne this vow of chaſtity, nor they which take it, doe obſerve the vow of chaſtity. Whereupon riſe inconveniences more than can be expreſſed: but the Lord above knoweth all, beſides the ſecret murders peradventure of many a poore infant, &c.

12 Twelfthly, they know by S. Cyprian, Epiſt. 11. and Saint Auguſtine, Lib. de bono conjugali, ad Iulianum, that a vow is no impediment ſufficient to let Matrimony, or to divorce the ſame.

13 Thirteenthly, they know that Chryſoſtome affirmeth it to be an hereſie to ſay, that a Biſhop may not have a wife.

14 Fourteenthly, they know that Saint Ambroſe, 32. q. 1. Integritas, will have no commandement, but counſell onely to be given touching the obſerving of virginity.

15 Fifteenthly, they know that before the time of Pope Hildebrand, that is, during the time of 1000. yeeres after Chriſt, marriage was never reſtrained, by any forcible neceſſity of vow, from men of the Church.

16 Sixteenthly, they know that Saint Paul calleth it the doctrine of divels, to forbid meats, and marriage, which God hath left free, with thankſgiving, for neceſſity of man and woman.

After that Doctor Taylor thus with great ſpirit and courage had anſwered for himſelfe, and ſtoutly rebuked his adverſaries for breaking their oath made before to K. Henry and to King Edward his ſonne, and for betraying the Realm into the power of the Romane Biſhop; they perceiving that in no caſe he could be ſtirred to their wils and purpoſe, that is, to turne with them from Chriſt to Antichriſt, committed him thereupon to priſon againe, where he endured till the laſt of January.

D. Taylor the fourth time, with M. Bradford, and M. Saunders, brought before Wincheſter and other Biſhops.

Upon which day and yeere aforeſaid, Doctor Taylor and Maſter Bradford, and Maſter Saunders were again called to appeare before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, the Biſhop of Norwich, of London, of Saliſbury and of Dureſme, and there were charged again with hereſie and ſchiſme, and therfore a determinate anſwer was required; whether they would ſubmit themſelves to the Romane Biſhop and abiure their errors, or elſe they would according to their lawes proceed to their condemnation.

Gardiner. Hopton. Boner. Capon. Tonſtall.

The conſtancy of theſe men.

When D. Taylor and his fellowes, M. Bradford and M. Sanders, heard this, they anſwered ſtoutly and boldly, that they would not depart from the truth which they had preached in King Edwards dayes, neither would they ſubmit themſelves to the Romiſh Antichriſt; but they thanked God for ſo great mercy, that he would call them to be worthy to ſuffer for his word and truth.

Sentence of death given upon innocents.

When the Biſhops ſaw them ſo boldly, conſtantly, and unmoveably fixed in the truth, they read the ſentence of death upon them, which when they had heard, they moſt ioyfully gave God thanks, and ſtoutly ſaid unto the Biſhops; We doubt not but God the righteous Iudge will require our blood at your hands, and the proudeſt of you all ſhall repent this receiving againe of Antichriſt, and your tyranny that ye now ſhew againſt the flocke of Chriſt.

D. Taylor condemned.

So was Doctor Taylor now condemned, committed to the Clinke, and the Keepers charged ſtraitly to keepe him: for ye have now another manner of charge (quoth the Lord Chancellor) than they had before: therefore looke ye take heed to it.

D. Taylor removed from the Clink to the Counter by night.

When the Keeper brought him toward the priſon, the people flocked about to gaze upon him: unto whom he ſaid, God be praiſed (good people) I am come away from them undefiled, and will confirme the truth with my blood. So was he beſtowed in the Clink, till it was toward night, and then he was removed to the Counter by the Poultry.

Boner commeth to the Counter to degrade D. Taylor.

Boner perſwading D. Taylor to turne.

D. Taylor refuſeth to turne from Chriſt to Antichriſt.

D. Taylor and Boner ſtriving for putting on the maſſing garments.

When Doctor Taylor had lyen in the ſaid Counter in the Poultry a ſevennight or thereabouts priſoner, the fourth day of February, Anno 1555. Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, with others, came to the ſaid Counter to degrade him, bringing with them ſuch ornaments, as do appertaine to their maſſing mummery. Now being come, he called for the ſaid Doctor Taylor to be brought unto him, the Biſhop being then in the chamber, where the Keeper of the Counter and his wife lay. So D. Taylor was brought downe from the chamber above that, to the ſaid Boner. And at his comming, the Biſhop ſaid, Maſter Doctor, I would you would remember your ſelf, and turne to your mother holy Church; ſo may you doe well enough, and I will ſue for your pardon. Whereunto Maſter Taylor anſwered, I would you and your fellowes would turne to Chriſt. As for me, I will not turne to Antichriſt. Well, quoth the Biſhop, I am come to degrade you: wherefore put on theſe veſtures. No, quoth Doctor Taylor, I will not. Wilt thou not, ſaid the Biſhop? I ſhall make thee, ere I goe. Quoth Doctor Taylor, You ſhall not, by the grace of God. Then he charged him upon his obedience to do it, but he would not doe it for him.

D. Taylor derideth the Popes maſſing toyes.

So he willed another to put them on his back, and when he was throughly furniſhed therewith, he ſet his hands to his ſide, walking up and down, and ſaid; How ſay you my Lord, am I not a goodly foole? How ſay you my Maſters? If I were in Cheape, ſhould I not have boyes enow to laugh at theſe apiſh toyes, and toying trumpery? ſo the Biſhop ſcraped his fingers, thumbs, and the crowne of his head, and did the reſt of ſuch like divelliſh obſervances.

D. Taylor prayeth againſt the pope and his deteſtable enormities.

Boner afraid of D. Taylor.

At the laſt, when he ſhould have given Doctor Taylor a ſtroke on the breaſt with his Croſier-ſtaffe, the Biſhops Chaplaine ſaid, My Lord ſtrike him not, for he will ſure ſtrike againe. Yea by S. Peter will I, quoth Doctor Taylor. The cauſe is Chriſts, and I were no good Chriſtian if I would not fight in my Maſters quarrell. So the biſhop laid his curſe upon him, but ſtruck him not. Then Doctor Taylor ſaid, Though you do curſe me, yet God doth bleſſe me. I have the witneſſe of my conſcience, that ye have done me wrong and violence: And yet I pray God, if it be his will, forgive you. But from the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and his deteſtable enormities, good Lord deliver us. And in going up to his chamber, he ſtill ſaid, God deliver me from you, God deliver me from you. And when he came up, he told Maſter Bradford (for then both lay in one chamber) that he had made the biſhop of London afraid: for, ſaith he laughingly, his Chaplain gave him counſell not to ſtrike me with his Croſier-ſtaffe, for that I would ſtrike againe; and, by my troth, ſaid he, rubbing his hands, I made him beleeve I would doe ſo indeed.

Keepers of priſon.

The night after that he was degraded, his wife and his ſonne Thomas reſorted unto him, and were by the gentleneſſe of the Keepers permitted to ſup with him. For this difference was ever found betweene the Keepers of the Biſhops priſons, and the Keepers of the Kings priſons: that the Biſhops Keepers were ever cruell, blaſphemous, and tyrannous like their Maſters: but the Keepers of the Kings priſons ſhewed, for the moſt part, as much favour as they poſſibly might.

So came D. Taylors wife, his ſon, and Iohn Hull his ſervant, to ſup with him: and at their comming in afore ſupper, they kneeled down and prayed, ſaying the Letanie.

D. Taylor bleſſeth his ſon

D. Taylors godly exhortation to his ſon, worthy of all youth to be marked.

After ſupper walking up and downe, he gave God thanks for his grace, that had ſo called him, and given him ſtrength to abide by his holy word: and turning to his ſonne Thomas, My deare ſonne (ſaid he) Almighty God bleſſe thee, and give thee his holy Spirit, to be a true ſervant of Chriſt, to learne his word, and conſtantly to ſtand by his truth all thy life long. And my Sonne, ſee that thou feare God alwayes. Flee from all ſin, and wicked living: be vertuous, ſerve God with daily prayer, and apply thy book. In any wiſe ſee thou be obedient to thy mother, love her, and ſerve her: be ruled by her now in thy youth, and follow her good counſell in all things. Beware of lewd company, of young men that feare not God, but follow their lewd luſts and vaine appetites. Fly from whoredome, and hate all filthy living, remembring, that I thy father doe die in the defence of holy marriage. Another day, when God ſhall bleſſe thee, love and cheriſh the poore people, and count that thy chiefe riches is, to be rich in almes: and when thy mother is waxed old, forſake her not, but provide for her to thy power, and ſee that ſhe lack nothing: For ſo will God bleſſe thee, and give thee long life upon earth and proſperity: which I pray God to grant thee.

D. Taylor counſelleth his wife.

Then turning to his wife, My deare wife, quoth he, continue ſtedfaſt in the feare and love of God, keep your ſelfe undefiled from their Popiſh Idolatries and ſuperſtitions. I have beene unto you a faithfull yoke-fellow, and ſo have you beene unto me, for the which I pray God to reward you, and doubt you not, deare wife, but God will reward it.

Now the time is come that I ſhall be taken from you, and you diſcharged of the wedlocke bond towards me: therefore I will give you my counſell what I thinke moſt expedient for you. You are yet a child-bearing woman, and therefore it will be moſt convenient for you to marry. For doubtleſſe you ſhall never be at a convenient ſtay for your ſelfe and our poore children, nor out of trouble, till you be married. Therefore as ſoone

ſoone as God will provide it, marry with ſome honeſt faithfull man that feareth God. Doubt you not, God will provide an honeſt huſband for you, and he will be a mercifull father to you and to my children: whom I pray you, bring up in the feare of God, and in learning, to the uttermoſt of your power, and keep them from this Romiſh idolatry. When he had thus ſaid, they with weeping teares prayed together, and kiſſed one the other: and he gave to his wife a booke of the Church-ſervice, ſet out by King Edward, which in the time of his impriſonment he daily uſed. And unto his ſonne Thomas he gave a Latine booke, containing the notable ſayings of the old Martyrs, gathered out of Eccleſiaſtica hiſtoria; and in the end of that booke he wrote his Teſtament and laſt Vale, as hereafter followeth.

His laſt token to his wife and his ſonne.

The laſt Will and Teſtament of Doctor Rowland Taylor, Parſon of Hadley.

D. Taylors will and Teſtament written in the book which he gave to his ſonne.
Iob 1.2.
Apoc. 14.
Luke 12.

I Say to my wife, and to my children; the Lord gave you unto me, and the Lord hath taken me from you, and you from me: bleſſed be the name of the Lord. I beleeve that they are bleſſed which die in the Lord. God careth for Sparrowes, and for the haires of our heads. I have ever found him more faithfull and favourable, than is any father or huſband. Truſt ye therefore in him by the means of our deare Saviour Chriſts merits: beleeve, love, feare, and obey him: pray to him, for he hath promiſed to helpe. Count me not dead, for I ſhall certainly live, and never die. I goe before, and you ſhall follow after, to our long home. I goe to the reſt of my children, Suſan, George, Ellen, Robert and Zacharie: I have bequeathed you to the onely Omnipotent.

A pure conſcience fully quieted.

I ſay to my deare friends of Hadley, and to all others which have heard me preach; that I depart hence with a quiet conſcience, as touching my doctrine, for the which I pray you thank God with me. For I have after my little talent declared to others thoſe leſſons that I gathered out of Gods Booke, the bleſſed Bible. Therefore if I or an Angell from heaven ſhould preach to you any other Goſpell, than that ye have received, Gods great curſe upon that Preacher.

A grave warning againſt Popery.

Beware for Gods ſake that ye deny not God, neither decline from the word of faith, leſt God decline from you, and ſo do ye everlaſtingly periſh. For Gods ſake beware of Popery, for though it appeare to have in it unity, yet the ſame is in vanity, and Antichriſtianity, and not in Chriſts faith and verity.

The ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt.

Beware of the ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, now after ſuch a light opened ſo plainely and ſimply, truly, throughly and generally to all England.

A godly prayer

The Lord grant all men his good and holy ſpirit, increaſe of his wiſedome, contemning the wicked world, hearty deſire to be with God, and the heavenly company, through Ieſus Chriſt, our onely Mediator, Advocate, Righteouſneſſe, Life, Sanctification, and Hope, Amen, Amen. Pray, Pray.

Rowland Taylor departing hence in ſure hope, without all doubting of eternall ſalvation, I thank God my heavenly Father, through Ieſus Chriſt my certaine Saviour, Amen.

D. Taylor led from the Counter by night toward Hadley.

On the next morrow, after that D. Taylor had ſupped with his wife in the Counter, as is before expreſſed, which was the fifth day of February, the Sheriffe of London with his Officers came to the Counter by two of the clocke in the morning, and ſo brought forth D. Taylor, and without any light led him to the Woolſack, an Inne without Algate. Doctor Taylors wife, ſuſpecting that her huſband ſhould that night be carried away, watching all night within S. Butolphs Church-porch beſide Algate, having with her two children, the one named Elizabeth of 13. yeeres of age (whom being left without father or mother, D. Taylor had brought up of almes from three yeeres old) the other named Mary, D. Taylors own daughter.

The laſt meeting and leave-taking with his wife and children.

Now, when the Sheriffe and his company came againſt S. Butolphs Church, Elizabeth cried, ſaying, O my deare Father; Mother, mother, here is my Father led away. Then cried his wife, Rowland, Rowland, where art thou? for it was a very darke morning, that the one could not ſee the other. D. Taylor anſwered, Deere wife, I am here, and ſtayed. The Sheriffs men would have led him forth, but the Sheriffe ſaid, Stay a little maſters, I pray you, and let him ſpeak to his wife, and ſo they ſtayed.

This Sheriffe was M. Cheſter.

Then came ſhe to him, and he took his daughter Mary in his armes: and he, his wife, and Elizabeth kneeled down and ſaid the Lords prayer. At which ſight the Sheriffe wept apace, and ſo did divers others of the company. After they had prayed, he roſe up and kiſſed his wife, and ſhooke her by the hand, and ſaid: Farewell my deare wife, be of good comfort, for I am quiet in my conſcience. God ſhall ſtirre up a father for my children. And then he kiſſed his daughter Mary and ſaid, God bleſſe thee, and make thee his ſervant: and kiſſing Elizabeth, he ſaid, God bleſſe thee. I pray you all ſtand ſtrong and ſtedfaſt unto Chriſt and his word, and keep you from idolatry. Then ſaid his wife, God be with thee, deare Rowland, I will with Gods grace meet thee at Hadley.

D. Taylor brought to the ſigne of the Woolſack.

And ſo was he led forth to the Woolſack, and his wife followed him. As ſoone as they came to the Woolſacke, he was put into a chamber, wherein he was kept with foure Yeomen of the Guard and the Sheriffes men. D. Taylor, as ſoone as he was come into the chamber, fell down on his knees, and gave himſelfe wholly to prayer. The Sheriffe then, ſeeing D. Taylors wife there, would in no caſe grant her to ſpeake any more with her huſband, but gently deſired her to go to his houſe, and take it as her owne, and promiſed her ſhe ſhould lacke nothing, and ſent two Officers to conduct her thither. Notwithſtanding ſhe deſired to go to her mothers, whither the Officers led her, and charged her mother to keep her there till they came againe.

The Sheriffes gentleneſſe ſhewed to the woman.

Thus remained D. Taylor in the Woolſack, kept by the Sheriffe and his company, till 11. of the clock. At which time the Sheriffe of Eſſex was ready to receive him: and ſo they ſet him on horſeback within the Inne, the gates being ſhut.

D. Taylor taketh his leave of his ſonne Thomas and John Hull.

At the coming out of the gates, John Hull, before ſpoken of, ſtood at the railes with Thomas, D. Taylors ſonne. When D. Taylor ſaw them, he called them, ſaying, Come hither my ſonne Thomas. And John Hull lifted the child up, and ſet him on the horſe before his father: and D. Taylor put off his hat, and ſaid to the people that ſtood there looking on him; Good people this is mine own ſonne, begotten of my body in lawfull matrimony; and God be bleſſed for lawfull matrimony. Then lifted he up his eyes towards heaven, and prayed for his ſonne, laid his hat upon the childs head, and bleſſed him, and ſo delivered the child to John Hull, whom he took by the hand, and ſaid; Farewell John Hull, the faithfulleſt ſervant that ever man had. And ſo they rode forth, the Sheriffe of Eſſex with foure Yeomen of the Guard, and the Sheriffes men leading him.

A good teſtimony for all ſervants to mark.

Arthur Fayſie.

When they were come almoſt at Burntwood, one Arthur Fayſie, a man of Haley, who before time had beene D. Taylors ſervant, met with them, and he, ſuppoſing him to have beene at liberty, ſaid, Maſter Doctor I am glad to ſee you againe at liberty, and ſame to him, and tooke him by the hand. Soft Sir, quoth the Sheriffe, he is a priſoner: what haſt thou to doe with him? I cry you mercy, ſaid Arthur, I knew not ſo much, and I thought it no offence to talke to a true man. The Sheriffe was very angry with this, and threatned to carry Arthur with him to priſon; notwithſtanding, he bade him get him quickly away, and ſo they rode forth to Burntwood: where they cauſed to be made for D. Taylor a cloſe hood, with two holes for his eyes to looke out at, and a ſlit for his mouth to breath at. This they did, that no man ſhould know him, nor he ſpeak to any man. Which practice they uſed alſo with others. Their owne conſciences told them, that they led innocent lambs to the ſlaughter. Wherefore they feared, leſt if the people ſhould have heard them ſpeake, or have ſeene them, they might have been much more ſtrengthned by their godly exhortations, to ſtand ſtedfaſt in Gods word, and to flie the ſuperſtitions and idolatries of the Papacy.

A cloſe hood made for D. Taylor, that no man ſhould know him.

Chriſts adverſaries work all by darkneſſe.

D. Taylor is ioyfull in his way.

All the way D. Taylor was ioyfull and merry, as one that accounted himſelfe going to a moſt pleaſant banquet or bridall. He ſpake many notable things to the Sheriffe and Yeomen of the Guard that conducted him, and often moved them to weepe through his much earneſt calling upon them to repent, and to amend their evill and wicked living. Oftentimes alſo he cauſed them to wonder and reioyce, to ſee him ſo conſtant and ſtedfaſt, void of all feare, ioyfull in heart, and glad to die. Of theſe Yeomen of the Guard, three uſed D. Taylor friendly, but the fourth (whoſe name was Homes) uſed him very homely, unkindly, and churliſhly.

Homes a notorious adverſary to D. Taylor.

At Chelmesford met them the Sheriffe of Suffolke, there to receive him, and to carry him forth into Suffolk. And being at ſupper, the Sheriffe of Eſſex very earneſtly laboured him to returne to the Popiſh Religion, thinking with faire words to perſwade him, and ſaid, Good Maſter Doctor, we are right ſorry for you, conſidering what the loſſe is of ſuch a one as ye might be, if ye would: God hath given you great learning and wiſedome, wherefore ye have been in great favor and reputation in times paſt with the Councell and higheſt of this Realm. Beſides this, ye are a man of goodly perſonage, in your beſt ſtrength, and by nature like to live many yeeres, and without doubt, ye ſhould in time to come be in as good reputation as ever ye were, or rather better. For ye are well beloved of all men as well for your vertues as for your learning: and me think it were great pitie you ſhould caſt away your ſelfe willingly, and ſo come to ſuch a painfull and ſhamefull death. Ye ſhould do much better to revoke your opinions, and returne to the Catholike Church of Rome, acknowledge the Popes holineſſe to be the ſupreme head of the univerſall Church, and reconcile your ſelf to him. You may do well yet, if you will: doubt ye not but ye ſhall finde favor at the Queenes hands, I and all theſe your friends will be ſuters for your pardon: which no doubt, ye ſhall obtaine. This counſell I give you, good M. Doctor, of a good heart, and good will toward you: and thereupon I drink to you. In like manner ſaid all the Yeomen of the Guard: upon that condition, M. Doctor, we will all drink to you.

The Sheriffe of Eſſex laboureth D. Taylor to returne to Papiſme.

The Sheriffes words to D. Taylor.

D. Taylor maketh a ieſt of Death, with a meet anſwer for ſuch Doctors and counſellors.

When they had all drunk to him, and the cup was come to him, he ſtayed a little, as one ſtudying what anſwer he might give. At the laſt thus he anſwered and ſaid, Maſter ſheriffe, and my Maſters all, I heartily thank you for your good will. I have hearkened to your words, and marked well your counſels. And to be plaine with you, I do perceive that I have been deceived my ſelfe, and am like to deceive a great many of Hadley of their expectation. With that word they all reioyced. Yea, good Maſter Doctor, quoth the ſheriffe, Gods bleſſing on your heart: hold you there ſtill. It is the comfortableſt word that we heard you ſpeak yet. What? ſhould ye caſt away your ſelfe in vaine? Play a wiſe mans part, and I dare warrant it, ye ſhall finde favor. Thus they reioyced very much at the word, and were very merry.

At the laſt: good M. Doctor, quoth the ſheriffe, what meant ye by this, that ye ſaid ye thinke ye have been deceived your ſelfe, and think ye ſhall deceive many one in Hadley? Would ye know my meaning plainly, quoth he? Yea, quoth the ſheriffe, good M. Doctor tell it us plainly.

Then ſaid Doctor Taylor, I will tell you how I have been deceived, and as I thinke, I ſhall deceive a great many. I am, as you ſee, a man that hath a very great carkaſſe, which I thought ſhould have been buried in Hadley Church-yard, if I had died in my bed, as I well hoped I ſhould have done; but herein I ſee I was deceived: and there are a great number of wormes in Hadley Church-yard: which ſhould have had iolly feeding upon this carrion, which they have looked for many a day. But now I know we be deceived, both I and they; for this carkaſſe muſt be burnt to aſhes, and ſo ſhall they loſe their bait and feeding, that they looked to have had of it.

Apophthegma of D. Taylor.

When the ſheriffe and his company heard him ſay ſo, they were amazed, and looked one on another, marvelling at the mans conſtant minde, that thus without all feare made but a ieſt at the cruell torment, and death now at hand prepared for him. Thus was their expectation clean diſappointed. And in this appeareth what was his meditation in his chiefeſt wealth and proſperity; namely, that he ſhould ſhortly die, and feed wormes in his grave: which meditation if all our Biſhops, and ſpirituall men had uſed, they had not for a little worldly glory forſaken the word of God and truth, which they in King Edwards dayes had preached and ſet forth, nor yet, to maintaine the Biſhop of Romes authority, have committed ſo many to the fire as they did.

A good meditation.

But let us returne to Doctor Taylor, who at Chelmesford was delivered to the ſheriffe of Suffolke, and by him conducted to Hadley, where he ſuffered. When they were come to Lanham, the ſheriffe ſtayed there two dayes; and thither came to him a great number of Gentlemen and Iuſtices upon great horſes, which all were appointed to aid the ſheriffe. Theſe Gentlemen laboured Doctor Taylor very ſore, to reduce him to the Romiſh Religion, promiſing him his pardon, which, ſaid they, we have here for you. They promiſed him great promotions, yea a Biſhoprick if he would take it: but all their labor and flattering words were in vain. For he had not built his houſe upon the ſand in perill of falling at every puffe of wind, but upon the ſure and unmoveable rock, Chriſt. Wherefore he abode conſtant and unmoveable unto the end.

After two days, the Sheriffe and his company led D. Taylor towards Hadley, and comming within two mile of Hadley, he deſired to light off his horſe to make water: which done, he leapt, and ſet a friſke or twaine, as men commonly do in dauncing. Why Maſter Doctor, quoth the Sheriffe, how do you now? He anſwered: Well, God be praiſed, good Maſter Sheriffe. Never better: for now I know I am almoſt at home. I lack not paſt two ſtiles to go over, and I am even at my fathers houſe. But Maſter Sheriffe, ſaid he, ſhall we not go thorow Hadley? Yes, ſaid the Sheriffe, you ſhall go thorow Hadley. Then ſaid he, O good Lord, I thank thee, I ſhall yet once ere I die ſee my flock, whom thou Lord knoweſt I have moſt heartily loved, and truly taught. Good Lord bleſſe them, and keep them ſtedfaſt in thy word and truth.

D. Taylor reioyceth that he is ſo nigh home

Another Apophthegma of D. Taylor.

D. Taylor deſirous to ſee his flock.

When they were now come to Hadley, and came riding over the bridge, at the bridge foot waited a poore man with five ſmall children: who when he ſaw Doctor Taylor, he and his children fell downe upon their knees, and held up their hands, and cried with a lowd voice, and ſaid: O deare father and good ſhepheard, Doctor Taylor: God helpe and ſuccour thee, as thou haſt many a time ſuccoured me and my poore children. Such witneſſe had the ſervant of God of his vertuous and charitable almes given in his life time. For God would now the poore ſhould teſtifie of his good deeds to his ſingular comfort, to the example of others, and confuſion of his perſecutors and tyrannous adverſaries. For the Sheriffe and other that led him to death, were wonderfully aſtonied at this: and the Sheriffe ſore rebuked the poore man for ſo crying. The ſtreets of Hadley were beſet on both ſides the way with men and women of the towne and countrey, who waited to ſee him: whom when they beheld ſo led to death, with weeping eyes and lamentable voices they cried: ſaying one to another; Ah good Lord, there goeth our good ſhepheard from us, that ſo faithfully hath taught us, ſo fatherly hath cared for us, and ſo godly hath governed us. O mercifull God: what ſhall we poore ſcattered lambs do? What ſhall come of this moſt wicked world? Good Lord ſtrengthen him, and comfort him: with ſuch other moſt lamentable and piteous voices. Wherefore the people were ſore rebuked by the Sheriffe and Catchpoles his men, that led him. And D. Taylor evermore ſaid to the people; I have preached to you Gods word and truth, and am come this day to ſeale it with my blood.

A poore man with five children comforted D. Taylor.

The people lament Doctor Taylor.

D. Taylor confeſſeth the truth, and confirmeth the ſame with his blood.

Coming againſt the Almeſhouſes, which he well knew, he caſt to the poore people mony, which remained of that good people had given him in time of his impriſonment. As for his living, they took it from him at his firſt going to priſon, ſo that he was ſuſtained all the time of his impriſonment by the charitable almes of good people that viſited him.

Therfore the money that now remained he put in a glove ready for the ſame purpoſe, and (as is ſaid) gave it to the poore almeſmen ſtanding at their doores to ſee him. And coming to the laſt of the Almeſhouſes, and not ſeeing the poore that there dwelt, ready at their doores, as the other were, he aſked: Is the blinde man and blinde woman, that dwelt here, alive? It was anſwered, Yes, they are there within. Then threw he glove and all in at the window, and ſo rode forth.

D. Taylor lived of almes, and gave almes.

Thus this good father and provider for the poore now took his leave of thoſe, for whom all his life he had a ſingular care and ſtudie. For this was his cuſtome, once in a fortnight at the leaſt, to call upon Sir Anthony Doyll, and others the rich Cloth-makers, to go with him to the Almeſhouſes, and there to ſee how the poore lived; what they lacked in meat, drink, clothing, bedding, or any other neceſſaries. The like did he alſo to other poore men that had many children, or were ſicke. Then would he exhort and comfort them, and where he found cauſe, rebuke the unruly, and what they lacked, that gave he after his power: and what he was not able, he cauſed the rich and wealthy men to miniſter unto them. Thus ſhewed he himſelfe in all things an example to his flock, worthy to be followed, and taught by his deed, what a great treaſure almes is to all ſuch as cheerfully for Chriſts ſake do it.

Aldham Common.

At the laſt, comming to Aldham Common, the place aſſigned where he ſhould ſuffer, and ſeeing a great multitude of people gathered thither, he aſked, What place is this, and what meaneth it that ſo much people are gathered hither? It was anſwered: It is Aldham Common, the place where you muſt ſuffer: and the people are come to look upon you. Then ſaid he, Thanked be God, I am even at home, and ſo light from his horſe, and with both his hands rent the hood from his head.

D. Taylor is come home.

B. Boners coſt and liberality upon D. Taylor.

Now was his head notted evill favouredly, and clipped much like as a man would clip a fooles head; which coſt the good B. Boner had beſtowed upon him, when he degraded him. But when the people ſaw his reverend and ancient face, with a long white beard, they burſt out with weeping teares, and cried, ſaying; God ſave thee good D. Taylor, Jeſus Chriſt ſtrengthen thee, and help thee, The holy Ghoſt comfort thee; with ſuch other like godly wiſhes. Then would he have ſpoken to the people; but the Yeomen of the Guard were ſo buſie about him, that as ſoone as he opened his mouth, one or other thruſt a tipſtaffe into his mouth, and would in no wiſe permit him to ſpeak.

The people with God to help him.

D. Taylor could not be ſuffered to ſpeak to the people.

Then deſired he licence of the Sheriffe to ſpeak; but the Sheriffe denied it to him, and bad him remember his promiſe to the Counſell.

Well, quoth Doctor Taylor, promiſe muſt be kept. What this promiſe was, it is unknowne: but the common fame was, that after he and others were condemned, the Counſell ſent for them, and threatned them they would cut their tongues out of their heads, except they would promiſe, that at their deaths they would keep ſilence, and not ſpeak to the people. Wherefore they deſtrons to have the uſe of their tongues, to call upon God as long as they might live, promiſed ſilence. For the Papiſts feared much, leſt this mutation of Religion, from truth to lies, from Chriſts ordinances to the Popiſh traditions, ſhould not ſo quietly have been received as it was, eſpecially this burning of the Preachers: but they, meaſuring others mindes by their owne, feared leſt any tumult or uproare might have beene ſtirred, the people having ſo iuſt a cauſe not to be contented with their doings, or elſe (that they moſt feared) the people ſhould more have beene confirmed by their godly exhortations to ſtand ſtedfaſt againſt their vaine Popiſh doctrine and idolatry. But thanks be to God, which gave to his witneſſes faith and patience, with ſtout and manly hearts to deſpiſe all torments: neither was there ſo much as any one man that once ſhewed any ſigne of diſobedience towards the Magiſtrates. They ſhed their bloods gladly in the defence of the truth, ſo leaving example unto all men of true & perfect obedience: which is to obey God more than men, and if need require it, to ſhed their owne blood rather than to depart from Gods truth.

The Goſpellers are not ſeditious as the Papiſts commonly be.

Anno 1555.

Soyce pulleth off his boots.

Doctor Taylor perceiving that he could not be ſuffered to ſpeake, ſate downe, and ſeeing one named Soyce, he called him, and ſaid; Soyce, I pray thee come and pull off my boots and take them for thy labour. Thou haſt long looked for them, now take them. Then roſe he up, and put off his clothes unto his ſhort, and gave them away. Which done, he ſaid with a loud voice; Good people, I have taught you nothing but Gods holy word, and thoſe leſſons that I have taken out of Gods bleſſed booke, the holy Bible: and I am come hither this day to ſeale it with my blood. With that word, Homes Yeoman of the Guard aforeſaid, who had uſed Doctor Taylor very cruelly all the way, gave him a great ſtroke upon the head with a waſter, and ſaid; Is that the keeping of thy promiſe, thou heretike? Then he, ſeeing they would not permit him to ſpeake, kneeled downe and prayed, and a poore woman that was among the people ſtepped in and prayed with him: but her they thruſt away, and threatned to tread her downe with horſes: notwithſtanding ſhe would not remove, but abode and prayed with him. When he had prayed, he went to the ſtake, and kiſſed it, and ſet himſelfe into a pitch barrell, which they had ſet for him to ſtand in, and ſo ſtood with his back upright againſt the ſtake, with his hands foulded together, and his eyes toward heaven, and ſo he continually prayed.

D. Taylor confeſſeth the truth.

Homes a cruell tyrant.

D. Taylor prayeth.

A good woman comming to pray with him could not be ſuffered.

Richard Donningham.

Then they bound him with chaines, and the Sheriffe called one Richard Donningham a butcher, and commanded him to ſet up Fagots: but he refuſed to do it, and ſaid; I am lame Sir, and not able to lift a Fagot. The Sheriffe threatned to ſend him to priſon, notwithſtanding he would not do it.

The tormentors. Warwick a cruell tormentor. This King was alſo one of them which went with his halberd to bring them to death which were burnt at Bury.

Then appointed he one Mulleine of Carſey, a man for his vertues fit to be a hangman, and Soyce a very drunkard, and Warwick, who, in the commotion time in King Edwards dates loſt one of his eares for his ſeditious talke, amongſt whom alſo was one Robert King a deviſer of Enterludes, who albeit was there preſent, and had doing there with the gun-powder; what he meant and did therein (he himſelf ſaith he did it for the beſt, and for quick diſpatch) the Lord knoweth; which ſhall iudge all, more of this I have not to ſay.

These foure were appointed to ſet up the fagots, and to make the fire, which they moſt diligently did: and this Warwick cruelly caſt a fagot at him, which light upon his head, and brake his face, that the blood ran down his viſage. Then ſaid D. Taylor; O friend, I have harme enough, what needed that?

D. Taylor is patient.

Sir John Shelton.

Furthermore, Sir John Shelton there ſtanding by, as D. Taylor was ſpeaking, and ſaying the Pſalme Miſerere in Engliſh, ſtruck him on the lips: Ye knave, ſaid he, ſpeak Latine, I will make thee. At the laſt they ſet to fire; and D. Taylor, holding up both his hands, called upon God, and ſaid: Mercifull father of heaven, for Jeſus Chriſt my Saviours ſake, receive my ſoul into thy hands. So ſtood he ſtill without either crying or moving, with his hands folded together, till Soyce with a halberd ſtruck him on the head that the braines fell out, and the dead corps fell down into the fire.

D. Taylors laſt words.

Soyce ſtriketh him downe with an halberd.

Thus rendred the man of God his bleſſed ſoul into the hands of his mercifull father, and to his moſt deare and certaine Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, whom he moſt entirely loved, faithfully and earneſtly preached, obediently followed in living, and conſtantly glorified in death.

They that were preſent and familiarly converſant

ſant

Anno 1555.

ſant with this Doctor Taylor, reported of him, that they never did ſee in him any feare of death, but eſpecially and above all the reſt, which beſides him ſuffered at the ſame time, alwayes ſhewed himſelfe merry and cheerfull in time of his impriſonment, as well before his condemnation, as after; he kept one countenance and like behaviour. Whereunto he was the rather confirmed by the company and preſence of M. John Bradford, who then was in priſon and chamber with him.

The ſame morning, when he was called up by the Sheriffe to go to his burning (about three of the clocke in the morning) being ſuddenly awaked out of his ſound ſleepe, he ſate up in his bed, and putting on his ſhirt, had theſe words, ſpeaking ſomwhat thick after his accuſtomed manner: Ah horſon theeves; ah horſon theeves, rob God of his honour, rob God of his honour? Afterward being riſen and tying his poynts, he caſt his armes about a balk which was in the chamber betweene M. Bradfords bed and his: and there hanging by the hands, ſaid to Maſter Bradford: O M. Bradford, quoth he, what a notable ſway ſhould I give if I were hanged? meaning for that he was a corpulent and big man. Theſe things I thought good here to note; to ſet forth and declare to thoſe that ſhall read this hiſtory, what a notable and ſingular gift of ſpirit and courage God had given to this godly and bleſſed Martyr.

D. Taylor careleſſe of his death.

An example of ſingular courage in Doctor Taylor.

At what time D. Taylor was deprived of his benefice of Hadley, there was one called Sir Robert Bracher, a falſe pretenſed Proteſtant in K. Edwards dayes, and afterward a deadly enemy to the ſame Religion: who was alſo one of them that ſo unmercifully thruſt D. Taylors wife and children out of the doores, as ſhe her ſelfe yet can teſtifie: and notwithſtanding the ſame now ſince became a Proteſtant againe.

This Sir Robert Bracher aforeſaid, coming to Hadley to the buriall of a certaine friend of his and Gods great enemy, one Walter Clark, albeit he came ſomewhat too late to the market (as he ſaid) yet deſirous to utter ſuch Popiſh pelſe and packware as he brought with him, he opened there his baggage of peſtilent doctrine, preaching in the ſame town of Hadley againſt Juſtification by faith, of the corporall preſence, of praying for the dead, and auricular confeſſion. Whereof D. Taylor having underſtanding by letters, writeth againe to them of Hadley, directing his letter to his wife in confutation of the ſaid Popiſh poyſoned Sermon; the copie of which letter we thought not unworthy here in the end of this ſtory to be annexed, as under followeth.

Sir Robert Brachers coming to Hadley. A Popiſh Sermon of Sir Robert Bracher.

A Letter of Doctor Taylor of Hadley, written to his wife.

Deare wife, I pray God be ever with us through Chriſt our only Mediator, Amen.

This cap was a round cap ſent by Miles Coverdale to D. Taylor by his wife. This packer was Sir Rob. Bracher preaching Popiſh doctrine at Hadley.

I thank you for my cap: I am ſomwhat proud of it: for it is one ſtep from the Clergy in theſe dayes. I thank God, my heart is cleane divided from their proceedings: for I know that no man can ſerve two Maſters, ſpecially if they agree no better than Chriſt and Antichriſt doe. I am glad that Hadley can ſkill of ſuch packing ware as was brought thither the firſt day of May laſt paſt. Chriſts ſheepe can diſcerne Chriſts voice from the voice of ſtrangers, theeves, or hirelings. The pack-bringer was ſory that he came too late to the funerall market of his faithfull friend. But here I will leave them both to Gods judgment, and ſomthing touch the matter whereof the packer made mention on his opening day. At the firſt he called the Scripture (as I heare) full of dark ſentences, but indeed it is called of David, A candle to our feet, and a light to our paths. Our Saviour Chriſt calleth his word, the light which evill doers do flee from and hate, leſt their deeds ſhould be reproved thereby. S. Paul would have us to walk as children of light, and in any wiſe not to continue in ignorance or darkneſſe. But all we in the world pertaine to two Princes, either to the father of light and truth, or elſe to the Prince of darkneſſe and lies.

The Scriptures falſly accuſed of the Catholikes to be obſcure and dark.

In theſe dayes Preachers declare evidently of whom they are ſent, and with what ſpirit they ſpeak, and to what Prince they belong. For they cry out againſt Gods lights, ſun, moone, ſtars, torches, lamps, lanternes, creſſets, and candles in Gods book the Bible, provided of Gods great goodneſſe and mercy to avoid all foule darkneſſe, clouds and myſts, or dangerous doubtfull wayes in this our journey to our heavenly father, long home, manſion houſes, and dearely purchaſed heritage. Eſay, Gods faithfull meſſenger, ſaith, Wo be unto them that call ſweet ſowre, good evil, and light darkneſſe. Therefore cometh my people into captivity, becauſe they have no underſtanding. Our Saviour Chriſt pronounceth error and hereſies to remain among the people, ſo long as ignorance of the Scriptures remaineth. And hereby it appeareth to all good conſciences, what they meane, which defame or accuſe Gods bleſſed word being full of light, as though it were full of darkneſſe. Theſe Owles would have all day lights ſcraped out of bookes, hearts, and Churches. O Lord turne their hearts and tongues; bow them from the way of darkneſſe, leſt they go to the Prince of darkneſſe, and be caſt into the pit of utter darkneſſe, where is weeping and gnaſhing of teeth.

Now touching the packes of wooll, and the packes of cloth, I feare they were as all other wares be, tranſubſtantiate into ſtocks, even his very fineſt packing ſtuffe againſt onely faith juſtifying, and for the corporall preſence of Chriſts body in the Sacrament, for praying for ſouls departed, and for auricular confeſſion. Abrahams juſtification by faith, by grace, by promiſe, and not by works, is plainly ſet forth both in the Epiſtle to the Romans cap. 4. and to the Galath. cap 3. and Abrahams works of obedience, in offering up his ſonne ſo long after his juſtification, muſt needs be taken as a fruit of a good tree juſtifying before men, and not of juſtification before God; for then had man to glory in, then did Chriſt die in vaine.

The Popes pack ware, juſtification by works, corporall preſence, praying for ſoules, auricular confeſſion.

And wheras the 6. chap. of John was alledged, to prove that Chriſt did give his body corporally in his ſupper, even as he had promiſed in the ſaid chap. it is moſt untrue. For only he gave his body ſacramentally, ſpiritually, and effectually in his ſupper to the faithfull Apoſtles, and corporally he gave it in a bloody ſacrifice for the life of the world upon the croſſe once for all. There in his own perſon, in his own naturall body he bare all our ſinnes. By whoſe ſtripes we are healed, as S. Peter proceedeth, 1 Pet. 2. & Eſay 53. Indeed receiving Chriſts ſacrament accordingly as it was inſtituted, we receive Chriſts body & Chriſts blood, even as I ſaid before the Apoſtles did.

Againſt the corporall preſence. Chriſts body given in the ſupper ſpiritually, upon the croſſe corporally.

But the Popiſh Maſſe is another matter. The Maſſe as it is now, is but one of Antichriſts youngeſt daughters, in the which the Divell is rather preſent and received, than our Saviour ye ſecond perſon in Trinity, God and man. O Lord God heavenly father, for Chriſts ſake, we beſeech thee to turn again England to ye right way it was in in K. Edwards time, from this Babylonicall, ſtewiſh, ſpiritual whoredome, conſpiracy, tyranny, deteſtable enormities, falſe doctrine, hereſie, hard-neſſe of heart, and contempt of thy word and commandements, from this evident and open idolatry, ſacriledge, ſymonie, blaſphemy, ſuperſtition, hypocriſie, tranſubſtantiate Angel of light, and day divell, kingdome of lies, foule vaine ſchiſmes, ſects, ſedition, apoſtaſie, gay ſweet poyſon, honied and ſugered viperous venome, wily wolviſhneſſe, ſatanicall ſubtilty, and abomination in the ſight of God and of all ſuch as put on the true ſpectacles of holy Scripture. I am the more plaine now in this matter, becauſe I feare greatly, that many will be too much ready to goe from Chriſt to Antichriſt, from the Bible, Gods true ſervice and Religion, to Latine lying Legends, portuiſes, maſſe bookes, and ſuperſtition. They ſay their Church cannot erre in any point, when indeed they be not of Gods Church, and therefore they can do nothing but erre, even as they do almoſt in all caſes of true faith.

Chryſoſt. Popiſhly applied.

But to come againe to the packer rather than preacher, he bringeth S. Chryſoſtome, writing Ad populum Antiochenum, where he maketh a compariſon betweene Chriſts fleſh and Elias cloke caſt downe to Elizeus, when Elias was taken up in the fiery chariot; at length he ſaith, that Chriſt, aſcending up to heaven, tooke his fleſh with him, and alſo left his fleſh behind him in earth.

The meaning of Chryſoſtome rightly expounded concerning Elias cloake.

Of this memoriall cloake read before in D. Ridleyes diſputations.

The meaning of it is, he did aſcend with his fleſh, and left a memoriall cloke of the ſame body and fleſh, which he calleth his fleſh, as he in the Sacramentall phraſe calleth Bread his body, becauſe it repreſenteth his body: and as in like manner of Sacramentall ſpeech, a Lambe was called the Paſſeover, the Circumciſion, Gods Covenant. He tooke up his fleſh corporally, and left his fleſh in myſtery and Sacrament ſpiritually. Or it may be ſaid, that he left his fleſh upon earth, that is, his myſticall body, his faithfull people, whom S. Paul calleth the members of his body, of his fleſh, of his bones, Epheſ. 5. In the 49. chapter of Geneſis, there is no word of Chriſts Sacrament, but there is a prophecy of Chriſts paſſion, wherein his fole was bound, that is, his body. And where he ſpeaketh there of grapes and wine, it is as that is ſpoken of Chriſt in another place, where he ſaith, Ego ſolus torcular calcavi, I alone did tread the wine preſſe, meaning thereby, that Chriſt alone ſuffered painfull paſſion for the remiſſion of ſins, and for the conſolation of his faithfull ſouldiers.

The place of Geneſis 49.

Chriſts naturall body cannot be divided.

It is not true that the packer ſaid, that Chriſts infinite power may make his body to be in a thouſand places at once, as a loafe to be in a thouſand bellies: for then might Chriſt divide the parts of his body, as a loafe is divided and ſo conſumed, and then might Scripture be falſe, appointing Chriſts body to be but in one place. Acts 3. Phil. 3. Heb. 3. The articles of our faith tell us ſufficiently where Chriſts body is. It was never in two places at once, neither ever ſhall be, neither ever can be corporally and naturally, neither ever was, is, can, or ſhall be eaten ſo with any corporall mouthes, as the Capernaites and the Papiſts moſt erroneouſly and heretically do iudge. If our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt hath no other body naturall than is made of the ſubſtance of bread, and is in a thouſand places at once, as I have often ſaid in Hadley: we are not yet redeemed, neither ſhall our bodies riſe againe, and be made like unto his glorious body. We are ſure that our Saviour Chriſts body is made of none other ſubſtance than of his mother the bleſſed Virgin Maries ſubſtance. We are ſure that he taketh not the nature of Angels, much leſſe of bread. Only he taketh on him yͤ ſeed of Abraham, Heb. 2. In all things like unto us, ſin only except. And this is a comfortable doctrine to us Chriſtians, beleeving ſtedfaſtly, as the true catholike faith is, that Chriſt hath but two natures, perfect God, and perfect man. Upon this rocke Chriſts Church is builded, and the gates of hell ſhall never prevaile againſt it, Matth. 16.

Chriſts body was never in two places at once.

Heb. 2.

Anno 1555.

Auricular confeſſion. Praying for the dead.

I ſpeak nothing now of auricular confeſſion, and praying for ſoules departed, becauſe I doe not heare what authors the packer brought in for this purpoſe. Sure I am that he can bring no authenticall and canonicall warrant for ſuch his packware. He may ſay what he will of Hebricians and Grecians, and fleſh under formes, and not above formes, or above the board. He may coniure and conveigh, paſſe and repaſſe, even what he will in ſuch clouds and myſts. He reproved the Scriptures as full of darkneſſe, and yet is full of darkneſſe himſelf. He did wittily, to bring proofs out of Iewry, Turkie, and other ſtrange places, for his round white cake, for that ſuch his pedlary pelſe packe is contrary to the plaine ſimplicity of Chriſts ſupper. He glanced at Prieſts marriage. He might againſt that have brought as ancient a Doctor as any be alledged out of Hebrew, for his maſſe and wafer cake, that is D. Divell, 1 Tim. 4.

He meaneth by the place 1 Tim. 4. where S. Paul ſpeaketh of the doctrine of divels, &c.

I marvell that he did not confute and confound S. Paul for the ſentences written above the Altar, of the which he made mention in the pulpit. For he and his fellowes of Oxford be ſo profound, ſo excellent, ſo glorious, and triumphant Clerks, that they can eaſily prove a man an aſſe, and writers in the Bible ignorant, ſimple, full of errors, full of hereſies, and beggarly fooles. Yet they will be called catholikes, faithfull and true Chriſtian people, defenders of the holy mother the Church: but truly they take part with the Prince of darkneſſe, with Antichriſt, with Ieſabel, Apoc. 2. They will not be called Papiſts, Phariſees, Iewes, Turkes, Heretikes, and ſo forth: but whatſoever they will be called, Gods Religion had never more evident adverſaries, and that in all the chief points of it; no not then, when our Saviour Chriſt whipt ſuch Merchants out of the Temple, calling them a company of theeves, Mat. 21. God give them grace to repent. God be thanked that the nobility ſomthing of late hath ſpied and ſtopped their tyranny. O unhappy England: O more ungratefull people, ſooner bewitched than the fooliſh Galathians. We have now no excuſe.

Engliſh people likened to the Galathians.

We have undoubtedly ſeene the true trace of the Propheticall, Apoſtolicall, primitive catholike Church. We are warned to beware, leſt we be led out of at way, ſociety, and Rule of Religion. Now we ſhall ſhew what countrey men we be, whether ſpirituall and heavenly, or carnall and worldly. We had as true knowledge as ever was in any Countrey, or at any time, ſince the beginning of the world, God be praiſed therfore. If Hadley, being ſo many yeeres perſwaded in ſuch truth, will now willingly and wittingly forſake the ſame, and defile it ſelfe with the cake God, idolatry, and other Antichriſtianity thereunto belonging, let it ſurely looke for many and wonderfull plagues of God ſhortly. Though another have the benefice, yet as God knoweth, I cannot but be carefull for my deare Hadley. And therefore as I could not but ſpeak, after the firſt abominable maſſe begun there, I being preſent, no more, I cannot but write now being abſent, hearing of the wicked prophanation of my late pulpit by ſuch a wily wolfe. Gods love, mercy, goodneſſe and favor hath been unſpeakable, in teaching us the right way of ſalvation and iuſtification: let us all have ſome zeale, ſome care how to ſerve him according to his good will written. The God of love and peace be

The proceedings of the Pope-catholikes in maintaining their Religion.

After that Steven Gardiner, Biſhop of Wincheſter, had got the lawes, and the ſecular arme on his ſide, as ye have heard, with full power and authority to reigne and rule as he liſted, and had brought theſe godly Biſhops and reverend Preachers aforeſaid under foot, namely, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, Doctor Ridley Biſhop of London, Maſter Latimer, M. Hooper Biſhop of Worceſter and Gloceſter, Maſter Rogers, Maſter Saunders, Doctor Taylor, and Maſter Bradford, all which he had now preſently condemned, and ſome alſo burned; he ſuppoſed now all had beene cocke ſure, and that Chriſt had beene conquered for ever, ſo that the people, being terrified with example of theſe great learned men condemned, never would, ne durſt once rout againſt their violent religion: not much unlike in this behalf, to the maner of the Turks, who when they cannot maintaine their ſect by good learning and truth of Gods word, think by violence of ſword to force whom they can to their beliefe; and that done, afterward make lawes, no man under paine of hereſie to diſpute, or once to call in queſtion any of their proceedings. Even ſo, Steven Gardiner and his fellowes, when they ſee they cannot prevaile by triall of Gods word, & diſcourſe of learning, neither are diſpoſed ſimply to ſeeke for truth where it is to be found, they take exceptions againſt Gods word, affirming it to be intricate, obſcure, and inſufficient to be his owne iudge, and therefore that of neceſſity it muſt be iudged by the Popes Church; and ſo having Kings and Queenes on their ſide, they ſeeke not to perſwade by the word of God, nor to win by charity, but in ſtead of the law of God, they uſe (as the Proverbe ſaith) τῶ νόμω χείρων, compelling men by death, fire, and ſword (as the Turkes doe) to beleeve that in very deed they thinke not. And indeed after fleſh and blood this ſeemeth to be a ſure way. Neither peradventure are they ignorant how gaily this way thriveth with the Turkes: and therefore thinke they to practiſe the ſame, at leaſt wiſe ſo they doe, upon what example ſoever they do it. And thus condemned they theſe godly learned Preachers and Biſhops aforeſaid, ſuppoſing, as I ſaid, that all the reſt would ſoone be quailed by their example. But they were deceived: for within eight or nine dayes after that Stephen Gardiner had given ſentence againſt Maſter Hooper, M. Rogers, M. Saunders, D. Taylor, and M. Bradford, being the eighth of February, ſix other good men were brought likewiſe before the Biſhops for the ſame cauſe of Religion, to be examined, whoſe names were William Pigot Butcher, Stephen Knight barber, Thomas Tomkins Weaver, Thomas Haukes Gentleman, John Laurence Prieſt, Will. Hunter prentice.

Six men condemned before Biſhop Boner for hereſie.

Ste. Gardiner giveth over his murdering office to Biſhop Boner.

Stephen Gardiner ſeeing thus his device diſappointed, and that cruelty in this caſe would not ſerve to his expectation, gave over the matter as utterly diſcouraged, and from that day medled no more in ſuch kinde of condemnations, but referred the whole doing thereof to Boner Biſhop of London: who ſupplied that part right doubtily, as in the farther proceſſe of this hiſtory hereafter evidently and too much may appeare. Thus Biſhop Boner, taking the matter in hand, called before him in his Conſiſtory at Pauls, the Lord Maior, and certaine Aldermen ſitting with him, the ſixe perſons afore named, upon the eighth day of February in the yeere aforeſaid, and on the next day being the ninth of February, read the ſentence of condemnation upon them, as appeareth in Boners owne Regiſters: ſuch quicke ſpeed theſe men could make in diſpatching their buſineſſe at once. Notwithſtanding, becauſe the death of theſe condemned martyrs did not follow incontinently before the next moneth of March, I will deferre the proſecuting of their matter, till I come by the grace of the Lord, to the time and day of their ſuffering.

Six men condemned by B. Boner.

In the meane time, what was the cauſe that their execution was ſo long deferred after their condemnation, I have not preciſely to ſay, unleſſe peradventure the Sermon of Alphonſus the Spaniſh Frier, and the Kings Confeſſor, did ſome good. For ſo I finde, that when thoſe ſix perſons aforeſaid were caſt upon ſaturday the ninth of February, upon Sunday following, which was the tenth of February, the ſaid Alphonſus a gray Frier preached before the King: in which Sermon he did earneſtly inveigh againſt the Biſhops for burning of men, ſaying plainly that they learned it not in Scripture, to burn any for his conſcience: but the contrary, that they ſhould live and be converted, with many other things more to the ſame purport. But touching the lingring of theſe mens death, as I have not certainly to affirme, ſo let it paſſe.

Upon the 14. of February M. Robert Ferrar, Biſhop of Saint Davids, was ſent towards S. Davids, there to be condemned and executed. Touching whoſe martyrdome, forſomuch as it fell not before the moneth of March, we will deferre the hiſtory thereof till we come to the day and time of his ſuffering.

February 14.

Furthermore, this foreſaid 14. day of February, the Lord Chancellor and other his fellow Biſhops cauſed the image of Thomas Becket, that old Romiſh Traytor, to be ſet up over the Mercers Chappell doore in Cheapſide in London, in the forme and ſhape of a Biſhop, with Miter and Croſier. Howbeit within two dayes after his erection, his two bleſſing fingers were firſt broken away, and on the next day (being the ſeventeenth of February) his head alſo was ſtriken off: whereupon aroſe great trouble, and many were ſuſpected: among whom one M. John Barnes Mercer, dwelling over againſt the ſame Chappell, was vehemently by the Lord Chancellor charged withall, as the doer thereof, and the rather, for that he was a Profeſſor of the truth. Wherefore he and three of his ſervants were committed to priſon; and at his delivery (although it could not be proved upon him) he was bound in a great ſumme of money as well to build it up againe as often as it ſhould be broken downe, as alſo to watch and keepe the ſame. And therefore at this his compelled charges the Image was againe ſet up the ſecond day of March then next enſuing: but (for lacke belike of carefull watching) the fourteenth day of the ſame moneth in the night, the head of that dangerous beaſt, over whom there was ſuch a charge given, was again the ſecond time broken off: which thing was ſo hainouſly taken, that the next day, being the 15. day, there was a Proclamation made in London, that whoſoever would tell who did ſtrike off his head (though he were of counſell and not the principall doer) he ſhould have not only his pardon, but alſo one hundred crownes of gold, with hearty thankes. But it was not knowne who did it.

M. Coverdale.

First, this vertuous and godly King Chriſtianus, hearing of the captivity of Miles Coverdale, of whom he had had ſome knowledge before (being there in Danmark in K. Henry the eighth his time) and lamenting his dangerous caſe, and partly through the interceſſion of Maſter Machabeus, Superintendent in Denmark, who was partly of (a) kin to M. Coverdales wife, made interceſſion by letters to Q. Mary, deſiring and requeſting the ſaid Miles Coverdale to be ſent unto him. The date of which his letters was about the Calends of May. Anno Dom. 1554. The copie whereof here followeth.

(a) This M. Machabeus & M. Coverdale, married two ſiſters.

Chriſtianus Dei gratia, Daniæ, NorWegiæ, &c. Rex, &c. eadem gratia ſereniſſimæ ac potentiſſimæ Principi D. Mariæ, Angliæ, Galliæ, & Hiberniæ Reginæ, conſanguineæ noſtræ chariſſ. ſalutem.

The Epiſtle of the K. of Denmarke to Q. Mary, for the deliverance of M. Coverdale

SEreniſſima Princeps, conſanguinea chariſſima, pro neceſſitudine mutua ac conjunctione, non ſolum regii nominis inter nos, ſed etiam ſanguinis, maxime vero utrinque inter hæc regna noſtra à vetuſtiſſimis uſque temporibus propagata ac ſervata, non modo commerciorum, ſed omnium officiorum viciſſitudine & fide, facere non potuimus quin pietatis & doctrinæ excellentis commendatione, verè reverendi viri Iohannis Machabæi, ſacræ Theologiæ Doctoris, & Profeſſoris præſtantiſſimi, ſubditi ac miniſtri noſtri imprimis dilecti, ſupplicibus graviſſimiſque precibus commoti, ad ſerenitatem veſtram has literas daremus. Expoſuit is nobis, in hac recenti perturbatione ac motu regni Angliæ (quem ex animo eveniſſe dolemus, & nunc indies in melius verti ſperamus) quendam nomine Milonem Coverdalum, nuper diœceſis Exonienſis, piæ laudatiſſimæque memoriæ proximi Regis Serenitatis veſtræ fratris, conſanguinei itidem noſtri chariſſ. authoritate conſtitutum Epiſcopum, nunc in triſtiſſimas calamitates, carcerem, ac periculum vitæ, nulla atrocioris delicti culpa, ſed illa fatali temporum ruina incidiſſe. Quæ quidem hic Machabeus noſter quod ei affinitate (& quod gravius eſt) pietatis, eruditionis ac morum ſimilitudine, tanquam frater devinctus ſit, non minus ad ſe pertinere exiſtimat. Itaque noſtram opem implorat, ut quam ipſe gratiam & favorem apud nos meretur, hominis innocentis calamitati ac periculo (quod ipſe non minus ſuum putat) accommodemus. Movemur profecto non temere illius viri (cui ſuo merito imprimis benevolumus) commiſeratione, ejuſque maxime teſtimonio de captivi Antiſtitis innocentia atque integritate: de qua quidem eſt, ut eo melius ſperemus, quod multis jam morte mulctatis ſontibus, de ipſo integrum adhuc Deus eſſe voluit. Proinde non dubitavimus ſerenitatem veſtram quanta poſſimus diligentia atque animi propenſione rogare, ut noſtra cauſa captivi illius D. Milonis rationem clementer habere dignetur, eumque ut à ſceleris, ita à pœnæ etiam atrocitate alienum eſſe voluit, & temporum offenſam, qua ipſum quoque affligi veriſimile eſt, nobis noſtræque amicitiæ regiæ & precibus, præſertim hoc primo auditu, benigne condonare, ſaltem eatenus, ut ſi fortè hoc rerum ſtatu gravis ejus præſentia ſit, incolumis ad nos cum ſuis dimittatur. Id nobis ſummi beneficii loco, & ſerenitati veſtræ in florentiſſ. regni auſpiciis (quæ auguſta, fauſta, ac fortunata ſerenitati veſtræ ex animo optamus) ad clementiæ laudem honorificum erit: & nos dabimus operam, ut cum amicitiæ noſtræ habitam rationem intellexerimus, eo majore ſtudio in mutuam vicem gratitudinis omniumque officiorum erga ſerenitatem veſtram ejuſque univerſum regnum & ſubditos incumbamus. To theſe letters of the King Quéene Mary anſwering againe, declared that the ſaid Miles Coverdale was in no ſuch captivity for any Religion, but for certaine debt: ſo neither plainly granting, nor expreſly denying his requeſt, but uſing a colourable excuſe for ſhifting off the matter, as appeareth by his ſecond letter ſent to the Quéene, dated the foure and twentieth day of September, as followeth.

Q. Maries ſlender anſwer to the Kings firſt letter.

REdditæ ſunt nobis literæ ſerenitatis veſtræ, quibus benigne admodum ad deprecationem noſtram, qua pro D. Milonis Coverdali Eccleſiæ Exonienſis nuper nominati Epiſcopi incolumitate uſi ſumus, reſpondetur: ita ut intelligamus, licet alterius cauſæ quam quæ nobis innotuerat, periculum ſuſtineat, tamen ſerenitatem veſtram noſtræ interceſſionis eam rationem habituram eſſe, ut illam ſibi profuiſſe ipſe Coverdalus ſentiat. Neque vero nobis de clementia ac moderatione Serenitatis veſtræ unquam dubium fuit, quam Deus optimus maximus ad gloriam ſui nominis & fructum publicæ utilitatis ut magis ac magis effloreſcere velit, ex animo optamus. Proinde cum ob rationes ærarias, neque aliud gravius delictum D. Coverdal. teneri Serenitas veſtra ſcribat, eſt ſanè ut ipſius cauſa lætemur, eoque minus ambigamus, liberationem incolumitatemque ejus noſtris precibus liberaliter donari. Nam & accepimus ipſum Epiſcopatu, cujus nomine ærario obſtrictus fuerat, ceſſiſſe, ut inde ſatisfactio peteretur: maximè cum neque diu eo potitus fuiſſe, neque tantum emolumenti inde percepiſſe dicatur. Quinetiam ſiqua rationum perplexitas, aut alia forte cauſa reperiri poſſet: tamen ſollicitudinem ac dubitationem nobis ſerenitatis veſtræ tam amice atque officioſe deferentes literæ omnem exemerunt: ut exiſtimemus ſerenitatem veſtram, quoad ejus fieri poſſet, magis honorem noſtrum, quam quid ab eo exigi poſſit, conſideraturam: Itaque ſere-veſtram repetitis precibus ¶ Chriſtierne by the grace of God King of Denmarke, Norway, Gotland and of the Vandales; Duke of Sleſwicke, Holſton, Stormar, and Detmarſh; Earle of Oldenburgh, and Delmenhorſt, &c. To the moſt noble Princeſſe and Lady Mary, Queen of England, France, and Ireland, defender of the faith, &c. Our moſt dearly beloved ſiſter and couſin, wiſheth proſperity, with good and lucky ſucceſſe of all things.

We have received your Maieſties letter, whereby anſwer is rendered, and that very graciouſly unto our petition, which we made for the ſafeguard of Maſter Coverdale, late called Biſhop of Exon. So that we perceive, though he be in danger for another cauſe than was ſignified unto us afore, yet your Maieſtie will ſo regard our interceſſion; that Coverdale himſelfe ſhall underſtand it to have done him good. To the which regall promiſe, ſeeing we (as reaſon would we ſhould do) attribute ſo much, that truſting unto the ſame, we doubt not, wheras he being in captivity, his friends, whom we ſpecially tender, are therefore in heavineſſe and care, your good promiſe doth call them from ſuch ſorrow, and ſolicitude, to the hope and expectation of his aſſured welfare: we could not do otherwiſe, but render thanks unto your Maieſty for ſuch your ready and gracious good will, not only in reſpect of this benefit, but alſo of the conſervation and keeping of perpetuall amity between us and our realms, and ſo, as much as in us lieth, to omit nothing that to the nouriſhing and continuance of theſe fortunate beginnings might appertaine. Neither had we ever any doubt concerning the clemency and moderation of your goodneſſe, whom we heartily beſeech almighty God ever more and more to proſper, unto the glory of his name, and profit of the Common-weale. Wherfore ſeeing your Maieſtie writeth, that M. Coverdale is in danger for certaine accounts of mony, and not for any other more grievous offence, we have cauſe on his behalfe to reioyce: and therefore we doubt ſo much the leſſe, that at our requeſt hee ſhall graciouſly have his deliverance given him and be out of danger. For as touching the Biſhoprick, by reaſon whereof he came in debt, we underſtand he yeelded it up, that no payment might thereof be required, ſpecially ſeeing he is reputed neither to have inioyed it long, neither to have had at any time ſo great commoditie of it. Moreover, though it be poſſible to find ſome perplexity in the account, or happily ſome other cauſe, yet your Maieſties letters, offering ſuch favor and benignity, have taken from us all carefulneſſe and doubt: Inſomuch, that we thinke your Maieſtie, as much as may be, will have more reſpect unto our honour, than to that which might of him be required. And therefore we purpoſe not to trouble your Maieſty by repeating of our petition, but to declare how greatly wee eſteem it, that your Maieſty would gratifie us herein: whereof we plainly hope for an end, that Coverdale himſelfe ſhall ſhortly in our preſence make declaration concerning the benefit of his welfare obtained of your Maieſty. And of this we deſire your Maieſty to be ſpecially aſſured again, that we will not only omit no occaſion or opportunity to requite this benefit, but alſo to eſtabliſh and amplifie our mutuall love and amity between us and our Realms on either ſide. Almighty God preſerve your Maieſty in proſperous health and felicity. Given at our city of Otton, the 24. of September, An. Dom. 1554.

Cum intellexerimus ex Serenitatis veſtræ literis, quas hic nuncius nobis attulit, deſiderium veſtrum obtinendi à nobis pro M. Coverdalo ſubdito noſtro excundi è regno noſtro, & ad vos proficiſcendi facultatem: facilè quidem, in V. Serenitatis gratiam, hanc illi facultatem conceſſimus. Et quanquam ille natus ſubditus noſter nondum explicatus fuerat à debitione certæ cuiuſdam pecuniæ quam noſtro ærario ſolvere jure tenebatur, tamen majorem veſtri deſiderii quam noſtri debiti rationem habendam eſſe duximus. Quin inſuper animum & voluntatem gratificandi veſtræ Serenitati pro noſtra mutua amicitia, in qua alia etiam re poſſumus, cum opportunitas feret, libenter oſtendemus. Deus veſtram Serenitatem diutiſsimè ſervet incolumem. Ex Regia noſtra Weſtmonaſterii, 11. Febru. Anno 1555.

M. Coverdale deliuered and ſent to the King of Denmarke.

The ſame moneth, the 19. day, was a certaine intimation ſet forth and printed in the name of Boner, wherein was contained a generall monition, and ſtreight charge given to every man and woman within his Dioceſſe, to prepare themſelvs againſt Lent then neer approaching, to receive the glad tidings of peace and reconciliation ſent from pope Julius the third, by Poole his Cardinall & Legate de Latere, and ſo receive alſo the ioyfull benefit of abſolution, being ſent firſt from the Cardinall to Boner, and from him to every of his Archdeacons to be miniſtred to every private perſon within his dioceſſe, that would come the ſaid holy time of Lent to his Paſtor or Curate to bee confeſſed, and to receive of him wholeſome counſell, penance, and abſolution. Signifying moreover, that as he was authoriſed by the foreſaid Cardinall, ſo he for the ſame purpoſe had indued with the like Authority all and ſingular Paſtors and Curates within his Dioceſſe, to reconcile and aſſoile from their former hereſie and ſchiſm, and from the cenſures of the Church, ſuch as would reſort unto them. And leſt any ſcruple or doubt, riſing peradventure in their conſciences, ſhould be any ſtay or let in this behalfe, hee hath aſſigned and deputed therefore through his Dioceſſe certain learned men, to whom they might reſort, or els might open their griefes to any of his Archdeacons, or els come to his owne perſon, and ſo ſhould bee reſolved.

And therfoꝛe all manner of doubts and obſtacles ſet aſide, he ſtreightly willed and commanded every man and woman to come to confeſſion, and to enioy this benefit of reconciliation, and abſolution, againſt the firſt Sunday next after Eaſter inſuing, and not to fail. The declaration of the Biſhop of London to be publiſhed to the lay-people of his Dioceſſe, concerning their reconciliation.

EDmund by the permiſſion of God, Biſhop of London, unto all and ſingular the lay-people of his Dioceſſe, doth ſend greeting in our Saviour Ieſus Chꝛiſt.

Whereas this noble Realme of England, dividing it ſelfe from the unity of the Catholike Church, and from the agreement in religion with all other Chꝛiſtian Realms, hath been, beſides many other miſeries and plagues, which Gods indignation hath powꝛed upon it, grievouſly alſo vexed, and ſoꝛe infected with many and ſundꝛy ſoꝛts of ſects of Heretikes, as Arrians, Anabaptiſts, Libertines, Zuinglians, Lutherans, and many other, all which ſects be moſt repugnant, and contrary one againſt another, and all againſt Gods truth, and Chꝛiſts Catholike faith; whereupon hath growne ſuch ſlander to the Realme, ſuch malice and diſagreement among our ſelves, the inhabitants therof, ſuch treaſons, tumults, and inſurrections againſt our Pꝛince, ſuch blaſphemy and diſhonour unto God, as no mans tongue oꝛ pen is able to expꝛeſſe: It hath pleaſed the goodneſſe of God to caſt his eye of mercy and clemency upon us, and to move the Popes Holineſſe to ſend his moſt godly meſſenger, the moſt reverend father in God, the Loꝛd Cardinall Poole Legate de Latere, to bꝛing us the glad tidings of peace and reconciliation, and to reduce and bꝛing home unto the fold the loſt ſheep that were gone aſtray: whoſe meſſage, as it hath beene honourably received of the King and Queenes Maieſties, even ſo the Loꝛds ſpirituall and tempoꝛall, and Commons at the laſt Parliament have received it, revoking all laws the which in the time of ſchiſm were pꝛomulgate againſt the authoꝛity of the Popes holineſſe, and reſtoꝛing the ſame and the Church of Rome to al that power which they had in this realm befoꝛe the ſaid ſchiſm, the which reconciliation was alſo moſt gladly and ioyfully imbꝛaced, as well of all the Clergie and Convocation of the pꝛovince of Canterbury, as alſo of many other perſons; and being ſo great and neceſſary to be extended to every perſon of the Realme, it hath pleaſed the ſaid Loꝛd Legates grace to give and impart unto me the ſaid biſhop of London, foꝛ my ſaid Dioceſſe, and to all ſuch as I ſhall appoint in that behalfe, power and authoꝛity to abſolve and reconcile all and every perſon therof as well of the Clergie as of the Laity, and as well men as women, the which will renounce their errours, and (being penitent) will humbly require to bee reſtoꝛed to the unity of the Catholike Church, as by the letters of the ſaid Loꝛd Legates grace ſent unto mee, and from mee ſent unto every of the Archdeacons within my Dioceſſe, moꝛe at large may and doth appeare. And foꝛaſmuch as in mine own perſon, as well foꝛ the multitude of people, as diſtance of places, I cannot miniſter this benefit unto every pꝛivate perſon my ſelfe, and foꝛ that alſo the holy time of lent is now at hand, in which every true chꝛiſtian man ought to come unto his own Paſtoꝛ and Curate, to be of him confeſſed, and to receive at his hand wholſome counſell, penance, and abſolution: theſe are therefoꝛe as well to give knowledge unto every one of you, as alſo to ſignifie and declare, that foꝛ that purpoſe, I have by the ſaid authoꝛity choſen, named, and deputed, and ſo by theſe pꝛeſents do chuſe and depute all and ſingular Paſtoꝛs and Curates, having cure of ſouls within my Dioceſſe, and being themſelvs reconciled herein, that they and every of them by authoꝛity hereof, ſhall have full power and authoꝛity to abſolve all ſuch as be lay-perſons of their pariſhes from hereſie and ſchiſm, and from the cenſures of the Church, into which they be faln by occaſion therof alſo, and to reconcile to the Church al ſuch which ſhall declare themſelvs penitent, and deſirous to enioy the benefit of the ſaid reconciliation. And whereas divers Paſtoꝛs and Curates in ſundꝛy Pariſhes peradventure be not able to ſatiſfie the minds, & to appeaſe the conſciences of ſom of their pariſhioners, in caſes that ſhal trouble them, I have therfoꝛe given alſo authoꝛity to every Archdeacon of my Dioceſſe, within his Archdeaconry, to name and appoint certaine of the beſt learned in every Deanery of their Archdeaconry, to ſupply that lack, ſo that every man ſo troubled may repair to any one of them within yͤ ſaid Deanry, whom he ſhal like beſt, to be inſtructed and appeaſed in that behalf. And alſo I have appointed, that if this being done, there ſhall yet remaine any ſcruple in the parties conſcience, and himſelfe not ſatisfied, then the ſaid party ſhall repair unto one of mine Archdeacons oꝛ Chapleines, unto whom his mind ſhall be moſt inclined, oꝛ elſe to repair unto mine own ſelf, to be reſolved in his ſaid ſcruple oꝛ doubt, and to receive and take ſuch oꝛder therin, as to one of the ſaid Archdeacons, oꝛ unto me ſhall therein appear to be moſt expedient.

Further certifying and declaring unto you, that I have given commandement herein to all my Archdeacons, that they moniſh and command every Paſtoꝛ and Curate within their Archdeaconries, that they, having knowledge hereof, do on the firſt Holiday next then following, at the Maſſe time, when the multitude of people is preſent, declare all theſe things unto their Pariſhioners, and exhoꝛt them that they eſteem this grace accoꝛdingly, and reconcile themſelvs to the Church befoꝛe the firſt Sunday after Eaſter next inſuing: which thing I alſo do command by the tenoꝛ hereof, with intimation that the ſaid time being once paſt, and they not ſo reconciled, every one of them ſhall have pꝛoceſſe made againſt him, accoꝛding to the Canons, as the cauſe ſhall require: foꝛ which purpoſe the Paſtoꝛs and Curates of every pariſh ſhall be commanded by their Archdeacon, to certifie me in wꝛiting of every man and womans name that is not ſo reconciled.

Further, herewith I do ſignifie & declare unto you, that our holy father the pope Iulius the third of that name, like a moſt tender & natural father, hearing of the return & recovery of his pꝛodigal child this Realm of England, hath himſelf made much ioy & gladnes hereat, and alſo all other true Chꝛiſtian realms have done the like. Exhoꝛting you therefoꝛe in our Loꝛd not to be unthankfull your ſelvs, oꝛ negligent in this behalfe, but diligently to ſeek foꝛ it, ioyfully to imbꝛace it, & fruitfully to uſe it, remembꝛing withall the monition & charge which came from me yͤ laſt yeer, concerning your coming to confeſſion in Lent, and receiving yͤ ſacrament at Eaſter: which monition to all effects & purpoſes I have now here repeated and renewed, charging you, and alſo all your Curates therewith. And becauſe all our duties is, earneſtly and devoutly to pray for the proſperous eſtate of our Soveraignes, the King and the Queene of this Realme, I do finally require & pray you, as heartily as I can, to pray for their Maieſties accordingly; and ſpecially that it may pleaſe almighty God, to ſend unto her Grace a good time, and to make her a glad mother, which cannot be but unto us all great ioy, much comfort and ineſtimable profit. Given at London the 19. day of the moneth of February, in the yeer of our Lord God, after the computation of the Church of England, 1554. and of my tranſlation, the 16.

The form of Abſolution to bee kept by the Paſtors and Curates in private confeſſions, concerning this reconciliation.

The Abſolution of biſhop Boner to be uſed in his Dioceſſe.

OVr Lord Ieſus Chriſt abſolve you, and by the Apoſtolike authority to me granted and committed, I abſolve you from the ſentences of excommunication, and from all other cenſures and pains, into the which you be fallen by reaſon of hereſie, or ſchiſm, or any other ways: and I reſtore you unto the unity of our holy mother the Church, and the communion of all ſacraments, diſpenſing with you for al maner of irregularity; and by the ſame authority I abſolve you from all your ſins; In the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the holy Ghoſt, Amen

The lamentable hiſtory of M. Iames Hales Iudge.

The hiſtory of Iudge Hales.

IN the hiſtory of M. Hooper mention was touched a little before of Iudge Hales; wherefore ſomething would be ſaid more in this place touching that matter. But becauſe the ſtory of that man and of his end is ſufficiently comprehended in our firſt book of Acts and Monuments, we ſhal not greatly need to ſtand upon rehearſall of every particular matter touching the whole, but only taking the chiefeſt, and leaving the reſt, wee will report ſomewhat of the communication between the Biſhop of Wincheſter and him: declaring withall how falſe and untrue the excuſe is of our adverſaries, which ſo preciſely by the law defend themſelvs, and ſay, that in al their doings they did nothing but by the Law, to beare them out. Which if it be ſo, how did they then to Anne Askew? What law had they, when they had condemned her firſt for a dead woman, then afterward to racke her? By what law did they call up Maſter Hooper, and priſon him for the Queenes debt, when the Queene in very deed did owe him fourescore pounds, and kept him a yeere and a half in priſon and gave him never a penny? By what law did B. Boner condemn and burn Richard Mekins, a Lad of 15. yeers, when the firſt Iury had quit him, and he at the ſtake revoked all hereſies, and praiſed the ſaid Boner to bee a good man; and alſo having him in priſon, would not ſuffer his father and mother to come to him, to comfort their own child? What law had they to put M. Rogers in priſon, when he did neither preach nor reade Lecture after the time of the Queens inhibition, and when they had kept him in his own houſe half a yeer, being not deprived of any living, yet would not let him have a halfpenny of his owne livings to relieve him, his wife, and eleven children? By what Law was Thomas Tomkins hand burnt, and afterward his body conſumed to aſhes? What good law or honeſty was there to burn the three poor women at Garnſey, with the infant childe falling out of the mothers womb, when as they all before their death recanted their words and opinions, and were never abiured before? So here likewiſe in this caſe, what order or right of law did Steven Gardiner follow in troubling and impriſoning Iudge Hales, when he had done nothing neither againſt Gods law, nor mans law, in proceeding by order of law againſt certaine preſumptuous perſons, which both before the law, and againſt the law then in force, took upon them to ſay their Maſſe? as ye ſhall heare in theſe his anſwers and communication had with Steven Gardiner here under inſuing.

The Catholikes proved to doe againſt the law in Queene Maries time.

The communication betweene the Lord Chancellor and Iudge Hales, being there among other Iudges, to take his oath in Weſtminſter hall. Anno 1553. Octob. 6.

Communication between Iudge Hales & the biſhop of Wincheſter.

MAſter Hales, ye ſhall underſtand, that like as the Queens Highneſſe hath heretofore conceived good opinion of you, eſpecially for that ye ſtood both faithfully and lawfully in her cauſe of iuſt ſucceſſion, refuſing to ſet your hand to the book among others that were againſt her Grace in that behalf: ſo now, through your own late deſerts againſt certain her Highneſſe doings, yee ſtand not well in her Graces favor: and therfore before ye take any oath, it ſhall be neceſſary for you to make your purgation.

Hales. I pray you my Lord what is the cauſe?

Chan. Information is given, that ye have indited certain Prieſts in Kent for ſaying Maſſe.

Hales. My Lord, it is not ſo. I indited none; but indeed certaine inditements of like matter were brought before me at the laſt Aſſiſes there holden, and I gave order therein as the law required. For I have profeſſed the law, againſt which in caſes of Iuſtice I will never, God willing proceed, nor in any wiſe diſſemble, but with the ſame ſhew forth my conſcience, and if it were to do again, I would do no leſſe than I did.

Cha. Yea, Maſter Hales, your conſcience is knowne well enough, I know you lacke no conſcience.

Hales. My Lord, you may doe well to ſearch your own conſcience; for mine is better known to my ſelfe than to you: and to be plain, I did as well uſe Iuſtice in your ſaid Maſſe-caſe by my conſcience, as by law, wherein I am fully bent to ſtand in tryall to the uttermoſt that can be obiected. And if I have therein done any iniury or wrong, let me be iudged by the law; for I will ſeek no better defence, conſidering chiefly that it is my profeſſion.

Iuſtice Hales for Iuſtice ſake troubled.

Cha. Why M. Hales, although you had the rigour of the law on your ſide, yet ye might have had regard to the Queens Highneſſe preſent doings in that caſe. And further, although ye ſeem to bee more than preciſe in the law, yet I think ye would be very loth to yeeld to the extremitie of ſuch advantage as might be gathered againſt your proceedings in the law, as yee have ſometime taken upon you in place of Iuſtice, and if it were well tried, I believe ye ſhould not be well able to ſtand honeſtly thereto.

Hales. My Lord, I am not ſo perfect, but I may erre for lacke of knowledge. But both in conſcience, and ſuch knowledge of the law as God hath given mee, I will do nothing but I will maintain it, and abide in it: and if my goods and all that I have bee not able to counterpoiſe the caſe, my body ſhall be ready to ſerve the turne; for they bee all at the Queenes Highneſſe pleaſure.

Wincheſter quarrelleth with M. Hales religion.

Cha. Ah ſir, yee bee very quicke and ſtout in your anſwers. But as it ſhould ſeem, that which you did was more of a will favouring the opinion of your religion againſt the ſervice now uſed, than for any occaſion or zeale of Iuſtice, ſeeing the Queenes Highneſſe doth ſet it forth as yet, wiſhing all her faithfull ſubiects to imbrace it accordingly; and where you offer both body and goods in your tryall, there is no ſuch matter required at your hands, and yet ye ſhall not have your owne will neither.

Hales. My Lord, I ſeek not wilfull will, but to ſhew my ſelfe as I am bound in love to God, and obedience to the Queens Majeſtie, in whoſe cauſe willingly for Iuſtice ſake, all other reſpects ſet apart, I did of late, as your Lordſhip knoweth, adventure as much as I had. And as for my Religion, I truſt it bee ſuch as pleaſeth God, wherein I am ready to adventure as well my life as my ſubſtance, if I bee called thereunto. And ſo in lack of mine own power and will, the Lords will be fulfilled.

Chan. Seeing you be at this point M. Hales, I will preſently make an end with you. The Queens Highneſſe ſhall be informed of your opinion and declaration. And as her Grace ſhall thereupon determine, yee ſhall have knowledge. Untill ſuch time as ye may depart as ye came, without your oath: for as it appeareth, yee are ſcarce worthy the place appointed.

Hales. I thank your Lordſhip: and as for my vocation, being both a burden and a charge more than ever I deſired to take upon me; whenſoever it ſhall pleaſe the Queens Highneſſe to eaſe me thereof, I ſhall moſt humbly with due contentation obey the ſame; and ſo he departed from the Barre.

M. Hales committed to the Kings Bench.

Not many daies after this communication or colloquy in Weſtminſter Hall, which was October 6. Anno 1553. M. Hales at the commandement of the biſhop was committed to the Kings Bench, where he remained conſtant untill Lent: then was he removed to the Counter in Bread ſtreet, and afterward from thence was carried to the Fleet.

Being in the Fleet, what it was that hee had granted unto the biſhops, by their fraudulent aſſaults and perſwaſions; namely, of D. Day biſhop of Chicheſter, and of Iudge Portman (as it is thought) overcome at laſt, I have not to ſay.

This is certain, that ſhortly after, calling himſelfe better to remembrance, he was brought to great repentance and terrour of conſcience. Inſomuch, that for very anguiſh of heart he was ready with his penknife to kill himſelfe there in the priſon, and had (no doubt) ſo done, had not the mercifull providence of the Lord reſcued him miraculouſly as ye ſhall heare.

M. Hales about to kill himſelfe in priſon.

It hapned when ſupper time came that hee ſhould be called down, M. Hales having little mind either to eat or to drink, gate him ſtraightway to bed, where he lay all the night ſobbing and groaning, and took (God knoweth) little reſt or ſleep. At length when morning came, about 6. of the clock he ſent his ſervant for a cup of beer, under pretence as though he were thirſty and deſirous to drinke, whether the cauſe were true or feigned it is unknown: but this followed, that his man was ſcarce out of the chamber, when he with his Penknife had wounded himſelfe in divers places of his body, and was purpoſed (no doubt) to have deſtroyed himſelfe, had not the goodneſſe of the Lord given preſent help in time of opportunity. Wherby it is evident for all men to underſtand, how Gods favour was not abſent from the man, although he thought himſelfe utterly forſaken for his deniall, as by the ſequele may well appeare.

Gods merciful providence in reſcuing M. Hales.

For as ſoon as he had ſent his man out of his chamber (ſee what God would have done) even afore the chamber door eftſoones the Butler met him: who being deſired to fill the drink, and taking the cup, the other returned again unto his Maſter, at the ſame very time when he was working his own deſtruction: wherby M. Hales at that time was ſtopt of his purpoſe, and preſerved, not without Gods manifeſt good will and providence. When Wincheſter had knowledge of it, ſtraightway he taketh occaſion thereby to blaſpheme the doctrine of the Goſpel, which he openly in the Starchamber called the doctrine of deſperation. Maſter Hales being within a while after recovered of thoſe wounds, and delivered out of priſon, getteth himſelfe home unto his houſe: where he, either for the greatneſſe of his ſorrow, or for lack of good counſell, or for that hee would avoid the neceſſity of hearing Maſſe, having all things ſet in an order a good while before that pertaining to his teſtament, caſting himſelf into a ſhallow river, was drowned therein; which was about the beginning of the moneth of February, or in the moneth of January before, Anno 1555.

Anno 1555.

Wincheſter might rather have ſaid how their cruel dealing worketh deſparation.

Iudge Hales drowned himſelfe.

The unhappy chance of this ſo worthy a Iudge was ſurely the cauſe of great ſorrow and griefe unto all good men, and it gave occaſion beſides unto certaine Divines to ſtand ſomething in doubt with themſelves, whether he were reprobate or ſaved, or no; about which matter it is not for me to determine either this way or that: for he that is our Iudge, the ſame ſhall be his Iudge, and he it is that will lay all things open when the time commeth. This in the mean time is certain and ſure, that the deede of the man in my minde ought in no wiſe to be allowed, which if hee did wittingly, then do I diſcommend the mans reaſon. But if he did it in phrenſie, and as being out of his wit, then do I greatly pity his caſe.

The cauſe of Iudge Hales drowning conſidered.

Yet notwithſtanding, ſeeing Gods judgments be ſecret, and we likewiſe in doubt upon what intent he did thus puniſh himſelfe, neither againe is any man certaine, whether he did repent or no before the laſt breath went out of his body; me thinketh, their opinion is more indifferent herein, which do rather diſallow the example of the deed, than deſpaire of his ſalvation.

Otherwiſe, if we will adjudge all thoſe to hell that have departed the world after this ſort, how many examples have we in the firſt perſecutions of the Church, of thoſe men & women, who being regiſtred in the works of worthy Writers, have notwithſtanding their practice & commendation.

Examples in the time of the firſt perſecution.

For what ſhall I thinke of thoſe young men, who being ſought for to doe ſacrifice to heathen Idols, did caſt down themſelves head-long, and brake their owne neckes, to avoide ſuch horrible pollution of themſelves? What ſhall I ſay of thoſe Virgins of Antioch, who to the end they might not defile themſelves with uncleanneſſe, and with idolatry, through the perſwaſion of their mother, caſting themſelves head-long into a river together with their mother, did fordoes themſelves, although not in the ſame water, yet after the ſame manner of drowning as this Maſter Hales did? What ſhall I ſay of the other two ſiſters, which for the ſelf ſame quarter did violently throw themſelves head-long into the ſea, as Euſebius doth record? In whom though perchance there was no leſſe confidence to bear out the the paines which ſhould bee miniſtred of the wicked unto them; yet that their good deſire to keep their faith and religion unſpotted was commended and praiſed.

Euſeb. Hiſt. Eccl. lib. 8.

Another like example of death is mentioned by Nicephorus, and that in another virgin likewiſe, whoſe name is expreſſed in Hierome to be Braſſilia Dyrrachina, who to keepe her Virginitie, feigned her ſelf to be a Witch, and ſo conventing with the yong man which went about to deflowr her, pretended that ſhe would give him an herbe which ſhould preſerve him from all kind of weapons; and ſo to prove it in her ſelfe, laid the herb upon her owne throat, bidding him ſmite, wherby ſhe was ſlaine, and ſo with the loſſe of her life her virginity was ſaved.

Niceph. lib. 4 c. 13. Braſſilia Dyrrachina.

Hereunto

Anno 1555

Hereunto may be ioyned the like death of Sophronia, a matron of Rome, who when ſhe was required of Maxentius the Tyrant to bee defiled, and ſaw her huſband more ſlacke than he ought to have beene in ſaving her honeſty, bidding them that were ſent for her to tarry a while till ſhe made her ready, went into her chamber, and with a weapon thruſt her ſelfe through the breſt, and dyed. Now who is he that would reprehend the worthy act of Achetes, which biting off his owne tongue ſpit it out into the Harlots face?

These examples I do not here infer, as going about either to excuſe, or to maintaine the hainous fact of Maſter Hales, which I would wiſh rather by ſilence might be drowned in oblivion; but yet notwithſtanding as touching the perſon of the man, whatſoever his fact was, becauſe we are not ſure whether he at the laſt breath repented: again, becauſe we do not know, nor are able to comprehend the bottomleſſe depth of the graces and mercies which are in Chriſt Ieſus our Saviour, we will leave therefore the finall iudgment of him, to the determination of him who is only appointed Iudge both of the quicke and the dead.

The hiſtory of Thomas Tomkins, who having firſt his hand burned, after was burned himſelfe by Biſhop Boner, for the conſtant teſtimony of Chriſts true profeſſion.

March 18. The hiſtory of Thomas Tomkins Martyr.

MEntion was made before of ſixe priſoners, brought and examined before Biſhop Boner the 8. of February, whoſe names were Tomkins, Pigot, Knight, Haukes, Laurence, and Hunter. All which though they received their condemnation together the next day after, yet becauſe the time of their execution was then driven off from February till the next moneth of March, I did therefore referre the ſtory of them to this preſent moneth of March aforeſaid, wherein now remaineth ſeverally to intreate of the martyrdome of theſe ſixe perſons, as the order and time of their ſufferings ſeverally do require. Of the which ſix aforenamed Martyrs, the firſt was Thomas Tomkins burned in Smithfield, the 16. day of March, Anno 1555.

The godly life and diſpoſition of Thomas Tomkins.

This Thomas Tomkins, a Weaver by his occupation, dwelling in Shorditch, and of the Dioceſſe of London, was of ſuch converſation and diſpoſition ſo godly, that if any woman had come to him with her webbe, as ſometime they did, three or foure in a day, he would alwaies begin with prayer. Or if any other had come to talke of any matter, hee would likewiſe firſt begin with prayer. And if any had ſought unto him to borrow money, he would ſhew him ſuch money as he had in his purſe, and bid him take it.

And when they came to repay it again, ſo far off was he from ſeeking any uſury at their hand, or from ſtreight exaction of his due, that hee would bid them keep it longer, while they were better able. And theſe were the conditions of Thomas Tomkins, teſtified yet to this preſent day by the moſt part of all his neighbours, and almoſt of all his pariſh which knew him, as maſter Skinner, maſter Leeke, and other moe. Of whom moe than halfe a dozen at once came to me, diſcreete and ſubſtantiall men, reporting the ſame unto me, recording moreover as followeth: That Doctor Boner Biſhop of London kept the ſaid Tomkins with him in priſon halfe a yeere. During which time the ſaid Biſhop was ſo rigorous unto him, that he beat him bitterly about the face, whereby his face was ſwelled. Whereupon the Biſhop cauſed his beard to be ſhaven, and gave the Barber twelve pence.

Tomkins maketh the Biſhops hay.

Touching which ſhaving of Thomas Tomkins beard, this is more to be added; Biſhop Boner having Tomkins with him priſoner at Fulham in the moneth of July, did ſet him with his other worke-folkes to make hay. And ſeeing him to labour ſo well, the Biſhop ſitting him down, ſaid; Well, I like thee well, for thou laboureſt well: I truſt thou wilt be a good Catholike. My Lord, ſaid he, S. Paul ſaith; Hee that doth not labour, is not worthy to eate. Boner ſaid, Ah, S. Paul is a “great man with thee. And ſo after ſuch other talke, the Biſhop inferring moreover, wiſhed his beard off, ſaying, that ſo he would looke like a Catholike. My Lord, ſaid Tomkins, before my beard grew, I was, I truſt, a good Chriſtian, and ſo I truſt to be my beard being on. But Boner in fine ſent for the Barber, and cauſed his beard to be ſhaven off. The very cauſe was for that Boner had pluckt off a peice of his beard before.

“And ſo ſhould he be with you, if you were a right biſhop.

The notable conſtancy in a true Chriſtian ſouldier.

The rage of this Biſhop was not ſo great againſt him, but the conſtancy of the party was much greater with patience to beare it: who although hee had not the learning as other have, yet hee was ſo indued with Gods mighty ſpirit, and ſo conſtantly planted in the perfect knowledge of Gods truth, that by no meanes he could be removed from the confeſſion of truth, to impiety and errour. Whereupon, Boner the Biſhop being greatly vexed againſt the poore man, when hee ſaw that by no perſwaſions hee could prevail with him, deviſed another practice not ſo ſtrange as cruell, further to try his conſtancy, to the intent, that ſeeing he could not otherwiſe convince him by doctrine of Scriptures, yet hee might overthrow him by ſome forefeeling and terrour of death. So having with him maſter Harpsfied, maſter Pendleton, Doctor Chedſey, maſter Willerton, and other ſtanding by, he called for Thomas Tomkins, who comming before the Biſhop, and ſtanding as he was wont in defence of his faith, the Biſhop fell from beating to burning. Who, having there a taper or waxe candle of three or foure weeks ſtanding upon the table, thought there to repreſent unto us, as it were, the old Image of King Porſenna. For as he burned the hand of Scævola, ſo this Catholike Biſhop took Tomkins by the fingers, and held his hand directly over the flame, ſuppoſing that by the ſmart and pain of the fire being terrified, he would leave off the defence of his doctrine, which he had received.

Biſhop Boner playeth King Porſenna in burning the hand of Scævola.

Tomkins thinking no otherwiſe, but there preſently to dye, began to commend himſelfe unto the Lord, ſaying, O Lord, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit, &c. In the time that his hand was in burning, the ſame Tomkins afterward reported to one Iames Hinſe, that his ſpirit was ſo rapt, that he felt no pain. In the which burning he never ſhrunke, till the veines ſhrunk, and the ſinewes braſt, and the water did ſpirt in maſter Harpsfields face: Inſomuch that the ſaid M. Harpsfield, moved with pity, deſired the Biſhop to ſtay, ſaying, that he had tryed him enough. This burning was in the Hall at Fulham.

And where the Biſhop thought by that meanes

Tomkins compared to Scevola.

to drive him from his opinions, it proved much otherwiſe: for this Chriſtian Scævola ſo valiantly did deſpiſe, abide, and indure that burning, that we have leſſe cauſe hereafter to marvaile at the manfulneſſe of that Romane Scævola: I would to God the other had aſwell followed the example of that Hetruſcan Tyrant. For he, after the left hand of Scævola was half burned, either ſatiſfied with his puniſhment, or overcome by his manhood, or driven away by fear, ſent him home ſafe unto his people: whereas Boner, hitherto not contented with the burning of his hand, reſted not untill he had conſumed his whole bodie into aſhes, at London in Smithfield.

Boner more cruell than Porſenna the Hetruſcan.

But before we come to his ſuffering, we will firſt intreat of ſome part of his examination and articles, with his anſwers and confeſſion thereunto annexed, as it is credibly in Regiſter recorded.

The firſt examination of Thomas Tomkins.

The firſt examination of Thomas Tomkins before Boner biſhop of London

THis faithfull and valiant Souldier of God Thomas Tomkins, after he had remained the ſpace (as is ſaid) of halfe a yéere in priſon, about the 8. day of February was brought with certain other before Boner ſitting in his Conſiſtory, to bee examined. To whom firſt was brought forth a certaine bill or ſchedule ſubſcribed (as appeareth) with his own hand, the fifth day of the ſame moneth laſt before, containing theſe words following.

The confeſſion of Tomkins ſubſcribed with his owne hand.

THomas Tomkins of Shorditch, and of the Dioceſſe of London, hath believed and doth believe, that in the ſacrament of the Altar, under the forms of bread and wine, there is not the very body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt in ſubſtance, but only a token and remembrance thereof, the very body and blood of Chriſt being only in heaven, and no where elſe.

Anno 1555.

By me Thomas Tomkins

Tomkins conſtant in his faith.

Whereupon he was aſked, whether he did acknowledge the ſame ſubſcription to bee of his owne hand. To the which he granted, confeſſing it ſo to be. This being done the Biſhop went about to perſwade him (with words, rather than with reaſons) to relinquiſh his opinions, and to returne againe to the unity of the Catholike Church, promiſing if he would ſo doe, to remit all that was paſt: But he conſtantly denied ſo to doe. When the Biſhop ſaw he could not ſo convince him, he brought forth and read to him another writing, containing Articles and interrogatories, whereunto he ſhould come the next day and anſwer: in the mean time he ſhould deliberate with himſelfe what to doe, and ſo the next day, being the 9. day of March, at eight of the clocke in the morning to be preſent in the ſame place againe, to give his determinate anſwer what he would doe in the premiſſes, and then either to revoke and reclaim himſelf, or els in the afternoon the ſame day to come again and have iuſtice (as he called it) miniſtred unto him: the copie of which Articles here followeth.

Articles objected and miniſtred the 8. day of February againſt Thomas Tomkins, with his own hand ſubſcribing to the ſame.

Articles miniſtred againſt T. Tomkins.

THou doeſt believe, that in the ſacrament of the Altar under the formes of bread and wine there is not, by the Omnipotent power of Almighty mighty God, and his holy word, really, truly and in vere deed, the very true and naturall body of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, as touching the ſubſtance thereof, which was conceived in the womb of the Virgin Mary, and hanged upon the Croſſe, ſuffering paſſion and death there for the life of the world.

I do ſo believe.

Subſtance of bread remaineth in the ſacrament.

Thou doeſt believe, that after the conſecration of the bread and wine prepared for the uſe of the ſacrament of the Altar, there doth remaine the ſubſtance of materiall bread and materiall wine, not changed nor altered in ſubſtance by the power of Almighty God, but remaining as it did before.

I do ſo believe.

The naturall preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament denied.

Thou doeſt believe, that it is an untrue doctrine, and a falſe beliefe, to think or ſay, that in the ſacrament of the altar there is, after conſecration of the bread and wine, the ſubſtance of Chriſts naturall body and blood, by the omnipotent power of almighty God, and his holy word.

I do ſo believe.

The errour of the fore-elders touching the ſacrament.

Thou doeſt believe, that thy parents, kinsfolkes, friends, and acquaintance, and alſo thy Godfathers and Godmother, and al people did err, and were deceived, if they did believe, that in the ſacrament of the Altar there was, after the conſecration, the body and blood of Chriſt, and that there did not remain the ſubſtance of materiall bread and wine.

I do ſo believe.

By me Tho. Tomkins.

The ſecond examination of Tho. Tomkins.

The ſecond examination.

The next day, being the 9. of February, at 8. of the clock before noon, the ſaid T. Tomkins (according to the former commandement) was brought again into the place aforenamed, before the Biſhop and other his aſſiſtants, where the foreſaid articles were propounded unto him; whereunto he anſwered as followeth:

Anſwer of Tomkins to the articles.

To the firſt he ſaid, that he did ſo believe, as in the ſame is contained.

To the ſecond he ſaid that it was only bread and a participation of Chriſts death and paſſion, and ſo do the Scriptures teach.

To the third he ſaid and did believe, it was a falſe doctrine, to believe and think as is contained in this article.

To the fourth, he did alſo believe the ſame.

After this anſwer, hee did alſo ſubſcribe his name to the ſaid articles. Whereupon, the Biſhop drawing out of his boſome another confeſſion ſubſcribed with Tomkins own hand, and alſo that article that was the firſt day objected againſt him, cauſed the ſame to be openly read, and then willed him to revoke and deny his ſaid opinions; the which he utterly refuſed to do; and therefore was commanded to appear before the Biſhop againe in the ſame place at two of the clock in the afternoon.

The Biſhop repeateth again the confeſſion of Thomas Tomkins, written before by the ſaid Biſhop of London, and ſubſcribed by the ſaid Tomkins, the 26. of September, Anno 1554. which is this.

The firſt confeſſion of Tomkins offered to B. Boner, and now here again repeated.

I Thomas Tomkins of the Pariſh of Shorditch, in the Dioceſſe of London, having confeſſed and declared openly heretofore to Edmund Biſhop of London mine Ordinary, that my beliefe hath beene many yeares paſt, and is at this preſent; that the body of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt is not truly and in very deede in the Sacrament of the Altar, but only in heaven, and ſo in heaven, that it cannot now indeed be really and truly in the ſacrament of the Altar.

The Maſſe full of ſuperſtition & idolatry.

And moreover, having likewiſe confeſſed and declared to my ſaid Ordinary openly many times, that although the Church, called the Catholike Church, hath allowed, and doth allow the Maſſe and ſacrifice made and done therein, as a wholeſome, profitable, and a godly thing; yet my beliefe hath been many yeeres paſt, and is at this preſent, that the ſaid Maſſe is full of ſuperſtition, plaine idolatry, and unprofitable for my ſoul, and ſo have I called it many times, and take it at this preſent.

Baptiſme ought to be miniſtred in the vulgar tongue.

Having alſo likewiſe confeſſed and declared to my ſaid Ordinary, that the ſacrament of Baptiſme ought to be only in the vulgar tongue, and not otherwiſe miniſtred, and alſo without any ſuch ceremonies, as cuſtomably are uſed in the Latine Church, and otherwiſe not to be allowed.

Tomkins conſtantly ſtandeth to the truth of the Goſpell.

Finally, being many times and oft called openly before my ſaid Ordinary, and talked withall touching all my ſaid confeſſions and declarations, both by the ſaid mine Ordinary and divers other learned men, as well his Chapleines as other, and counſelled by all them to embrace the truth, and to recant mine errour in the premiſſes, which they told mee was plaine hereſie and manifeſt errour; doe teſtifie and declare hereby, that I do and will continually ſtand to my ſaid confeſſion, declaration, and belief, in all the premiſſes and every part thereof, and in no wiſe recant or goe from any part of the ſame. In witneſſe whereof I have ſubſcribed, and paſſed this writing the 26. day of September, the yeere aforeſaid.

By me Tho. Tomkins aforeſaid.

The names of them that ſate upon Thomas Tomkins at this Seſſion, were theſe; Edmund Boner, John Fecknam Deane of Pauls, John Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, John Morwen maſter of Art, Thomas Morton Parſon of Fulham, Triſtram Swadell, Thomas More, Thomas Bekinſaw, James Cline, Clerkes.

The laſt appearance of Thomas Tomkins before Boner and the Commiſſioners.

The laſt appearance and condemnation of T. Tomkins, Martyr.

The ſame day and place, at two of the clock in the afternoon, he was (the laſt time) brought forth before the Biſhops of London, Bathe, and S. Davids, with others; where he was earneſtly exhorted by the ſaid Biſhop of Bath to revoke and leave off his opinions. Unto whom he anſwered, My Lord, I was born and brought up in ignorance untill now of late yeeres. And now I know the truth, wherein I will continue unto the death.

Sentence read againſt Thomas Tomkins March 16.

Then Boner cauſed all his Articles and confeſſion to be again openly read, and ſo in his accuſtomed manner perſwaded with him to recant, To whom he finally ſaid, My Lord, I cannot ſee but that you would have me forſake the truth, and to fall into errour and hereſie. The Biſhop ſeeing he would not recant, did proceede in his law, and ſo gave ſentence of condemnation upon him.

Then he delivered him to the Sheriff of London, who carried him ſtraight unto Newgate, where he remained moſt joyous and conſtant untill the 16. day of March next after: on which day he was by the ſaid Sheriff conveied into Smithfield, and there ſealed up his faith in the flaming

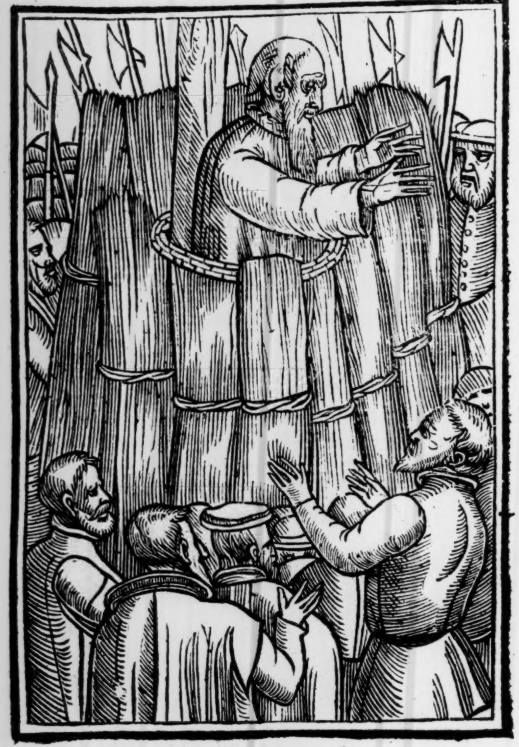
The burning of the bleſſed Martyr, THOMAS TOMKINS.



A notable hiſtory of William Hunter a young man of 19. yeeres, purſued to death by Iuſtice Brown for the Goſpels ſake, worthy of all young men and parents to be read.

Wil. Hunter Prentice and martyr. March 26.

THe 26. day of the ſaid moneth of March, the yeere aforeſaid, followed the martyrdome of William Hunter a right godly young man, of the age of 19. yeeres, and borne of like godly parents: by whom hee was not only inſtructed in true religion and godlineſſe, but alſo confirmed by them unto death, after a rare and ſtrange example, worthy to be noted and had in admiration of all parents. Wherin may appear a ſingular ſpectacle, not onely of a marvellous fortitude in the party ſo young, but alſo in his parents, to behold nature in them ſtriving with religion, and overcome of the ſame. Whereby Chriſtian parents may learn what is to be done not only in their children, but alſo in themſelves, if need at any time do require, or godlineſſe ſhould demand the duty of a Chriſtian man againſt naturall affection. Example whereof in the ſequele of this hiſtory wee have here preſent before our eyes. Which hiſtory, as it was faithfully drawn out by Robert Hunter his own brother (who being preſent with his brother William, and never left him till his death, ſent the true report unto us) we have here with like faithfulneſſe placed and recorded the ſame, as followeth.

Wil Hunter prentice in Colmanſtreet with Tho. Taylor.

Wil. Hunter threatned for not receiving a Maſſe.

W. Hunter willed of his maſter to depart.

William Hunter, being aprentice in London in the firſt yeere of Queen Mary, was commanded at the Eaſter next following to receive the communion at a Maſſe, by the Prieſt of the pariſh where he dwelt, called Coleman ſtreete; which becauſe hee refuſed to doe, hee was very much threatned that he ſhould be therfore brought before the biſhop of London. Wherfore William Hunters maſter, one Thomas Taylor, a Silk-weaver, required William Hunter to go and depart from him, leſt that he ſhould come in danger becauſe of him, if hee continued in his houſe. For the which cauſes, William Hunter took leave of his ſaid maſter, and thence came to Burntwood where his father dwelt, with whom he afterward remained about the ſpace of half a quarter of a yeere.

Anno 1555.

W. Hunter commeth to his father to Burntwood.

After this it hapned within five or ſix weeks, that William going into the Chappel of Burntwood, and finding there a Bible lying on a deſke, did read therein. In the meane time there came in one father Atwell a Sumner, which hearing William read in the Bible, ſaid to him, What meddleſt thou with the Bible? Knoweſt thou what thou readeſt, and canſt thou expound the Scriptures?

Father Atwel, a Sumner or Promotor.

Talk between Atwel & Will. Hunter concerning the Bible

To whom William anſwered and ſaid, Father Atwell, I take not upon me to expound the Scriptures, except I were diſpenſed withall; but I, finding the bible here when I came, read in it to my comfort. To whom father Atwell ſaid, It was never merry world ſince the Bible came abroad in Engliſh.

The Catholikes cannot abide the Bible.

To the which words William anſwered, ſaying, Father Atwell, ſay not ſo for Gods ſake: for it is Gods booke, out of the which every one that hath grace may learn to know what things both pleaſe God, and alſo what diſpleaſeth him. Then ſaid father Atwell, Could we not tell before this time as well as now, how God was ſerved? Wil. anſwered; No, father Atwell, nothing ſo well, as we may now, if that we might have his bleſſed word amongſt us ſtill as we have had. It is true, ſaid father Atwell, if it be as you ſay.

Well, ſaid Wil. Hunter, it liketh me very well, and I pray God that we may have the bleſſed Bible amongſt us continually. To the which words father Atwell ſaid, I perceive your mind well enough; you are one of them that miſliketh the Queens laws: and therefore you came from London, I heare ſay. You learned theſe waies at London: but for all that, ſaid father Atwell, you muſt turn another leafe, or elſe you, and a great ſort moe Heretikes will broile for this geare, I warrant you. To the which words William ſaid, God give me grace, that I may believe his word, and confeſſe his Name, whatſoever come thereof. Confeſſe his name, quoth old Atwell? no, no, ye will goe to the Divell all of you, and confeſſe his name.

Atwel not able to reaſon, but he is able to accuſe the innocent.

What ſaid Wil? You ſay not well father Atwell. At the which words he went out of the Chappell in a great fury, ſaying; I am not able to reaſon with thee: but I will fetch one ſtraight way which ſhall talke with thee, I warrant thee thou Heretike. And he leaving William Hunter reading in the Bible, ſtraight-ways brought one Tho. Wood, who was then Vicar of Southwell, which was at an Alehouſe even over againſt the ſaid Chappell; who, hearing old Atwell ſay, that W. Hunter was reading of the bible in the Chappel, came by and by to him, and finding him reading in the bible, took the matter very hainouſly, ſaying; Sirra, who gave thee leave to read in the bible, and to expound it?

The Vicar of Southwell angry with William Hunter for reading in the Bible.

Then William anſwered, I expound not the Scriptures ſir, but read them for my comfort. What meddleſt thou with them at all, ſaid the Vicar? It becometh not thee, nor none ſuch to meddle with the Scriptures. But William anſwered, I will read the Scriptures (God willing) while I live; and you ought Maſter Vicar, not to diſcourage any man for that matter, but rather exhort men diligently to reade the Scriptures for your diſcharge and their owne.

Unto the which the Vicar anſwered, It becometh thee well to tell me what I have to doe. I ſee thou art an Heretike by thy words. William ſaid, I am no heretike for ſpeaking the truth.

But

Anno 1555.

The Catholikes in no wiſe will be controlled.

But the Vicar ſaid, It is a merry world when ſuch as thou art ſhall teach us what is the truth. Thou art medling, father Atwell tels me, with the ſixth of John, wherein thou mayſt perceive how Chriſt ſaith; Except that ye eate the fleſh of Chriſt, and drinke his blood, yee have no life in you. William ſaid, I read the ſixth of John indeed; howbeit, I made no expoſition on it.

Then ſaid father Atwel, When you read it I ſaid, that you there might underſtand how that in the Sacrament of the Altar is Chriſts very naturall body and blood: unto the which you anſwered, how that you would take the Scriptures as they are, and that you would meddle with no great expoſition, except that ye were diſpenſed withall.

W. Hunter examined of the ſacrament

Ah, ſaid the Vicar, What ſay you to the bleſſed ſacrament of the Altar? Belieueſt thou not in it, and that the bread and wine is tranſubſtantiated into the very bodie and blood of Chriſt? William anſwered, I learne no ſuch thing in the ſixth of John as you ſpeake of. Why, ſaid the Vicar, doeſt thou not believe in the ſacrament of the Altar? I believe, ſaid William Hunter all that Gods word teacheth. Why, ſaid the Vicar, thou mayeſt learne this which I ſay, plainly in the ſixth of John.

The Catholikes like to the Capernaites.

Then ſaid William, You underſtand Chriſts words much like the carnall Capernaites, which thought, that Chriſt would have given them his fleſh to feede upon: which opinion our Saviour Chriſt corrected, when he ſaid; The words which I ſpeak to you, are ſpirit and life.

Hereſie miſtaken with the Papiſts.

Now, quoth the Vicar, I have found you out: now I ſee that thou art an Heretike indeed, and that thou doeſt not believe in the ſacrament of the altar.

Then ſaid William Hunter, whereas you doubt my beliefe, I would it were tried whether that you or I would ſtand faſter in our faith. Yea thou Heretike (ſaid the Vicar) wouldeſt thou have it ſo tried? William Hunter anſwered, that which you call hereſie, I ſerve my Lord God withall.

Then ſaid the Vicar; Canſt thou ſerve God with hereſie? But William anſwered, I would that you and I were even now faſt tyed to a ſtake, to prove whether that you or I would ſtand ſtrongeſt to our faith. But the Vicar anſwered; It ſhall not be ſo tryed. No, quoth William, I think ſo: for if I might, I thinke I know who would ſooneſt recant; for I durſt ſet my foot againſt yours even to the death. That we ſhall ſee quoth the Vicar, and ſo they departed, the Vicar threatning William much, how that he would complain of him; with other much communication which they had together.

The Vicar complaineth to Juſtice Brown of W. Hunter.

Juſtice Brown ſendeth for Hunters father

Immediately after, this Vicar of Welde told Maſter Browne of the communication which William Hunter and hee had together. Which when Maſter Browne underſtood, immediately he ſent for Williams father and the Conſtable, one Robert Salmon. For immediately after William Hunter and the Vicar had reaſoned together, he took his leave of his father and fled, becauſe Wood the Vicar threatned him. Now when the Conſtable and Williams father were come, and were before maſter Browne, he asked where William Hunter was. His father anſwered, ſaying; If it pleaſe you ſir, I know not where he is become: No, quoth maſter Brown? I will make thee tell where he is, and fetch him forth alſo ere I have done with thee. Sir, ſaid Williams father, I know not where he is become, nor where to ſeek for him.

The fruit of the Popes doctrine to ſet the father againſt the ſon.

Then ſaid maſter Brown, Why diddeſt thou not bring him when thou haddeſt him? I promiſe thee if thou wilt not fetch him, I will ſend thee to priſon till I ſhal get him. Wherfore ſee that thou promiſe me to fetch him, or elſe it is not beſt to look me in the face any more, nor yet to reſt in Burntwood. Well, quoth M. Brown to Williams father, ſee that thou ſeek him forth, and bring him to me.

An unreaſonable requeſt of Juſtice Brown

Williams father anſwered; Sir, would you have me ſeek my ſon to be burned? If thou bring him to me quoth M. Brown, I will deale well enough for that matter; thou ſhalt not need to care for the matter. Fetch him, and thou ſhalt ſee what I will do for him.

The father pretended to ſeeke the ſon.

Moreover, if thou lackeſt mony, quoth he, thou ſhalt have ſome, and bade the Conſtable M. Salmon to give him a crown, but Williams father took none of him. Howbeit M. Brown would never reſt, till Williams father had promiſed him to ſeek out his ſon. And thus M. Brown ſent the Conſtable home againe, and Williams father, commanding him to ſeek out William Hunter, and then to come againe and bring him to him.

The ſon meeteth with him in the way.

After that old father Hunter had ridden two or three dayes journey to ſatiſfie M. Brownes expectation, it happened that William met with his father in the high way as he travelled, and firſt he ſeeing his father came to him, and ſpake to him, and told him how that he thought that he ſought for him: and then his father confeſſing it, wept ſore, and ſaid, that M. Browne charged him to ſeek him, and bring him to him; howbeit, ſaid he, I will returne home againe, and ſay I cannot find you. But William ſaid; Father, I will goe home with you, and ſave you harmleſſe, whatſoever commeth of it.

The working of nature between the father and the ſon.

And thus they came home together; but William, as ſoon as he was come home, was taken by the ſaid Conſtable, and laid in the ſtockes till the day. Maſter Brown, hearing that William Hunter was come home, ſent for him to the Conſtable, who brought him immediately to maſter Browne.

W. Hunter brought before Juſtice Brown

Now when William was come, maſter Browne ſaid to him, Ah ſirra, are ye come? and then by and by hee commanded the bible to bee brought and opened it, and then began to reaſon with William on this manner, ſaying; I heare ſay you are a Scripture man, you, and can reaſon much of the ſixth of John, and expound as pleaſeth you. and turned the bible to the ſixth of S. John, and then he laid to his charge what an expoſition he made, when the Vicar and he talked together. And William ſaid, He urged me to ſay ſo much as I did.

Talk between W. Hunter & Juſtice Brown about the ſacrament.

Well, quoth M. Browne, becauſe you can expound that place ſo well; how ſay you to another place, turning to the 22. of S. Luke? and maſter Browne ſaid, Looke here (quoth he) for Chriſt ſaith, that the bread is his body.

Bread broken, but not changed.

To the which William anſwered, the text ſaith, how Chriſt tooke bread, but not that hee changed it into another ſubſtance, but gave that which he took, and brake that which he gave, which was bread, as is evident by the text. For elſe he ſhould have had two bodies, which to affirm I ſee no reaſon, ſaid William.

M. Browne in a pelting chafe

At the which anſwer maſter Brown was very angry, and tooke up the bible and turned the leaves, and then flung it down again in ſuch a fury, that William could not well find the place againe whereof they reaſoned.

Then M. Browne ſaid, Thou naughty boy, wilt thou not take things as they are, but expound them as thou wilt? Doth not Chriſt call the bread his body plainly, and thou wilt not believe, that the bread is his body after the conſecration? Thou goeſt about to make Chriſt a lyar.

But William Hunter anſwered; I meane not

How Chriſt called bread his body.

ſo ſir, but rather more earneſtly to ſearch what the mind of Chriſt is in that holy inſtitution, wherin he commendeth unto us the remembrance of his death, paſſion, reſurrection, and coming again, ſaying; This do in the remembrance of me. And alſo though Chriſt call the bread his body, as he doth alſo ſay, that he is a vine, a dore, &c. yet is not his body turned into bread, no more than he is turned into a dore or vine. Wherfore Chriſt called the bread his body by a figure.

M. Brown in a rage.

At that word maſter Brown ſaid, Thou art a villain indeed. Wilt thou make Chriſt a lyar yet ſtill? and was in ſuch a fury with William, and ſo raged, that William could not ſpeak a word, but he croſſed him, and ſcoffed at every word. Wherfore William ſeeing him in ſuch fury, deſired him that he would either heare him quietly, and ſuffer him to anſwer for himſelfe, or elſe ſend him away. To the which maſter Brown anſwered; Indeed I will ſend thee to morrow to my Lord of London, and he ſhall have thee under examination: and thus left off the talk, and made a letter immediately, and ſent William Hunter with the Conſtable to Boner biſhop of London, who received William.

M. Browne ſendeth up W. Hunter to biſhop Boner.

After that he had read the letter, and the Conſtable returned home againe, the biſhop cauſed William to be brought into a chamber, where he began to reaſon with him in this manner: I underſtand William Hunter, quoth hee, by maſter Brownes letter, how that you have had certain communication with the Vicar of Wield, about the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, and how that ye could not agree; whereupon M. Browne ſent for thee to bring thee to the Catholike faith, from the which, he ſaith that thou art gone. Howbeit if thou wilt be ruled by me, thou ſhalt have no harm for any thing that thou haſt ſaid or done in this matter.

Boners words to W. Hunter.

William anſwered, ſaying; I am not fallen from the Catholike faith of Chriſt (I am ſure) but do believe it, and confeſſe it with al my heart

Talk between W. Hunter and the biſhop about the ſacrament.

Why, quoth the biſhop, how ſayeſt thou to the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar? Wilt thou not recant thy ſaying, which thou confeſſedſt before maſter Brown, how that Chriſts body is not in the ſacrament of the Altar, the ſame that was borne of the Virgin Mary?

To the which William anſwered, ſaying; My Lord, I underſtand that maſter Browne hath certified you of the talke which he and I had together, and thereby ye know what I ſaid to him, the which I will not recant by Gods help. Then ſaid the biſhop, I think thou art aſhamed to bear a fagot, and recant openly; but if thou wilt recant thy ſayings, I will promiſe thee that thou ſhalt not be put to open ſhame: but ſpeake the word here now between me and thee, and I will promiſe thee it ſhall go no further, and thou ſhalt go home again without any hurt.

Boners faire promiſe to W. Hunter.

William anſwered and ſaid, my Lord, if you will let me alone, and leave me to my conſcience I will go to my father and dwell with him, or els with my maſter againe, and ſo if no body will diſquiet nor trouble my conſcience, I will keepe my conſcience to my ſelfe.

W. Hunter not ſuffered to have his conſcience free.

Then ſaid the biſhop, I am content, ſo that thou wilt goe to the Church, and receive, and be ſhriven, and ſo continue a good Catholike Chriſtian. No, quoth William, I will not do ſo for all the good in the world.

Then, quoth the biſhop, if you will not doe ſo, I will make you ſure enough, I warrant you. Well, quoth William, you can do no more than God will permit you. Well, quoth the biſhop, wilt thou not recant indeed by no means? No, quoth William, never while I live, God willing.

W. Hunter denieth to recant.

Then the biſhop (this talk ended) commanded his men to put William in the Stocks in his gatehouſe, where he ſate two daies and nights, onely with a cruſt of browne bread and a cup of water.

Anno 1555.

Boner commandeth William Hunter to the ſtocks. W. Hunter two dates and two nights in the ſtocks, with a cruſt of bread and a cup of water.

At the two daies end the biſhop came to him, and finding the cup of water and the cruſt of bread ſtill by him upon the ſtockes, ſaid to his men; Take him out of the ſtockes, and let him breake his faſt with you. Then they let him forth of the ſtockes, but would not ſuffer him to eate with them, but called him Heretike. And he ſaid, he was as loth to be in their company, as they were to be in his.

After breakfaſt the biſhop ſent for William, and demanded whether hee would recant or no. But William made him anſwer, how that hee would never recant that which he had confeſſed before men, as concerning his faith in Chriſt.

Hunter againe refuſeth to recant his faith in Chriſt.

Then the biſhop ſaid that he was no Chriſtian, but he denied the faith in which he was baptized. But William anſwered; I was baptized in the faith of the holy Trinity, the which I will not go from, God aſſiſting me with his grace.

Then the biſhop ſent him to the convict priſon and commanded the Keeper to lay irons upon him as many as he could beare: and moreover asked him, how old he was; and William ſaid that he was nineteen yeere old.

W. Hunter laid in the convict priſon with as many irons as he could beare.

Well ſaid the biſhop you will be burned ere you be 20 yeer old, if you will not yeeld your ſelfe better than you have done yet. William anſwered, God ſtrengthen mee in his his truth: and then he parted, the biſhop allowing him a halfe-penny a day to live on in bread or drink,

Hunter allowed a half-penny a day to live on

Thus he continued in priſon three quarters of a yeer. In the which time he had been before the biſhop five times, beſides the time when he was condemned in the Conſiſtory in Pauls the 9. day of February: at the which time I his brother Robert Hunter was preſent, when and where I heard the biſhop condemne him, and five other more.

Theſe 5. were Tomkins, Pigot, Knight, Haukes, and Laurence.

And then the biſhop calling William, asked him if he would recant, and ſo read to him his examination and confeſſion, as is above rehearſed, and then rehearſed how that William confeſſed that he did believe, that he received Chriſts body ſpiritually, when he did receive the communion. Doeſt thou mean, quoth the biſhop, that the bread is Chriſts body ſpiritually?

William anſwered; I mean not ſo, but rather when I receive the holy Communion rightly and worthily, I doe feed upon Chriſt ſpiritually through faith in my ſoule, and am made partaker of all the benefits which Chriſt hath brought unto all faithfull believers through his precious death, paſſion, and reſurrection, and not that the bread is his body, either ſpiritually or corporally.

The bread is Chriſts body neither ſpiritually nor bodily, but in receiving the communion we feed on Chriſt ſpiritually in our ſoule.

Then ſaid the biſhop to William; Doeſt thou not think (holding up his cap) that for example here of my cap, thou mayeſt ſee the ſquarnes and colour of it, and yet that not to be the ſubſtance, which thou iudgeſt by the accidents?

William anſwered; if you can ſeparate the accidents from the ſubſtance, and ſhew me the ſubſtance without the accidents, I could believe. Then ſaid the biſhop, Thou wilt not believe that God can do any thing above mans capacity. Yes, ſaid William, I muſt needs believe that: for daily experience teacheth all men that thing plainly: but our queſtion is not what God can do, but what he will have us to learn in his holy Supper.

The queſtion is not what God can doe, but what hee would have us to believe in his holy Supper.

Then the Biſhop ſaid, I alwaies have found thee at this point, and I ſee no hope in thee to reclaime thee unto the Catholike faith, but thou wilt continue a corrupt member: and then pronounced

A ſentence pronounced againſt William Hunter.

nounced ſentence upon him, how that he ſhould go from that place to Newgate for a time, and ſo from thence to Burntwood, where, ſaid he, thou ſhalt be burned.

The large offer of B. Boner to W. Hunter.

Then the biſhop called for another, and ſo when he had condemned them al, he called for William Hunter, and perſwaded with him, ſaying, If thou wilt yet recant, I will make thee a free man in the City, and give thee 40. pound in good money to ſet up thine occupation withal: or I will make thee Steward of my houſe, and ſet thee in office; for I like thee well, thou haſt wit enough, and I will preferre thee if thou recant.

W. Hunter refuſeth to come from Chriſt for the love of the world.

But William anſwered, I thank you for your great offers: notwithſtanding my Lord, ſaid he, if you cannot perſwade my conſcience with Scriptures, I cannot finde in my heart to turn from God for the love of the world; for I count all things worldly but loſſe and dung, in reſpect of the love of Chriſt.

Then ſaid the biſhop, if thou dieſt in this mind thou art condemned for ever. William anſwered, God iudgeth righteouſly, and iuſtifieth them whom man condemneth uniuſtly.

W. Hunter ſent down to Burntwood to be burnt.

Thus William and the biſhop departed, William and the reſt to Newgate, where they remained about a moneth, which afterward were ſent down, William to Burntwood, and the others into divers places of the countrey. Now when William was come down to Burntwood, which was the Saturday before the Annunciation of the Virgin Mary that followed on the Munday after, William remained till the Tueſday after, becauſe they would not put him to death then, for the holineſſe of the day.

His father and mother come to comfort him

In the mean time Williams father and mother came to him, and deſired heartily of God that he might continue to the end in that good way which he had begun, and his mother ſaid to him, that ſhe was glad that ever ſhe was ſo happy to bear ſuch a child, which could find in his heart to loſe his life for Chriſts names ſake.

His father and mother exhort him to be conſtant.

Then William ſaid to his mother; For my little paine which I ſhall ſuffer, which is but a ſhort braid, Chriſt hath promiſed me, mother (ſaid hee) a crown of ioy: may you not be glad of that, mother? With that his mother kneeled down on her knees, ſaying; I pray God ſtrengthen thee my ſon, to the end. Yea, I think thee as well beſtowed as any child that ever I bare.

Marke here whether Boner did nothing but by the law.

At the which words maſter Higbed took her in his armes, ſaying; I reioyce (and ſo ſaid the others) to ſee you in this minde, and you have a good cauſe to reioyce. And his father and mother both ſaid, that they were never of other mind, but prayed for him, that as he had begun to confeſſe Chriſt before men, he likewiſe might ſo continue to the end. Williams father ſaid; I was affraid of nothing, but that my ſon ſhould have been killed in the priſon for hunger and cold, the biſhop was ſo hard to him. But William confeſſed, after a month that his father was charged with his bord that he lacked nothing, but had meat and cloathing enough, yea, even out of the court, both money, meat, cloths, wood and coales, and all things neceſſary.

Thus they continued in their Inne, being the Swan in Burntwood in a Parlor, whither reſorted many people of the countrey to ſee thoſe good men which were there: and many of Williams acquaintance came to him, and reaſoned with him, and he with them, exhorting them to come away from the abomination of Popiſh ſuperſtition and idolatry.

A notable thing concerning W. Hunters dreame.

Thus paſſing away Saturday, Sunday, and Munday, on Munday at night it hapned that William had a dreame about two of the clock in the morning, which was this: how that hee was at the place where the ſtake was pight, where he ſhould be burned, which (as hee thought in his dream) was at the towns end where the buttes ſtood, which was ſo indeed: and alſo he dreamed that he met with his father as he went to the ſtake, and alſo that there was a prieſt at the ſtake, which went about to have him recant.

To whom he ſaid (as he thought in his dream) how that he bade him, away falſe Prophet, and how that hee exhorted the people to beware of him, and ſuch as he was: which things came to paſſe indeed. It hapned that William made a noiſe to himſelf in his dream, which cauſed M. Higbed and the others to awake him out of his ſleep, to know what he lacked. When he awaked he told them his dreame in order, as is ſaid.

W. Hunter lead to the place of martyrdome.

The Sheriffes ſon giveth comfortable words to W. Hunter.

Now when it was day, the Sheriff M. Brocket called on to ſet forward to the burning of William Hunter. Then came the Sheriffs ſon to William Hunter, and embraced him in his right arme, ſaying; William, be not affraid of theſe men which are here preſent with bows, bils and weapons, ready prepared to bring you to the place where you ſhall be burned. To whom William anſwered; I thanke God I am not affraid: for I have caſt my count what it will coſt me already. Then the Sheriffes ſonne could ſpeak no more to him for weeping.

W. Hunters dream verified

His words to his father.

Then William Hunter plucked up his gown and ſtepped over the Parlor grounſell, and went forward cheerfully, the Sheriffes ſervant taking him by one arme, and his brother by another, and thus going in the way, he met with his father according to his dream, and he ſpake to his ſon, weeping and ſaying; God be with thee ſon William: and William ſaid; God be with you good father, and be of good comfort: for I hope we ſhall meet againe when we ſhall be merry. His father ſaid, I hope ſo William, and ſo departed. So William went to the place where the ſtake ſtood even according to his dream, whereas all things were very unready. Then William took a wet broome fagot, and kneeled downe thereon, and read the 51. Pſalm, till he came to theſe words, The ſacrifice of God is a contrite ſpirit, a contrite and a broken heart, O God, thou wilt not deſpiſe.

M. William Tyrill of the Braches carpeth where he hath no cauſe.

W. Hunter refuſeth the Queens pardon.

Then ſaid Maſter Tyrill of the Braches, called William Tyrell, thou lieſt (ſaid he) thou readeſt falſe; for the words are an humble ſpirit. But William ſaid, The tranſlation ſaith a contrite heart. Yea, quoth M. Tyrell, the tranſlation is falſe, ye tranſlate bookes as yee liſt your ſelves, like Heretikes. Well, quoth William, there is no great difference in thoſe words. Then ſaid the Sheriffe, Here is a letter from the Queen. If thou wilt recant thou ſhalt live, if not, thou ſhalt be burned. No, quoth William, I will not recant, God willing. Then William roſe and went to the ſtake, and ſtood upright to it. Then came one Richard Ponde a Bayliff, and made faſt the chaine about William.

Then ſaid Maſter Browne, here is not wood enough to burne a leg of him. Then, ſaid William; Good people pray for me; and make ſpeed and diſpatch quickly: and pray for mee while ye ſee me alive, good people, and I will pray for you likewiſe.

A dogged ſaying of maſter Brown.

Now, quoth M. Brown, pray for thee? I will pray no more for thee, than I will pray for a dog. To whom William anſwered, Maſter Browne, now you have that which you ſought for, and I pray God it be not laid to your charge in the laſt day: howbeit I forgive you. Then, ſaid Maſter Browne, I aſke no forgiveneſſe of thee. Well ſaid William, if God forgive you not, I ſhall require my blood at your hands.

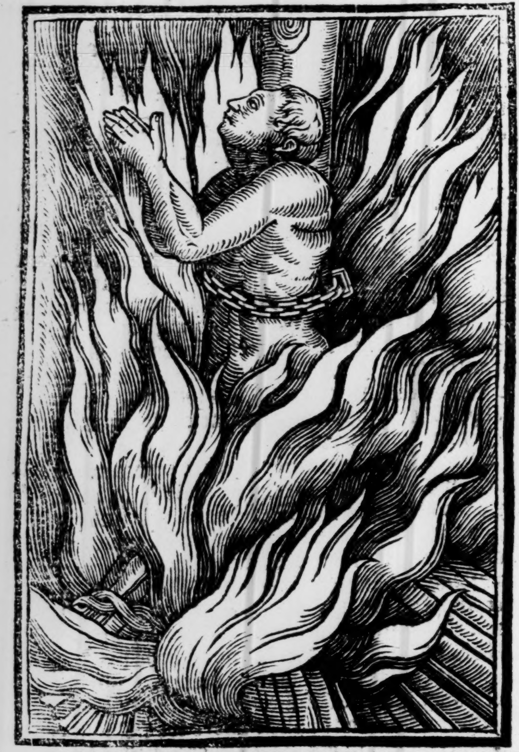
me, and immediatly the Sun in the element ſhone out of a darke cloud ſo full in his face, that he was conſtrained to looke another way: whereat the people muſed, becauſe it was ſo dark a little time afore. Then William tooke up a fagot of broom, and embraced it in his armes.

The burning of WILLIAM HUNTER, Martyr.



Williams dreame verified.

Then this Prieſt, which William dreamed of came to his brother Robert with a Popiſh booke to carry to William, that he might recant, which booke his brother would not meddle withall.

Hunters words to a Popiſh prieſt.

Then William ſeeing the Prieſt, and perceiving how he would have ſhewed him the booke, ſaid; away thou falſe Prophet. Beware of them good people, and come away from their abominations, leſt that you be partakers of their plagues. Then, quoth the Prieſt, looke how thou burneſt here, ſo ſhall thou burn in hell. William anſwered, Thou lieſt, thou falſe Prophet; Away thou falſe Prophet, away.

Then was there a Gentleman which ſaid, I pray God have mercy upon his ſoule. The people ſaid; Amen, Amen. Immediately fire was made.

Hunter comforted by his brother Robert.

Then William caſt his Pſalter right into his brothers hand, who ſaid; William, think on the holy paſſion of Chriſt, and bee not affraid of death.

And William anſwered; I am not affraid. Then lift hee up his hands to heaven, and ſaid, Lord, Lord, Lord, receive my ſpirit, and caſting down his head again into the ſmothering ſmoak, he yeelded up his life for the truth, ſealing it with his blood to the praiſe of God.

Robert Hunter ſet in the Stocks.

Robert Hunter had before M. Browne.

Now by and by after, Maſter Browne commanded one old Hunt to take his brother Robert Hunter, and lay him in the Stocks till he returned from the burning of Higbed at Hornden on the hill, the ſame day. Which thing old Hunt did. Then M. Brown (when Rob. Hunter came before him) asked if he would do as his brother had done. But Robert Hunter anſwered; If I do as my brother hath done, I ſhal have as he hath had. Mary, quoth M. Brown, thou mayſt be ſure of it.

Anno 1555.

Robert Hunter by Gods providence delivered.

Then M. Brown ſaid, I marvell that thy brother ſtood ſo to his tackling: and moreover, hee asked Robert, if Williams maſter of London were not at his burning. But Robert ſaid, that he was not there; but maſter Brown bare him in hand that his maſter was there, and how that he did ſee him there, but Robert denied it. Then M. Brown commanded the Conſtable and Robert Hunter to go their wayes home, and ſo had no further talk with them.

Here followeth the hiſtory of Maſter Higbed, and M. Cauſton, two worthy Gentlemen of Eſſex, which for their ſincere confeſſion of their faith under Boner B. of London, were martyred and burned in Eſſex, An. 1555.

March 26. The ſtory of M. Higbed and M. Cauſton, Martyrs.

ALthough the condemnation of M. Higbed, and M. Cauſton followed after the condemning of thoſe other martyrs which were condemned with Tomkins and Hunter above mentioned, yet becauſe the time of their execution was before the burning of the foreſaid foure martyrs forſomuch that they ſuffered the ſame day that William Hunter did, which was the 26. of March, I thought therefore next after the ſtory of the ſaid William Hunter, following the order of time, here to place the ſame.

This Maſter Higbed and maſter Cauſton, two worſhipfull Gentlemen in the Countie of Eſſex, the one at Hornden of the hill, the other of the pariſh of Thundurſt, being zealous and religious in the true ſervice of God; as they could not diſſemble with the Lord their God, nor flatter with the world, ſo in time of blinde ſuperſtition and wretched idolatry, they could not long lye hid and obſcure in ſuch a number of malignant adverſaries, accuſers, and ſervants of this world, but at length they were perceived and detected to the foreſaid Edmund Boner Biſhop of London, peradventure not without the ſame organ which ſent up William Hunter, as is above declared. By reaſon whereof, by commandement they were committed to the Officers of Colcheſter to be ſafely kept, and with them alſo a ſervant of Thomas Cauſton, who in this praiſe of Chriſtian godlineſſe was nothing inferiour to his maſter.

M. Higbed and M. Cauſton detected to Boner.

Biſhop Boner committh himſelfe to Colcheſter.

Boner the foreſaid Biſhop, perceiving theſe two Gentlemen to be of worſhipfull eſtate, and of great eſtimation in that Country, leſt any tumult ſhould thereby ariſe, came thither himſelf, accompanied with Maſter Fecknam and certaine others, thinking to reclaime them to his faction and faſhion: ſo that great labour and diligence was taken therein, as well by terrors and threatnings, as by large promiſes and flattering, and all faire meaues, to reduce them againe to the unity (as they termed it) of the mother Church.

In fine, when nothing could prevaile to make them aſſent to their doings, at length they came to this point, that they required certaine reſpite to conſult with themſelves what was beſt to do. Which time of deliberation being expired, and they remained ſtill conſtant and unmoveable in their profeſſed doctrine, and ſetting out alſo their confeſſion in writing, the Biſhop ſeeing no good to be done in tarrying any longer there, departed thence, and carried them both with him to London, and with them certain other priſoners alſo, which about the ſame time in thoſe quarters were apprehended.

M. Higbed and M. Cauſton carried to London.

It was not long after this, but theſe priſoners being at London committed to ſtreight priſon, and there attempted ſundry waies by the biſhop and his Chapleins to revoke their opinions: at length, when no perſwaſions would ſerve, they were brought forth to open examination at the Conſiſtory in Pauls, the 17. day of February, Anno 1555. Where they were demanded as well by the ſaid biſhop, as alſo by the biſhop of Bathe, and others, whether they would recant their errours and perverſe doctrine (as they termed it) and ſo come to the unity of the Popiſh Church. Which when they refuſed to doe, the Biſhop aſſigned them likewiſe the next day to appeare againe, being the 18. of February.

The ſecond dates ſeſſion.

On the which day, among many other things there ſaid and paſſed, he read unto them ſeverally certaine Articles, and gave them reſpite untill the next day to anſwer unto the ſame, and ſo committed them againe to priſon. The copie of which Articles hereunder followeth.

Articles objected and miniſtred by Boner Biſhop of London, ſeverally againſt Thomas Cauſton, and Thomas Higbed of Eſſex.

Articles laid by B. Boner to M. Higbed and Cauſton.

First, that thou Thomas Cauſton (or Thomas Higbed) haſt beene and art of the Dioceſſe of London, and alſo of the juriſdiction now of me Edmund Biſhop of London.

Item, that thou waſt in time paſt, according to the order of the Church of England, baptized and chriſtened.

Item, that thou hadſt Godfathers and Godmother, according to the ſaid order.

Item, that the ſaid Godfathers and Godmother did then promiſe for thee, and in thy name, the faith and religion that then was uſed in the realme of England.

Item, that that faith and religion, which they did profeſſe and make for thee, was accounted and taken to be the faith and religion of the Church, and of the Chriſtian people: and ſo was it in very deed.

Item, thou comming to the age of diſcretion, that is to ſay, to the age of foureteene yeeres, didſt not miſlike nor diſallow that faith, that religion, or promiſe then uſed and approved, and promiſed by the ſaid Godfathers and Godmother, but for a time diddeſt continue in it, as others (taking themſelves for Chriſtian people) did likewiſe.

Item, that at that time, and alſo before, it was taken for a doctrine of the Church, catholike and true, and every where in Chriſtendome then allowed for catholike and true, and to be the profeſſion of Chriſtian men, to beleeve, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the formes of bread and wine, after the conſecration, there was, and is by the omnipotent power and will of almighty God, and his word, without any ſubſtance of bread and wine there remaining, the true and naturall body and blood of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt in ſubſtance, which was borne of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſſe, really, truly, and in very deed.

The reall preſence.

Item, that at that time thy father and mother, all thine anceſtors, all thy kindred, acquaintance and friends, and thy ſaid Godfathers and Godmother did then ſo beleeve, and think in all the ſame as the ſaid Church did therein beleeve.

Item, that thy ſelfe haſt had no juſt cauſe or lawfull ground to depart or ſwerve from the ſaid religion or faith, nor any occaſion at all, except thou wilt follow and beleeve the erroneous opinion or beleefe, that hath been againſt the common order of the Church, brought in by certaine diſordered perſons of late, at the uttermoſt within theſe 30. or 40. yeeres laſt paſt.

Item, that thou doeſt know, or credibly haſt heard and doeſt beleeve, that D. Robert Barnes, Iohn Frith, Thomas Garrard, Hierome Laſſels, Anne Askew, Iohn Hooper late Biſhop of Glooceſter, ſir Laurence Sanders Prieſt, Iohn Bradford, ſir Iohn Rogers Prieſt, ſir Rowland Taylor Prieſt, ſir Iohn Laurence Prieſt, William Pygot, Stephen Knight, William Hunter, Thomas Tomkins, and Thomas Hawkes, have beene heretofore reputed, taken, and accounted as heretikes, and alſo condemned as heretikes, and ſo pronounced openly and manifeſtly: ſpecially in holding and beleeving certaine damnable opinions, againſt the verity of Chriſts body and blood in the ſacrament of the Altar, and all the ſame perſons, ſaving Iohn Bradford, ſir Iohn Laurence, William Pygot, Stephen Knight, William Hunter, Thomas Tomkins, and Thomas Hawkes, have ſuffered paines of death by fire, for the maintenance and defence of their ſaid opinions and misbeliefe.

Alſo ſir Edmund Boner Prieſt, before the death of Cromwell, ſeemed to be of that opinion, & was ſworne twice againſt the Pope.

Item, that thou doeſt know, or credibly haſt heard and doeſt beleeve, that Thomas Cranmer, late Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and Nicolas Ridley, naming himſelfe biſhop of London, Robert Ferrar late Biſhop of S. Davids, and Hugh Latimer ſometime Biſhop of Worceſter, have beene, and are at this preſent reputed, accounted, and taken as heretikes and misbelievers, in maintaining and holding certaine damnable opinions againſt the verity of Chriſts body and blood in the ſacrament of the Altar.

Verity taken for hereſie of misbelieving heretikes.

Item, that thou haſt commended and praiſed all the ſaid perſons, ſo erring and beleeving (or at the leaſtwiſe ſome of them) ſecretly, and alſo openly, taking and beleeving them to be faithfull and catholike people, and their ſaid opinions to be good and true, and the ſame to the beſt and uttermoſt of thy power thou haſt allowed, maintained, and defended at ſundry times.

Item, that thou having heard, knowne, and underſtood all the premiſſes, thus to be as is aforeſaid, haſt not regarded all or any part thereof, but contrary to the ſame and every part thereof haſt attempted and done, condemning, tranſgreſſing, and breaking the promiſe, faith, religion, order, and cuſtome aforeſaid, and haſt become, and art an heretike and misbeleever in the premiſſes, denying the verity of Chriſts body and bloud in the ſacrament of the Altar, and obſtinately affirming, that the ſubſtance of the materiall bread and wine are there remaining, and that the ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood, taken of the Virgin Mary, are not there in the ſaid ſacrament really and truly being.

Item, that all the premiſſes be true, notorious, famous, and manifeſt, and that upon all the ſame, there have and be amongſt the ſad and good people of the City of London and Dioceſſe of the ſame in great multitude, commonly and publikely, a common and publike fame and opinion, and alſo in all places where thou haſt been, within the ſaid Dioceſſe of London.

¶ Theſe articles being given to them in writing by the Biſhop, the next day following was aſſigned to them to give up and to exhibite their anſwers unto the ſame.

The third dayes Seſſion upon the examination of M. Cauſton, and M. Higbed.

The third Seſſion.

Upon the which day, being the firſt day of March, the ſaid Thomas Cauſton, and Thomas Higbed Gentlemen, being brought before the Biſhop in the Conſiſtory, there exhibited their anſwers to the articles aforeſaid; the tenor of which anſwers here followeth.

The anſwers of Thomas Cauſton and Thomas Higbed, ſeverally made to the foreſaid Articles objected as before.

The anſwers of the Martyrs to the articles.

To the firſt, they anſwer and confeſſe the ſame to be true.

To the ſecond, they anſwer and beleeve the ſame to be true.

To the third, they anſwer and beleeve the ſame to be true.

To the fourth, they anſwer and thinke the ſame to be true.

To the fifth, untill this clauſe (and ſo was it in very deed) they anſwer and beleeve the ſame to be true. And unto that clauſe (and ſo was it in very deed) they anſwer negatively, and beleeve that it was not in very deed.

To the ſixth, ſeventh, and eighth, they anſwer and beleeve the ſame to be true.

To the ninth, they anſwer and ſay, that they think they have a juſt and lawfull cauſe and ground to ſwerve and go from the ſaid faith and religion, becauſe they have now read more Scripture, than either themſelves, or their parents and kinsfolke, Godfathers or Godmothers have read or ſeen heretofore in that behalfe.

To the tenth, they anſwer, ſay, and beleeve, that the ſaid perſons articulate have been named, taken, and counted for heretikes, and ſo condemned for heretikes: yet about three yeeres paſt, they were taken for good Chriſtian perſons. And forſomuch as theſe Reſpondents did never heare them preach concerning the ſacrament of the Altar, they ſay that they preached well, in that they ſaid and preached that Chriſt is not preſent really and truly in the ſacrament, but that there is remaining the ſubſtance of bread and wine.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

To the eleventh, they anſwer and ſay, that howſoever other folkes do repute and take the ſaid perſons articulate, yet theſe Reſpondents themſelves did never, nor yet doe ſo account and take them. And further they ſay, that in caſe the ſaid perſons articulate named in this article have preached, that in the ſacrament of the Altar is very materiall wine, and not the ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood under the formes of bread and wine, then they preached well and truly, and theſe Reſpondents themſelves do ſo believe.

To the twelfth, they anſwer and ſay, that where other folke have diſpraiſed the ſaid perſons articulate, and diſallowed their opinions, theſe Reſpondents (for ought that they at any time have heard) did like and allow the ſaid perſons, and their ſayings.

To the thirteenth, they anſwer and ſay, that they have not broken or condemned any promiſe made by their Godfathers and Godmothers for them at their Baptiſme, and that they are no heretikes nor misbelievers, in that they beleeve that there remaineth onely bread and wine in the ſacrament of the Altar, and that Chriſts naturall body is not there, but in heaven; for they ſay, that the Scriptures ſo teach them.

To the fourteenth, they anſwer and believe, that the premiſſes before by them confeſſed be true, notorious, and manifeſt.

After theſe anſwers exhibited and peruſed, then the Biſhop ſpeaking unto them after this ſort, beginneth firſt (as he did ever before) with Thomas Cauſton. Becauſe ye ſhall not be ſodainly trapped, and that men ſhall not ſay that I goe about to ſeeke ſnares to put you away: I have hitherto reſpited you, that you ſhould weigh and conſider with your ſelfe your ſtate and condition, and that you ſhould, while ye have time and ſpace, acknowledge the truth, and return to the unity of the catholike Church. Then the Biſhop, reading their former articles and anſwers to the ſame, aſked them if they would recant: which when they denied, they were againe diſmiſſed and commanded to appeare the Wedneſday next after, at two of the clock at afternoon, there to receive their definitive ſentence againſt them: which thing (as it ſeemeth) was yet deferred.

A ſample of catholike charity ſhewed.

Anno 1555

Another examination of M. Cauſton and Maſter Higbed.

Another examination.

The next Friday, being the 8. day of March, the ſaid Thomas Cauſton was firſt called to examination before the Biſhop, Fecknam and D. Stempe being in his palace, and there had read unto him his foreſaid Articles with his anſwers thereunto, and after certaine exhortations to recant his former profeſſion, and to be conformable to the unity of their Church, they promiſed him (ſo doing) willingly to receive him againe thereunto. To whom he anſwered, You go about to catch us in ſnares and gins. But mark, by what meaſure ye meaſure us, looke you to be meaſured with the ſame againe at Gods hands. The Biſhop ſtill perſwaded with him to recant. To whom he anſwered, No, I will not abiure. He ſaid that the Biſhops that were lately burned be heretikes: but I pray God make me ſuch an heretike as they were.

This Stempe is now Warden of the Colledge in Wincheſter.

M. Cauſton denieth to recant.

The Biſhop then leaving M. Cauſton, calleth for M. Higbed: uſing with him the like perſwaſions that he did with the other: but he anſwered; I will not abiure. For I have been of this mind and opinion that I am now, theſe 16. yeeres, and do what ye can, ye ſhall do no more than God will permit you to do, and with what meaſure you meaſure us, looke for the ſame againe at Gods hands.

M. Higbed called forth, denieth to abiure.

Then Fecknam aſked him his opinion in the ſacrament of the Altar. To whom he anſwered, I do not beleeve that Chriſt is in the ſacrament as ye will have him, which is of mans making. Both their anſwers thus ſeverally made, they were again commanded to depart for that time, and to appeare the next day in the Conſiſtory at Pauls, betweene the houres of one and three of the clock at afternoone.

M. Feckham ſtill buſie with the matter of the ſacrament.

The laſt appearance of M. Cauſton, and M. Higbed before Boner.

At which day and houre, being the ninth day of March, they were both brought thither: Where the biſhop cauſed M. Thomas Cauſtons articles and anſwers firſt to be read openly, and after perſwaded with him to recant and abiure his hereticall opinions, and to come home now at the laſt to their mother the catholike Church, and ſave himſelfe.

M. Cauſton & M. Higbed appeare again before the biſhop.

But M. Thomas Cauſton anſwered againe, and ſaid; No, I will not abiure. For I came not hither for that purpoſe; and therewithall did exhibite in writing unto the Biſhop (as well in his owne name, as alſo in Thomas Higbeds name) a confeſſion of their faith, to the which they would ſtand: and required leave to read the ſame, which (after great ſuit) was obtained, and ſo he read it openly in the hearing of the people, as followeth.

M. Cauſton & M. Higbed do exhibit a confeſſion of their faith.

The confeſſion and faith of Thomas Cauſton and Thomas Higbed, which they delivered to the Biſhop of London, before the Maior and Sheriffes, and in the preſence of all the people there aſſembled. Anno 1555. the 9. of March, and were condemned for the ſame in the ſaid Conſiſtory in Pauls Church, the yeere and day aboveſaid.

1. First, we beleeve and profeſſe in Baptiſme, to forſake the Divell and all his works and pompes, and the vanities of the wicked world, with all the ſinfull luſts of the fleſh.

The confeſſion of M. Cauſton. Abrenouncing of the world.

2. We beleeve all the Articles of our Chriſtian faith.

The Articles of the Creed.

Anno 1555

The comman-dements. The Lords Prayer.

3 We beleeve, that we are bound to keepe Gods holy will and commandements, and to walk in the ſame all the dayes of our life.

4 We beleeve, that there is contained in the Lords Prayer all things neceſſary both for body and ſoule, and that we are taught thereby to pray to our heavenly Father, and no other Saint or Angell.

The Catho-like Church.

5 We beleeve, that there is a catholike Church, even the communion of Saints, Built upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles (as S. Paul ſaith) Chriſt being the head corner-ſtone. For the which Church Chriſt gave himſelfe, to make it to himſelf a glorious congregation without fault in his ſight.

The Church of it ſelf is ſin-full, by impu-tation righte-ous.

6 We beleeve, that this Church of her ſelfe, and by her own merits is ſinfull, and muſt needs ſay; Father forgive us our ſins: but through Chriſt and his merits, ſhe is freely forgiven: For he in his own perſon (ſaith S. Paul) hath purged her ſinnes, and made her faultleſſe in his ſight. Beſides whom, there is no Saviour, ſaith the Prophet: neither is there ſalvation, ſaith S. Peter, in any other name.

Chriſt our only mediatour.

7 We beleeve, as he is our only Saviour, ſo he is our only Mediator. For the Apoſtle Saint Paul ſaith; There is one God, one Mediatour betweene God and man, even the man Ieſus Chriſt. Wherfore ſeeing none hath this name, God and man, but Jeſus Chriſt, therefore there is no Mediator but Jeſus Chriſt.

The condition of the Church, to be perſecu-ted.

8 We beleeve, that this Church of Chriſt is and hath been perſecuted, by the words of Chriſt, ſaying; As they have perſecuted me, ſo ſhall they perſecute you: For the Diſciple is not above his Maſter. For it is not only given unto you to beleeve in Chriſt, ſaith S. Paul, but alſo to ſuffer for his ſake. For all that will live godly in Chriſt Ieſus, muſt ſuffer perſecution.

The Church only is dire-cted by Gods word, neither adding to nor taking from.

9 We beleeve, that the Church of Chriſt teacheth the word of God truly and ſincerely, putting nothing to, nor taking any thing fro: and alſo doth miniſter the ſacraments according to the Primitive Church.

The true Church for-biddeth none to read the Scriptures.

10 We beleeve, that this Church of Chriſt ſuffereth all men to read the Scriptures, according to Chriſts commandement, ſaying; Search the Scriptures: for they teſtifie of me. We read alſo out of the Acts, that when S. Paul preached, the audience daily ſearched the Scriptures, whether he preached truly or no. Alſo the Prophet David teacheth all men to pray with underſtanding: For how ſhall the unlearned, ſaith S. Paul, ſay Amen, at the giving of thanks, when they underſtand not what is ſaid? And what is more allowed than true faith, which, Saint Paul ſaith, cometh by hearing of the word of God?

God only to be worſhipped af-ter his word.

11 We beleeve, that the Church of Chriſt teacheth, that God ought to be worſhipped according to his word, and not after the doctrine of men. For in vaine, ſaith Chriſt, ye worſhip me, teaching nothing but the doctrine of men.

Gods precepts to be followed, and not the conſtitutions of men.

Alſo we are commanded of God by his Prophet, ſaying; Walke not in the traditions and precepts of your elders: but walk, ſaith he, in my precepts: doe that I command you: put nothing thereunto, neither take any thing from it. Likewiſe ſaith Chriſt, You ſhall forſake father and mother, and follow me. Whereby we learne, that if our Elders teach otherwiſe than God commanded, in that point we muſt forſake them.

The Lords Supper is not to be changed from the inſti-tution of Chriſt.

12 We beleeve, that the Supper of the Lord ought not to be altered and changed, foraſmuch as Chriſt himſelf, being the wiſdome of the Father, did inſtitute it. For it is written, Curſed is he that changeth my ordinances, and departeth from my commandements, or taketh any thing from them.

The Lords Supper how many waies it is abuſed.

Now we finde by the Scriptures, that this holy Supper is ſore abuſed.

First, in that it is given in one kinde, where Chriſt gave it in both.

The 2. abuſe.

Secondly, in that it is made a private Maſſe, where Chriſt made it a Communion: for he gave it not to one alone, but to all the Apoſtles in the name of the whole Church.

The 3. abuſe.

Thirdly, in that it is made a ſacrifice for the quick and the dead, whereas Chriſt ordained it for a remembrance of the everlaſting ſacrifice, which was his own body offered upon the altar of the Croſſe once for all, as the holy Apoſtle ſaith; Even the full and perfect price of our redemption: and where there is remiſſion of ſinne (ſaith he) there is no more ſacrifice for ſin.

The 4. abuſe.

Fourthly, in that it is worſhipped contrary to the commandement, ſaying; Thou ſhalt worſhip nothing that is made with hands.

The 5. abuſe.

Fifthly, in that it is given in an unknowne tongue, whereby the people are ignorant of the right uſe thereof, how Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our iuſtification, by whom we be ſet at peace with God, and received to his favour and mercy by his promiſe, whereof this ſacrament is a ſure ſeale and witneſſe.

The 6. abuſe.

Beſides this, it is hanged up, and ſhut in a boxe; yea, many times ſo long, that wormes breedeth in it, and ſo it putrifieth: whereby the rude people have an occaſion to ſpeak unreverently thereof, which otherwiſe would ſpeake reverently.

Therefore they that thus abuſe it, bring up the ſlander, and not we, which pray daily to God to reſtore it to the right uſe, according to Chriſts inſtitution.

Chriſts word Hoc eſt corpus meum not denied, but expounded.

Now concerning Chriſts words, This is my body, we deny them not; but we ſay, that the minde of Chriſt in them muſt be ſearched out by other open Scriptures, whereby we may come to the ſpirituall underſtanding of them, which ſhall be moſt to the glory of God: For as the holy Apoſtle ſaith; There is no Scripture that hath any private interpretation. Beſides this, the Scriptures are full of the like figurative ſpeeches: as for example, Chriſt ſaith; This cup is the new Teſtament in my blood. The rocke is Chriſt (ſaith S. Paul.) Whoſoever receiveth a childe in my name (ſaith our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt) receiveth me.

This phraſe of Scripture ex-pounded by o-ther phraſes.

Which ſentences muſt not be underſtood after the letter, leſt we doe erre, as the Capernaites did, which thought that Chriſts body ſhould have been eaten with their teeth, when he ſpake of the eating thereof. Unto whom Chriſt ſaid; Such a fleſhly eating of my body profiteth nothing: it is the ſpirit (ſaith our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt) that quickeneth; the fleſh profiteth nothing: for my words are ſpirit and life.

The words of the ſacrament ought to be ta-ken ſpiritual-ly, and not lite-rally. Chriſt is to be eaten ſpiritu-ally.

Thus we ſee that Chriſts words muſt be underſtood ſpiritually, and not literally. Therefore he that cometh to this worthy Supper of the Lord, muſt not prepare his iaw, but his heart; neither tooth nor belly; but, Beleeve (ſaith S. Auguſtine) and thou haſt eaten it: ſo that we muſt bring with us a ſpirituall hunger, and as the Apoſtle ſaith; Try and examine our ſelves, whether our conſcience do teſtifie unto us, that we do truly beleeve in Chriſt, according to the Scriptures; whereof if we be truly certified, being new born from our old converſation in heart, minde, will, and deed, then may we boldly with this marriage garment of our faith come to the feaſt.

In conſideration whereof we have invincible Scriptures, as of Chriſt himſelfe; This doe in remembrance of me. And S. Paul; As often (ſaith he) as ye eat of this bread, and drinke of this cup, ye ſhall remember the Lords death untill

The ſubſtance of bread not changed.

till he come. Here is no change, but bread ſtill. And Saint Luke affirmeth the ſame. Alſo Chriſt hath made a iuſt promiſe, ſaying; Me you ſhall not have alwayes with you, I leave the world, and goe to my Father: for if I ſhould not depart, the comforter which I will ſend, cannot come unto you. So according to his promiſe he is aſcended as the Evangeliſts teſtifie. Alſo Saint Peter ſaith, That heaven ſhall keepe him untill the laſt day alſo.

Chriſts body but in one place at once.

Now as touching his omnipotent power, we confeſſe and ſay with S. Auguſtine, that Chriſt is both God and man. In that he is God, he is every where; but in that he is man, he is in heaven, and can occupie but one place: whereunto the Scriptures do agree. For his body was not in all places at once when he was here; for it was not in the grave when the women ſought it, as the Angell ſaith: neither was it at Bethania where Lazarus died, by Chriſts owne words, ſaying; I am glad I was not there. And thus we conclude with the Scriptures, that Chriſt is in his holy Supper ſacramentally and ſpiritually in all them that worthily receive it, and corporally in heaven, both God and man.

Their proteſtation.

And further, we make here our proteſtation before God (whom we call to record in this matter) that this which we have ſaid, is neither of ſtubbornneſſe, nor wilfull minde, as ſome iudge of us; but even of very conſcience, truly (we truſt) grounded on Gods holy word. For before we tooke this matter in hand, we beſought God from the bottome of our hearts, that we might do nothing contrary to his holy and bleſſed word. And in that he hath thus ſhewed his power in our weakneſſe, we cannot worthily praiſe him, unto whom we give hearty thanks, through Ieſus Chriſt our Lord, Amen.

M. Cauſton and M. Higbed conſtant to death in their confeſſion.

When he had thus delivered and read their confeſſion, the Biſhop ſtill perſiſting ſomtime in faire promiſes, ſometime threatning to pronounce iudgement, aſked them whether they would ſtand to this their confeſſion and other anſwers? To whom Cauſton ſaid, Yea, we will ſtand to our anſwers written with our hands, and to our beliefe therein contained. After which anſwer the Biſhop began to pronounce ſentence againſt him.

M. Cauſton appealeth to the Cardinall.

Then he ſaid, that it was much raſhneſſe, and without all love and mercy, to give iudgement without anſwering to their confeſſion by the truth of Gods word, whereunto they ſubmitted themſelves moſt willingly. And therefore I, quoth Cauſton (becauſe I cannot have iuſtice at your hand, but that ye will thus raſhly condemne me) do appeale from you to my L. Cardinall.

D. Smith ready to anſwer their confeſſion, but could not be ſuffered.

Then D. Smith ſaid, that he would anſwer their confeſſion. But the Biſhop (not ſuffering him to ſpeak) willed Harpsfield to ſay his mind, for the ſtay of the people; who taking their confeſſion in his hand, neither touched nor anſwered one ſentence thereof.

Sentence pronounced againſt Maſter Cauſton and M. Higbed.

Which done, the Biſhop pronounced ſentence, firſt againſt the ſaid Thomas Cauſton, and then calling Thomas Higbed, cauſed his articles and anſwers likewiſe to be read. In the reading whereof Higbed ſaid; Ye ſpeak blaſphemy againſt Chriſts paſſion, and ye go about to trap us with your ſubtilties and ſnares. And though my father and mother, and other my kinſfolke did beleeve, as you ſay, yet they were deceived in ſo beleeving.

And further, where you ſay, that my Lord, named Cranmer (late Archbiſhop of Canterbury) and others ſpecified in the ſaid articles, be Heretikes; I do wiſh that I were ſuch an Heretike as they were, and be. Then the Biſhop aſked him againe, whether he would turne from his error, and come to the unity of their Church? To whom he ſaid, No; I would ye ſhould recant: for I am in the truth, and you in error.

Well (quoth the Biſhop) if ye will returne, I will gladly receive you.

No, ſaid Higbed, I will not returne as you will have me, to beleeve in the ſacrament of the Altar your God.

M. Cauſton and M. Higbed condemned and ſent to Newgate.

Whereupon the Biſhop proceeded, and gave iudgement upon him, as he had done before upon Thomas Cauſton. When all this was thus ended, they were both delivered to the Sheriffes, and ſo by them ſent to Newgate, where they remained by the ſpace of 14. dayes, praiſed be God, not ſo much in afflictions, as in conſolations.

For the increaſe whereof they earneſtly deſired all their good brethren and ſiſters in Chriſt to pray, that God for his Sons ſake would go forth with that great mercy, which already he had begun in them, ſo that they might perſevere unto the end, to the praiſe of the eternall God, and comfort of all their brethren.

M. Cauſton and M. Higbed brought from Newgate into Eſſex.

Theſe 14. dayes (after their condemnation) once expired, they were the 23. day of this moneth of March fetched from Newgate at foure of the clock in the morning, and ſo led through the City unto Algate, where they were delivered unto the Sheriffe of Eſſex, and there being faſt bound in a cart, were ſhortly after brought to their ſeverall appointed places of burning: that is to ſay, Thomas Higbed to Hornden on the hill, and Thomas Cauſton to Rayly (both in the County of Eſſex) where they did moſt conſtantly, the 26. day of the ſame moneth, ſeale this their faith with ſhedding of their blood by moſt cruell fire, to the glory of God, and great reioycing of the godly.

The conſtant martyrdome of M. Thomas Cauſton, and M. Higbed, martyrs.

At the burning of which M. Higbed Iuſtice Browne was alſo preſent, as is above ſpecified, and divers Gentlemen in the Shire were commanded to be preſent, for feare belike, leſt they ſhould be taken from them. And thus much touching the apprehenſion, examination, confeſſion, condemnation, and burning of theſe two godly and conſtant Martyrs of God.

William Pygot, Stephen Knight, and Iohn Laurence, with their examination and conſtant martyrdome.

March 28.

William Pygot, Stephen Knight, Iohn Laurence, martyrs.

IN the ſtory before of Thomas Tomkins and his fellowes, mention was made of ſix which were examined, and condemned together by Biſhop Boner, the 9. day of February. Of the which ſixe condemned perſons, two, which were Tomkins and William Hunter (as ye heard) were executed, the one upon the 26. of February, and the other upon the 26. day of March. Other three, to wit, William Pygot, and Stephen Knight, ſuffered upon the 28. day, and Iohn Laurence the 29. of the ſaid moneth of March.

Touching the which three Martyrs, now ſomthing to ſay of their examinations: It was firſt demanded of them, what their opinion was of the ſacrament of the Altar. Whereunto they ſeverally anſwered, and alſo ſubſcribed, that in the ſacrament of the Altar, under formes of bread and wine, there is not the very ſubſtance of the body and blood of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, but a ſpeciall partaking of the body and blood of Chriſt; the very body and blood of Chriſt being onely in heaven, and no where elſe. This anſwer thus made, the Biſhop cauſed certaine articles to be read unto them, tending to the ſame effect, as did the articles before of Tomkins and of M. Cauſton. The tenor whereof here followeth.

Anno 1555.

Articles or interrogatories objected by the Biſhop of London to William Pygot, Stephen Knight, and Iohn Laurence, the 8. of February. 1555.

Articles objected to William Pygot and his fellowes.

VVHether doe you thinke, and ſtedfaſtly beleeve, that it is a catholike, faithfull, Chriſtian, and true doctrine, to teach, preach, and ſay, that in the Sacrament of the Altar, under the formes of bread and wine, there is without any ſubſtance of bread and wine there remaining, by the omnipotent power of Almighty God, and his holy word, really, truly, and in very deed the true and naturall body and blood of our Saviour Ieſus Chriſt, the ſelf ſame in ſubſtance (though not in outward forme and appearance) which was borne of the Virgin Mary, and ſuffered upon the Croſſe, yea, or nay?

Belief of their fore-elders.

Whether doe you think, and ſtedfaſtly beleeve, that your parents, kinsfolke, friends, and acquaintance, here in this preſent Realme of England, before your birth a great while, and alſo after your birth, profeſſing and beleeving the ſaid doctrine and faith, concerning the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, had a true Chriſtian faith, and were faithfull and true Chriſtian people, or no?

Belief of their Godfathers & Godmothers.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly beleeve, that your Godfathers and Godmother, profeſſing and beleeving the ſaid doctrine and faith, concerning the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, had a true Chriſtian faith, and were faithfull and true Chriſtian people, or no?

Belief of their young age.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly beleeve, that your owne ſelfe in times paſt, being of the age of 14. yeeres, and above, did thinke and beleeve concerning the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar in all points, as your ſaid parents, kinsfolke, friends, acquaintance, godfathers, and godmother did then think and believe them, or no?

Beliefe of the King & Queen, and Nobility.

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly beleeve, that our Soveraignes the King and the Queene of this Realme of England, and all the Nobility, Clergy, and Laity of this Realme, profeſſing and beleeving the ſaid doctrine and faith, as other Chriſtian Realmes doe, concerning the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, have a true Chriſtian faith and beleeve as the catholike and true Church of Chriſt hath alwayes beleeved, preached, and taught, or no?

Beliefe of the pretenſed Catholike Church

Whether do you think, and ſtedfaſtly beleeve, that our Saviour Chriſt and his holy Spirit hath beene, is, and ſhall be with his catholike Church, even to the worlds end, governing and ruling the ſame in all things, eſpecially in the neceſſary points of Chriſtian religion, not ſuffering the ſame to erre, or to be deceived therein?

The reall preſence and tranſubſtantiation.

Whether is it true, that you being ſuſpected or infamed to be culpable and faulty in ſpeaking againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, and againſt the very true preſence of Chriſts naturall body, and the ſubſtance thereof in the ſaid ſacrament, and thereupon called before me upon complaint made to me againſt you, have not beene a good ſpace in my houſe, having freely meat and drink, and alſo divers times inſtructed and informed, aſwell by one being our Ordinary, as alſo by my Chaplaines and divers other learned men, ſome whereof were Biſhops, ſome Deanes, and ſome Archdeacons, and every one of them learned in Divinity, and minding well unto you, and deſiring the ſafeguard of your ſoule, and that you ſhould follow and beleeve the doctrine of the catholike Church as afore, concerning the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, and whether you did not at all times ſince your ſaid coming to me, utterly refuſe to follow and beleeve the ſaid doctrine concerning the ſaid ſacrament?

Whether can you now find in your heart and conſcience to conforme your ſelfe in all points to the ſaid faith and catholike Church concerning the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, faithfully, truly, and plainly, without any diſſimulation, beleeving therein, as our ſaid Soveraignes, with the Nobility, Clergy, and Laity of this Realme, and other Chriſtian Realms: and other perſons aforeſaid, and alſo the ſaid catholike Church have, and do beleeve in that behalfe?

In caſe you ſo cannot, what ground have you to maintaine your opinion, and who is of the ſame opinion with you, and what conference have you had therein with any, what comfort and what reliefe have you had therein by any of them, and what are their names and ſurnames, and their dwelling places?

Their anſwers to theſe articles were not much diſcrepant from Tomkins, and other like Martyrs above mentioned, as here followeth to be ſeene.

The anſwers of Stephen Knight, and William Pygot, to the aforeſaid articles.

Anſwers to the articles aforeſaid.

TO the firſt article, they beleeve, that the contents of this article is not agreeable to Scripture.

To the ſecond, they anſwer and beleeve, that their parents and other expreſſed in the ſaid article, ſo beleeving as is contained in the ſame, were deceived.

To the third they anſwer, that they ſo beleeved, but they were deceived therein, as they now beleeve.

To the fourth they ſay, that they have heretofore beleeved as is contained in the ſaid article, but now they do not ſo beleeve.

To the fifth they ſay, that if they ſo beleeve, they are deceived.

To the ſixth, they beleeve the ſame to be true.

To the ſeventh they anſwer, and beleeve the contents of the ſame to be true.

To the eighth they anſwer, that they can no whit conforme themſelves to the faith and doctrine contained and ſpecified in this article, untill it be proved by Scripture.

To the ninth they ſay, that they have no ground to maintaine their ſaid opinions, but the truth, which (as they ſaid) hath beene perſwaded by learned men, as D. Taylor of Hadly, and ſuch other.

Theſe anſwers being made and exhibited, they were commanded to appeare againe the next day, at eight of the clocke in the morning, and in the meane while to bethinke themſelves what they would do.

Another appearance of the ſaid priſoners before Boner.

Another appearance

THe next day in the morning, being the 9. of February, before their open appearance, the Biſhop ſent for William Pygot, and Stephen Knight into his great chamber in his palace, where he perſwaded with them to recant, and deny their former profeſſion.

Who anſwered, that they were not perſwaded in their conſciences to returne and abiure their opinions, whereunto they had ſubſcribed. Within a while after, they were all three (with Thomas Tomkins, and William Hunter aforenamed) brought openly into the Conſiſtory, the 9. day of February aforeſaid, and there had the ſame articles propounded unto them, which were before propounded unto the foreſaid Thomas Tomkins (as appeareth in the diſcourſe of his hiſtory) and thereto alſo ſubſcribed theſe words, I do ſo beleeve.

The

Talk between Boner and John Laurence Prieſt. John Laurence ſometime a Frier.

The Biſhop alſo uſed certaine talk unto John Laurence only. Whereunto he anſwered in this manner; that he was a Prieſt, and was conſecrated and made a Prieſt about 18. yeeres paſt, and that he was ſomtime a blacke Frier profeſſed; that alſo he was aſſured unto a maid, whom he intended to have married.

And being againe demanded his opinion upon the Sacrament, he ſaid, that it was a remembrance of Chriſts body, and that many have been deceived in beleeving the true body of Chriſt to be in the ſacrament of the Altar, and that all ſuch as do not beleeve as he doth, do erre. And after this talke and other faire words and threatnings, they were all of them commanded to appeare againe at afternoone.

The third and laſt appearance.

The third and laſt appearance.

AT the which houre they came thither againe, and there after the accuſtomed manner were exhorted to recant and revoke their doctrine, and receive the faith. To the which they conſtantly anſwered they would not, but would ſticke to that faith that they had declared and ſubſcribed unto, for that they did beleeve that it was no error which they beleeved; but that the contrary thereof was very hereſie.

Stephen Knight, William Pygot, and John Laurence condemned. John Laurence degraded.

When the Biſhop ſaw that neither his faire flatterings, nor yet his cruell threatenings would prevaile, he gave them ſeverally their iudgements. And becauſe John Laurence had beene one of their annointed Prieſts, he was by the Biſhop there (according to their order) ſolemnly degraded, the manner whereof you may ſee in the hiſtory of M. Hooper afore-paſſed.

Their ſentence of condemnation, and this degradation once ended, they were committed unto the cuſtody of the Sheriffes of London, who ſent them unto Newgate, where they remained with ioy together, untill they were carried down into Eſſex, and there the 28. day of March, the ſaid William Pygot was burned at Braintree; and Stephen Knight at Mauldon, who at the ſtake, kneeling upon the ground, ſaid this prayer which here followeth.

Ste. Knight burned at Mauldon, Wil. Pygot at Braintree. March 28.

The prayer that Stephen Knight ſaid at his death upon his knees, being at the ſtake, at Mauldon.

godly prayer Ste. Knight his martyrdome.

O Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for whoſe love I leave willingly this life, and deſire rather the bitter death of thy Croſſe, with the loſſe of all earthly things, than to abide the blaſphemy of thy moſt holy Name, or to obey men in breaking thy holy Commandement: Thou ſeeſt, O Lord, that where I might live in worldly wealth to worſhip a falſe God, and honour thine enemy, I choſe rather the torment of the body, and the loſſe of this life, and have counted all things but vile, duſt, and dung, that I might win thee; which death is dearer unto me, than thouſands of gold and ſilver. Such love, O Lord, haſt thou laid up in my breaſt, that I hunger for thee, as the Deere that is wounded deſireth the ſoyle. Send thy holy comforter, O Lord, to aid, comfort, and ſtrengthen this weake peece of earth, which is empty of all ſtrength of it ſelfe. Thou remembreſt, O Lord, that I am but duſt, and able to do nothing that is good: Therefore, O Lord, as of thine accuſtomed goodneſſe and love thou haſt bidden me to this banquet, and accounted me worthy to drink of thine owne cup amongſt thine elect; even ſo give me ſtrength, O Lord, againſt this thine element, which as to my ſight it is moſt irkſome and terrible, ſo to my minde it may at thy commandement (as an obedient ſervant) be ſweet and pleaſant, that through the ſtrength of thy holy Spirit, I may paſſe through the rage of this fire into thy boſome, according to thy promiſe, and for this mortall receive an immortall, and for this corruptible put on incorruption: Accept this burnt ſacrifice and offering, O Lord, not for the ſacrifice, but for thy deare Sonnes ſake my Saviour, for whoſe teſtimony I offer this free-will offering with all my heart and with all my ſoule. O heavenly Father, forgive me my ſins, as I forgive all the world. O ſweet Sonne of God my Saviour, ſpread thy wings over me. O bleſſed and holy Ghoſt, through whoſe mercifull inſpiration I am come hither, conduct me into everlaſting life. Lord, into thy hands I commend my ſpirit. Amen.

Pſalme 42.

Anno 1555.

Marke the ſpirit of this prayer, & compare it with the prayer of the Papiſts at the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

The death and martyrdome of Iohn Laurence Prieſt.

John Laurence Martyr. March 29.

Jo. Laurence lamed with irons in priſon.

THe next day, being the 29. day of this moneth, the ſaid John Laurence was brought to Colcheſter, and there being not able to go (for that as well his legs were ſore worne with heavy irons in priſon, as alſo his body weakned with evill keeping) was borne to the fire in a chaire, and ſo ſitting, was in his conſtant faith conſumed with fire.

The cruell burning of Iohn Laurence, Martyr.

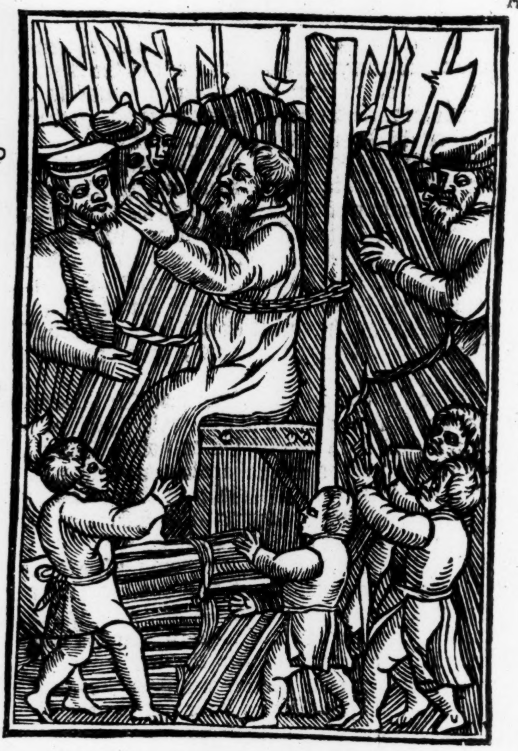
The martyrdome of John Laurence Prieſt, at Colcheſter, Anno 1555.



At the burning of this Laurence, he ſitting in the fire, the young children came about the fire, and cried, as well as young children could ſpeak, ſaying; Lord ſtrengthen thy ſervant, and keepe thy promiſe, Lord ſtrengthen thy ſervant, and keep thy promiſe: which thing, as it is rare, ſo it is no ſmall manifeſtation of the glory of God, which wrought this in the hearts of theſe little ones; nor yet a little commendation to their parents, which from their youth brought them up in the knowledge of God and his truth.

Anno 1555

The hiſtory of Doctor Robert Farrar, Biſhop of S. Davids in Wales, who moſt conſtantly gave his life for the teſtimony of the truth, March 30. Anno 1555.

The burning of D. Robert Farrar, biſhop of S. Davids, and Martyr.

THe next day after, which was the 30. day of the ſaid moneth of March, followed the worthy and conſtant martyrdome of the Biſhop of S. Davids in Wales, called Robert Farrar, who was the next Biſhop in this Catalogue of Chriſtian Martyrs, that ſuffered after M. Hooper. This aforeſaid Farrar, by the favour and good will of the Lord Protector, was firſt called and promoted to that dignity. This man I may well call twice a Martyr, not only for the cruell death of the fire, which he ſuffered moſt conſtantly in the dayes of Q. Mary, unto the ſhedding of his blood; but alſo for divers other injuries and moleſtations in K. Edwards time, which he no leſſe firmly than unworthily ſuſtained at the hands of his enemies after the fall of the Duke of Somerſet. Of theſe his vexations and troubles, with the wrangling articles and informations laid againſt him, to the number of 56. and of the malice conceived againſt him by certaine covetous Canons of the Church of Carmarthen, and what were the proceedings of both parts, as well of the innocent, as of the crafty adverſaries, and what were their names, in their articles againſt him, in order here followeth.

56. Articles againſt biſhop Farrar in K. Edwards time, deviſed by Thomas Young, Conſtantine, and other his adverſaries. Tho. Young ſon in law to Conſtantine.

The principall articles againſt Biſhop Farrar.

1 GEorge Conſtantine, David Walter his ſervant, Thomas Young Chaunter of the Cathedrall Church, who was afterward Archbiſhop of York, Rowland Merick, Doctor of law, who was afterward Biſhop of Bangor, Thomas Lee, and Hugh Rawlins, &c.

THrough the procurement and inſtance of theſe his adverſaries, joyning and confederating together, one Hugh Rawlins Prieſt, and Thomas Lee brother in law to the ſaid George Conſtantine, did exhibit to the Kings moſt honourable Councell certaine articles and informations, conceived and deviſed by the perſons before named, to the intent to blemiſh the biſhops credit, and utterly (as they thought and made their boaſt) to pull him from his Biſhoprick, and to bring him in a Premunire. The copie of which articles we thought here good to expreſſe, and ſo after them to ſet his anſwers to the ſame.

Articles and informations to the Kings honourable Councell, put up and exhibited by Hugh Rawlins, and Thomas Lee, againſt the bleſſed man of God, Maſter Farrar Biſhop of S. Davids.

Abuſe of the authority to him committed

1 IMprimis, when the ſaid Biſhop firſt came to his Dioceſſe, he appointed his Chancellor by his letters of Commiſſion, omitting the Kings Maieſties ſtile and authority, and grounded his ſaid Commiſſion upon forraigne uſurped lawes the authority; by force of which authority his ſaid Chancellor did viſit certaine Deanries of his ſaid Dioceſſe, and moniſhed the Chaunter and Chapter of the Cathedrall Church of S. Davids aforeſaid, againſt a certaine day and place, for like intent and purpoſe, contrary to the Kings Highneſſe lawes and ſtatutes, and in derogation of his Highneſſe Supremacy.

2 Item, that the ſaid Chaunter and Chapter, perceiving the faults of the ſaid Commiſſion, took the ſame from the Regiſter into their cuſtody, refuſing to appeare by vertue thereof, and by ſecret and charitable wayes and meanes did admoniſh the ſaid Biſhop of the unlawfulneſſe and faults of the ſaid Commiſſion, and of the danger that he had incurred for granting and executing the ſame; opening alſo unto him the effect of the Statute made in the 28. yeere of our late Soveraigne Lord Henry the 8. Which monitions notwithſtanding, the ſaid Biſhop neglecting the ſame, and continuing in his malicious doing or inexcuſable ignorance, about the 20. day of Auguſt, in the fourth yeere of the reigne of our Soveraigne Lord that now is, did conferre unto one John Evans the Vicarage of Pembrin, inſtituting him by authority of the old forraigne uſurped law, making no mention of the Kings Highneſſe authority, in contempt and derogation of the ſame.

3 Item, whereas the Chancellor and Vicar generall to the ſaid Biſhop, did upon a lawfull title, and by the Kings Highneſſe ſupreme authority, admit and inſtitute one John Gough into the Rectory of Haſkard with the appurtenances, and gave out in the Kings name under his Highneſſe ſeale Eccleſiaſticall appointed for that office, with the Teſte of the ſaid Biſhop, and ſubſcription of the ſaid Chancellour, a Mandate to induct accordingly; by vertue whereof the ſaid John Gough was inducted by the Officiall there, into the reall poſſeſſions of the ſame Rectory, with the rights and appurtenances to the ſame belonging; whereupon the Regiſter of the ſaid Dioceſſe, at the requeſt of the foreſaid Chancellor did ſignifie the premiſſes, with all the circumſtances, before divers perſons to the forenamed Biſhop: Who notwithſtanding did inſtitute and cauſe to be inducted one Harry Coddard unto the ſame Parſonage, making no mention of the Kings Maieſties authority nor ſupremacy; in contempt and derogation of the ſame his Highneſſe crowne and dignity, and in extolling the forraigne uſurped authority, contrary to the forme of the Statute, &c.

4 Item, the ſaid Biſhop, immediately after the unlawfull Inſtitution and Induction of Goddard aforeſaid, moleſted the ſaid John Gough lawfully inſtituted and inducted as before, citing him from place to place, objecting no matter unto him of long ſeaſon, till at length he articled. Among which articles was contained, Item, interrogatur quo titulo tenet Rectoriam de Haskard: So taking upon him the cognition of the title of the whole fruits and patronage, in contempt of the Kings Highneſſe regall crowne and dignity, and in derogation of the lawes and ſtatutes of this Realme.

5 Item, he hath commonly made his collations and Inſtitutions, as he did his firſt commiſſion, in his own name and authority, without expreſſing the Kings ſupremacy.

6 Item, he hath made under his ſeale one Collation, two Inſtitutions, and three Mandates to induct, in one vacation of one Benefice, three ſeverall perſons, without order of law, or revocation of any of them, giving to every one like authority, title, and right. Whereby, except good foreſight aſwell of Juſtices of the Peace, as of the friends had of beene, there had inſued much inconvenience amongſt the partakers of the intituled incumbents in that behalfe.

7 Item, the ſaid Biſhop decreeing Caveats to be made in Benefices, thereby knowing the titles litigious, inſtituted and cauſed to be inducted without triall of any title or due order of law.

8 Item, he directeth his Mandates of induction unto private men, and not to the Archdeacons nor their Officials; contrary to the law and cuſtome uſed in that behalfe. Notwithſtanding he hath been counſelled to the contrary of men that be learned.

9 Item, having no manner of knowledge nor practice in the law, he ſitteth every day in harveſt, and other times, upon cauſes without aſſiſtance of learned in the law, having with him only an unlearned boy, which is no Notary, to his Scribe, neither obſerving the law, nor yet reaſonable order. And therefore doth no good, but trifleth the time, as may appeare by his acts, if he have them to be ſhewed.

10 Item, he and his Officers, by his knowledge, uſeth to diſpenſe with marriages, to be ſolemnized without banes, contrary to the lawes and ordinances in that behalfe.

11 Item, whereas one Thomas Prichard, a Chapleine of his, ſolemnized matrimony in a private houſe without banes, and that betwixt a Prieſt, and a ſiſter of hers that was appointed to be married with the ſaid Prieſt that day; he alſo being a Parſon, and leaving his Cure unſerved that day being Sunday: and notwithſtanding that one of the Kings Councell in the Marches of Wales informed the ſaid Biſhop of the ſame miſdemeanours, requiring due reformation thereof; he hath done nothing therein, but put the ſame Chaplaine in office, and made him his Commiſſary generall ſince that time, bearing a ſpeciall favour to the reſt of the offenders.

12 Item, whereas one Meredith ap Thomas, his houſhold ſervant, was accuſed of one Sage Hugh, to have beene father of her childe, the ſaid Biſhop, without purgation of his ſervant, cauſed him to ſue the parents of the ſaid Sage of infamy, firſt in his principall Conſiſtory, and from thence before a Commiſſary of his, being his houſhold Chapleine, and at the laſt took the matter before himſelfe, ſo railing againſt all his Officers, becauſe they proceeded not after his partiall affection, and againſt the law, that honeſt men of Carmarthen, where he then ſate upon the cauſe, iudged him to be, or at the leaſt to have been diſtract of his wit: and by his partiall handling, the cauſe remaineth unfiniſhed, and the child without father.

13 Item, whereas one Jenkin Ph. accuſed William Chambers, a ſervant of the Biſhops, that found this William in adulterous manner with his wife, by reaſon whereof the Biſhop expelled the wife out of his houſe, the ſaid infamy not purged, the parties have been both againe in the Biſhops houſe and ſervice ſince that time, to the evill example of other.

14 Item, by his unlawfull ſequeſtration of the fruits of the Benefices of Langattocke, and Lamyhangel, by the undiſcreet handling of the ſame, there were raiſed the number of foure hundred people or more, which bickered ſundry times together, to the great danger of the inhabitants thereabout, had it not beene pacified by the diſcreet meanes of Sir Roger Vaughan Knight.

15 Item, by his like unlawfull collation of the Prebend of Lambiſter to one Stephen Greene, a Chapleine of his, by covenant and promiſe to maintaine the ſute, by whoſe crafty and undiſcreet handling of the ſame, there was raiſed in the County of Radner the 19. day of Auguſt laſt paſt, about three or foure hundred men to like danger, but that the matter was ſtayed by John Bradſhaw, Rice ap Olin, and Stephen ap Rice, Juſtices of the ſame County. Who with great danger to themſelves and theirs, pacified the matter, committing an hundred of the offenders to ward.

16 Item, ſuch as he oweth diſpleaſure unto, he citeth from place to place, and day to day, onely for their vexation, laying no matter againſt them; and being diverſe times required the copy of his proceedings againſt them, to the intent they might anſwer accordingly, and be at their lawfull defence; he denieth to all ſuch perſons the copies of his proceedings.

17 Item, he and his Officers wink at the manifeſt and open crimes of his fautors and adherents, to the evill example of the whole Dioceſſe, and abuſeth the cenſures of excommunication and ſuſpenſion, making it an inſtrument of revenging againſt ſuch as they do not favour.

18 Item, having received payment of the Kings Maieſties ſubſidy, due in October, the 4. yeere of his Graces reigne, of the foreſaid Chaunter of the Cathedrall Church of S. Davids, and Rowland Meyrike, two of the Reſidentaries there, before Chriſtmas laſt, he uniuſtly of a prepenſed minde and purpoſe afterward certified them for Recuſants, to their undoing, if they had not been admoniſhed of his cruell purpoſe, and provided lawfull defence for the ſame.

19 Item, the ſaid biſhop celebrating matrimony in his own perſon, diſpenſed contrary to the booke of ordinance, with the parties married, for not receiving the holy Communion; the parties both being young, and luſty perſons, having no reaſonable cauſe wherefore they ſhould abſtaine. At which celebration the biſhop communicated not himſelfe. And further, the Communion was celebrated by a Chaplein of his, with ſuperſtitious blowings, kneelings, and knockings both of the Chapleine that miniſtred, and of all the company, only one other Prieſt communicating for the manner.

20 Item, where the Officiall of the Archdeacon of Carmarthen, in his viſitation within Carmarthem, found, contrary unto the ſaid ordinance, an Altar ſet up in the body of the Church, for celebration of the Communion, and cauſed the ſaid Altar to be taken away, and a table to be ſet in the middle of the Church; the biſhop after the ſame commanded the Vicar of Carmarthen to ſet the table without the Chancell againe for the miniſtration of the Communion.

Maintenance of ſuperſtition contrary to the Kings ordinance and iniunctions.

21 Item, he being often in Carmarthen, and other places in the Chancell at the time of holy Communion, not onely tarried there himſelfe, neither communicating nor miniſtring bareheaded and uncoyffed, reverently kneeling, but alſo permitteth the people there to continue the Chancell and Quire full, kneeling and knocking their breaſts. Which manner is yet uſed in all the Dioceſſe, without any reformation or gainſay of him or any of his Officers.

22 Item, whereas ſuperſtitious praying upon beades is not only ungodly, but reproved in the Kings Maieſties Iniunctions; the ſaid biſhop meeting many with beads in their hands, never rebuked any of them.

23 Item, the ſaid biſhop being in the Pulpit, and ſeeing corſes there within the Church, with a great number of lights upon them, never ſpake againſt any of them.

24 Item, whereas the ordinance willeth, that no children be baptized but upon the Sunday, or Holy day (onely cauſe of neceſſity excepted) he, having two children himſelf born without danger, cauſed one of them to be baptized on the worke day. And by his example, without any contradiction or motion of reformation, it is uſed, as it hath beene accuſtomed, in all the Dioceſſe commonly, contrary unto the book of ordinance in that behalfe.

25 Item, from his firſt comming into the Dioceſſe, he hath had and yet hath his only ſtudy, labour, and practice, to ſurvey land, and to looke for mines, &c. neglecting his owne

Covetouſneſ

bounden

bounden duty to apply his booke and preaching.

26 Item, he keepeth no manner of hoſpitality, but hath his ſervants table in one parlour with him, leſt any ſtranger ſhould approach his ſervants being at their meat.

27 Item, he is commonly talking not of godlineſſe, but of worldly matters; as baking, brewing, incloſing, ploughing, mining of Mill ſtones, diſcharging of tenants, and ſuch like, not only at his table, but alſo moſt commonly at other places.

28 Item, he hath warned divers tenants out of their lands, which they and their elders have enioyed for their rents theſe hundred yeeres, and more, and occupied with tillage; which he ſaith he will incloſe, and being ſued to of poore men, becauſe of quietneſſe, he anſwered; The Crowes ſhall eat the corne, rather than ye ſhall have any profit thereof.

29 Item, when the Vicars Chorall of Saint Davids, for reliefe of their hoſpitality, had an Iland of his called the Biſhops Ile, for 40. s. rent; he hath ſet it to a Chapleine of his for five pound by yeere. And where, at the ſuit of the ſaid Vicars, it was granted by the Biſhop in the whole Chapter, that the Vicars ſhould have it for yeeres at 40. s. rent, and pay 20. li. entry; he now covetouſly, and againſt his promiſe openly made, denieth the ſame, except the Vicars would give 50. pound.

30 Item, he cauſed the Curate of S. Davids to warne their tenants out of their ſaid lands in the Pulpit, to the great offence of the people, which were wont to have Gods word preached there; and ſo they ſaid to the Curate at that time.

31 Item, to the plowing of a Paſture not above ten dayes worke, in Lent, Anno 1549. he had 32. ploughes in one day, and thoſe ploughes the Prieſt bade in the Church, contrary to the Statute of Gomortha in that behalfe provided, and to the evill example of Gentlemen in that countrey.

32 Item, where the Kings Maieſty of godly remembrance, Henry the eighth, appointed at Brecknocke a Schoolemaſter, Vſher, Reader of Divinity, a Miniſter, and certain Schollers, and for the maintenance thereof appointed xl. and xii. li. of the penſions and revenewes of Brecknock: the Biſhop finding it ſo furniſhed, hath neither Reader nor Miniſter there, covetouſly converting their ſtipends to his own uſe.

33 Item, the Biſhop was twice in one day preſented in the great Court, holden in the Court of Carmarthen, for incloſing and covetous incroching of the Kings high-way.

34 Item, he covetouſly occupieth purchaſing of lands, buying of cattell, merchandiſe, and other things, being indebted a notable ſumme to the Kings Maieſty, as may by his accounts in the Court of tenths and firſt fruits appeare.

35 Item, whereas one Lewis John Tho. Boole, putting from him his lawfull wedded wife, upon Chriſtmas Even laſt paſt, without banes had marriage ſolemnizate with a Concubine of his in a Church within three miles of the Biſhops abode at that time: the Biſhop ſince knowing the premiſſes, hath not onely of a covetous mind entred familiarity with the ſaid Lewis, and bought a peece of land of him, but alſo ever ſince hath (to have his lands good cheape) left both the parties and Prieſt unpuniſhed, uſing him ſo familiarly, that whereas a Sumner cited the parties to appeare among other criminals for the ſame fact; the Biſhop commanded the ſaid Sumner to let him alone, and ſo they all remaine unpuniſhed.

36 Item, whereas the whole Chapter of D. Davids (as it was thought) was in aſſured amity with the Biſhop, they all being his Officers or Chaplains, he procured them to be impleaded with a Writ of Quo Warranto in the Kings Bench, keeping the Writ with him ſecretly, at the leaſt three moneths, not delivering it, but only ten dayes before the day of their appearance, the parties being ſeven dayes iourney diſtant from London.

37 Item, he is a wilfull wrong doer, and troubler of men in their rights, entring upon their lawfull poſſeſſions, ſtirring thereby much contention, and ſo notably knowne, to the offence of the countrey.

Wilfull negligence.

38 Item, whereas the Biſhop aforeſaid was appointed in Auguſt, Anno 1547. and conſecrated in September following, he never came into the Dioceſſe himſelfe, nor ſent or appointed any Officer there before the moneth of Aprill, Anno 1558. to the great diſorder of the Kings Maieſties ſubiects, lack of reformation, and miniſtration of Iuſtice.

39 Item, during his viſitation, the ſaid Biſhop did not indeavor himſelf to ſee reformation, but rode ſurveying of lands, appointing vaine incloſures, and ſuch other things. Which are no part of the office to him committed, nor yet convenient, namely at that time.

40 Item, the viſitation finiſhed, he neither appointed his Officers to examine the Clergy of the places of Scripture to them appointed to be ſtudied in the ſame viſitation, nor hath hitherto effectually gone about any godly reformation, according to the ordinance of this Realme.

41 Item, the Biſhop ſince his coming to the Dioceſſe never miniſtred the Communion, ſaving only at two times, that he ordered certaine Deacons; but in every thing (ſave that he otherwhiles preacheth) ordereth himſelfe like no Miniſter, nor man of his vocation.

42 Item, he hath ſo alienated himſelfe from ſtudy, that he preacheth undiſcreetly, diſcrediting the office, not onely untruly reporting the Scriptures, but alſo preaching the ten Commandements in one place in declaration of the eighth of them, for lack of ſtuffe, the pith of his matter was matrimony of Prieſts.

43 Item, the 13. day of September laſt, he ordained certaine Deacons, and making his exhortation, he taught that a man was not bounden to forgive, but him that aſketh forgiveneſſe: and being admoniſhed by a letter better to declare the ſame, becauſe that divers were offended with that doctrine; he hath hitherto deferred ſo to do, to the maintenance of malicious hearts in theſe parts.

44 Item, ſince the firſt day of Auguſt, Anno 1549. unto the feaſt of Candlemas laſt, he hath preached but two or three Sermons, of which one was preached at Aberguilly upon Saint Stephens day laſt, to a great audience that underſtood no Engliſh, being but a mile from Carmarthen, an Engliſh towne, and the chief of his Dioceſſe.

45 Item, ſince his ordinary viſitation, which was finiſhed in July, Anno 1548. he hath neither preached, nor cauſed to be preached in the townes of Tinby, Pembroke nor Haverford, being Engliſh townes, not much diſtant from the place of his moſt continuance.

46 Item, the Churches appropriate to the Biſhop have no Paraphraſes in Engliſh, and few of them Bibles.

47 Item, the Churches of the Dioceſſe for the moſt part, and the Clergy almoſt every one lack Paraphraſes, notwithſtanding there hath beene theſe two yeeres, and yet be a great number of them to be ſold in the dioceſſe.

48 Item, to declare his folly in riding, he [illegible]

uſeth bridle with white ſtuds and ſnaffle, white Scottiſh ſtirrops, white ſpurs, a Scottiſh pad with a little ſtaffe of three quarters long, which he hath not onely uſed ſuperſtitiouſly theſe foure or five yeeres, in communication oftentimes, boaſting what countreyes he hath compaſſed and meaſured with the ſame ſtaffe.

49 Item, he hath made a vow, that he will never weare a cap; for he ſaith, it is comly wearing of a hat, and ſo cometh in his long gowne and hat, both into the Cathedrall Church, and to the beſt towne of his Dioceſſe, ſitting in that ſort in the Kings great Seſſions, and in his Conſiſtory, making himſelfe a mock to the people.

50 Item, he ſaid that he would goe to the Parliament on foot: And to his friends that diſſwaded him, alledging that it is not meet for a man in his place; he anſwered, I care not for that, it is no ſin.

51 Item, having a ſonne, he went before the Midwife to the Church, preſenting the child to the Prieſt, and giving his name Samuel, with a ſolemne interpretation of the name, appointing alſo two Godfathers and two Godmothers, contrary to the ordinance, making his ſon a monſter, and himſelfe a laughing ſtock throughout all the countrey.

52 Item, he daily uſeth whiſtling of his child, and ſaith that he underſtood his whiſtle, when he was but three dayes old. And being advertiſed of his friends, that men laughed at his folly, he anſwered; They whiſtle their horſes and dogs, and I am contented; they might alſo be contented that I whiſtle my childe and ſo whiſtleth him daily, all friendly admonition neglected.

53 Item, in his ordinary viſitation, among other his ſurveyes, he ſurveyed Milford haven, where he eſpied a Seale-fiſh tumbling. And he crept down to the water ſide, and continued there whiſtling by the ſpace of an houre, perſwading the company that laughed faſt at him, that by his whiſtling he made the fiſh to tarry there.

54 Item, ſpeaking of ſcarcity of herrings, he laid the fault to the covetouſneſſe of fiſhers, who in time of plenty took ſo many, that they deſtroyed the breeders.

55 Item, ſpeaking of the alteration of the coyne, he wiſhed that what metall ſoever it were of, the penny ſhould be in weight worth a penny of the ſame metall.

56 For a concluſion, the ſaid Biſhop in all his doings, ſince he came to his Dioceſſe, hath behaved himſelfe moſt unmeet for a man of his vocation, being for a miniſter of Iuſtice, an abuſer of the authority to him committed, for a teacher of the truth, and reformer of ſuperſtition, a maintainer of ſuperſtition without any doctrine of reformation, for a liberall and hoſpitall, an unſatiable covetous man: for a diligent overſeer, wilfull and negligent: for an example of godly wiſdome, given wholly to folly: for mercifull, a cruell revenger. And further, for a peace-maker, a ſower of diſcord. And ſo in all his behaviour a diſcreditor and ſlanderer of his vocation, and a deceiver of all men, that had hope that he ſhould doe any reformation. For hee yet hath neither brought into his Dioceſſe, nor hath belonging unto him any learned Preacher. But ſuch learned Preachers as he found in the Dioceſſe at his entry, he ſo vexeth and diſquieteth, that they cannot attend to apply their preaching, for the defence of their livings, againſt his quarrellous inventions and uniuſt certificates.

D. Wotton & ſir Iohn Maſon Commiſſioners for the hearing of the Biſhops matter

After theſe wrangling articles and informations were given up, then was the Biſhop called for to anſwer, the hearing whereof was committed unto Doctor Wotton, and ſir Iohn Maſon Knight, who likewiſe received the Biſhops anſwers to the foreſaid articles: the copie and effect of which anſwers hereafter follow.

The anſwer of Robert, Biſhop of S. Davids, to the Articles miniſtred unto him.

TO the firſt Article he ſaith, that after lawfull monition in the Kings Maieſties name and authority, from the ſaid Biſhop (being then at London) given to the Chaunter and Chapter of S. Davids, for viſitation at a certaine day there to be entred; the ſaid Biſhop himſelfe, for ſuch purpoſe coming into the Dioceſſe, knowing alſo that the Chaunter, and one of the Canons of that Church, and late before Commiſſaries in that dioceſſe, had not only by their own evill example and winking at the faults of other, or neglecting to correct the ſame, left there among Prieſts and others, much deteſtable whoredome; but had alſo ſpoyled the Cathedrall Church of Croſſes, Chalices, and Cenſers, with other plate, iewels, and ornaments of the Church, to the value of five hundred marks or more, for their owne private lucre (the Church remaining even yet very vile, and in great decay) and had alſo made further under their Chapter ſeale many blanks, to the number of twelve or more, Sede vacante, without the Kings licence or knowledge: Therefore he brought with him one Edmund Farlee, Bachelour of law, by D. Young and D. Neviſon to him commended, as a man ſufficient in faithfull truth and learning, to be his Chancellour. To whom he granted and ſealed a Commiſſion for that purpoſe, giving credit to him in his faculty, concerning the draught and forme thereof. But the Kings Maieſties ſtile of Supremacy was fully ſet forth in the ſame Commiſſion. Whether there were any default of formall words in ſetting forth of the Kings authority therein, he is not certaine. For he committed the doing thereof to his Chancellour, who was commended to him for a learned man. And the Biſhop ſaith, that he did never ground the Commiſſion upon any forraigne uſurped lawes or authority: Neither did his ſaid Chancellour by force of ſuch authority viſit any Deanry of the ſaid Dioceſſe, nor gave any monition to the Chaunter and Chapiter there, by force of that Commiſſion, for any like intent or purpoſe, but onely offered in the Kings Maieſties name and authority (to the ſaid Biſhop committed) to enter viſitation of the Chaunter and Chapiter of the Cathedrall Church, at another day to be executed by the Biſhop himſelfe, for reformation of the Chapter Church, and Miniſters there, according to the Kings gracious ordinances and iniunctions in that behalfe. But the aforeſaid Chaunter and Canon of the Church, before the ſight of any Commiſſion, ſtubbornly anſwered the ſaid Chancellor, that they would not receive him, nor any other to viſit them, except he were one of their Chapiter. And further, deſiring to ſee his Commiſſion, he delivered the ſame into their hands, who would not deliver it him againe. And ſo it may appeare that he did nothing by force of that Commiſſion.

2 To the ſecond article he ſaith, that they opened not unto him the danger of any Statute, to his knowledge and remembrance. Nevertheleſſe, he not knowing any default in the ſaid Commiſſion, and certainly minding with all diligence the faithfull execution of his office of preaching, and viſiting the whole Dioceſſe in his owne perſon, by the Kings Maieſties authority, for the conſervation of Gods peace and yͤ Kings, in that dangerous time of rebellion, then beginning to ariſe in other places, did neglect and lay apart the ſtubborne behaviour and ungodly doings

Anno 1555.

doings of the ſaid Chaunter and Canon, and agreed with them, omitting all contempts and reproaches towards him and his ſaid Chancellor, and all manner of contention by them done, fearing elſe that through their unquietnes ſome tumult might have riſen amongſt the people there, and did alſo make the ſaid Chaunter his Chancellor, and Canon his Commiſſary, according, to their ambitious deſires, to appeaſe their malice in that dangerous time. And further, he ſaith, that he made a collation to ſir John Evans of the Vicarage of Pembrin, what day or time he remembreth not, not by any old forraigne uſurped authority, but by the Kings authority onely, making full mention of the Kings ſtile and authority in the ſame collation.

3. & 4. To the third and fourth he ſaith, that whereas he had granted to George Conſtantine the office of a Regiſter, who brought unto him a Commiſſion for the Chancellorſhip, to be ſealed and delivered to the foreſaid Chaunter of Saint Davids, deſiring the ſaid Biſhop to ſeale it, he utterly refuſed ſo to do, becauſe the ſaid George had put therein a clauſe of admitting Clerkes into Benefices: the which authority the ſaid Biſhop would not in any wiſe grant, reſerving the examination and admiſſion of Clerks onely to himſelfe, for the avoiding of wicked bribery and partiality. Whereupon the ſaid George and the Chaunter promiſed the ſaid Biſhop by their faith and truth, afore three or foure honeſt witneſſes, not to execute that clauſe of Inſtitution into Benefices, but onely to thoſe Clerks whom the Biſhop did firſt examine and admit, and ſend unto them to be inſtituted and inducted: upon which promiſe the Biſhop ſealed the ſaid Commiſſion. And after that time, the Parſonage of Haskard being void, and by the reaſon of lapſe devolved to the Biſhops gift for that time, he conferred it to one ſir Henry Godherd, with a Collation of Inſtitution by the Kings authority, not extolling any forraigne uſurped authority. In the which Collation or Inſtitution is fully mentioned the renunciation of the Biſhop of Rome, and all forraigne powers and authority, with the full ſtile of his Maieſties Supremacy. And this collation of the Church of Haskard he gave, before he underſtood or knew that his Chancellor had given out the like, and he ſurely thinketh his Collation was the firſt. That notwithſtanding, the ſaid George Conſtantine, and the ſaid Chaunter having a vowſon determined by reaſon of lapſe, admitted and inſtituted one John Gough, to the ſaid Parſonage of Haskard, by vertue of their expired vowſon, and ſealed his Inſtitution with a wrong ſeale (becauſe they had not the right ſeale of office to that purpoſe) contrary to their former earneſt promiſe, and the Biſhops right, and without any manner of warning or fore-knowledge thereof to him given, which thing by them untruly done, the ſaid George Conſtantine nevertheleſſe came to the Biſhops houſe, and there did write with his owne hand the Letters of Induction for the ſaid ſir Henry Godherd Prieſt, compriſing in the ſame the whole ſumme of the Inſtitution or Collation which the ſaid Biſhop had made, and the ſame George did ſeale the ſaid Letters of Induction with his owne hand, finding no manner of fault therein, nor making any word or mention of his and the Chaunters former wrong doings, but ſo departed for that time. And afterward he came againe, and ſhewed the Biſhop what they had done before concerning the Parſonage aforeſaid. And further, the ſaid Defendant ſaith, that he did not moleſt the ſaid John Gough, but lawfully did call him in the Kings Maieſties name, not for any title of Patronage, but to know whether he were Parſon of Haskard, and how he was thereto admitted, and inſtituted, and inducted, and by what authority he preſumed to preach there, without the Kings Maieſties licence, with other like lawfull demands, whereunto he ſturdily refuſed to give anſwer; and ſaith, that the article contained in his accuſation, ſaying thus: Item interrogetur quo titulo tenet Rectoriam de Haskard, was not miniſtred unto the party in that ſort, ſo farre as he knoweth, but in theſe words or like, Quomodo intravit in Rectoriam, &c.

5. To the fifth he ſaith, that albeit George Conſtantine Regiſter, did wilfully withdraw his bounden ſervice due to the Kings Highneſſe, an to the ſaid Defendant in the Kings name, refuſing to attend either by himſelfe, or his ſufficient Deputy for writing of Records and other inſtruments, yet the ſaid Defendant made his Collations and Inſtitutions in his own name, not by his own authority, nor by any others, ſave onely the Kings authority, according as he hath declared in his anſwer to the firſt article, expreſſing in them the Kings Supremacy with the Biſhops owne name and ſeale of office, as he ought to doe, according to the proviſion of the Kings Statute in ſuch a caſe.

6. To the ſixth he ſaith, that the Vicarie of Pembrin being void, he, as right Patron thereof to his knowledge, conferred it to John Evans Clerke, with Letters of Inſtitution and Induction; and after when the Kings preſentation came to him for one David Jeinkin Clerke, he deſired fouretéene dayes reſpite at that time, either to ſhew ancient record for his right, and then the matter to ſtand to the determination of the law, or elſe if he ſhewed not, both he and his Clerke to give place to the Kings Clerk. Which condition was by ſir Thomas Jones Knight, Doctor M. and the ſaid David Jeinkin received, and an Inſtitution with an Induction was made conditionally to bee put into the hands of ſir Thomas Jones Knight, for ſafe cuſtody of the Kings Clerks behoofe, after the fouretéene dayes to be executed at the hands of the ſaid Defendant, if he failed to ſhew. Within which time the ſaid Defendant did ſhew an old ancient Record, declaring the full right of Patronage on the ſaid Defendants behalfe, and ſo that Inſtitution and Induction was never by the ſaid Defendant put in execution. Nevertheleſſe, the ſaid David Jeinkin (contrary to his promiſe and oath, giving thereupon his right hand to the ſaid ſir Thomas Jones Knight) took advantage by the ſaid writing, without knowledge of the ſaid Defendant. After which time the Lord Chancellor, by his letters written to the ſaid Defendant, advertiſed him, to admit one John Appowell Clerke, preſented by vertue of a vowſon which the Lord Chancellor iudged to be good, and ſo to be admitted notwithſtanding his former preſentation, whereby he would not abarre the other mans right. And ſo this Defendant made one Collation, two Inſtitutions, and three Mandates, doing no wrong thereby to his knowledge. And further he ſaith, that there was no buſineſſe nor unquietneſſe about the poſſeſſion of the ſaid Vicarage, but this Defendant giving place, was content to loſe his right for that time.

7. To the ſeventh he ſaith, that as he now remembreth, he never decreed any Caveats to be made in Benefices, neither did inſtitute nor cauſe to be inducted any into Benefices, being knowne to him litigious.

8. To the eighth he ſaith, that becauſe the Archdeacons be abſent from their Offices, and have not had faithfull diligent Officials, he hath directed his Mandates to them or their Officials, or to other lawfull perſons in that behalfe, ſo far as he knoweth.

9. & 10. The ninth and tenth articles he denieth as very untrue.

11. To the eleventh he ſaith, that whereas ſir Thomas Jones Knight advertiſed him, that Thomas Prichard had celebrated matrimony in a private houſe, betwixt a certaine Prieſt and a woman, whoſe ſiſter had refuſed the ſame, the ſaid Prichard leaving his owne Cure unſerved on that Sunday, this Defendant did put the ſame Thomas Prichard to penance for ſo doing, marrying them without banes. And whereas he made the ſaid Thomas Aprichard, who is a Bachelour of law, his Commiſſary; it was for the reſpect of learning in the law, thereby faithfully to execute his office according to Juſtice. And the ſaid Defendant did never favour nor beare with any man wittingly in his wrong doings. He confeſſeth that the matrimony was ſolemnized in a private Church, and that the Cure was that day unſerved.

12. To the twelfth he ſaith, that it is ſlanderous and utterly untrue. And that one ſir John Hughes, Prieſt, made Sage Hughes (daughter to his Stepmother) an Harlot at eleven yeeres of age, and after married openly to another man, being Miniſter thereof himſelf. After which doing he tooke her away from her huſband again, and kept her, alledging a former contract. And when the ſaid John Hughes was lawfully convicted before the ſaid Biſhop, in open Court at Carmarthen, of that his abominable adultery, claiming the Kings pardon thereof, yet the ſaid Sage confeſſed, that he had to doe with her the night before that day of appearance. Which later crime he denied. Neverthleſſe ſhe proved with childe, affirming, both before the birth and after, the child to be his, the Midwife and others being witneſſes thereof. Yet notwithſtanding, George Conſtantine, as a wicked Bolſterer of the ſaid Prieſt in his naughty doings, with the helpe of the aforeſaid Chaunter, firſt uttered that Meredith Thomas was father of the ſaid childe: which matter was ordered in the Eccleſiaſticall Court according to Juſtice, without any partiall affection of the ſaid Biſhop, or of any other to his knowledge.

13. To the 13. he ſaith, it is utterly falſe ſo far as he knoweth.

14. To the 14. he ſaith, that by lawfull ſequeſtration in the Kings Maieſties name, he committed the cuſtody of the fruits of Langatnoke & Lannihangell to two honeſt men, for the behoofe of the Kings firſt fruits & tenths, and of the next incumbent, and further he did not meddle nor miniſter any cauſe of unquietnes in that behalfe.

15. To the 15. he ſaith, that he made a collation, lawfull as he ſuppoſeth, of the Prebend of Lanbiſter, to Stephen Greene his Chapleine, without any covenant or colour, and further he did not meddle in that behalfe.

16. To the 16. he ſaith, all is untrue as far as he knoweth.

17. To the 17. he ſaith, it is all untrue for his owne part, and for his Officers, as far as he knoweth.

18. To the 18. he ſaith, it is untrue as far as he knoweth, and that he did certifie the Recuſants juſtly, as he thinketh, becauſe they refuſed wilfully to pay the Kings whole Subſidy of their whole dividents, as it ſtandeth in the Kings booke, pertaining to the Canons reſident.

19. To the 19. he ſaith, that after travell of foureteene miles, being not able faſting to celebrate the communion, in a Chappell within the houſe of ſir Thomas Jones Knight, one of the Kings Maieſties honourable Councell of the Marches of Wales, this Defendant celebrated matrimony without receiving the Communion for the cauſes aboveſaid, betwixt M. Griffith Rice, and the daughter of the ſaid ſir Thomas Jones, according to the Kings Ordinances. And Thomas Aprichard Prieſt, adminiſtred the holy Communion there without any ſuperſtition, to this Defendants knowledge: and the married perſons not diſpoſed to receive the holy Communion, he could not compell them againſt their conſciences, and ſaith, that he did not diſpenſe with them, as it is contained in the article.

To the ſlanderous and untrue title of maintenance of ſuperſtition, &c. he ſaith, that he did not maintaine any ſuperſtition, contrary to the Kings ordinances and injunctions, but abhorring in his heart all ſuperſtition, hath travelled and doth travell to aboliſh the ſame by true doctrine, and doing as much as he can, with the Kings peace, among his people there.

20. TO the 20. he ſaith, that George Conſtantine in the third yeere of the Kings Maieſties reigne, not regarding the dangerous time of rebellion in other places, raſhly cauſed to be pulled down, without any authority knowne to this Defendant, the Communion Altar in Carmarthen Church, by his owne preſumptuous mind, appointing the uſe thereof in another place of the Church, not without grudge of the people. Wherefore the biſhop fearing tumult, commanded the Vicar to ſet up ẏ Communion table (for the time) neere to the place where it was before.

21. To the 21. he ſaith, that he hath beene divers times in the Quire of Carmarthen, and hath tarried there in the Communion time, not communicating himſelfe, and that in every Church where he commeth on the Holy day to preach, or to pray, he kneeleth in the Quire bareheaded, as well at Matins before the Communion, as at Evenſong after without any ſuperſtition: he thinketh it not neceſſary for the Communions ſake to leave kneeling to Chriſt. But he hath diligently taught the people not to kneele nor knock to the viſible ſhew, or externall ſhew of the ſacrament. And the Quires of Carmarthen and other places there, are not cloſe at the ſides, ſo that the people may come in and forth at their pleaſure. Moreover the Kings ordinances doe not authoriſe him to rebuke the people for knocking on their breſts, in token of repentance of their ſins; nor for kneeling, in token of ſubmiſſion to God for mercy in Chriſt.

22. To the 22. he ſaith, that in the time of rebellion in Devonſhire and Cornwall, threatning to come into Wales, he teaching the people the true forme of prayer, according to Gods holy word, and declaring the prayer upon Beads to be vaine and ſuperſtitious, yet durſt not for feare of tumult forcibly take from any man his Beads without authority. And touching the not reproving of ſuch as he ſhould meet, wearing Beads, he remembreth not that he hath ſo done, unleſſe it were in the rebellion time, at which time he durſt not rebuke ſuch Offenders.

23. To the 23. he ſaith, that he being in the Pulpit, his face towards the people, did not ſee the lights, if any were ſet up about the corpes behinde his backe, till after that he came down from the Pulpit. But he with George Conſtantine & the aforeſaid Chaunter ſitting in ẏ Church in Carmarthen to heare cauſes, and ſeeing the Vicar with other Prieſts, with ſong and lights bringing a corps up to the Church, called forthwith the Vicar and Prieſts, and rebuked them in open Court, as Cormorants and Ravens, flying about the dead carcaſſe for lucre ſake.

24 To the 24. he ſaith, that he cauſed the one child being born with great perill of death to the mother, and it ſelf lying for dead a certain ſpace after, to be chriſtned on the working day: the other child was chriſtned on the working day, becauſe both Father and Mother, and all other people there were in perill of death by reaſon of the ſudden ſweat, which all men feared at that time. And touching the reſt of the accuſation, which is, that by that example, it is uſed after the old accuſtomed faſhion, he knoweth no ſuch thing.

To the title of Covetouſneſſe, he ſaith; his doings prove the contrary, as his neighbours know.

25 AND the 25. Article he utterly denieth.

26 To the 26. he ſaith, that his Hall at Aberguily being ruinous, he uſeth for his Hall a great Chamber adjoyning, for himſelfe and his ſervants, and all maner of ſtrangers, and beſides twenty perſons in houſe daily. What other hoſpitality he keepeth, honeſt neighbours can teſtifie.

27 To the 27. he ſaith, that his talk is according to his hearers, that is to ſay reverently and truly of faith, love, and honeſt life, according to the Scriptures to like auditors; and to other unreverent and raſh turmoylers of Scriptures and holy doctrine, he doth talk of honeſt worldly things with godly intent; and that he doth not moſt commonly talk of ſuch things as are expreſſed in this article, but when he hath honeſt occaſion ſo to do.

28 The 28. he ſaith is untrue, and that he hath warned no man out of their Lands; but where he is deſtitute of neceſſary proviſion, and would have part of his owne demaine from certaine Freeholders, having it only from yeare to yeare at pleaſure, hee cannot obtaine it without brawling. Wherfore he ſuffereth them to keep it even yet ſtill, againſt right and reaſon. And touching the reſt, that he had rather the crows ſhould eat it, &c. he never ſpake any ſuch word.

29 To the 29. he ſaith, that whereas his predeceſſor biſhop Barloe did let to farme the Iſle of Ramley to one William Brown, after whoſe hands this Defendant received it into his own poſſeſſion, the Vicars of S. Davids being diſpoſſeſſed of it long before; he did let it over to Stephen Greene for 40. ſhillings the ground, as it was before, and three pounds more for ſeals, connies and fowls there; and he knoweth of no right the Vicars Chorall had therein, who did refuſe when this defendant did diligently upon reaſonable conditions offer the ſame unto them: and this defendant made no promiſe unto them, as is conteined in the article.

30 To the 30. he ſaith, hee knoweth not but that he advertiſed his Bayliff to warne the freeholders, and others having his demaine in rent during pleaſure, to leave it at a lawfull day, to this defendants neceſſary uſe, and did not cauſe the Curate to do as is contained in the article to his remembrance.

31 To the 31. he ſaith, that he knoweth not what the Prieſt bade in the Church, nor how many plowes there came, undeſired of this Defendant. But he knoweth certainly, that he deſired no mans labor but for his money.

32 To the 32. he ſaith, that he knoweth not any ſuch appointment of Schools and revenewes there, but he found there (after the departing of biſhop Barloe) a Schoolmaſter, an Uſher being a Prieſt, and 20. Scholars, which he hath hitherto maintained better than he found it, to his knowledge: he did never convert any peny thereof to his own uſe, albeit he might lawfully have done the ſame.

33 The 33. he ſaith is all untrue, ſo far as he knoweth.

34 To the 34. article he ſaith, he never purchaſed more than three parcels, whereof one was two ſhillings eight pence by the yeare, the ſecond, three ſhillings foure pence, and the third ſix and twenty ſhillings and eight pence, or there about by yeare; the reſt he denieth.

35 To the 35. he ſaith, that he never bought of Lewes John Thomas his Land good cheap, but after forty years purchaſe, not knowing at that time any ſuch thing as is contained in the article againſt the ſaid Lewes John. Neither bade he the Sumner to let him alone, but as ſoon as hee heard any thing of it, commanded the Sumner to cite him, and ſo he was cited in this Defendants houſe, occaſioning him to break his bargaine: to the which Lewes this Defendant ſaid theſe words: If you would give me your land with an houſe full of gold, I cannot, nor will I ſuffer you to keep a Lemman. Then the ſaid Lewes affirming the later woman to be his wife, and the firſt unknown to this Defendant, he cauſed the ſaid Lewes to be called to the Conſiſtory for tryall, where it hangeth yet: And alſo by lawfull proceſſe excommunicated the firſt woman, for that ſhee would not by any meanes appeare in the Court to claim or to confeſſe marriage with the ſaid Lewes, and ſo ſhe ſtandeth this day at the point of ſignificavit.

36 To the 36. he ſaith, that whereas the Chauntor, and R. M. with other Canons there, would not obey the Kings godly injunctions, concerning the finding of a School for poore mens children, a Lecture of Divinitie, ſermons on the Sundays, repairing of their Church and manſion houſes, decent order and miniſtration there, but ſtubbornly counted themſelves (with the Chauntor) to be a body politike, without regard of the biſhop and his lawfull monitions, being himſelf named in their Shire ſtatutes, Decanus & quaſi Decanus, having alſo their Deanes ſtall in the Quire with a Prebend thereunto annexed, and the chiefe place in the Chapter houſe with a key of their Chapter Seale, being alſo by the Kings Maieſties Commiſſion appointed their Ordinary: yet would they not in any wiſe deliver unto him a booke of their ſtatutes, for the better knowledge of his and their duties, nor ſhew unto him their Records and Monuments, for declaration of the Kings right and his. For which cauſe this Defendant, by writ of Quo warranto, lawfully called them to anſwer, which yet lieth aſleep, to the loſſe of the Kings Maieſties right. The time of deliverie of the ſaid writ, he remembreth not.

37 The 37. he ſaith is all falſe, as farre as he knoweth.

To the title of wilfull negligence; he ſaith that he hath uſed to his power willing diligence.

38 TO the 38. he ſaith, that he being attendant (according to his bounden duty) to ſerve the Kings Highneſſe during the time of the parliament, from the firſt unto the laſt day: then immediately after repaired into his dioceſſe, and he might not truſt R. M. the Chauntor, and George Conſtantine to execute faithfully the juriſdiction, becauſe they had before (through their ſlanderous life and not puniſhing miſdoers) left the Country in great enormity of filthy whoredom. And ſaith farther, that one cauſe why hee appointed not an officer, &c. was for that he lacked his letters of authoritie of Juriſdiction

39. 40 The 39. and 40. he ſaith are untrue.

41 To the 41. he ſaith, that how often he did miniſter the communion he doth not remember, but in all other things ſo farre as he knoweth, he hath ſtudied to order himſelfe according to his vocation, as farre as he beleeveth, he goeth like a Miniſter.

42 To the 42. he ſaith, that he hath not alienated himſelfe from ſtudie, neither preached undiſcreetly, nor reported the Scriptures untruly to his knowledge: (but he hath been very much hindered both from ſtudy and preaching, by the malicious, crafty, and covetous behaviour of the forenamed perſons.) And that he did ſet forth the doctrine of honeſt marriage, as well of all other men as of Prieſts, even as the Scripture then rehearſed did miniſter occaſion.

43 No the 43. he ſaith, that reciting the words of Luke, If thy brother have offended againſt thee, blame him, and if he repent, forgive him, and if he have offended againſt thee ſeven times in one day, and ſeven times in the day be converted unto thee, ſaying, I am ſorry; forgive him: He ſaid farther theſe words in effect; it appeareth by this place of Scripture, that we are not bound (except he repent) to forgive him, but wee are bound to pray to God to forgive him, and to give him grace to repent, that hee may forgive him.

44 To the 44. he ſaith, that he hath preached right often at Carmarthen, as well as at other places, and he ſaith that a great number at Aberguily do underſtand Engliſh very well.

45 To the 45. he ſaith, that after he had preached firſt at Brecknocke, Carmarthen, Swanzy, Langharne, Tinby, Pembroch, Hereford, ſaint Davids, Cardigan, with other notable townes, he hath ſince that time preached to a great many other poor Churches, but not in Tinby nor Pembroch: but for Hereford he ſtandeth in doubt. And wheras he brought with him at the firſt a learned Preacher, of godly life, the ungodly ſtubborn behaviour of the perſons before named wearied him away. And whereas he had waged another learned man to come into his Dioceſſe to preach, George Conſtantine by his diſcouragement adviſed him from this Defendant.

46 To the 46. he ſaith, that in all his Churches appropriated, there is both bible and paraphraſes ſo far as he knoweth: and if the Prieſts there would not ſhew him the lack thereof, yet ſhould the Officials declare it unto him, that it might be amended (by his will) without delay.

47 To the 47. he ſaith, that George Conſtantine covetouſly ingroſſed into his hands a great number of Paraphraſes; and this defendant hath admoniſhed the clergie to buy, every one, for his diſcharge: and if the ſaid George being Official of two Archdeaconries, and other Officials in their office would declare unto him what Churches do lacke Bibles or Paraphraſes, he would cauſe it to be amended as much as in him lyeth.

To the title of Folly, hee ſaith that his deſire is in true ſimple manner of his words, deeds and other honeſt behaviour through Gods grace to ſhew godly wiſdome.

48 TO the 48. he ſaith, that he thinketh no folly in the decent colour or faſhion with honeſt uſe of Saddle, Bridle, Stirrops, Staffe, and other like neceſſary or convenient things, and ſaith, that he uſed a ſaddle made after the Scottiſh faſhion, with ſtirrops of iron unvarniſhed and like ſpurs: and black bridle without ſtuds, the bit and ſnaffle white as other mens be.

49 To the 49. he ſaith, that when he goeth abroad in winter, he weareth a hat to bear off rain and ſnow, and in ſummer, to ſhadow him from the ſunne, without any vow of ſuperſtition or offence of the people.

50 To the 50. he ſaith, that all is one to him, to ride or go, as cauſe requireth, and whether he ſaid as is contained in the article or not, hee remembreth not. Howbeit he doth uſe to go a foot.

51 To the 51. hee ſaith, that after lawfull prayer it pleaſeth God to give him a ſon begotten and borne in honeſt mariage; whom he therefore cauſed to bee named Samuel, preſenting him to the miniſter to be received into Chriſts Church, as a poore member of Chriſt: by the holy ſacrament of Baptiſme was this done openly in the Cathedrall Church, with earneſt gravity, and without offending any man; and alſo two wives being before at variance, deſired both to be Godmothers, which were both received to make unity between them, not knowing any law to the contrary, nor any offence thereby conceived of the people.

52 To the 52. he ſaith, that he doth uſe with gravity all honeſt loving enterteinment of his childe, to encourage him hereafter willingly at his fathers mouth, to receive wholeſome doctrine of the true feare and love of God, and ſaith that he hath whiſtled to his child, but ſaid not that the child underſtood it, and that he anſwered to one that found fault with it, as is contained in the article.

53 To the 53. he ſaith, that he was never ſurveyor, but went to ſee Milford Haven for honeſt purpoſe, and not to ſurvey it, and for that he at the ſight of a ſeale whiſtled in his fiſt, ſuch as meant folly might turne it to their purpoſe. And it is not true that he ſtood whiſtling an houre to the ſeale, nor that any fault was found with it, nor any ſuch anſwer made by him to his knowledge.

54 To the 54. he ſaith, that if he did ſay, the deſtroying of the Frie letteth plenty of Fiſh, hee thinketh the ſame not againſt reaſon: but he remembreth not to have ſaid, as is contained in the article.

55 To the 55. he ſaith, that he remembreth not that ever he ſaid as they alledge.

To the ſlandrous, untrue, and ungodly concluſion he ſaith, that George Conſtantine with other his Adverſaries before named, and their adherents, not regarding the feare of God, and their bounden dutie of loving obedience towards God and the King, and his true Miniſters, have too much ſlanderouſly with falſe tongues, contumelious words, and ſpitefull deeds, laboured by all meanes to diſcredit and deface the Kings gracious authority to him committed. Who, ever ſithence he came to the Dioceſſe, hath endeavoured himſelfe to ſhew his faithfull Miniſterie by his true honeſt doings, and to uſe his authority according to his vocation, to Gods glory, and the Kings honor. And that he hath been diligent in teaching of truth, reforming of ſuperſtition, free of hoſpitality, diligent in overſeeing with godly wiſdome, peace, and mercifulfulneſſe, as he truſteth in God, may be truly approved. And he is able juſtly to charge his adverſaries with all the faults herein by them moſt unjuſtly and ſlanderouſly againſt him objected. And he doth marvell greatly, that George Conſtantine with other his adherents are not aſhamed maliciouſly to object (for the intent to ſlander him) moleſting of Preachers found there. For truth it is that he hath moleſted none, but hath juſtly brought under ſignificavit, one Morice a Preacher, living lewdly, for his ſtubborn behaviour and malicious contempts, even yet continuing in his wilfull contempt and irregularity. And he hath (to his knowledge) iuſtly certified Hugh Raulins, Parſon of Tinby, for his wilfull recuſancy of two other Perſonages, ſhamefully deceiving the Kings Maieſty by colour of commiſſion, as appeareth by the ſame. And as for the railing contemptuous preaching of R. M. and the unlearned arrogant preaching of the Chaunter, he referreth to diſcreet hearers, which were offended therat, as they ſhewed this Defendant. And this Deponent brought into his Dioceſſe both learned Preachers, and learned men in the law, to his very great charges, which men George Conſtantine with his adherents hath wearied away.

After theſe anſwers thus exhibited by the vertuous and godly Biſhop againſt the quarrelling and frivolous Articles of his foreſaid adverſaries, to wit, Hugh Raulins, and Thomas Lee: then came in for witneſſe, upon the ſaid articles and informations, George Conſtantine, and the Chaunter of S. Davids: againſt whom the Biſhop laid firſt exceptions, then alſo exhibited matter iuſtificatory, the tenour and proceſſe whereof here followeth in order to be ſeene, firſt concerning the exceptions, and after the matter iuſtificatory.

Exceptions generall, laid and propoſed on the behalfe of Robert, Biſhop of S. Davids, againſt all and ſingular the pretenſed witneſſes, produced on the behalfe of Hugh Raulins Clerke, and Thomas Lee, upon their untrue ſurmiſed Articles by them exhibited unto and before the Kings moſt honourable Counſell, by the device and procurement of the Chaunter, and George Conſtantine, with R. M. Clerke, againſt the ſaid Biſhop.

FIrſt, the ſaid Biſhop ſaith and alledgeth, that by Law there ought no faith or credence to be given unto the depoſitions and ſayings of the ſaid witneſſes, or any part thereof, becauſe they are infamous, falſe, periured, and in ſome part of their depoſitions diſcording, partiall, conducted, ſubornate, inſtructed, and for favour of the informers, and their bolſterers, have depoſed of malice more than the articles whereupon they were produced do containe, and beſide, and without the compaſſe of the ſame Articles, and in divers other parts of their depoſitions, they depoſe unum & eundem præmeditatum ſermonem, as by their ſaid depoſitions doth appeare, unto the which the ſaid Biſhop referreth himſelfe as much as it ſhall be expedient for him, and none otherwiſe. And further for other cauſes particularly and ſpecially, as is declared in the booke of exceptions.

Exceptions againſt the unlawfull proceedings of Hugh Raulins Clerke, and Thomas Lee, promoters of the foreſaid untrue Articles, in executing of their commiſſion for proofe of the ſame.

ITem, the ſaid Thomas Lee for himſelf and the other promoter did contrary to iuſtice, at the execution of their commiſſion, examine certain of the witneſſes himſelf, in the houſe of his brother in law George Conſtantine, and the ſaid Lee, and David Walter the biſhops mortall enemy, and ſervant to the ſaid George Conſtantine, did write theſe depoſitions upon the Articles at their owne pleaſures, and alſo after the device of the ſaid George Conſtantine and the Chaunter and R. M. the biſhops mortall enemies, and the very deviſers and procurers of the informations, and bolſterers and bearers of the promotors in the ſuit thereof. Theſe are the names of the witneſſes ſo examined, which are already knowen: David ap Sir Richard of Oettus, a periured and an adulterous perſon, ſtanding in the number for two witneſſes, written in two places of the booke. Item, ap Ruddr of Kennarthe, Griffith ap Powel, Guyne of Kennarthe, Lewes David Clerk, David ap Harvey Clerk, Sir Gorghe, alias Morgon, &c.

Item, one Iohn Draper of Carmarthen and an adherent of the foreſaid adverſaries, and enemies to the ſaid Biſhop, did alſo, contrary to the tenour of their Commiſſion examine certaine witneſſes, and had to his Clerke one William Davids, ſervant in Livery unto the foreſaid Griffith Donne, the Biſhops utter enemie: by which ſhamefull partiality they have written more matter, moe words, other termes and ſentences, than ſome of the Deponents have depoſed or could depoſe. Humfrey Toy the fifth Deponent, Rice Goughe the fourteenth Deponent, William ap Ienkins the fiftieth Deponent, Iohn Benguy the lxviii. Deponent, Richard Parſon the xxxix. which are already knowen, what manner of men the Promoters are.

Item, the ſaid Hugh Raulins was not preſent at the Biſhops Sermon, whereof his information maketh mention, neither yet at their cutting off the Commiſſion for the proofe thereof: for the foreſaid adverſaries did deviſe the ſame, and gave it unto the ſaid Raulins to promote, chooſing him for the ſame purpoſe, knowing him to be a man willing (and ſetting his whole delight) to worke miſchiefe, both with word and deed, who abuſeth his tongue moſt ſhamefully, with moſt unfitting words, ever railing upon the ſaid Biſhop to every man that will heare him, without either reſpect or reverence of the Kings Maieſties authority to the ſaid Biſhop committed. And the ſaid Raulins hath foure or five Benefices about the value of 200. Markes a yeere, and is reſident upon none of them, but ſpendeth his living to the hinderance of other men, going about here and there, wandring to and fro, without either man or boy waiting on him, more like a light perſon, than a man of ſuch livelihood and of his vocation, being a preacher. And indeed he is taken for a lewd fellow of all that know his behaviour, inſomuch that when a certaine man obiected unto the adverſaries, that it was ill done to put ſo lewd a fellow as Raulins to promote their cauſe: They anſwered and reported his honeſty with theſe words; We know Raulins to bee a very knave, and ſo meet for no purpoſe as he is to ſet forward ſuch a matter: of which report there is a ſufficient witneſſe. And it is thought that he hath done much ill with his ſpitefull tongue: for he ſpeaketh as boldly in this ſurmiſed matter to all the Counſell, as though it were true, and much for the Kings profit.

Item, the other Promoter Thomas Lee is a Merchant, who hath ſold his ware and ſpent his money, and now for want of other buſineſſe is become a Promoter of the foreſaid Articles, having his coſts and charges born by the ſaid principall adverſaries, as it is alledged in the Biſhops exceptions, which ſhall be proved if Commiſſion might be awarded for the purpoſe.

And thus much concerning the exceptions againſt his pretenſed accuſers: next followeth the matter iuſtificatory exhibited by the ſaid biſhop, in defence of his own cauſe, as by the effect here appeareth.

Certaine articles miniſtred by Robert, Biſhop of S. Davids, againſt a ſurmiſed information exhibited by Thomas Lee to the Kings majeſty his moſt Honourable Councell, againſt the ſaid Biſhop.

IMprimis, viz. That there ought none advantage to be taken againſt the ſaid Biſhop, of the contents of the ſaid pretenſed information, for the cauſes particularly following. And firſt, whereas it is obiected againſt the ſaid Biſhop, in the firſt, ſecond, and fifth Articles of the ſame information, that he contrary to the Kings Highnes Lawes and Statutes, and in the derogation of his Highneſſe ſupremacy, paſſed a certain commiſſion, inſtitutions, and collations to benefices, in his owne name, making no mention of the Kings Highneſſe authority, whereas of truth the ſaid Biſhop if he had paſſed out the Commiſſion, Inſtitutions, and Collations in his own name, and without the Kings Maieſty his ſtile, as is ſurmiſed (as he did not) yet had he offended neither the Laws nor Statutes of this Realm therin, as doth and may appear evidently in the ſame ſtatutes and lawes, to the which he referreth himſelfe.

Proved by the Statute.

Item, wheras it is deduced in the third article of the ſaid pretenſed information, that the Chauncellor of the ſaid Biſhop did admit and inſtitute J. Gough into the Rectory of Haſkard, and gave a mandate for the induction of the ſaid John, under the Kings Maieſties ſeal Eccleſiaſticall, for the dioceſſe of S. Davids with the Teſte of the ſaid biſhop, and Subſcription of the ſaid Chancellor, which thing ſo deduced, if it be true, yet the ſaid Biſhop cannot be worthily blamed thereof. But the Chauntor (then his Chancellor unworthy) ſhewed himſelf therin very ignorant of the Kings Statutes of Parliament, wherein it is expreſly provided, that in ſuch caſes the Ordinary ought to paſſe all ſuch inſtitutions and inductions in his owne name, and under his owne ſeal, and not in the Kings Maieſties name, nor under his ſeal. And further of very truth the ſaid Chauncellor in admitting and inſtituting the ſaid Clerk to the ſaid benefice without the knowledge and conſent of the ſaid biſhop, did exceed his Commiſſion, for as much as the ſaid biſhop, at the granting of his Commiſſion of his Chauncellorſhip unto the ſaid Chauntor, had reſtrained him expreſly from the admitting and inſtituting of any Clerke to any benefice within the ſaid Dioceſſe, except the ſame Clerk were firſt examined, found worthy, and admitted by the ſaid Biſhop himſelf to the ſame Benefice.

Proved by the Statutes.

Item, whereas in the fourth article of the ſaid information it is contained, that the ſaid biſhop, after the admitting & inſtituting of the ſaid John Gough, as is aforeſaid, obiected articles againſt him, amongſt the which it was contained in effect

Item, interrogetur quo titulo tenet rectoriam de Haskarde.

TRue it is that the ſaid biſhop, without moleſtation of the ſaid Gough, otherwiſe than law did permit, and without taking upon him the cognition of title of the ſaid fruits and patronage of ye ſaid benefice, in contempt of the kings Maieſties regall Crown and dignity, and without any derogation of the Kings Maieſties laws and ſtatutes of this Realme, did interrogate the ſaid John Gough, how he held the ſaid benefice, being admitted and inſtituted to the ſame without his knowledge or conſent, as he might lawfully doe, and as it is meete every Ordinary ſhould know how paſtors are admitted to any cure within their Dioceſſe.

Act. adduci poſſunt.

Item, touching the contents of the ſixth article of the ſaid information, the ſaid biſhop alledgeth that the Vicarage of Pembrin, in the Dioceſſe of Saint Davids being void, hee as Patrone thereof to his knowledge, conferred it to John Evans Clerke, with letters of inſtitution and induction, and after when the Kings preſentation came to him for one David Jenkin Clerk, hee deſired fourteen dayes reſpite, at that day either to ſhew ancient record for his right, and then the matter to ſtand to the determination of the law or els if he ſhewed not, both he and his Clerk to give place to the Kings Clerk: which condition was by ſir Thomas Jones Knight, Doctor Merike, and the ſaid David Jenkins received, and an inſtitution with an induction was made conditionally, to be put into the hands of ſir Thomas Jones Knight, for ſafe cuſtody for the Kings Clerke his behoofe, after the fourteen dayes to be executed at the hands of the ſaid Biſhop if he failed to ſhew, within which time the ſaid biſhop did ſhew an old ancient record, declaring the full right of Patronage on the ſaid biſhops behalfe, and ſo that inſtitution and induction was never put in execution by the ſaid Biſhop.

Nevertheleſſe the ſaid David Jenkin (contrary to his promiſe and oath, giving thereupon his right hand to Sir Thomas Jones Knight) tooke advantage by the ſaid writing without knowledge of the ſaid Biſhop, after which time the Lord Chauncellor by his letters written to the ſaid Biſhop, advertiſed him to admit one John ap Howell Clerk, preſented by vertue of a vowſon which the Lord Chauncellor iudged to bee good, and ſo to be admitted, notwithſtanding his former preſentation whereby he would not abar the other mans right: And ſo the ſaid Biſhop made one collation, two inſtitutions, and three mandates, doing no wrong therby to his knowledge. And further there was no buſineſſe nor unquietneſſe about the poſſeſſion of the ſaid Vicarage. But the ſaid Biſhop giving place, was content to loſe his right for that time.

Item, whereas ſir Thomas Jones advertiſed the ſaid Biſhop, that Thomas Prichard Clerke, had celebrated matrimony in a private houſe, betwixt a certain Prieſt and a woman whoſe ſiſter had refuſed the ſame (as it is deduced in the xi. Article of the ſurmiſed articles laid in againſt the ſaid biſhop) the ſaid Prichard leaving his owne Cure unſerved that Sunday, he did put the ſaid Thomas Prichard to penance for ſuch his miſdoings, and the ſaid Prichard did ſuch penance as was inioyned him to do. And whereas the ſaid biſhop made the ſaid Thomas Prichard (who is Bachelor of Law) his commiſſary, it was for the reſpect of his learning in the Law, thereby faithfully to execute his office according to iuſtice, and none otherwiſe.

Item, in the fourteenth Article of the ſaid ſurmiſed information, it is untruly declared, that through the unlawfull ſequeſtration of the fruits of the benefices of Langatoke and Lanuihangell Cundy, and the undiſcreete handling of the ſaid Biſhop, there were raiſed a great number of people, to the great danger of the inhabitants thereabouts. Truth it is, that the ſaid biſhop upon good and lawfull conſiderations, and ſpecially for that the Kings Maieſty ſhould be truly anſwered of his firſt fruits, and tenths of the ſaid benefices did lawfully (and as he was bound to do) ſequeſter the ſaid fruits in the Kings maieſties name, and by his authority, and committed the cuſtodie thereof for a time unto two honeſt men, to the effect aforeſaid, and none otherwiſe, without any occaſion of tumult or gathering the people through his default or folly.

Item, wheras it is alledged in the nineteenth Article of the information, that the biſhop did celebrate lebrate matrimony in his own perſon, without receiving or miniſtring the Communion to the perſons married, it is true, for that the ſaid Biſhop had travelled fourtéene long Welſh miles, and not able to celebrate the holy Communion faſting, and for other reaſonable and lawfull cauſes him moving, did in a Chappell within the houſe of ſir Thomas Jones Knight (one of the Kings honourable Counſell of the Marches of Wales) ſolemnize matrimonie betwixt Maſter Griffith Rice, and the daughter of the ſaid Sir Thomas Jones, without either receiving the holy Communion himſelfe or miniſtring the ſame to the perſons married, being as then not diſpoſed ſo to do it, lawfully and godly, without any ſuperſtitious knockings or bleſſings, or other uncomely geſtures, as is deduced in that Article.

Anno 1555.

Item, touching the contents of the reſidue of all the ſaid Articles, contained in the ſaid information, the ſaid biſhop, partly for the avoiding of teadiouſneſſe, and partly for that ſome of them be untrue and méere falſe, ſome other generall; obſcure, frivolous, vaine, and of none effect, but of malice and evill will, contrary to truth conceived, leaveth them particularly unanſwered unto.

Item, the ſaid biſhop alledgeth, that he hath not by all the time that he hath béen biſhop, uſed any ſuperſtitions or Papiſtrie, as it is untruely ſurmiſed, againſt him, but hath and doth to the uttermoſt of his power, wit, and cunning, ſet forth, maintaine, preach and teach the true doctrine of the Goſpell, and ſuch laudable doctrine as hee ought to do by the Kings Lawes, Injunctions, and procéedings, and for ſuch a teacher hee hath béen and is commonly known, named, reputed, taken, and accepted notoriouſly.

And where the ſaid Chauntor and George perceived their depoſitions to be inſufficient, they required, and had Commiſſion into the country to examine further witneſſes, which they executed very partially, and unlawfully, as is alledged in the biſhops exceptions, above mentioned. And wheras the ſaid Rawlins and Lée were awarded two ſeverall Commiſſions, they by favor of the officers, and for ſparing of coſts, conioyned both in one, and had thrée moneths to make return, as appeareth by the copie of their Commiſſion, which hereafter followeth.

A copie of the Commiſſion awarded downe into the Countrey, for the examination of Witneſſes.

EDwardus ſextus Dei gratia, Angliæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, fidei defenſor, & in terra Eccleſiæ Anglicanæ & Hiberniæ ſupremum caput, dilectis & fidelibus ſuis Georgio Harbert militi, Thomæ Iones militi, & Iohanni Wogan militi, ac dilectis ſibi David Vaughhan, & Owino ap Owen armigeris; ſalutem. Marten.

DUring all this time of the examination of the witneſſes, the ſaid biſhop was ſtayed at London, upon the allegation of the ſaid adverſaries, which was; that if the ſaid biſhop ſhould depart into his Dioceſſe, he would let them of their proves.

And at the return of their commiſſion, it was ſignified unto the Councell what a great number of witneſſes they had examined, viz. ſixe ſcore and vii. which ſounded very heynous in the councels eares.

And about thrée wéeks after, publication of their witneſſes was granted, and after that, it was a fortnight ere the B. could get a copy written of their depoſitions, becauſe the bo͏ok thereof is ſo huge and monſtrous.

Then the biſhop deſired time, Firſt, to enquire of what condition the perſons were that had witneſſed againſt him, and to make exceptions, and matters to iuſtifie direct contrary, and to have a commiſſion for the proof thereof, which was then granted. And now it is obiected, that the biſhop was appointed ſo to travell with the expedition of his matter, that he ſhould have ſued out his Commiſſion, and have made returne thereof at All-hallowtide laſt paſt, but there was no ſuch decrée put in writing. And it was not poſſible for the biſhop to do it in ſo ſhort a time, theſe cauſes conſidered which he could not avoide, as followeth.

Firſt, it was the later end of July, ere he came home to S. Davids, where he began his viſitation, which before was appointed.

Secondly, he was by force of law conſtrained to anſwer at the barre daily, during all the time of the great Seſſions at Carmarthen, in defence of his iuſt cauſe againſt the pretenſed matter of Præmunire, which his adverſaries of méere malice have procured againſt him.

Thirdly, the ſaid adverſaries, to moleſt him further, did privily pack a queſt of ignorant perſons of no reputation, and indited him upon the words of Raulins information, as appeareth by a copie of the inditement, intending thereby to make the matter ſound more hainous, notwithſtanding that the ſame cauſe dependeth before the Kings high Councell undetermined.

Fourthly, he was appointed by the Commiſſioners, before his departure from London, to pay two hundred pound (which was arrerages) into the Court of firſt fruits and tenths, at Bartlemew day then next following, which payment he made accordingly, notwithſtanding that his adverſaries wrought meanes to have made him breake his day; namely, one Edward Harbert Gentleman, who hath a parſonage of his to farm kept back his rent to the very laſt day, becauſe that money ſhould not help to ſerve his turn: and ſo by crafty cavillation detaineth it ſtill in his hand with a yéers rent and an half more: for the ſaid Edward Harbert is an adherent of the ſaid biſhops adverſaries.

Fifthly, the book of their depoſitions is ſo great, that it aſketh a long time to peruſe. And alſo the greateſt part of their witneſſes were utterly unknown of the biſhop and all his: And alſo dwelling in ſo many ſundry places of the Dioceſſe among the mountaines and elſewhere scarcely within the circuit of two hundred miles.

Item, another great Seſſions holden at Carmarthen in the moneth of October laſt, during which time he was attendant there as is aforeſaid. All which cauſes conſidered, being alſo in the time of his ordinary viſitation, which he did execute himſelf, he could not make ready his exceptions in ſhorter time.

The ſaid biſhop diſpatched his man towards London the three and twentieth day of October, who ever ſithence hath been and is attendant in the ſame ſuite, for the obtaining of the Commiſſion, for proof of this matter againſt his adverſaries.

A Copy of a certain letter written by the Biſhop of S. Davids.

MOſt humbly ſheweth unto your honor, your poor Orator Robert, biſhop of S. Davids, that whereas one Thomas Lee (by the procurement of Thomas Young, and Rowland Merick being both Canons of S. Davids, and George Conſtantine Regiſter to the ſaid biſhop) hath exhibited unto your honour againſt him certaine articles in the which are mentioned many trifling things, unworthy to be declared in your honourable audience, and alſo their pretenſed weighty articles (as they have alledged there) are utterly untrue: for proof whereof the ſaid Thomas Lee hath had his Commiſſions into the Countrey: Therefore it may pleaſe your honor of your favourable goodneſſe, to grant unto our ſaid Orator a like commiſſion for the examination of witneſſes, in defence of his truth and honeſtie againſt the ſaid Thomas Lee, George Conſtantine, and the forenamed Rowland Mericke, and all other perſons with their unjuſt articles, atteſtations, and ſayings, which have depoſed againſt him. And in tender conſideration that your ſaid Orator ſtandeth bounden, and ſureties with him, in the ſumme of a thouſand markes, to appear before the Kings Juſtice, in the Seſſions at Carmarthen, in July next comming, to anſwer to a forged matter of Præmunire, by the procurement and counſell of his forenamed adverſaries, maliciouſly ſurmiſed againſt him to his utter undoing. And furthermore, your Orator being in debt to the Kings Maieſtie, by reaſon of the malicious vexation of his foreſaid adverſaries, cannot (if hee remaine here) ſatisfie the ſame: for whereas there be arrerages to a great ſumme (as well of the Kings money as of his owne rents) he can receive none thereof, his adverſaries have made ſuch ill report to his diſcredit, bearing the people in hand, that he ſhall come no more thither. By reaſon of which bruit, neither his owne tenants will pay their rents and arrerages, nor the Prieſts their arrerages due to the K. Maieſtie, as wel for anno ſecundo & tertio, as for quarto and quinto. In conſideration of all which things, it may pleaſe your honorable goodneſſe to licence your ſaid Orator to depart into the Dioceſſe, for theſe affairs and other. And he is ready at all times at your honourable commandement and pleaſure, to repaire again, and ever to pray to the Lord Jeſus for the perpetuall conſervation of your honour, to his glory.

Another letter written by the Biſhop of S. Davids.

RIght honourable, and my very ſpeciall good Lord, with humble ſervice and hearty thanks to God, and to you for your godly favor towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your fatherly letters, most lovingly admoniſhing me to incline unto that which is very neceſſary, as charitable concord and unity; This is further to beſeech your Lordſhip for the Lords ſake not to be grieved, but benignely to heare, & gravely to ponder that weighty matter, which, appearing (to other) but a light grief to me, is in very deed a right grievous offence to God, with no little hinderance of his holy word, and diſturbance of the kings godly proceedings, and may be a great occaſion of much inobedience, & diſorder of good life. Wherfore I am ſtraitly bounden for the true zeale that I ought to beare unto Gods word of life, Chriſtian religion, the Kings Maieſties honor, and the godly quiet ſtate of his people, not faintly to let fall the burthen of diligent redreſſe to be ſought at his Maieſties hands by the godly wiſedome of his moſt honourable and upright counſell, but with hearty affection to bear it up againſt thoſe high minded, arrogant, ſtubborn, ambitious, covetous Canons, truſting in their biting tongues, with crafty prevention, and utterly untrue ſurmiſes, to ſtop the light that their ungodly miſdoings in darknes ſhall either not be ſeen, or at the leaſt may ſeem to appear in colourable appearance of right. Inſomuch that I do not a little marvell at theſe qualities in maſter Chaunter, the Canon, and the Dean of Worceſter, whoſe ungentle and untrue behaviour I have not only known, but expertly proved, and ſenſibly felt in two of the firſt to my great loſſes whereof I make no complaint. But I wonder in my mind and lament in my heart the ſtrang alteration and wilful going backward of mine old faithfull brother George Conſtantine, the which (knowing them all three to have beene in times paſt either obſtinate enemies to the true bearers of the croſſe of Chriſt, or at the leaſt privie lurkers under pretence of favour towards the Goſpell, to ſting the poor followers therof, ſeeking but their own lucre and pleaſure in all their doings) would ſo earneſtly cleave unto them in their wrong deeds, as to betray me with his tongue, become untrue of his promiſe, and a bearer of filthy ſin for lucres ſake, even yet ſtiffely perſiſting in the ſame (namely) in things manifeſtly known unto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited. And as for their præmunire, both George and they at my firſt coming, ungently detaining from maſter Ferlee his Commiſſion for the Chancellorſhip, would have faced me downe with premunire, becauſe it was written in my owne name according to the ſtatute: yet was I faine, for the zeale of unity, not to ſee their uncourteous deeds, departing with maſter Farlee for the avoiding of their malice and envy, and gave that office for the amity of George, unto maſter Chaunter his ſonne in law, and to D. Merick the office of Cardigan. But ſeeing afterward their covetous reſpect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the reformation of ſin, and ſpecially of ſhameleſſe whoredome, I was compelled to remove them, ſore againſt their wils: and whereas I deſired many and ſundry times charitable redreſſe of their wrong doings in the vacation time, I obtained many faire words, and nothing in deed. Alſo deſiring to have ſight of the booke of ſtatutes of the Church for the knowledge of my duty and theirs, I could not obtaine it. Deſiring to have a key of the chapter ſeale, as my Lord of Bathe had, they would not deliver it but upon conditions; yet was I content to be bridled, receiving it, as pleaſed them to give it. And further requiring the ſight of neceſſary evidences, for the declaration of divers things in travers of my right, they would in no wiſe grant it. And thereupon conſidering their ungentleneſſe, I moved the quo warranto, knowing right well, that if they ſhould ſhew any ſubſtantiall grant under the Kings ſeal for their corporation, it muſt therin appeare the biſhop to be the head, and ever hath been under the King; for other they never have, nor had, except they would returne to Rome againe, as I truſt they will not. And yet perceiving afterward that they had no ſpeciall grant to ſhew, or elſe ſuch as they would not ſhew, I my ſelfe for the reſpect of unity wrote my letters to the Kings Atturney, by reaſon whereof the quo warranto was ſtayed, and ſo yet remaineth.

But touching the Certificate, the Kings ſubſidy being due at Michaelmas laſt, and forborne till after Chriſtmas, and lawfully demanded afore they did utterly refuſe to pay both to my Vicecollector and to my ſelfe, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowing where to aſk the reſt, and it is committed to me in the Kings roll a whole ſumm in groſſe, to be received of the Canons reſidentiaries for their divident: who becauſe they cannot agree in dividing, would have the Kings Maieſty to tarry for his money, till they can agree to make diviſion; and I cannot demand it of any particular perſon, nor at any particular place.

Wherfore I moſt humbly beſeech your fatherly goodnes, for the Lords ſake, to perſiſt and continue my good Lord and friend unto ſuch time as ye find me either deſiring to be defended in my wrong, or not willing to put the iudgement of my right cauſe into your hands. And becauſe that the reſidue of matters touching them and their ungentle, untrue, and ungodly doings is too long and I have moleſted you too much with this my tedious letter, I ſhall now ſurceaſe; humbly beſeeching your good Lordſhip to accept in good part this my boldneſſe proceeding of neceſſity, and to pardon it for the love of our Lord Ieſus, who ſave and keep you in health, comfort, and honor long to endure, for the advancement of his glory. Written at Aburgnily this ix. of March.

Your Lordſhips to command
during life, R.F.

And thus you have heard the firſt trouble of this bleſſed Martyr of the Lord in King Edwards dayes, with the whole diſcourſe thereof. Which we thought the rather here to expreſſe, to give other good biſhops warning to be more circumſpect, whom they ſhould truſt and have about them. Briefly, in few words to conclude this proceſſe, B. Farrar, partly upon the importunate ſute of his adverſaries, partly upon the ſiniſter and infortunate fall of the good Duke of Somerſet, by whom he had been before promoted and maintained, having but ſmall favor ſhewed, was detained in priſon, till the death of King Edward, and the comming in of Queen Mary and Popiſh Religion, whereby a new trouble roſe upon him, being now accuſed and examined for his faith and doctrine. The proceſſe of which his trouble here likewiſe followeth.

The ſecond trouble of B. Farrar, in the time of Queen Mary.

After that the foreſaid Maſter Farrar biſhop of S. Davids had been long detained in cuſtody under ſureties, in the reigne of King Edward, not for any iuſt cauſe of his part deſerved, but by reaſon that he had beene promoted by the Duke of Somerſet, and now after his fall hee found fewer friends to ſupport him againſt ſuch as hunted after his Biſhopricke, at length after the deceaſe of King Edward, by the comming in of Queene Mary, the ſtate of Religion begun to be changed and altered. Whereby a new trouble roſe upon him, being now accuſed and examined, not for any matter of Præmunire but for his faith and doctrine. Whereupon he was called before the Biſhop of Wincheſter, with Maſter Hooper, M. Rogers, Maſter Bradford, Maſter Saunders, and others aforeſaid, the fourth of February. On the which day he ſhould alſo with them have beene condemned: but becauſe leaſure or liſt did not ſo well then ſerve the biſhop, his condemnation was deferred, and he ſent to priſon againe, where he continued till the fourteenth day of the ſaid moneth of February. What his examinations and anſwers were before the ſaid biſhop of Wincheſter, ſo much as remained and came to our hands, I have here annexed in manner as followeth.

The anſwer of Robert Farrar Biſhop of Saint Davids, before Wincheſter and others.

The talke of biſhop Farrar before the B. of Wincheſter and other commiſſioners.

At his firſt comming and kneeling before my Lord Chauncellor, the Biſhop of Dureſme, and the Biſhop of Worceſter, who ſate at the Table, and maſter Rocheſter, maſter Southwel, maſter Bourne, and others ſtanding at the Tables end, the Lord Chauncellor ſaid unto him on this ſort:

Wincheſter. Now ſir, have you heard how the world goeth here?

Farrar. If it like your Honor, I know not.

Win. What ſay you? Doe you not know things abroad, notwithſtanding you are a priſoner Farrar. No my Lord, I know not.

Winch. Lo, what a froward fellow is this?

Farrar. If it pleaſe your Lordſhip, how ſhould I know any thing abroad, being a priſoner?

Winch. Have you not heard of the comming in of the Lord Cardinall?

Farrar. I know not my Lord Cardinall; but I heard that a Cardinall was come in, but I did not believe it, and I believe it not yet.

Worceſt. I pray your Lordſhip (ſaid the Biſhop of Worceſter) tell him your ſelfe, that hee may know what is done.

B. Farrar charged with the Queenes debt.

Winch. The Queens Maieſtie and the Parliament hath reſtored religion into the ſame ſtate it was in at the begining of the reigne of King Henry the eighth. Ye are in the Queens debt, and her Maieſty will bee good unto you, if you will returne to the Catholike Church.

B. Farrar refuſeth the pope.

Farrar. In what ſtate I am concerning my debts to the Queenes Maieſtie, in the Court of Exchequer, my Lord Treaſurer knoweth: and the laſt time that I was before your honor, and the firſt time alſo, I ſhewed you that I had made an oath never to conſent nor agree, that the biſhop of Rome ſhould have any power or iuriſdiction within this Realme: and further, I neede not rehearſe to your Lordſhip, you know it well enough.

M. Bourne layeth to B. Farrar falſly to have abiured at Oxford.

Bourne. You were once abiured for hereſie (ſaid M. Bourne) in Oxford.

Farrar. That was I not.

Bourne. You were.

Farrar. I was never, it is not true.

Bou. You went from S. Davids to Scotland

Farrar. That did I not.

Bourne. You did.

Farrar. That did I never, but I went from Yorke into Scotland.

Bourne. Ah, ſo ſaid I, you went with Barlow.

Farr. That is true, but never from S. Davids.

Bourne. You carried bookes out of Oxford, to the Archbiſhop of Yorke, L. Lee.

Farrar. That did I not.

Bourne. You did.

Farrar. I did not, but I carried old books from S. Oſwalds to the Biſhop of Yorke.

B. Farrar falſly charged to have ſupplanted his Maſter whom indeed he defended from danger.

Bourne. You ſupplanted your Maſter.

Farrar. That did I never in my life.

Bourne. By my faith you did.

Farrar. Forſooth I did not never in my life, but I did ſhield and ſave my Maſter from danger and that I obtained of King Henry the eighth, for my true ſervice, I thank God therefore.

Bourne. My Lord (ſaith M. Bourn to my Lord Chancellor) he hath an ill name in Wales as ever had any.

Farrar. That is not ſo. Whoſoever ſaith ſo, they ſhall never be able to prove it.

Bourn. He hath deceived the Queen in divers ſummes of money.

Farrar. That is utterly untrue, I never deceived King nor Queene of one peny in my life, and you ſhal never be able to prove that you ſay.

Wincheſt. Thou art a falſe knave.

B. Farrar ſtoutly ſtandeth upon his truth.

Farrar. Then Farrar ſtood up unbidden (for all that while he kneeled) and ſaid; No my Lord, I am a true man, I thank God for it. I was borne under King Henry the Seventh, I ſerved King Henry the Eighth, and King Edward the Sixth truly, and have ſerved the Queenes Maieſty that now is truly with my poor heart and word: more I could not do, and I was never falſe, nor ſhall be by the grace of God.

Wincheſt. How ſaiſt thou, wilt thou be reformable?

B. Farrar ſtandeth to his oath made to the King againſt the Pope.

Farrar. My Lord, if it like your Honor, I have made an oath to God, and to King Henry the Eighth, and alſo to King Edward, and in that to the Queenes Maieſty, the which I can never break while I live, to die for it.

Dureſm. You have made an other oath before.

Farrar. No my Lord, I never made another oath before.

Dureſme. You made a vow.

Farrar. That did I not.

Vow of chaſtity is not to live without a wife.

Wincheſt. You made a profeſſion to live without a wife.

Farrar. No my Lord if it like your honor, that did I never, I made a profeſſion to live chaſte, not without a wife.

Worceſt, You were ſworne to him that was Maſter of your houſe.

Farrar. That was I never.

Wincheſt. Well, you are a froward knave: we will have no more to do with you, ſeeing that you will not come, wee will bee ſhort with you, and that you ſhall know within this ſevennight.

Wincheſters periury toucht.

Farrar. I am as it pleaſeth your honor to call mee, but I cannot break my oath which your Lordſhip your ſelfe made before me, and gave in example, the which confirmed my conſcience. Then I can never break that oath whileſt I live to dye for it.

Dureſme. Well ſaith he, he ſtandeth upon his oath: call another.

My Lord Chancellor then did ring a little bell, and Maſter Farrar ſaid; I pray God ſave the King and Queens Maieſties long to continue in honor to Gods glory, and their comforts, and the comfort of the whole Realme, and I pray God ſave all your honors, and ſo he departed.

B Farrar brought before D. Morgan, pretenſed biſhop of Saint Davids.

After theſe examinations thus ended, Biſhop Farrar ſo remained in priſon uncondemned, till the fourteenth day (as is aforeſaid) of February, and then was ſent downe into Wales, there to receive ſentence of condemnation. Who then upon the ſixe and twentieth of February, in the Church of Carmarthen, being brought by Griffith Leyſon Eſquire, Sheriffe of the Countey of Carmarthen, was there perſonally preſented before Henry Biſhop of Saint Davids, and Conſtantine the publike Notarie: which Henry there, and then diſcharged the ſaid Sheriffe, and received him into his own cuſtodie, further committing him to the keeping of Owen Iones, and thereupon declared unto the ſaid maſter Farrar the great mercy and clemency that the King and Queens highnes pleaſure was to be offered unto him, which he there did offer unto the ſaid M. Farrar; that is to ſay, that if he would ſubmit himſelf to the Lawes of this Realme, and conforme himſelfe to the unity of the univerſall Catholike Church, he ſhould be received and pardoned: after that ſeeing the ſaid M. Farrar to giue no anſwer to the premiſſes, the ſaid Biſhop miniſtred unto him theſe Articles following.

Articles deviſed againſt Biſhop Farrar.

Articles obiected againſt B. Farrar.

1 FIrſt, whether he believeth the marriage of Prieſts lawfull by the Lawes of God, and holy Church, or no?

2 Item, whether he believeth, that in the bleſſed Sacrament of the Altar, after the words of conſecration duely pronounced by the Prieſt, the very body and blood of Chriſt is really and ſubſtantially contained, without the ſubſtance of bread and wine.

Unto the which Articles the ſaid Biſhop required the ſaid M. Farrar to anſwer upon his allegeance.

The anſwer of B. Farrar.

To which he ſaid, he would anſwer when he ſaw a lawfull commiſſion, and would make no further anſwer at that time. Whereupon the ſaid biſhop taking no advantage upon the ſame anſwer, committed him to the ſaid Keeper, to be kept in priſon untill a new monition, and in the mean time to deliberate with himſelfe for his further anſwer to the premiſſes.

Another examination of the Biſhop of S. Davids, before Henry Morgan the pretenſed Biſhop of S. Davids, George Conſtantine his Regiſter, and others, the laſt of February, An. 1555.

Another examination of B. Farrar.

THis day and place, Morgan the pretenſed biſhop of S. Davids, ſitting as Iudge, miniſtred unto Biſhop Farrar there perſonally preſent before him, certain Articles and Interrogatories in writing: which being openly read and miniſtred unto him, the ſaid Biſhop Farrar refuſed to anſwer, untill he might ſee his lawfull Commiſſion and Authority. Whereupon the foreſaid pretenſed Biſhop of S. Davids, did pronounce him as Contumax, and for the puniſhment of this his contumacy to bee counted pro confecto, and ſo did pronounce him in writing. Which being done, he committed the ſaid Biſhop to the cuſtody of Owen Iones, untill Monday next, being the fourth of March, then to bee brought againe into the ſame place, betweene one and two.

Another appearance of the ſaid Biſhop Farrar, before Morgan the pretenſed Biſhop of Saint Davids.

Another appearance of B. Farrar.

ITem, the day and place appointed, the ſaid biſhop appearing againe before the pretenſed biſhop, humbly ſubmitting himſelf as ready to anſwer to the Articles and Poſitions above mentioned, gently required the copy of the Articles, and a competent terme to be aſſigned unto him, to anſwer for himſelfe: which being granted unto him, and the Thurſday next being aſſigned unto him betweene one and three to anſwer preciſely and fully, ſo he was committed againe to cuſtodie as above.

Another appearance of the ſaid Biſhop.

Another appearance of the ſaid biſhop

ON Thurſday as was appointed, which was the ſeventh of March, the ſaid Biſhop perſonally again appeared, where he exhibited a certaine bill in writing, containing in it his anſwer unto

Anno 1555

unto certaine Articles obiected and miniſtred unto him before. Then after Henry the pretenſed biſhop of S. Davids offered him againe the ſaid Articles as before: the tenor whereof tended to this effect.

Articles again miniſtred againſt Biſhop Farrar.

Firſt, that he willed him being a Prieſt to abrenounce matrimony.

Secondly, to grant the naturall preſence of Chriſt in the Sacrament, under the formes of bread and wine.

Thirdly, that the Maſſe is a propitiatory ſacrifice for the quick and the dead.

Fourthly, that generall Councels lawfully congregated never did, nor can erre.

Fifthly, that men are not iuſtified before God by Faith only, but that hope and charity are alſo neceſſarily required to iuſtification.

Sixthly, that the Catholike Church which only hath authority to expound Scriptures, and to define controverſies of Religion, and to ordaine things appertaining to publike diſcipline, is viſible, and like unto a city ſet upon a mountain for all men to underſtand.

B. Farrar denieth to ſubſcribe to the Articles.

To theſe Articles thus obiected to him, he refuſed to ſubſcribe, affirming that they were invented and excogitated by man, and pertaine nothing to the Catholike faith. After this, the biſhop above named, delivered unto him the copie of the Articles, aſſigning him Munday next following, to anſwer and ſubſcribe to the ſame, either affirmatively, or negatively.

Another appearance of Biſhop Farrar.

Another appearance, or examination of B. Farrar.

UPon the which Munday, being the xi. day of March, he appearing againe before the Biſhop, and the aforeſaid Notarie George Conſtantine, exhibited in a written Paper his mind, and anſwer to the foreſaid Articles, which the biſhop had twice now obiected againſt him before. To the which articles and anſwers, he did ſo ſubſcribe, adding theſe words, as tenens ſe de æquitate & juſtitia eſſe Epiſcopum Menevenſem, that the biſhop aſſigned the next Wedneſday, in the fore noone, to heare his finall and definitive ſentence.

The laſt appearance of Biſhop Farrar.

The laſt appearance and examination of the bleſſed Biſhop M. Farrar.

THe which day and place the ſaid biſhop and true ſervant of God M. Farrar, perſonally there appearing, was demanded of Henry the pretenſed Biſhop of S. Davids, whether hee would renounce and recant his hereſies, ſchiſms, and errours (as he called them) which hitherto he had maintained, and if he would ſubſcribe to the Catholike Articles, otherwiſe than hee had done before.

B. Farrar appealeth from the biſhop of S. Davids to the Cardinall.

After this the ſaid godly biſhop, maſter Farrar, did exhibite a certaine ſchedule written in Engliſh, and remaining in the Acts, appealing withall by expreſſe word of mouth from the Biſhop, as from an incompetent iudge, to Cardinal Poole, &c.

Sentence pronounced againſt biſhop Farrar.

All which notwithſtanding, the ſaid Biſhop proceeding in his rage, pronounced the definitive ſentence againſt him contained in writing, and there left in the Acts: by the which ſentence he pronounced him as an heretike excommunicate, and to be given up forthwith to the ſecular power, namely, to the Sheriffe of the Towne of Carmarthen, maſter Leyſon. The tenour of which ſentence, as well of his condemnation, as of his degradation, here followeth.

The ſentence of condemnation againſt Biſhop Farrar.

Here followeth the copie of his degradation.

The ſentence of degradation againſt biſhop Farrar.

IN Nomine patris, ✠ filii, ✠ & ſpiritus ſancti, ✠ Amen. Quia nos Henricus permiſſione divina Meneven. Biſhop Farrar brought to the place of execution.

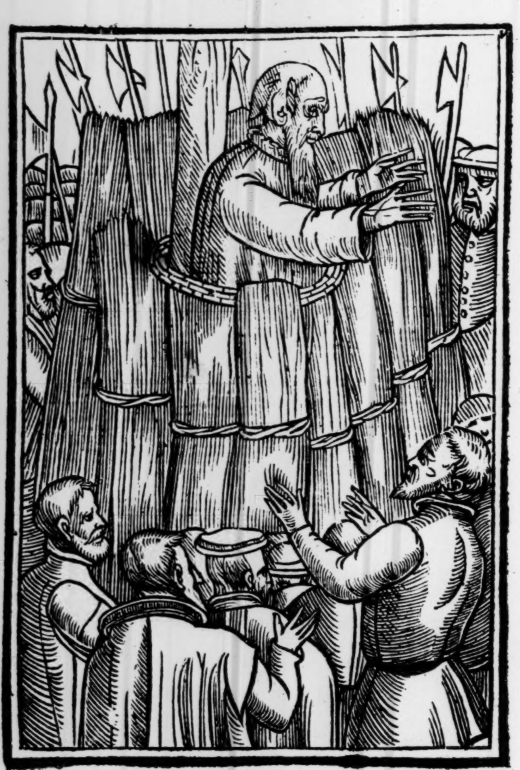
Thus this godly Biſhop being condemned and degraded, was committed to the ſecular power, who not long after was brought to the place of execution in the town of Carmarthen, where he in the Market place in the Southſide of the Market Croſſe, the thirtieth day of March, being Saturday next before Paſſion Sunday, moſt conſtantly ſuſtained the torments and paſſion of the fire.

The martyrdome of D. Robert Farrar Biſhop, and Martyr, at Carmarthen. Anno 1555. March 30.

The cruell burning of Maſter Farrar, Martyr.



Touching the which conſtancy of this bleſſed Martyr, this is moreover to be added and noted, that one named Richard Jones, a Knights ſon, comming to M. Farrar a little before his death, ſéemed to lament the painfulnes of the death he had to ſuffer, unto whom the biſhop anſwered again to this effect, ſaying; that if hee ſaw him once to ſtirre in the paines of his burning, hée ſhould then give no credit to his doctrine. And as he ſaid, ſo he right well performed the ſame; for ſo patiently he ſtood; that he never moved, but even as he ſtood, holding up his ſtumps, ſo ſtill he continued, till one Richard Gravell with a ſtaffe daſhed him upon the head, and ſo ſtrooke him downe.

A memorable example of conſtancy in this bleſſed Biſhop and Martyr.

¶ Letters.

As touching the letters of M. Farrar, we do not finde many that he did write. And peradventure in Quéene Maries time his impriſonment was ſo ſtrait, that at no time it was permitted to him to write. Albeit in his other troubles in king Edwards time, certain letters he wrote to the Archbiſhop of Canterbury Thomas Cranmer, and to the Earle of Warwicke: which letters although they might be well referred to the firſt edition of this ſtory, yet becauſe in the ſaid letters is contained briefly and in few lines, the whole diſcourſe of his unjuſt vexation at that time wrought by his adverſaries, I thought good not to paſſe them over, but to communicate them unto the Reader, for the better underſtanding both of the innocency of that bleſſed biſhop, and of the crafty iniquity of his conſpired enemies; as in the ſaid letters here following to the indifferent Reader may eaſily appear.

The copie of a certaine letter of the Biſhop of Saint Davids, written belike to the Lord Chancellour Doctor Goodrick Biſhop of Ely.

Anno 1555.

Moſt humbly ſheweth unto your honor, your poore Orator Robert, Biſhop of Saint Davids, that whereas one Thomas Lée (by the procurement of Thomas Young, and Rowland Mericke being both Canons of ſaint Davids, and George Conſtantine Regiſter to the ſaid biſhop) hath exhibited unto your honor againſt him certain articles, in the which are mentioned many trifling things, unworthy to be declared in your honourable audience, and alſo their pretenſed weighty articles (as they have alledged there) are utterly untrue: for proofe whereof the ſaid Thomas Lée hath had Commiſſions into the Countrey: Therefore it may pleaſe your honour of your favourable goodnes, to grant unto your ſaid Orator a like commiſſion for the examination of witneſſes, in defence of his truth and honeſty againſt the aforenamed Tho. Lée, George Conſtantine, Thomas Young, Rowland Mericke, and all other perſons with their unjuſt articles, atteſtations, and ſayings, depoſed againſt him. And in tender conſideration that your ſaid Orator ſtandeth bounden, and ſureties with him in the ſumme of a thouſand marks, to appear before the Kings Juſtice, in the Seſſions at Carmarthen, in July next comming, to anſwer to a forged matter of Præmunire, by the procurement and counſell of his forenamed adverſaries, maliciouſly ſurmiſed againſt him to his utter undoing. And furthermore that your Orator being in debt to the Kings Majeſty, by reaſon of the malicious vexation of the foreſaid adverſaries, cannot (if he remain here) ſatisfie the ſame: for whereas there be arrerages to a great ſumm (as well of the Kings money as of his own rents) he can receive none thereof, his adverſaries have made ſuch ill report to his diſcredit, bearing the people in hand, that he ſhall come no more thither. By reaſon of which bruit, neither his own tenants will pay their rents & arrerages, nor the Prieſts their arrerages due to the Kings Majeſtie, as well for anno ſecundo, & tertio, as for quarto, and quinto. In conſideration of all which things, it may pleaſe your honorable goodneſſe to licence your ſaid Orator to depart into the Dioceſſe, for theſe affaires and other. And he ſhall be ready at all times, at your honourable commandement and pleaſure, to repaire again, and ever to pray to the Lord Jeſus for the perpetuall conſervation of your honor, to his glory.

Biſhop Farrar bound with his ſureties in a thouſand marks to appeare in a matter of Præmunire.

Beſides this letter he wrote another likewiſe to the ſaid Lord (who was, as ſéemeth, D. Goodricke L. Chancellor afore mentioned) wherein he declareth the whole cauſe of his trouble, how it roſe againſt him by his adverſaries, as here followeth.

Another letter written by the Biſhop of S. Davids to the Lord Chancellor aforeſaid.

Another letter of Biſhop Farrar to the Lord Chauncellour.

Right honourable, and my very ſpeciall good Lord, with humble ſervice and hearty thanks to God, and to you for your godly favor towards me at all times, as right plainly appeareth by your fatherly letters most lovingly admoniſhing me to incline unto that which is very neceſſary, as charitable concord and unity; This is further to beſéech your Lordſhip for the Lords ſake not to be grieved, but benignely to hear, and gravely to ponder that weighty matter, which, appearing to other but a light grief to me, is in very déed a right grievous offence to Godward, with no little hinderance of his holy word, and diſturbance of the Kings godly procéedings, and may be a great occaſion of much inobedience, and diſorder of good life.

Wherefore

Anno 1555.

Wherefore I am ſtraitly bounden for the true zeale that I am to beare unto the word of life, Chriſtian Religion, the Kings Maieſties honor, and the godly quiet ſtate of his people, not faintly to let fall the burden of diligent redreſſe to be ſought at his Maieſties hands by the godly wiſdome of his moſt honourable and upright councel, but with hearty affection to bear it up againſt thoſe high minded, arrogant, ſtubborn, ambitious, Covetous Canons, truſting in their biting tongues, with crafty prevention, and utterly untrue ſurmiſes, to ſtop the light that their ungodly miſdoings in darkneſſe ſhal either not be ſeen, or at the leaſt may have a colourable appearance of right. In ſo much that I do not a little marvell at theſe qualities in Maſter Chaunter, the Canon, and the Deane of Worceſter, whoſe ungentle and untrue behaviour I have not only knowne, but expertly proved, and ſenſibly felt in two of the firſt to my great loſſes, whereof I make no complaint.

The unkinde dealing of George Conſtantine againſt B. Farrar.

But I wonder in my mind and lament in my heart the ſtrange alteration and wilfull going backward of mine old faithfull brother George Conſtantine, the which (knowing them all three to have beene in times paſt either obſtinate enemies to the true bearers of the croſſe of Chriſt, or at the leaſt privie lurkers under pretence of favour towards the Goſpell, to ſting the poore followers thereof, ſeeking but their owne lucre and pleaſure in all their doings) would ſo earneſtly cleave unto them in their wrong deeds, as to betray me with his tongue, become untrue of his promiſe, and a bearer of filthy ſinne for lucres ſake, even yet ſtiffely perſiſting in the ſame, namely, in things manifeſtly knowne unto many, although he would deny it, and that I might not be credited.

This Farlee was Chancellor to B. Farrar.

This Chaunter was D. Young.

D. Young and D. Mericke, removed by B. Farrer from their offices.

And as for their præmunire, both George and they at my firſt comming, ungently detaining from M. Farlée his commiſſion for the Chancellorſhip, would have faced me down with præmunire, becauſe it was written in my owne name according to the ſtatute: yet was I fain, for the zeal of unity, not to ſée their uncourteous déeds, departing with M. Farlée for the avoiding of their malice and envie, and gave that office for the amity of George, unto M. Chaunter his ſon in law, and to M. Mericke the office of Cardigan. But ſéeing after their covetous reſpect to their own glory and lucre, not regarding the reformation of ſin, and eſpecially of ſhameleſſe whoredome, I was compelled to remove them, ſore againſt their wils: and whereas I deſired many and ſundry times charitable redreſſe of their wrong doings in the vacation time, I obtained many faire words, and nothing in déed.

The wrongs which B. Farrar received by Thom Yong & D. Mericke.

And deſiring to have ſight of the Book of ſtatutes of the Church, for the knowledge of my duty and theirs, I could not obtain it. Deſiring to have a key of the chapter houſe ſeal, as my Lord of Bathe had, they would not deliver it but upon conditions; yet was I content to be bridled, receiving it as it pleaſed them to give it. And further requiring the ſight of neceſſary evidences, for the declaration of divers things in traverſe of my right, they would in no wiſe grant it. And thereupon conſidering their ungentlenes, I moved the quo warranto, knowing right well, that if they ſhould ſhew any ſubſtantiall grant under the Kings ſeal for their corporation, it muſt therin appear the Biſhop to be the head, and ever hath béen under the King: for other they never have, nor had, except they would return to Rome againe, as I truſt they will not. And yet perceiving afterward, that they had no ſpeciall grant to ſhew, or elſe ſuch as they would not ſhew, I my ſelf for the reſpect of unity, wrote my letters to the Kings Atturney, by reaſon whereof the quo warranto was ſtayed, and ſo yet remaineth.

But as touching the certificate, the Kings ſubſidy being due at Michaelmas laſt, and forborne till after Chriſtmas, and lawfully demanded afore, they did utterly refuſe to pay both to my Vicecollector and to my ſelf, except I would take it of them in portions, not knowing where to aſk the reſt, and it is committed unto mee in the Kings rolle a whole ſumme in groſſe, to be received of the Canons reſidentiaries for their divident: who, becauſe they cannot agrée in dividing, would have the Kings Maieſty to tarry for his money, till they can agrée to make diviſion; and I cannot demand it of any particular perſon, nor at any particular place.

Wherfore I moſt humbly beſéech your fatherly goodnes, for the Lords ſake, to perſiſt and continue my good Lord and friend unto ſuch time as ye find me either deſiring to be defended in my wrong, or not willing to put the iudgement of my right cauſe into your hands. And becauſe that the reſidue of matters touching them and their ungentle, untrue, and ungodly doings is too long, and I have moleſted you too much with this my tedious letter, I ſhall now ſurceaſe; humbly beſéeching your good Lordſhip to accept in good part this my boldneſſe procéeding of neceſſity, and to pardon it for the love of our Lord Jeſus, who ſave and keep you in health, comfort, and honor long to endure, for the advancement of his glory. Written at Aburguily this ix of March.

Your Lordſhips to command
during life, R. F.

The hiſtorie of one Rawlins White, burned at Cardiffe in Wales about the Moneth of March, for the teſtimonie of Chriſts Goſpel, reported by I. Dane being yet alive, who was almoſt continually with him during his trouble, unto his death.

Rawlins White Martyr, burned at Cardiffe in Wales.

FOr ſo much as we have here paſſed the hiſtorie of Maſter Farrar, burned at the town of Carmarthen in Wales, I thought to adioyne and accompany with the ſame the hiſtory alſo of one Rawlins White, a Fiſher man, which both in the like cauſe, and in the ſame Countrey of Wales, and alſo about the ſame Moneth of March, and year aforeſaid, gave his life like a valiant ſouldier of Jeſus Chriſt to Martyrdom, and was burned at Cardiffe; the proceſſe of whoſe ſtory here followeth expreſſed more at large.

This Rawlins was by his calling and occupation a Fiſherman, living and continuing in the ſaid trade by the ſpace of twenty yeers at the leaſt, in the towne of Cardiffe, being (as a man of his vocation might bee) one of a very good name, and well accounted amongſt his neighbors. As touching his religion at the firſt, it cannot otherwiſe bee knowne, but that hee was a great partaker of the ſuperſtition and idolatry that then was uſed, I meane in the reigne of King Henry the eighth. But after that God of his mercy had rayſed up the light of his Goſpel, through the bleſſed governement of King Edward the ſixth, here in this Realm of England, this Rawlins began partly to miſlike that which before he had embraced, and to have ſome good opinion of that which before by the iniquity of the time had béen concealed from him: and the rather to bring this good purpoſe and intent of his to paſſe, he began to be a diligent hearer, and a great ſearcher out of the truth.

[illegible]

But becauſe the good man was altogether unlearned, and withall very ſimple, hee knew no ready way how hee might ſatisfie his great deſire. At length it came in his minde to take a ſpeciall remedy to ſupply his neceſſity, which was this: He had a little boy which was his own Sonne, which childe he ſet to ſchoole to learne to read Engliſh. Now after the little boy could read indifferently well, his father every night after ſupper, ſummer and winter, would have the boy to read a peece of the holy ſcripture, and now and then of ſome other good book. In which kind of vertuous exerciſe the old man had ſuch a delight and pleaſure, that as it ſeemed, he rather practiſed himſelfe in the ſtudy of the Scripture, than in the trade or ſcience which before time he had uſed: ſo that Rawlins within few yeers in the ſaid time of King Edward, through the help of his little Sonne, a ſpeciall miniſter appointed by God (no doubt) for that purpoſe, and through much conference beſides, profited and went forward in ſuch ſort, that hee was able not only to reſolve himſelf touching his own former blindneſſe and ignorance, but was alſo able to admoniſh and inſtruct others: and therfore when occaſion ſerved hee would goe from one place to another viſiting ſuch as he had beſt hope in. By which his doing he became in that Countrey, both a notable and open Profeſſor of the truth, being at all times and in all ſuch places, not without the company of his little boy, whom (as I have ſaid) he uſed as an aſſiſtance to this his good purpoſe. And to this his great induſtry and endeavour in the holy Scripture, God did alſo adde in him a ſingular gift of memory, ſo that by the benefit thereof hee would and could doe that in vouching and rehearſing of the text, which men of riper and more profound knowledge, by their notes and other helps of memory could very hardly accompliſh. Inſomuch that he, upon the alledging of Scripture, very often would cite the book, the leafe, yea and the very ſentence; ſuch was the wonderfull working of God in this ſimple and unlearned father.

The godly intent of Rawlins in ſetting his ſon to Schoole.

The meanes whereby Rawlins firſt came to knowledge. Rawlins by the means of his young ſon came to the knowledge of the Scripture.

The gift of memory in Rawlins.

Now when he had thus continued in his profeſſion the ſpace of five yeares, King Edward dyed, upon whoſe deceaſe Queene Mary ſucceeded, and with her all kinde of ſuperſtition and Papiſtry crept in. Which thing being once perceived, Rawlins did not altogether uſe open inſtruction and admonition (as before hee was wont) and therefore oftentimes in ſome private place or other he would call his truſty friends together, and with earneſt prayer and great lamentation paſſe away the time, ſo that by his vertuous inſtructions, being without any blemiſh of error, hee converted a great number, which number (no doubt) had greatly increaſed, had not the cruell ſtorm of perſecution been.

The extremity and force whereof at the laſt ſo purſued this good father Rawlins, that he looked every houre to go to priſon: whereupon many of thoſe, which had received comfort by his inſtructions, did reſort unto him, and by all means poſſible began to perſwade him to ſhift for himſelf, and to diſpoſe his goods by ſome reaſonable order to the uſe of his wife and children, and by that means he ſhould eſcape that danger, which was imminent over his head.

Rawlins exhorted to ſhift for himſelfe.

But Rawlins nothing abaſhed for his owne part through the iniquity of the time, and nothing at all moved with theſe their fleſhly perſwaſions, thanked them moſt heartily for their good will, and told them plainly, that he had learned one good leſſon touching the confeſſing and denyall of Chriſt; advertiſing them, that if hee upon their perſwaſions ſhould preſume to deny his maſter Chriſt, Chriſt in the laſt day would deny and utterly condemn him: and therefore (quoth he) I will by his favourable grace confeſſe and beare witneſſe of him before men, that I may find him in everlaſting life.

Rawlins promiſeth to be conſtant to the death.

Notwithſtanding which anſwer, his friends were very importunate with him. Howbeit father Rawlins continued ſtill in his good purpoſe ſo long, till at the laſt he was taken by the Officers of the towne, as a man ſuſpected of hereſie; upon which apprehenſion he was convented before the biſhop of Landaffe that then was, the ſaid biſhop lying then at his houſe beſides Chepſtow: by whom after divers combates and conflicts with him and his Chaplaines, this good father Rawlins was committed to priſon in Chepſtow. But this his keeping, whether it were by the Biſhops meanes, becauſe he would rid his hands of him, or through the favour of his Keeper, was not ſo ſevere and extreme, but that (if he had ſo liſted) he might have eſcaped oftentimes.

Rawlins apprehended and convented before the Biſh. of Landaffe named Anthony Kechin.

Rawlins might eſcape and would not

But that notwithſtanding, he continued ſtill, inſomuch that at the laſt he by the aforenamed Biſhop was removed from Chepſtow to the caſtle of Cardiffe, where he continued by the ſpace of one whole year. During which time, this reporter reſorted to him very often, with money and other reliefe from this reporters mother (who was a great favourer of thoſe that were in affliction in thoſe dayes) and other of his friends: which he received not without great thankes and praiſes given to the name of God. And albeit that he was thus troubled and impriſoned, as ye have heard, to his owne undoing in this world, and to the utter decay of his poore wife and children: yet was his heart ſo ſet to the inſtruction and furtherance of others in the way of ſalvation, that he was never in quiet, but when he was perſwading or exhorting ſuch of his familiar friends, as commonly came unto him. Inſomuch that on the Sundaies and other times of leaſure, when his friends came to viſit him, he would paſſe away the time in prayer and exhortations, admoniſhing them alwayes to beware of falſe Prophets which come in ſheeps clothing.

Rawlins a whole yeare in priſon. A godly woman ſtirred up to relieve Rawlins.

Exhortation of Rawlins to his friends.

Now when he had continued in Cardiffe Caſtle by the ſpace of one whole yeer (as I have ſaid) the time of his further tryal was at hand. Whereupon the forenamed Biſhop of Landaffe cauſed him to be brought again from the Caſtle of Cardiffe unto his owne houſe beſides Chepſtowe: and whileſt he continued there, the biſhop aſſayed many waies how to reduce him to ſome conformity. But when all means either by their threatning words, or flattering promiſes were to no purpoſe: the biſhop willed him to adviſe, and be at a full point with himſelf, either to recant his opinions, or elſe to abide the rigor of the law, and thereupon gave him a day of determination. Which day being come, the Biſhop with his Chaplaines went into his Chappell, not without a great number of other by-dwellers, that came to behold the manner of their doings. When the biſhop with his retinue were placed in order, poor Rawlins was brought before them. The biſhop after great deliberation in addreſſing himſelfe (as it ſeemed, and ſilence forewarned to the reſt that were there preſent) uſed a long kinde of talke to him, declaring the cauſe of his ſending for, which was for that he was a man well known to hold hereticall opinions, and that through his inſtruction many were led into blinde errour. In the end hee exhorted him to conſider his owne eſtate wherein he ſtood: for (ſaid the Biſhop) Rawlins, you have oftentimes ſince your firſt trouble, both here in my houſe, and elſewhere beene travelled withall touching your opinions, and that notwithſtanding yee ſeeme altogether obſtinate and wilfull. Now hereupon wee thought good to ſend for you, to ſee if there were any conformity in you:

Rawlins by no meanes could be reduced to returne to Popery.

Rawlins brought before the B. of Landaffe in open judgement.

The words of the Biſhop to Rawlins.

ſo

Anno 1555

ſo that the matter is come to this point, that if you ſhall ſhew your ſelf repentant for that which you have done both againſt God and the Princes law, we are ready to uſe favour towards you; but if by no meanes we can perſwade with you touching your reformation, we are minded at this time to miniſter the law unto you, and therfore adviſe your ſelfe what you will do.

Rawlins anſwereth to the biſhop.

When the Biſhop had made an end of his long tale, this good father Rawlins ſpake very boldly to him, and ſaid; My Lord, I thank God I am a Chriſtian man, and I hold no opinions contrary to the word of God; and if I do, I deſire to be reformed out of the word of God, as a Chriſtian man ought to be: many moe words in like ſort were between the Biſhop and Rawlins, which this reporter doth not well remember. But in the end, when Rawlins would in no wiſe recant his opinions, the Biſhop told him plainly, that he muſt proceed againſt him by the law, and condemne him as an heretike.

The biſhop of Landaffe proceedeth with prayer in condemnation of Rawlins: which commonly the Popiſh perſecutors are not wont to do.

Proceed in your law a Gods name, ſaid Rawlins; but for an Heretike you ſhall never condemne me while the world ſtandeth. But (ſaid the Biſhop to his company) before we proceed any farther with him, let us pray unto God that he would ſend ſome ſparke of grace upon him, (meaning Rawlins) and it may ſo chance, that God through our prayer will here turne and convert his heart. When Rawlins heard the Biſhop ſay ſo; Ah, my Lord, quoth he, now you deale well, and like a godly Biſhop, and I thank you moſt heartily for your great charity and gentleneſſe. Chriſt ſaith, Whereas two or three be gathered in my Name, I will be in the middeſt of them: and there be moe than two or three of you. Now if it be ſo that your requeſt be godly and lawfull, and that ye pray as ye ſhould pray, without doubt God will heare you. And therefore my Lord goe to, doe you pray to your God, and I will pray to my God. I know that my God will both heare my prayer, and performe my deſire.

The biſhop prayeth to his God, and Rawlins to his.

By and by the Biſhop with his company fell to prayer. And Rawlins, turning himſelfe to a pew that ſtood ſomewhat neere him, fell downe upon his knees, covering his face with his hands: and when they had prayed a while, the Biſhop with his company aroſe from prayer. And then alſo aroſe Rawlins, and came before the Biſhop.

Rawlins confirmed in his doctrine.

Then ſaid the Biſhop; Now Rawlins, how is it with thee? wilt thou revoke thy opinions or no? Surely (ſaid Rawlins) my Lord, Rawlins you left me, and Rawlins you finde me, and by Gods grace Rawlins I will continue. Certainly if your petitions had beene iuſt and lawfull, God would have heard them: but you honour a falſe God, and pray not as ye ſhould pray; and therfore hath not God granted your deſire. But I am one poore ſimple man as you ſee, and God hath heard my complaint, and I truſt he will ſtrengthen me in his owne cauſe.

Popiſh biſhops pray to a falſe God, and therefore are not heard.

The Biſhop when he perceived that this hypocriſie of theirs took none effect, then with hot words he reproved him, and forthwith was ready to read the ſentence. Howbeit, upon ſome advice given to him by his Chaplaines that were there preſent, he thought beſt firſt to have a Maſſe, thinking that indeed by ſo doing ſome wonderfull worke ſhould be wrought in Rawlins, and thereupon a Prieſt began a Maſſe.

A Maſſe ſaid for converſion of Rawlins.

In the mean time poore Rawlins betook himſelfe to prayer in a ſecret place there by, untill ſuch time as the Prieſt came to the Sacring, as they terme it, which is a principall point of their Idolatry. When Rawlins heard the ſacring bell ring (as the uſe was) he roſe out of his place, and came to the Quire doore, and there ſtanding a while, turned himſelfe to the people, ſpeaking theſe words; Good people if there be any brethren amongſt you, or at the leaſt, if there bee but one brother amongſt you, the ſame one bear witnes at the day of iudgement, that I bow not to this Idol (meaning the hoſt that the Prieſt held over his head.)

The words of Rawlins to the people at the acring time.

Rawlins ſtill conſtant in the profeſſion of Gods truth.

The Maſſe being ended; Rawlins eftſoones was called for againe. To whom the Biſhop uſed many perſwaſions; but the bleſſed man continued ſo ſtedfaſt in his former profeſſion, that the Biſhops talk was altogether in vain, and to no purpoſe. Whereupon the Biſhop cauſed the definitive ſentence to be read. Which being ended, Rawlins was diſmiſſed, and from thence he was by the Biſhops commandement carried againe to Cardiffe, there to be put into the priſon of the town, called Cockmarell, a very darke, loathſome, and moſt vile priſon.

Sentence read againſt Rawlins.

Rawlins ſent to priſon to Cardiffe caſtle

Rawlins in the meane while paſſed away the time in prayer, and chiefly in ſinging of Pſalms: which kinde of godly exerciſes he alwaies uſed, both at Cardiffe Caſtle, and in all other places.

Now after he had thus continued as priſoner in Cockmarell priſon at Cardiffe (as is aforeſaid) a good ſpace, about three weekes before the day wherein he ſuffered, the head officers of the town, that had the charge of his execution, were determined to burn him, becauſe they would bee ſooner rid of him; having not indeed a writ of execution awarded, as by the law they ſhould have. Whereupon one Henry Lewes, the Recorder of the towne that then was, ſeeing that they went about to burne him without any warrant by writ, came to them, and told them, that if they did burne him before they had the writ De hereticis comburendis, the wife of the ſaid Rawlins would upon iuſt cauſe, by law call their doings into queſtion.

The officers intending to burne Rawlins without a writ

Immediately upon this advertiſement they ſent to London for the writ above named: vpon the receipt whereof they made ſome ſpeed to the execution of the ſaid Rawlins. Now when the day was come, wherein the good father ſhould performe and accompliſh the laſt act of this his worthy conflict, he was the night before willed to prepare himſelfe.

The writ awarded for burning of Rawlins

Now, when he perceived his time was no leſſe neer than it was reported unto him, he ſent forthwith to his wife, & willed her by the meſſenger, that in any wiſe ſhe ſhould make ready, and ſend unto him his wedding garment, meaning a ſhirt, which afterward he was burned in. Which requeſt, or rather commandement of his, his wife with great ſorrow and griefe of heart did performe, and early in the morning did ſend it to him, which he received moſt gladly and ioyfully.

Rawlins wedding garment

Now when the houre of his execution was come, this good and conſtant father Rawlins was brought out of priſon, having on his body the long ſhirt, which (as you heard before) he called his wedding garment, and an old ruſſet coate which he was wont to weare. Beſides this, he had upon his legges an old paire of leather Buſkins which he had uſed long afore. And thus being brought out of priſon (as I have ſaid) hee was accompanied, or rather guarded with a great company of bils and gleaves. Which ſight when he beheld; Alas (quoth he) what meaneth all this? All this needeth not. By Gods grace I will not ſtart away: but I with all my heart and minde give unto God moſt hearty thankes that he hath made me worthy to abide all this for his holy names ſake.

Rawlins going to the place of execution.

So he came to a place in his way where as his poor wife and children ſtood weeping and making great lamentation: the ſudden ſight of whom ſo pierced his heart, that the very teares trickled downe his face. But he ſoone after, as Rawlins ſomewhat moved at the ſight of his wife & children.

Rawlins wreſtleth againſt his fleſh.

though he had miſliked this infirmity of his fleſh, began to be as it were altogether angry with himſelfe: Inſomuch, that in ſtriking his breaſt with his hand, he uſed theſe words; Ah fleſh, ſtayeſt thou me for? wouldeſt thou faine prevaile? Well, I tell thee doe what thou canſt, thou ſhalt not by Gods grace have the victory. By this time this poore innocent came to the very altar of his ſacrifice (I meane the place appointed for his death) and there found a ſtake ready ſet up, with ſome wood toward the making of the fire. Which when he beheld, he ſet forward himſelfe very boldly: but in going toward the ſtake he fell down upon his knees and kiſſed the ground, and in riſing againe, the earth a little ſticking on his noſe, he ſaid theſe words; Earth unto earth, and duſt unto duſt: thou art my mother, and unto thee I ſhall returne. Then went he cheerfully and very ioyfully, and ſet his backe cloſe unto the ſtake, and when he had ſtood there a while; he caſt his eye upon this Reporter, and called him unto him, and ſaid: I feele a great fighting betweene the fleſh and the ſpirit, and the fleſh would very faine have his ſwinge; and therefore I pray you, when you ſee me any thing tempted, hold your finger up to me, and I truſt I ſhall remember my ſelfe.

The agony and fight of this Chriſtian warriour.

Rawlins faſtned to the ſtake

As he was thus ſtanding with his back cloſe unto the ſtake, a Smith came with a great chain of iron: whom when he ſaw, he caſt up his hand with a loud voice, and gave God great thanks. Then the Smith caſt a chain about him, and as he was making it faſt on the other ſide, Rawlins ſaid unto him; I pray you good friend knock in the chain faſt: for it may be that the fleſh would ſtrive mightily; but God of thy great mercy give me ſtrength and patience to abide the extremity.

The cheerfulneſſe of father Rawlins at his death.

Now when the Smith had made him ſure to the ſtake, the officers began to lay on more wood, with a little ſtraw and reed; wherein the good old man was no leſſe occupied than the beſt: for as farre as he could reach his hands, he would pluck the ſtraw and reed, and lay it about him in places moſt convenient for his ſpeedy diſpatch. Which thing he did with ſuch a cheerfull countenance, and familiar geſture, that all men there preſent were in a manner aſtonied.

A popiſh ſermon preached at Rawlins martyrdome.

Thus when all things were ready, ſo that there lacked nothing but the putting to of the fire, directly over againſt the ſtake in the face of Rawlins, there was a ſtanding erected, whereon ſtept up a Prieſt, addreſſing himſelfe to ſpeak to the people, which were many in number, becauſe it was Market day. When Rawlins perceived him, and conſidered the cauſe of his comming, he reached a little ſtraw unto him, and made two little ſtaies, and ſet them under his elbowes. Then went the Prieſt forward in his Sermon, wherein he ſpake of many things touching the authority of the Church of Rome. In the meane time Rawlins gave ſuch good eare and attention, that he ſeemed nothing at all moved or diſquieted. At the laſt, the prieſt came to the ſacrament of the Altar, and there he began to inveigh againſt Rawlins opinions: in which his invection he cited the common place of Scripture, and thereupon made a Clerkly interpretation.

Rawlins words to the falſe prophet.

Now when Rawlins perceived that he went about not onely to preach and teach the people falſe doctrine, but alſo to confirme it by Scripture, he ſuddenly ſtart up, and beckened his hands to the people, ſaying twice; Come hither good people, and heare not a falſe prophet preaching: and then ſaid unto the Preacher; Ah thou naughty hypocrite, doeſt thou preſume to prove thy falſe doctrine by Scripture? Look in the text that followeth; Did not Chriſt ſay, Doe this in remembrance of me? After which words, the Prieſt being rather amazed than interrupted, forthwith held his peace.

Then ſome that ſtood by cried out; Put fire, ſet to fire: which being ſet to; the ſtraw and reed by and by caſt up both a great and ſodaine flame. In the which flame this good and bleſſed man bathed his hands ſo long, untill ſuch time as the ſinewes ſhrunk, and the fat dropped away, ſaving that once he did as it were wipe his face with one of them. All this while, which was ſomewhat long, he cried with a loud voice; O Lord receive my ſoule, O Lord receive my ſpirit, untill he could not open his mouth. At the laſt, the extremity of the fire was ſo vehement againſt his legs, that they were conſumed almoſt before the reſt of his body was burned, which made the whole body fall over the chaine into the fire ſooner than it would have done. During which time of his burning, it cannot be ſaid that he felt any great paine, conſidering that not without his perfect memory he abode both quietly and patiently, even unto the departing of his life. Thus died this godly and old man Rawlins for the teſtimony of Gods truth, being now rewarded, no doubt, with the crowne of eternall life.

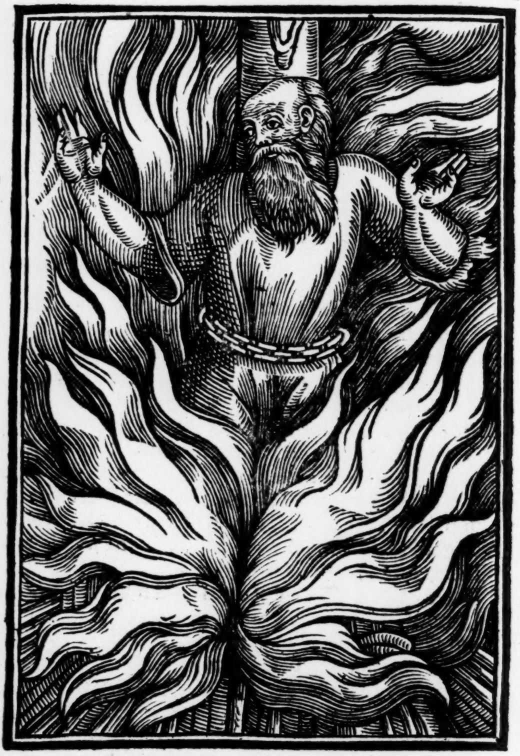
The burning of Rawlins White, Martyr.



The conſtant patience of Rawlins at his burning.

A ſodaine alteration of nature marvellous in Rawlins before his death.

It is recorded furthermore of the ſaid good father Rawlins by this Reporter, that as he was going to his death, and ſtanding at the ſtake, he ſeemed in a manner to be altered in nature. For whereas before he was wont to goe ſtooping, or rather crooked, through the infirmity of age, having a ſad countenance and a very feeble complexion, and withall very ſoft in ſpeech and geſture, now he went and ſtretched up himſelf not onely bolt upright, but alſo bare withall a moſt pleaſant and comfortable countenance, not without great courage and audacity both in ſpeech and behaviour. He had (of which thing I ſhould have ſpoken before) about his head a kerchiefe, The haires of his head (ſomewhat appearing beneath his kerchiefe) and alſo of his beard, were more inclining to white than to gray, which gave ſuch a ſhew and countenance to his whole perſon.

The reporter of this ſtory was one Maſter Dane.

perſon, that he ſeemed to be altogether angelicall.

It is alſo ſaid by this reporter, that a little before the fire flaſhed up to his body (as ye have heard) many of his friends came to him, and took him by the hand, amongſt whom the reporter of this ſtory held him ſo long by the hand, till the flame of the fire roſe, and forced them to ſunder. In the meane time the Prieſt of whom I ſpake afore, cried out and ſaid, that it was not lawfull for any man to take him by the hand, becauſe he was an heretike, and condemned by the Church. The chief cauſe of his trouble, was his opinion touching the ſacrament of the Altar. He was at that time of his death of the age of threeſcore yeeres, or thereabouts.

The ſumme of the words ſpoken by Queene Mary to certaine of her Counſellers. March 28. An. 1555. touching the reſtitution of Abbey lands.

Before I paſſe over this moneth of March, I cannot but leave a little memorandum of the words or conſultation of Q. Mary, uſed to certaine of the Councell the 28. day of the ſaid moneth of March, touching the reſtoring againe of the Abbey lands. Who after ſhe had called unto her preſence foure of her privy Councell, the day and moneth aforeſaid (the names of which Councellers were theſe:

The names of the Councellers called before Q. Mary.

1 William Lord Marqueſſe of Wincheſter, high Treaſurer of England.
2 Sir Robert Rocheſter Knight, the Queens Controller.
3 Sir William Peter Knight, Secretary.
4 Sir Francis Inglefield Knight, Maſter of the Wards.

The effect of Q. Maries words touching Abbey lands to be reſtored.

The ſaid Queene Mary inferred theſe words, the principall effect and ſumme whereof here followeth. You are here of our Councell, and we have willed you to be called unto us, to the intent you might heare of me my conſcience, and the reſolution of my minde, concerning the lands and poſſeſſions as well of Monaſteries, as other Churches whatſoever, being now preſently in my poſſeſſion.

Firſt, I doe conſider, that the ſaid lands were taken away from the Churches aforeſaid in the time of ſchiſme, and that by unlawfull meanes, ſuch as are contrary both to the law of God, and of the Church. For the which cauſe my conſcience doth not ſuffer me to detaine them; and therefore I here expreſly refuſe either to claime or to retaine the ſaid lands for mine, but with all my heart, freely and willingly, without all paction or condition, here and before God I doe ſurrender and relinquiſh the ſaid lands and poſſeſſions or inheritances whatſoever, and do renounce the ſame with this minde and purpoſe, that order and diſpoſition thereof may be taken, as ſhall ſeeme beſt liking to our moſt holy Lord the Pope, or els his Legate the Lord Cardinall, to the honour of God, and wealth of this our Realme.

The Queene maketh a conſcience in keeping Abbey lands.

The Queene ſurrendreth from her ſelfe the poſſeſſion of Abbey lands

And albeit you may obiect to me againe, that conſidering the ſtate of my Kingdome, and the dignity thereof, my Crowne Imperiall cannot be honourably maintained and furniſhed without the poſſeſſions aforeſaid: yet notwithſtanding I ſet more by the ſalvation of my ſoule, than by ten Kingdomes; and therefore the ſaid poſſeſſions I utterly refuſe here to hold after that ſort and title, and give moſt hearty thanks to almighty God, which hath given me an huſband likewiſe minded, with no leſſe good affection in this behalfe, than I am my ſelfe.

Wherefore I charge and command, that my Chancellor (with whom I have conferred my minde in this matter before) and you foure, to morrow together doe reſort to the moſt reverend Lord Legate, and doe ſignifie to him the premiſſes in my name, and give your attendance upon him for the more full declaration of the ſtate of my Kingdome, and of the foreſaid poſſeſſions accordingly, as you your ſelves do underſtand the matter, and can informe him in the ſame.

Promiſes for reſtitution of Abbey lands.

This intimation being given by the Queene, firſt unto the Councellers, and then coming to the Cardinals hand, he drawing out a copie thereof in Latine, ſent the ſame to the Pope: which copie drawn in Latine, and coming afterward to my hand, I have thus tranſlated into Engliſh, as ye have heard.

Furthermore, here by the way is to be underſtood, that in the moneth before, which was February, and in the 19. day of the ſaid moneth, the Biſhop of Ely, with the Lord Montacute, and ſevenſcore horſe, were ſent as Embaſſadours from the King and Queene unto Rome. For what cauſe, in ſtory it is not expreſſed, but by coniecture it may be well ſuppoſed to be for the ſame cauſe of Abbey lands, as by the ſequele thereof may probably appeare.

Ambaſſadors ſent from England to Rome. February 19.

For it was not long after, but the Pope did ſet forth in print a Bull of excommunication for all manner ſuch perſons, without exception, as kept any of the Church or Abbey lands: by vertue of which Bull, the Pope excommunicated as well all ſuch as had any of the Church or Abbey lands, as alſo all ſuch Princes, Biſhops, and Noble men, Juſtices of Peace, and other in office, who had not, or did not forthwith put the ſame Bull in execution. Albeit this execution (God be thanked) yet to this day was never put in practice.

The Popes Bull for reſtitution of Abbey lands.

Wherein againe is to be obſerved another catholike fetch, not unworthy perchance of marking. For where this kinde of Catholikes by rigor and force may over-maſter, they ſpare for no coſt, but lay on load enough. This well appeared, and ſtill doth appeare in burning the poore patient Chriſtians, whom becauſe they ſee to be deſtitute of power and ſtrength to reſiſt them, and content with patience to receive whatſoever is put unto them, there they play the Lions, and make no end of burning and perſecuting. But where they ſpie themſelves to be over-matched, or feare to receive a foile in preſuming too farre, there they keepe in, and can ſtay the execution of their Lawes and Buls, be they never ſo Apoſtolicall, till they ſpie their time convenient for their purpoſe, as in this caſe is evident for all the world to ſee.

Note the nature of the Papiſts, where they can overcome, they are Lions: where they are over-matched they play the Foxes

For notwithſtanding that the Popes Bull, coming down with full authority for reſtitution of Abbey lands, did ſo thunder out moſt terrible excommunication, not only againſt them which detained any ſuch lands, but alſo againſt all other that did not ſee the Popes commandement to be executed, yet neither Wincheſter, nor any of all the Popes Clergy, would greatly ſtirre in that matter, perceiving the Nobility to be too ſtrong for them to match withall; and therefore were contented to let the caſe fall, or at leaſt to ſtay for a time, while time might better ſerve them.

Here lacked no good will in the biſhops, but time as yet did not ſerve them.

Falſe diſſembling in the Popes Catholike Church.

Yea, and moreover under a crafty pretence, that the Nobility and men of lands at the firſt coming out of the Bull ſhould not be exaſperate too much againſt them, they ſubtilly abuſed the Pulpits, and diſſembled with the people, affirming that the ſaid Popes late Bull, ſet forth in print for reſtitution of Abbey lands, was not meant for England, but for other forraign countreyes: where in very deed the meaning of that Bull, was only for England, and no countrey elſe, as both by this intimation of Q. Mary here mentioned, and by many other coniectures, and Whereby it is eaſie for all men to underſtand what the purpoſe of thoſe men was to do, if time, which they obſerved, might have ſerved their devotion. But to let this matter paſſe of the Popes Bull, the time now ſerveth to intreat of Pope Julius death, forſomuch as he made his end about the latter end of this foreſaid moneth of March.

The death of Pope Julius the third.
Vide ſcriptum Pauli Vergerii contra hunc archiepiſcop.
Note here what an holy Catholike Church this is Concerning the deeds and acts of which Pope to make a full declaration, it were not ſo much tedious to the Reader, as horrible to all good eares. (a) Under this Julius flouriſhed the archbiſhop of Beneventanus, a Florentine, named Iohannes à Caſa, Deane of the Popes chamber, and chief Legate to the Venetians: who well declaring the fruit of that filthy See, ſo farre forgat both honeſty and nature, that he ſhamed not only to play the filthy Sodomite himſelfe, and to boaſt openly of the ſame; but alſo took upon him moſt impudently in Italian Metre, to all mens eares, to ſet forth the praiſe and commendation of that beaſtly iniquity; ſaying, that he himſelfe never uſed other: and this book was printed at Venice by one Trojanus Navus; and yet the Pope could ſuffer this ſo great iniquity and ſhameleſſe beaſtlineſſe, even under his noſe in his own chamber, which could not abide the true doctrine of Chriſt in Chriſtian bookes.

Amongſt other pranks and deeds of this foreſaid Pope, in his Jubilee, and in the Synod of Trent, and in confirming of the Idoll of Lauretane, this is alſo reported of him in his life, that he delighted greatly in Porke-fleſh and Peacocks. Upon a time when he was admoniſhed of his Phyſitian to abſtaine from all Swines fleſh, for that it was noyſome for his Gout, and yet would not follow his counſell; the Phyſitian afterward gave warning to his Steward or Orderer of his diet, that he ſhould ſet no more Porke-fleſh before him.

A Porkiſh Pope.

Whereupon when the Pope perceived the ſaid Porke-fleſh to be lacking in his accuſtomed ſervice: Where (ſaid he) is my Porke? And when his Steward had anſwered that his Phyſitian had forbidden any Pork to be ſerved; then the Pope burſting out into a great rage, ſaid theſe words; Bring me, ſaid he, my Porke-fleſh, Al diſpetto di Dio, that is to ſay in Engliſh, In the deſpight of God.

Monſtrous blaſphemy in the Pope.

At another time, he ſitting at dinner, pointing to a Peacocke upon his table which he had not touched; Keepe (ſaid he) this cold Peacock for me againſt ſupper, and let me ſup in the garden: for I ſhall have gueſts. So when ſupper came, and amongſt other hot Peacocks, he ſaw not his cold Peacock brought to his table: the Pope, after his wonted manner, moſt horribly blaſpheming God, fell into an extreme rage, &c. Whereupon one of his Cardinals ſitting by, deſired him, ſaying; Let not your Holineſſe, I pray you, be ſo moved with a matter of ſo ſmall weight. Then this Julius the Pope anſwering againe; What, ſaid he, if God was ſo angry for one apple, that he caſt our firſt Parents out of Paradiſe for the ſame, why may not I, being his Vicar, be angry then for a Peacocke, ſince a Peacock is a greater matter than an Apple? Behold here (good Reader) by this Pope, the holineſſe of that blaſphemous See: and yet thou ſhalt ſee here what affection was born unto this Pope here in England, by the Diriges, Hearſes, and Funerals commanded to be had and celebrated in all Churches by the Queene and her Councell, as may appeare by ẏ copy of their letters here following.

Pope Julius blaſphemeth God for a Peacock.

A Letter from the Biſhop of Wincheſter (being Lord Chancellor) unto Boner Biſhop of London, touching the celebrating of the Popes funerals.

Anno 1555.

Aprill 20. Wincheſters letter to Boner for the Popes funerall.

AFter my hearty commendations to your good Lordſhip. The King and Queenes Majeſty having certaine knowledge of the death of the Popes Holineſſe, thought good there ſhould be as well ſolemne obſequies ſaid for him throughout the Realme, as alſo theſe prayers (which I ſend you herein incloſed) uſed at Maſſe times in all places at this time of vacation; and therefore willed me to ſignifie their pleaſures unto you in this behalfe: that thereupon ye might proceed to the full accompliſhment thereof, by putting the ſame in due execution within your owne Dioceſſe, and ſending word to the reſt of the Biſhops, to doe the like in theirs.

Thus doubting not but that your Lorſhip will uſe ſuch diligence in this matter at this time, as ſhall be neceſſary, I bid your Lordſhip heartily well to fare. From my houſe at Aſher, the tenth of Aprill, 1555.

Your aſſured friend and brother,

A woman of S. Magnes impriſoned for not praying for the Pope.

Upon this commandement, on Wedneſday in Eaſter weeke there were Hearſes ſet up, and Diriges ſung for the ſaid Julius in divers places. At which time it chanced a woman to come into S. Magnes Church at the Bridge-foot in London, and there ſeeing an Hearſe and other preparation, aſked what it meant: and other that ſtood by, ſaid that it was for the Pope, and that ſhe muſt pray for him. Nay (quoth ſhe) that will I not; for he needeth not my prayers: and ſeeing he could forgive us all our ſins, I am ſure he is cleane himſelfe; therfore I need not to pray for him. She was heard ſpeak theſe words of certaine that ſtood by; which by and by carried her unto the Cage at London Bridge, and bade her coole her ſelfe there.

on a certaine Prieſt in Kent, named Nightingall, Parſon of Crondall beſides Canterbury: who upon Shroveſunday, which was about the third day of the ſaid moneth of March, and yeere of our Lord aforeſaid, reioycing belike not a little at this alteration of Religion, began to make a ſermon to his Pariſhioners, taking his Theame out of the words of S. John; He that ſaith, he hath no ſin, is a lyar, and the truth is not in him, &c. And ſo upon the ſame very impertinently declared to them all ſuch articles as were ſet forth by the Popes authority, and by the commandement of the biſhops of this Realme; ſaying moreover unto the people in this wiſe: Now maſters and neighbours reioyce and be merry; for the prodigall ſonne is come home. For I know that the moſt part of you be as I am; for I know your hearts well enough. And I ſhall tell you what hath happened in this weeke paſt. I was before my Lord Cardinall Pooles Grace, and he hath made me as cleane from ſin, as I was at the Font-ſtone: and on Thurſday laſt being before him, he hath appointed me to notifie (I thank him for it) the ſame unto you. And I will tell you what it is. And ſo reading the Popes Bull of pardon that was ſent into England, he ſaid, he thanked God that ever he had lived to ſee that day; adding moreover that he beleeved, that by the vertue of that Bull he was cleane from ſin, as that night that he was borne: and immediately upon the ſame fell ſodainly downe out of the Pulpit, and never ſtirred hand nor foot, and ſo lay he. Aprill 2. John Awcock, Martyr.

IN the moneth of Aprill, and the ſecond day of the ſaid moneth, died in priſon John Awcocke, who after was buried in the fields, as the manner of the Papiſts was, to deny their Chriſtian buriall to ſuch as died out of their Popiſh Antichriſtian Church.

Now forſomuch as having paſſed the moneth of March, we are entred into the moneth of Aprill, to ſet down in order out of publike Records what happened in the ſaid moneth, here followeth to be noted: That the firſt day of Aprill, Anno 1555. a letter was ſent to the Sheriffe of Kent, to apprehend Thomas Wodgat and William Maynard, for preaching ſecretly, and to ſend them up to the Councell.

The ſeventh day of the ſaid moneth, another letter was ſent to the ſaid Sheriffe for the apprehenſion of one Harwiche, who went about with a boy with him, preaching from place to place.

The 15. of April a letter was directed to ſir Nicolas Hare, and ſir Thomas Cornwallis, willing them to examine M. Flower, aliàs Branch, what he meant to weare about his neck written, Deum time, Idolum fuge, and whom elſe he knew to weare the like, praying them alſo to ſpeake to Boner Biſhop of London, ſpeedily to proceed againſt him for his religion according to the laws; and that the Juſtices of Peace of Middleſex ſhould likewiſe proceed againſt him for ſhedding of blood in the Church, according to the Statute, ſo as if he continue his opinion, he might be executed at the fartheſt by the later end of this weeke, and that his right hand be the day before his execution, or the ſame day ſtriken off.

The 22. of April there was a like letter ſent to the Juſtices of Peace of Middleſex, with a writ for the execution of the ſaid Flower, commanding them to ſee his hand ſtriken off before his burning.

The 29. of Aprill, M. Robert Hornebey, ſervant then to the Lady Elizabeth, was conventted before the Councell for his religion; and ſtanding conſtantly to the truth, notwithſtanding their threats and other perſwaſions, was therfore committed to the Marſhalſea.

A declaration of the life, examination, and burning of George Marſh, who ſuffered moſt conſtant martyrdome for the profeſſion of the Goſpell of Chriſt, at Weſtminſter, the 24. day of Aprill, Anno 1555.

Aprill 24. George Marſh Martyr.

THe ſaid George Marſh was borne in the Pariſh of Deane, in the County of Lancaſter, and was well brought up in learning and honeſt trade of living by his parents, who afterwards about the 25. yeere of his age took to wife an honeſt maiden of the countrey, with whom he continued, earning their living upon a Farme, having children between them lawfully begotten: and then God taking his wife out of this world, he being moſt deſirous of godly ſtudies (leaving his houſhold and children in good order) went unto the Univerſity of Cambridge, where he ſtudied, and much increaſed in learning and godly vertues, and was a Miniſter of Gods holy word and ſacraments, and for a while was Curate to Laurence Saunders, as he himſelf reporteth. In which condition of life he continued for a ſpace, earneſtly ſetting forth Gods true religion, to the defacing of Antichriſts falſe doctrine, by his godly readings & ſermons, as well there and in the Pariſh of Deane, as elſwhere in Lancaſhire.

G. Marſh, firſt a Farmer.

G. Marſh made Miniſter

D. Cotes bi. of Cheſter, a perſecutor of George Marſh detected.

Whereupon at length, by detection of certain adverſaries, he was apprehended, and kept in cloſe priſon by George Cotes then Biſhop of Cheſter, in ſtreit priſon in Cheſter, within the precinct of the Biſhops houſe, about the ſpace of foure moneths, being not permitted to have reliefe and comfort of his friends; but charge being given unto the Porter, to marke who they were that asked for him, and to ſignifie their names unto the Biſhop, as by the particular deſcription of his ſtory, teſtified and recorded with his own pen, more evidently may appeare in the proceſſe hereunder following.

The handling, intreating, and examination of George Marſh, being ſent firſt by the Earle of Darby to Doctor Cotes, Biſhop of Cheſter.

The examination of George Marſh written with his owne hand.

M. Barton gentleman, and perſecutor.

On the Munday before Palme-ſunday, which was the 12. day of March, it was told me at my mothers houſe, that Roger Wrinſtone, with other of M. Bartons ſervants did make diligent ſearch for me in Bolton, and when they perceived that I was not there, they gave ſtreit charge to Roger Ward and Robert Marſh, to finde and bring me to M. Barton the day next following, with others, to be brought before the honourable Earle of Darby, to be examined in matters of religion, &c.

G. Marſh advertiſed by his friends to flie.

I knowing this, by relation of divers of my friends, was diverſly affected, my mother, and other my friends advertiſing me to flee, and to avoid the perill, which thing I had intended afore after a weeke then next enſuing, if this in the meane while had not chanced; ſeeing that if I were taken, and would not recant in matters of religion (as they thought I would not, and as God ſtrengthening and aſſiſting me with his holy ſpirit I never will) it would not only have put them to great ſorrow, heavineſſe, and loſſes, with coſts and charges, to their ſhame and rebuke in this world, but alſo mine owne ſelfe, after troubles and painefull priſonment, unto ſhamefull death.

G. Marſh in a perplexity whether to flie or to tarry.

This conſidered, they adviſed me and counſelled me to depart and flee the countrey, as I had intended to have done, if this had not hapned. To whoſe counſell my weak fleſh would gladly have conſented, but my ſpirit did not fully agree; thinking and ſaying thus to my ſelfe, that if I fled ſo away, it would be thought, reported, and ſaid, that I did not only flee the countrey, and my neereſt and deareſt friends; but much rather from Chriſts holy word, according as theſe yeeres paſt I had with my heart, or at leaſt with mine outward living profeſſed, and with my mouth and word taught, according to the ſmall talent given me of the Lord. I being thus with their counſell and advice, and the cogitations and counſels of mine owne minde, drawne as it were diverſe ways, went from my mothers houſe, ſaying, I would come againe at evening.

G. Marſh conſulteth with God.

In the meane time I ceaſed not by earneſt prayer to aſke and ſeeke counſell of God (who is the giver of all good gifts) and of other my friends, whoſe godly iudgments and knowledge I much truſted unto. After this, I met with one of my ſaid friends on Deane Moore, about Sun going down: and after we had conſulted together of my buſineſſe, not without hearty prayer kneeling on our knees, we departed. I not fully determining what to doe, but taking my leave with my friend, ſaid; I doubted not but God (according as our prayer and truſt was) would give me ſuch wiſdome and counſell, as ſhould be moſt to his honour and glory, the profit of my neighbors and brethren in the world, & obtaining of mine eternall ſalvation by Chriſt in heaven.

Marſhes brethren charged to ſeek him.

This done, I returned to my mothers houſe againe, where had been divers of M. Bartons ſervants ſeeking after me; who, when they could not finde me, ſtreitly charged my brother and William Marſh to ſeeke me that night, and to bring me to Smethehils the next day: who being ſo charged, were gone to ſeeke me in Adderton, or elſwhere I know not. Thus intending afore to have beene all night with my mother, but then conſidering that my tarrying there would diſquiet her with her houſhold, I departed from thence, and went beyond Deane Church, and there tarried all night with an old friend of mine, taking ill reſt, and conſulting much with my ſelfe of my trouble.

Anno 1555.

The marvellous providence of God in reſolving G. Marſh not to flie, but to tarry.

So at my firſt awaking, one came to me from a faithfull friend of mine with letters, which I never read, nor yet looked on, who ſaid this: My friends advice was that I ſhould in no wiſe flee, but abide and boldly confeſſe the faith of Jeſus Chriſt. At whoſe words I was ſo confirmed and eſtabliſhed in my conſcience, that from thenceforth I conſulted no more, whether it were better to flee or to tarry; but was at a point with my ſelfe, that I would not flee, but go to M. Barton who did ſeek for me, and there preſent my ſelfe, and patiently beare ſuch croſſe as it ſhould pleaſe God to lay upon my ſhoulders. Whereupon my minde and conſcience afore being much unquieted and troubled, was now merry and in quiet eſtate.

G. Marſh took his leave of his friends.

So betimes in the morning I aroſe, and after I had ſaid the Engliſh Letany (as my cuſtome was) with other prayers, kneeling on my knees by my friends bed ſide, I prepared my ſelf to go toward Smethehils: and as I was going thitherward, I went into the houſes of Harry Widdowes, of my mother in law, of Rafe Peton, and of the wife of Thomas Richardſon, deſiring them to pray for me, and have me commended to all my friends, and to comfort my mother, and be good to my little children: for (as I ſuppoſed) they ſhould not ſee my face any more before the laſt day; and ſo tooke my leave of them not without teares ſhed on both parts, and came to Smethehils about nine of the clocke, and preſented my ſelf afore M. Barton; who ſhewed me a letter from the Earle of Darby, wherein he was commanded to ſend me with others to Lathum.

G. Marſh of his own voluntary mind offereth himſelfe to his enemies.

Whereupon he charged my brother and William Marſh to bring and deliver me the next day by ten of the clock, before the ſaid Earle or his councell. I made earneſt ſute with other ſpeciall friends, which I had there at the ſame time, to M. Barton, that he would take ſome one of them, or them all bound by recognizance or otherwiſe, for mine appearing before the ſaid Earle or his ſaid councell, that my brother and William Marſh might be at home, becauſe it was the chiefeſt time of ſeeding, and their ploughs could not go if they were not at home; but nothing could be obtained.

G. Marſh taketh his leave of his mother.

So we went to my mothers, and there I dined and ſhifted part of my clothes; and ſo praying, tooke my leave of my mother, the wife of Richard Marſh, and both their houſholds, they and I both weeping, and ſo departed from them, and went toward Lathum, and were all night a mile and an halfe on this ſide Lathum. So the next day, which was Wedneſday, we aroſe, prayed, and came to Lathum betimes, and tarried there till foure of the clock at afternoone.

George Marſh brought before the Earle of Darby.

Then was I called by Roger Mekinſon to my Lord and his councell, and ſo I was brought into the chamber of preſence, where was preſent ſir William Nores, ſir Pierce Alee, Maſter Shereburne the Parſon of Grapenhall, Maſter More, with others. Where when I had tarried a little while, my Lord turned him toward me, and aſked what was my name: I anſwered, Marſh.

Then he aſked, whether I was one of thoſe that ſowed evill ſeed and diſſention amongſt the people. Which thing I denied, deſiring to know mine accuſers, and what could be laid againſt me: but that I could not know.

G. Marſh examined before the Earle of Darby.

Then, ſaid he, he would with his councell examine me themſelves, and aſked me whether I was

Anno 1555.

was a Prieſt, I ſaid no. Then he aſked me, what had béen my living? I anſwered, I was a Miniſter, ſerved a Cure, and taught a Schoole. Then ſaid my Lord to his councell, this is a wonderfull thing. Afore he ſaid he was no Prieſt, and now he confeſſeth himſelfe to be one. I anſwered, by the lawes now uſed in this Realme (as farre as I do know) I am none.

Then they aſked me who gave me orders, or whether I had taken any at all? I anſwered, I received orders of the Biſhop of London and Lincolne.

Then ſaid they one to another, thoſe be of theſe new heretikes, and aſked me what acquaintance I had with them? I anſwered, I never ſaw them but at the time when I received orders.

They aſked me how long I had béen Curate, and whether I had miniſtred with a good conſcience? I anſwered, I had béen Curate but one yéere, and had miniſtred with a good conſcience, I thanked God, and if the lawes of the Realme would have ſuffered me, I would have miniſtred ſtill; and if the lawes at any time hereafter would ſuffer me to miniſter after that ſort, I would miniſter againe.

The blaſphemous mouth of the Parſon of Grapnall.

Whereat they murmured, and the Parſon of Grapnall ſaid, this laſt communion was the moſt divelliſh thing that ever was deviſed. Then they aſked me what my beliefe was.

I anſwered, I beléeved in God the Father, the Son, and the holy Ghoſt, according as the Scriptures of the old and new Teſtaments do teach, and according as the foure Symboles or Créeds, that is to wit, the Créed commonly called Apoſtolorum, the Créed of Nice Councell, of Athanaſius, and of Auſten, and Ambroſe do teach.

And after a few words, the Parſon of Grapnall ſaid; But what is thy beliefe in the ſacrament of the Altar?

G. Marſhes beliefe in the ſacrament.

I anſwered, I beléeved, that whoſoever, according to Chriſts inſtitution, did receive the holy ſacrament of Chriſts body and blood, did eat and drink Chriſts body and blood with all the benefits of his death and reſurrection to their eternall ſalvation; for Chriſt (ſaid I) is ever preſent with his ſacrament.

Then aſked they me, whether the bread and wine, by the vertue of the words pronounced by the Prieſt, were changed into the fleſh and blood of Chriſt, and that the ſacrament, whether it were received or reſerved, was the very body of Chriſt?

G. Marſh loth to anſwer to the queſtion of tranſubſtantiation.

Whereunto I made anſwer, I knew no further than I had ſhewed already. For my knowledge is unperfect, ſaid I; deſiring them not to aſke me ſuch hard and unprofitable queſtions, whereby to bring my body into danger of death, and to ſuck my blood. Whereat they were not a little offended, ſaying, they were no blood-ſuckers, and intended nothing to me but to make me a good Chriſtian.

G. Marſh commanded by the Earle of Darby to write his anſwers.

So after many other queſtions, which I avoided aſwell as I could, remembring the ſaying of Paul, Fooliſh and unlearned queſtions avoid, knowing they doe but ingender ſtrife; my Lord commanded me to come to the board, and gave me pen and ink in my hand, and commanded me to write mine anſwers to the queſtions of the ſacrament above named; and I wrote as I had anſwered before. Whereat he being much offended, commanded me to write a more direct anſwer, ſaying, I ſhould not chuſe but do it.

Then I tooke the pen and wrote, that further I knew not. Whereat he being ſore grieved, after many threatnings, ſaid, I ſhould be put to ſhamefull death like a Traytor, with ſuch other like words; and ſometimes giving me faire words if I would turne and be conformable as other were, how glad he would be.

The Earle of Darby commandeth Marſh into priſon.

In concluſion, after much adoe, he commanded me to ward in a cold, windy ſtone houſe, where was little roome; where I lay two nights without any bed, ſaving a few great canvaſſe tent-clothes, and þ done, I had a paire of ſhéets, but no woollen clothes, & ſo continued till Palmeſunday, occupying my ſelf as well as I could in meditation, prayer, and ſtudy; for no man could be ſuffered to come to me but my Kéeper twice a day when he brought me meat and drink.

Another examination of George Marſh before the Earle of Darby.

On Palmeſunday at after dinner I was ſent for to my Lord and his councell (ſaving ſir William Nores, and ſir Pierce Leé were not then preſent in place) amongſt whom was ſir John Beram, and the Vicar of Preſcot. So they examined me yet once againe of the ſacrament.

Marſh againe examined about the ſacrament.

And after I had communed apart with the Vicar of Preſcot a good ſpace concerning that matter, he returned to my Lord and his councell with me, ſaying, That anſwer which I had made before, and then did make (as it is above written) was ſufficient for a beginner, and as one which did not profeſſe a perfect knowledge in that matter, untill ſuch time as I had learned further. Wherewith the Earle was very well pleaſed, ſaying, he doubted not but by the means and help of the Vicar of Preſcot I would be conformable in other things. So after many faire words he commanded I ſhould have a bed, with fire, and liberty to go amongſt his ſervants, ſo that I would do no harme with my communication amongſt them.

Marſh yet keepeth himſelfe cloſe in the ſacrament.

Marſh troubled in his conſcience for being no more bold touching the ſacrament.

And ſo after much other communication I departed, much more troubled in my ſpirit than afore, becauſe I had not with more boldneſſe confeſſed Chriſt, but in ſuch ſort as mine adverſaries thereby thought they ſhould prevaile againſt me; whereat I was much grieved: For hitherto I went about as much as in me lay, to rid my ſelfe out of their hands: if by any means, without open denying of Chriſt and his word that could be done.

Marſh prayeth for more boldneſſe.

This conſidered, I cried more earneſtly unto God by prayer, deſiring him to ſtrengthen me with his holy ſpirit, with boldneſſe to confeſſe him: and to deliver me from their inticing words, and that I were not ſpoiled through their Philoſophy and deceitfull vanity after the traditions of men and ordinances of the world, and not after Chriſt.

Marſh againe examined before the biſhops Chaplaines. Talke about the Maſſe. Allegations againſt the Maſſe.

And ſo after a day or two I was ſent for to the Vicar of Preſcot, and the Parſon of Grapnall; where our moſt communication was concerning the Maſſe; and he aſked what offended me in the Maſſe. I anſwered, the whole Maſſe did offend me; firſt becauſe it was in a ſtrange language, whereby the people were not edified, contrary to S. Pauls doctrine, 1 Corinth. 14. and becauſe of the manifold and intolerable abuſes and errors contained therein, contrary to Chriſts Prieſthood and ſacrifice.

Then they aſked me in what place thereof: and I named certaine places; which places they went about with gentle and farre ſought interpretations to mitigate, ſaying, thoſe places were underſtood farre otherwiſe than the words did purport, or than I did take them.

I anſwered, I did underſtand them as they did purport, and as their own bookes do comment and gloſſe upon them.

[illegible]

They ſaid, Sacrificium or Oblatio did not in the Maſſe ſignifie any thing elſe, than either a ſacrifice of praiſe and thankſgiving, or elſe a memo-

Sacrifice of the maſſe expounded by the papiſts, to be nothing elſe but the ſacrifice only of thankſgiving.

riall of a ſacrifice or oblation. So they cauſed a Maſſe book to be ſent for, and ſhewed me where in ſome places of the Maſſe was written. Sacrificium laudis. Whereto I anſwered, that it followed not therefore that in all places it ſignified a ſacrifice or oblaiton of praiſe or thankſgiving; and although it did, yet was not a ſacrifice of praiſe or thankſgiving to be offered for the ſins of the people, for that did Chriſt by his owne paſſion once offered on the Croſſe: where the words of the Maſſe were, that the Prieſt did offer an oblation and ſacrifice for the ſinnes and offences both of himſelfe, and of the people; for them that were dead, and for the ſalvation of the living: and that the commixtion of the body and blood of Chriſt was health both of body and ſoule.

The Vicar anſwered, that was to be underſtood of the commixtion of Chriſts body and blood with his Church or people. So after much exhortation unto me that I ſhould be conformable to the true Catholike Church (which, as they meant was the Romiſh Church) I departed, not conſenting unto them.

The articles of D. Cromes recantation brought to G. Marſh.

So within a day or twain came to me maſter More, bringing with him certain articles, whereunto Doctor Crome had conſented and ſubſcribed in the preſence of certaine witneſſes in the dayes of K. Henry the eighth, and willed me to read them over, and aſked me whether I would conſent and ſubſcribe unto thoſe articles: and after communication had of one or two of the ſaid articles, I confeſſed plainly I would in no wiſe conſent and ſubſcribe to thoſe articles: for then I did againſt mine own conſcience; and ſo he departed.

So within a ſhort ſpace after, which was on Shierthurſday, the ſaid Parſon and Vicar ſent for me againe, ſaying, my Lord would bee at a ſhort point with me: for if I would not conſent and ſubſcribe unto foure articles drawn out of the articles aforeſaid, I muſt goe to priſon ſtraight-waies.

Foure Popiſh articles for Marſh to ſubſcribe unto.

1 Maſſe.

The firſt was, whether the Maſſe now uſed in the Church of England was according to Chriſts inſtitution, and with faith, reverence, and devotion to be heard and ſeene?

2 Tranſubſtantiation.

The ſecond, whether the Almighty, by the words pronounced by the Prieſt, did change the bread and wine after the words of conſecration into the body and blood of Chriſt, whether it were received or reſerved?

3 Receiving in one kinde.

Thirdly, whether the lay-people ought to receive but under the form of bread only, and that the one kind was ſufficient for them?

4 Confeſſion.

Fourthly, whether confeſſion to the Prieſt now uſed in England were godly and neceſſary?

G. Marſh denieth the articles

Theſe foure queſtions or articles they delivered me in writing, and bade my go to my chamber and ſubſcribe my anſwers with mine own hand, and come again. So within one half houre I came to them again, and delivered them the queſtions with mine anſwers. The firſt I denied. The ſecond I anſwered, as I did to my Lord afore, and as is above written. To the third I anſwered, that the lay-people by Chriſts inſtitution ought to receive under both kinds, and that it ſufficeth not them to receive under the one kind only. Fourthly, that though confeſſion auricular were a commodious meane to inſtruct the rude people, yet it was not neceſſary nor commanded of God.

G. Marſh exhorted to the Catholike Church.

They much exhorted me then to leave mine opinions, ſaying; I was much deceived, underſtanding the Scriptures amiſſe, and much counſelled mee to follow the Catholike Church of Chriſt, and to do as other did. I anſwered, my faith in Chriſt conceived by his holy word I neither could nor would deny, alter, or change, for any living creature whatſoever he were, deſiring them to ſpeak to my Lord, that during my life and impriſonment my poore friends might be ſuffered to relieve me with neceſſary things according to their powers. And ſo after much exhortation of them, to do and believe as the Catholike Church did, we departed; I from thenceforth continuing in the Porters ward, not coming forth of my chamber, ſaving at noone and night while I dined and ſupped.

M. Shereburn and M More examiners of G. Marſh.

Upon one of the Eaſter holy daies Maſter Shereburne and maſter More ſent for me, perſwading me much to leave mine opinions; ſaying, all the bringers up and favourers of that religion had evill luck, and were either put to death or in priſon, and in danger of life. Again, the favourers of the religion now uſed had wondrous good luck and proſperity in all things: with many other worldly reaſons of mans wiſdome, for as for the Scriptures M. Shereburne confeſſed himſelfe ignorant.

Gods truth is not to be eſteemed by proſperity or adverſity.

I anſwered, that I believed and leaned only to the Scriptures, not judging things by proſperity or adverſity: but they earneſtly adviſed mee to refuſe mine opinions, and not to let for any worldly ſhame.

I anſwered, that that which I did, I did not for the avoiding of any worldly ſhame, ſaying; My ſoul and life were dearer to me than the avoiding of any worldly ſhame: neither yet did I it for any vaine praiſe of the world, but in the reverent feare of God.

Then M. More queſtioned with mee of receiving the ſacrament under the one kind. I ſaid, Chriſts inſtitution was plain, that all men ſhould drinke of the cup. Then he told me of the 24. of Luke, and the 20. of the Acts, where was but mention of breaking bread onely: whereof he gathered, that they received the ſacrament but under one kind.

Chriſts breaking of bread, Luke 24 proveth not the receiving under one kinde.

That I denied ſaying, thoſe places either did not ſpeak of the celebration of the Lords ſupper, or els under the name of breaking bread was ſignified and meant the receiving of the ſacrament, both of the body and blood of Chriſt, according to his inſtitution. So after much communication of that matter, M. Shereburn ſaid, It was great pity that I being a welfavoured young man, and one that might have good living and do good, would ſo fooliſhly caſt my ſelfe away, ſticking ſo hard to ſuch fooliſh opinions.

George Marſh forſaketh kindred and altogether to ſtick to Chriſt.

I anſwered as afore I had done to my Lord and to his councell, that my life, mother, children, brethren, ſiſters, and friends, with other delights of life, were as deare and ſweet unto me as unto any other man, and that I would be as loath to loſe them as another would, if I might hold them with good conſcience, and without the ignominy of Chriſt; and ſeeing I could not doe that, my truſt was, that God would ſtrengthen mee with his holy ſpirit to loſe them all for his ſake: for I take my ſelfe (ſaid I) for a ſheep appointed to be ſlain, patiently to ſuffer what croſſe ſoever it ſhall pleaſe my merciful Father to lay on me. And ſo after I had deſired them that if I were committed to priſon, my friends might be ſuffered to relieve me, they departed.

Alphonſus book brought to G. Marſh.

M, More after this brought unto me a booke of one Alphonſus a Spaniſh Friar, of all hereſies wherewith the Church of Rome which hee called Chriſts true Church, had beene troubled ſince Chriſts time, willing me to reade and take counſell of that book; and appointed me a place, where this author did write againſt them that ſay, the lay-people ought to receive under both kinds.

This author I perceived did vehemently write againſt Luther, Melancthon, Pelican, and other

Anno 1555

other Germanes of this our time, in all points defending the blaſphemous abuſes & enormities of the Romiſh Church, condemning as deteſtable hereſies whatſoever was written, taught, or beleeved contrary to the ſame, uſing for his ſtrongeſt and ſureſt arguments, the conſent, agreement, and determination of the Romiſh Church. So within a few dayes M. More came to me again, aſking me how I liked the booke. I ſaid the author of the booke did in all points, being a Papiſt, allow the rites and abuſes of the Romiſh Church; and ſhewed him further, that this author without authority, and contrary both to the Scriptures and old Doctors, did condemne for hereſie the lay-peoples receiving of this ſacrament under both kindes, whereas this author witneſſeth his owne ſelfe, that Chriſts Church nine hundred yeeres after Chriſt uſed the contrary.

Marſhes judgment of Alphonſus booke.

So in concluſion he rebuked me, ſaying, I was unlearned, and erred from the Catholike faith, ſtubborne, and ſtood altogether in mine owne conceit. I anſwered, for my learning, I knowledge my ſelf to know nothing but Jeſus Chriſt, even him that was crucified, and that my faith was grounded upon Gods holy word onely, and ſuch as I doubted not pleaſed God, and as I would ſtand in untill the laſt day, God aſſiſting me, and that I did not ſay or do any thing, either of ſtubbornneſſe, ſelfe-wilfulneſſe, vaine-glory, or any other worldly purpoſe, but with good conſcience, and in the feare of God: and deſired him to ſpeak to my Lord and his councell, that I might find ſome gentleneſſe and mercy at their hands. He made me but ſhort anſwer. Then I ſaid, I commit my cauſe unto God, who hath numbred the haires of my head, and appointed the days of my life, ſaying; I am ſure God which is a righteous Judge, would make inquiſition for my blood, according as he hath promiſed. Then he took his booke from me, and departed.

Marſh carried to Lancaſter Caſtle.

I continued ſtill in ward untill Low-ſunday, and after dinner my Keeper Richard Scot came to me into my chamber, and told me that two yong men were come to carry me to Lancaſter, and ſo delivered me unto them, a great company both of my Lords ſervants and others, accompanying and bringing me on the way, unto Richard Addertons, and ſomwhat further, counſelling and perſwading like as is aforeſaid.

To whom I made plaine anſwer, that in matters of faith I would give place to no earthly creature. So they comforted me, and ſaid that they were ſorry for me, ſaying; If I knew mine opinion to be good, I did well, and ſo they departed, willing my bringers to intreat me honeſtly.

My bringers by the way ſhewed me they were willed and adviſed to binde me, and that they deſired firſt to ſee me: and after they had looked on me ſitting at dinner, they anſwered they would take charge of me being looſe; for they ſaid I ſeemed to be an honeſt man.

The firſt night we were all night at Broughton, and the ſecond day we came to Lancaſter betimes at afternoon, and ſo they kept me all night with them of their gentleneſſe, and on the morrow delivered me to the Jaylor, who brought me into the higheſt priſon, where I do remaine.

G. Marſh cauſed to hold up his hand at Lancaſter amongſt other priſoners.

After that, the ſaid George came to Lancaſter Caſtle, and there being brought with other priſoners unto the Seſſions, was made to hold up his hand with the malefactors. The Earle of Darby had this communication with him as here followeth.

Communication betweene George Marſh, and the Earle of Darby.

Talk between G. Marſh and the Earle of Darby.

I Said unto my Lord, I had not dwelled in the countrey theſe three or foure yeeres paſt, and came home but lately to viſit my mother, children, and other my friends, and to have departed out of the countrey before Eaſter then next, and to have gone out of the Realme. Wherefore I truſted, ſeeing nothing could be laid againſt me, wherein I had offended againſt the lawes of this Realme, his Lordſhip would not with captious queſtions examine me, to bring my body into danger of death, to the great diſcomfort of my mother, but ſuffer me to avoid peaceably, ſeeing I might have fled out of the countrey, and yet of mine own will came to his Lordſhip.

He ſaid to his councell, he had heard tell of me above at London; and intended to make ſearch for me, and take me either in Lancaſhire or above at London, and aſked me into what land I would have gone.

The Earle of Darby chargeth the realme of Denmarke of hereſie.

I anſwered, I would have gone either into Almaine, or elſe into Denmarke. He ſaid to his councell; in Denmark they uſed ſuch hereſie as they have done in England; but as for Almaine, he ſaid the Emperor had deſtroyed them.

So after ſuch like words I ſaid unto him, my truſt was, that his Lordſhip being of the honourable Councell of the late K. Edward, conſenting and agreeing to acts concerning faith toward God and Religion, under great paine, would not ſo ſoone after conſent to put poore men to ſhamefull death, as he had threatned me, for embracing the ſame with ſo good a conſcience.

The Earle of Darby, Lord Windſor, and Lord Dacres in K. Edwards time agreed not to the acts of religion.

He anſwered, that he, with the Lord Windſore and Lord Dacres, with one moe, whoſe name I have forgotten, did not conſent to thoſe Acts, and that the nay of them foure would be to be ſeen, as long as the Parliament houſe ſtood. Then my Lord did rehearſe the evill luck of the Dukes of Northumberland and Suffolke, with others, becauſe they favoured not the true religion; and againe the good hap and proſperity of the Queens Highneſſe, becauſe ſhe favoured the true religion, thereby gathering the one to be good, and of God, and the other to be wicked, and of the divell, and ſaid that the Duke of Northumberland confeſſed ſo plainly.

George Marſh to the Reader.

G. Marſh writeth his owne examinations.

FOrſomuch as not onely when I was at Latham, but alſo ſince I departed thence, I heare that there be diverſe and ſundry reports and opinions of the cauſe of mine impriſonment, as well at Latham as at Lancaſter (as by credible perſons I am informed) ſome ſaying it was onely becauſe I would not doe open penance, and ſome becauſe I could not agree with my Lord and his councell concerning the ſacrament of Chriſts body and bloud, and the manner of Chriſts preſence there, ſome becauſe I would not grant it ſufficient and according to Chriſts inſtitution, the lay-people to receive the ſaid ſacrament under the one kinde onely: I thought it good, dearely beloved in Chriſt, and my bounden duty, to certifie you by mine own hand-writing, of mine examination and handling at Latham, and to tell you the truth as neere as I could, to quiet your minde in this behalfe; and therefore I have here written with mine owne hand the certainty of thoſe things, as neere as I cou'd, here above expreſſed, not omitting any thing at all concerning religion, whereof they did examine me: howbeit I perceive in ſome things I keepe not the ſame order in writing that thing which was asked by them, and anſwered by me afore or after, as it was in very deed in all points, ſaving this, telling the truth as neere as I can, deſiring you to accept in good worth this my good will, and to pray for me and all them that be in bonds, that God would aſſiſt us with his holy ſpirit, that we may with boldneſſe confeſſe his holy

Name; and that Chriſt may be magnified in our bodies, that we may ſtand full and perfect in all the will of God; to whom be all honour and glory world without end, Amen.

And thus you haue heard all the whole trouble which George Marſh ſuſtained both at Latham, and alſo at Lancaſter, teſtified and written with his owne hand, whereto he addeth moreouer, and ſaith:

While I was, ſaith he, in ward at Latham, diuers at ſundry times came unto me. Some ſaid unto me that all my fellowes had recanted, and were gone home, whereas indeed that was not ſo; for I ſaw diuerſe of them diuerſe times after. Other ſaid, that it was reported amongſt my Lords houſhold, that I had conſented and agreed in all things with my Lord and his councell.

Furthermore, while I was at Lancaſter, at this Seſſion many came to me to talk with me, ſome of good will towards me, but without knowledge gaue me ſuch like counſell as Peter gaue Chriſt as he went up to Jeruſalem, when he tooke him aſide and began to rebuke him, ſaying; Maſter, fauour thy ſelfe, this thing ſhall not be unto thee. But I anſwered with Chriſts ſharpe anſwer unto Peter againe; who turned about, and ſaid unto Peter, Come after me Satan: and perceiuing that they were an hinderance unto me, and that they ſauoured not the things which are of God, but the things that are of men, I made them plaine anſwer, that I neither could, ne would follow their counſell, but that by Gods grace I would both liue and die with a pure conſcience, and according as hitherto I had beleeued and profeſſed. For we ought in no wiſe to flatter and beare with them, though they loue us neuer ſo well, which go about to pluck us away from the obedience that we owe unto God and to his word, but after Chriſts example ſharply to rebuke them for their counſell.

Peters counſel to Chriſt, to ſaue himſelfe.

G. Marſh followeth Chriſts anſwer to Peter.

Some others, yea euen ſtrangers alſo came to me farre unlike to theſe, who after ſober communication had, conſented with me in all things, lamenting much my troublous eſtate, giuing me comfortable words, and ſome money too, and reſorted to me oftentimes, for the ſpace of two, three, or foure dayes. There came alſo many Prieſts to me, by two, three, foure, fiue, or ſixe at once, whoſe mouthes it was a thing eaſie enough to ſtop; for the Prieſts (which is much to be lamented) be not alwayes the greateſt Clerks, and beſt learned in the Law of God. At their departing they either conſented with me, or els had nothing to ſay againſt me, ſaying they could finde no fault with my words. My communication with them was about the ſacrament. There came alſo into the priſon to me Maſter Weſtby, Maſter Aſhton of Hill, M. Aſhton of Chaterton, and many moe, both Gentlemen and others, to my great comfort. Unto whom I had good occaſion to utter a great part of my conſcience: for God ſo ſtrengthened me with his ſpirit of boldneſſe, according to my humble requeſt and prayer before (euerlaſting thanks be giuen him therefore) that I was nothing afraid to ſpeake to any that came to me, no not euen to Judges themſelues, before whom I was thrice arraigned at the Barre amongſt the theeues with irons on my feet, and put up my hand as other did, but yet with boldneſſe I ſpake unto them ſo long as they would ſuffer me.

Prieſts not alwayes the greateſt Clerks.

George Marſh ſtrengthened in priſon with the boldneſſe of Gods ſpirit.

They alſo ſent for me the fourth time into their chamber, where amongſt other things they laid it ſtreitly to my charge, that I had reported that I knew a whole meſſe of good Gentlemen in Lancaſhire of mine opinion, and ſtreitly charged me, upon paine of allegiance to the Queenes Grace, to ſhew who they were. But I denied that I had ſpoken any ſuch thing (as it was indeed a falſe forged lie of ſome wicked wretches.) After that, they threatned and rebuked me, for my preaching to the people out of the priſon, as they called it, and for my praying and reading ſo loud, that the people in the ſtreets might heare. The truth is, I and my priſon-fellow Warbarton, euery day kneeling on our knees, did read morning and euening prayer, with the Engliſh Letany euery day twice, both before noone and after, with other prayers moe, and alſo read euery day certaine Chapters of the Bible, commonly towards night: and we read alſo theſe things with ſo high and loud a voice, that the people without in the ſtreets might heare us, and would oftentimes, namely in the euenings, come and ſit down in our ſights under the windowes and heare us read, wherewith others being offended, complained.

Anno 1555.

G. Marſh reproued for his loud praying and reading in priſon.

Warbarton fellow-priſoner with Marſh.

All this while George Marſh was not yet brought before the Biſhop, whoſe name was Doctor Cotes, placed the ſame time in the biſhoprick of Cheſter. Of whoſe coming then unto Lancaſter, the ſaid George Marſh reporteth himſelfe as followeth.

How the Biſhop came to Lancaſter, and of his doings there.

THe Biſhop being at Lancaſter, there ſet up and confirmed all blaſphemous Idolatry, as holy water caſting, proceſſion, gadding, mattins mumbling, children confirming, Maſſe hearing, Idols up ſetting, with ſuch Heatheniſh rites forbidden by God; but no Goſpell preaching, which Chriſt, Gods Sonne, ſo earneſtly commanded. He was informed of me, and willed to ſend for me and examine me. Which thing he refuſed to do, ſaying he would haue nothing to doe with heretikes ſo haſtily: So haſty in iudgement, and calling men heretikes, are our Biſhops in their Lordly dignities, afore they heare or ſee, what is to be amended or condemned, contrary to the expreſſe commandement of Gods word, which ſaith; Condemne no man before thou haſt tried out the truth of the matter, and when thou haſt made inquiſition, then reforme righteouſly. Give no ſentence before thou haſt heard the cauſe, but firſt let men tell out their tale, and he that giveth ſentence in a matter before he heare it, is a foole, and worthy to be confounded.

D. Cotes biſh. of Cheſter. The biſhops coming to Lancaſter, and ſetting up Idolatry.

The biſhop iudgeth Marſh to be an heretike, before he heareth him.

Haſty iudgement of biſhops reproued by Gods word.

And in ſtead of his liberality towards me poore priſoner, he ſent for the Jaylor, and rebuked him becauſe he ſuffered me to fare ſo well, willing him to haue me more ſtreitly kept and dieted: but if his Lordſhip were tabled but one weeke with me, I do think he would iudge our fare but ſlender enough.

The unmercifull ſtreitneſſe of the biſhop toward George Marſh in priſon.

Alſo he and his Chapleines and Chancellour did find fault with the Schoolmaſter and others, for ſpeaking to me as to a moſt heinous heretike, and alſo with the Jaylor for ſuffering them. Such is the mercy that theſe religious fathers ſhew to the friendleſſe and comfortleſſe in their aduerſities. If we may know the tree by the fruits (as Chriſt ſaith) no man can iudge ſuch for any other but for very enemies to Chriſt and his true religion. God lay it neuer to their charges, but forgiue them, and turne their hard hearts, if it be his will.

The Schoolemaſter of Lancaſter rebuked for coming to Marſh in priſon.

Popiſh biſhops declare themſelues by their fruits to be very enemies to Gods word.

for their conſtancy in preaching of the true faith; for ſo did their Phariſaicall fore-fathers, if ye mark well the hiſtories of the holy Bible. Paſhur was the head Biſhop of the Temple, the ring-leader of falſe prophets, the chiefe heretike taker, that is as much as to ſay, the out-thruſter of true godlineſſe. After that the dignity of Prieſthood was given unto him, he abuſed it. For he taught not, neither reproved by the word, but feared the godly with cruelty. He not only ſtrook, but alſo impriſoned the holy Prophet Jeremy, though he withſtood him not, but preſently looked for the helpe of God, ſtedfaſtly preaching the truth of God.

Biſhop Jaſon.

What miſchiefe the ungracious Biſhop Jaſon wrought among the Jewes, deſtroying all godlineſſe, and ſetting up abominable idolatrous lawes, ye may read in the 4. Chapter of the ſecond of Maccabees. How the execrable and blind Biſhops, Annas and Caiaphas, which never ſpake the truth of God themſelves, unleſſe it were againſt their wils, unwittingly to their utter deſtruction, how (I ſay) they preſſed the truth in Chriſt and his Apoſtles, is ſo well knowne that I need not to rehearſe it.

Biſhop Annas and Caiaphas.

And thus much hitherto concerning the priſonment of George Marſh, and his examinations before the Earle of Darby and his deputies above named. Now proceeding further in the troubleſome perſecution of this bleſſed man, let us likewiſe conſider the later part of his troubles and examinations which followed under the Biſhop of the ſame Dioceſſe, which was Doctor Cotes; the effect whereof being drawne out of his own writing, here briefly is to be ſeene, as followeth.

The troubles and examination of George Marſh under D. Cotes Biſhop of Cheſter.

G. Marſh appeareth before the biſhop.

YE heard before how George Marſh being firſt impriſoned at Lathum, and afterward tranſlated unto Lancaſter, was troubled by the Earle. Againe, within few dayes after, the ſaid Marſh was removed from Lancaſter, and comming to Cheſter, was ſent for by Doctor Cotes then Biſhop, to appeare before him in his Hall, no body being preſent but they twaine; and then he aſked him certaine queſtions concerning the ſacrament: who made ſuch anſwers as the Biſhop ſeemed therewith to be content, ſaving that he utterly denied tranſubſtantiation, and allowed not the abuſe of the Maſſe, nor that the lay-people ſhould receive under one kinde only, contrary to Chriſts inſtitution; in which point the Biſhop went about to perſwade him: howbeit (God be thanked) all in vaine. Much other talk he had with him, to move him to ſubmit himſelfe to the univerſall Church of Rome; and when he ſaw he could not prevaile, he ſent him to priſon againe: and after being there, came to him divers times one Maſſie, a fatherly old man, one Wrench the Schoolemaſter, one Henſham the Biſhops Chaplaine, and the Archdeacon, with many moe; who with all probability of words and philoſophy, or worldly wiſdome, and deceitfull vanity, after the tradition of men, and the beggarly ordinances and lawes of the world, but not after Chriſt (as it were all ſinging one ſong) went about to perſwade him to ſubmit himſelfe to the Church of Rome, and to acknowledge the Pope to be head thereof, and to interpret the Scriptures none otherwiſe than that Church did; with many ſuch like arguments and perſwaſions of fleſhly wiſdome.

Great labour to make George Marſh to recant.

To whom the ſaid George Marſh anſwered, that he did acknowledge and beleeve (though much evill be withall annexed) one holy Catholike and Apoſtolike Church, without which there is no ſalvation, and that this Church is but one, becauſe it ever hath, doth, and ſhall confeſſe and beleeve one onely God, and him onely worſhip, and one only Meſſiah, and in him only truſt for ſalvation: which Church alſo is ruled and led by one ſpirit, one word, and one faith, and that this Church is univerſall and catholike, becauſe it ever hath beene ſince the worlds beginning, is, and ſhall endure to the worlds end, and comprehending within it all nations, kindreds, and languages, degrees, ſtates, and conditions of men; and that this Church is builded onely upon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles, Jeſus Chriſt himſelfe being the head corner-ſtone, and not upon the Romiſh lawes and decrees, the Biſhop of Rome being the ſupreme head.

The Church Apoſtolike.

The Church how it is one

The nature, condition, and notes of the true Church.

And where they ſaid, the Church did ſtand in ordinary ſucceſſion of Biſhops, being ruled by generall Councels, holy Fathers, and the lawes of holy Church, and ſo had continued by the ſpace of fifteene hundred yeeres and more; he made anſwer that the holy Church, which is the body of Chriſt, and therefore moſt worthy to be called holy, was before any ſucceſſion of Biſhops, generall Councels, or Romiſh decrees, neither yet was bound to any time, or place, ordinary ſucceſſion, generall Councels, or traditions of Fathers, either had any ſupremacy over Empires and Kingdomes: but that it was a little poore ſilly flock, diſperſed and ſcattered abroad, as ſheepe without a Shepheard in the midſt of Wolves, or as a flock of Orphans, and fatherleſſe children; and that this Church was led and ruled by the onely lawes, counſels, and word of Chriſt, he being the ſupreme head of this Church, and aſſiſting, ſuccouring, and defending her from all aſſaults, errors, troubles, and perſecutions wherewith ſhe is ever compaſſed about.

The nature, condition, and notes of the falſe Church.

Confutation of the falſe church falſly defined.

He ſhewed and proved unto them alſo by the flood of Noah, the deſtruction of Sodome, the Iſraelites departing out of Egypt, by the parables of the ſower, of the Kings ſons marriage, of the great ſupper, and by other plaine ſentences of Scripture, that this Church was of none eſtimation, and little in compariſon of the Church of hypocrites and wicked worldlings.

Examples declaring the true Church. The falſe Church ever greater in number.

He was thruſt at with all violence of craft and ſubtilty, but yet the Lord upheld him and delivered him. Everlaſting thanks be to that mercifull and faithfull Lord, which ſuffereth us not to be tempted above our might, but in the middeſt of our troubles ſtrengtheneth us with his holy ſpirit of comfort and patience, giveth us a mouth and wiſedome how and what to ſpeak; whereagainſt all his adverſaries were not able to reſiſt.

Another appearance of George Marſh before the Biſhop.

G. Marſh againe brought before the biſhop and his colleagues

NOw, after that the ſaid Biſhop had taken his pleaſure in puniſhing this his priſoner, and often reviling him, giving taunts and odious names of heretike, &c. he cauſed him to bee brought forth into a Chappell, in the cathedrall Church of Cheſter, called our Lady Chappell, before him the ſaid Biſhop, at two of the clock in the afternoone, who was there placed in a chaire for that purpoſe, and Fulk Dutton Maior of the ſaid City, D. Walle, and other Prieſts aſſiſting him, placed not farre from the ſaid Biſhop, but ſomwhat lower, George Wenſlow Chancellor, and one John Cetham Regiſter, ſate directly over againſt the ſaid Biſhop.

The biſhop with his colleagues ſitting upon George Marſh.

Then they cauſed the ſaid George Marſh to Marſh ſworne to anſwer before the biſhop.

take an oath upon a booke, to anſwer truly unto ſuch articles as ſhould be obiected againſt him. Upon which oath taken, the Chancellor laid unto his charge, that he had preached and openly publiſhed moſt heretically and blaſphemouſly within the Pariſh of Deane, Eccles, Bolton, Berry, and many other Pariſhes within the Biſhops Dioceſſe, in the moneths of January, February, or ſome other time of the yeere laſt, proceeding directly againſt the Popes authority and catholike Church of Rome, the bleſſed Maſſe, the ſacrament of the Altar, and many other articles. Unto all which in ſumme he anſwered, that he neither heretically nor blaſphemouſly preached or ſpake againſt any of the ſaid articles; but ſimply and truly, as occaſion ſerved, and (as it were thereunto forced in conſcience) maintained the truth touching the ſame articles, as (he ſaid) all you now preſent did acknowledge the ſame in the time of the late King Edward the ſixth.

G. Marſh purgeth himſelfe.

The biſhops clergy more able to examine than to diſpute.

Then they examined him ſeverally of every article, and bade him anſwer directly yea or nay, without circumſtance; for they were come to examine, and not to diſpute at that preſent.

Then he anſwered them unto every article very modeſtly, according to the doctrine by publike authority received, and taught in this Realme at the death of the ſaid King Edward: whoſe anſwers were every one noted and written by the Regiſter, to the uttermoſt that could make againſt him, which cannot at this preſent be gotten. After this, the company for that time brake up, and he was returned to his priſon againe.

The laſt and finall appearance of George Marſh before the Biſhop.

The laſt appearance of Marſh before the biſhop.

The Chancellors oration.

VVIthin three weekes after this, or thereabouts, in the ſaid Chappell, and in like ſort as before, the ſaid Biſhop, and others before named, there being aſſembled, the ſaid G. Marſh was brought by the Keeper and others with bils and divers weapons before them; where firſt the ſaid Chancellor, by way of an Oration, declared unto the people preſent the ſaid Biſhops charge and burning charity, who even like as a good ſhepheard doth ſee to his flock, that none of his ſheep have the ſcab or other diſeaſe for infecting other clean ſheep, but will ſave and cure the ſaid ſcabbed ſheepe: ſo his Lordſhip had ſent for the ſaid G. Marſh there preſent, as a ſcabbed ſheep, and had weeded him out for corrupting others, and had done what he could in ſhewing his charitable diſpoſition towards the ſaid Marſh, to reduce him from his naughty hereſies; but all that he could do, would not help: ſo that he was now determined, if the ſaid Marſh would not relent and abiure, to pronounce and give ſentence definitive againſt him. Wherefore he bade the ſaid George Marſh to be now well adviſed what he would do, for it ſtood upon his life: and if he would not at that preſent forſake his hereticall opinions, it would be after the ſentence given too late, though he would never ſo gladly deſire it.

Interrogatories put to G. Marſh.

Then the ſaid Chancellor firſt aſked him whether he were not one of the Biſhops Dioceſſe? To the which he anſwered, that he knew not how large his Dioceſſe was, for his continuance was at Cambridge. But then they replied and aſked, whether he had not lately beene at Deane Pariſh in Lancaſhire, and there abode? And he anſwered, Yea.

Then the Chancellor read all his former anſwers that he made in that place at his former examination, and at every one he aſked him whether he would ſtick to the ſame or no? To the which he anſwered againe, Yea, yea.

How ſay ye then to this, quoth the Chancellor? In your laſt examination, amongſt many other damnable and ſchiſmaticall hereſies, you ſaid, that the Church and Doctrine taught and ſet forth in King Edwards time, was the true Church, and the doctrine, the doctrine of the true Church, and that the Church of Rome is not the true and Catholike Church.

Anno 1555.

Note here the great hereſie of G. Marſh.

I ſo ſaid indeed, quoth Marſh, and I beleeve it to be true. Here alſo others tooke occaſion to aſke him (for that he denied the Biſhop of Romes authority in England) whether Linus, Anacletus, and Clement, that were Biſhops of Rome, were not good men, and he anſwered, Yes, and divers others: but (ſaid he) they claimed no more authority in England, than the Biſhop of Canterbury doth at Rome; and I ſtrive not, quoth he, with the place, neither ſpeak I againſt the perſon of the Biſhop, but againſt his doctrine, which in moſt points is repugnant to the doctrine of Chriſt.

Argument. Linus and Anacletus were good men: Ergo the Pope is the ſupreme head of all Churches. Neither the place nor perſon of the Pope ſpoken againſt, but only his doctrine.

Thou art an arrogant fellow indeed then, ſaid the Biſhop. In what article is the doctrine of the Church of Rome repugnant to the doctrine of Chriſt?

To whom George Marſh anſwered and ſaid; Oh my Lord, I pray you iudge not ſo of me: I ſtand now upon the point of my life and death; and a man in my caſe hath no cauſe to be arrogant, neither am I, God is my record. And as concerning the diſagreement of the doctrine, among many other things the Church of Rome erreth in the ſacrament. For where Chriſt in the inſtitution thereof did aſwell deliver the cup, as the bread, ſaying; Drinke ye all of this, and Marke reporteth that they did drink of it: in like manner S. Paul delivered it unto the Corinthians. And in the ſame ſort alſo was it uſed in the Primitive Church by the ſpace of many hundred yeers. Now the Church of Rome doth take away one part of the ſacrament from the Laity. Wherefore, if I could be perſwaded in my conſcience by Gods word that it were well done, I could gladly yeeld in this point.

Wherein the doctrine of the Church of Rome erreth.

Then ſaid the Biſhop, Non diſputandum eſt cum hæretico, that is, There is no diſputing with an heretike. And therefore when all his anſwers were read, he aſked him whether he would ſtand to the ſame; being as they were, ſaid he, full of hereſie, or elſe forſake them, and come unto the catholike Church.

So ſaith the Turke in his Alcoran, that no man muſt diſpute of his law.

To whom he made this full anſwer, and ſaid, that he held no hereticall opinion, but utterly abhorred all kinde of hereſie, although they moſt untruly ſo did ſlander him. And he deſired all the people preſent to beare him witneſſe (if hereafter any would ſlander him, and ſay that he held any grievous hereſie) that in all articles of religion he held none other opinion, than was by law moſt godly eſtabliſhed, and publikely taught in England at the death of K. Edward the ſixth, and in the ſame pure religion and doctrine he would, by Gods grace, ſtand, live, and die. And here the Chancellor ſpake to one Leach, which ſtood neere unto Marſh, and bade him ſtand farther from him: for his preſence did him no good.

G. Marſh cleereth himſelfe of hereſie.

Leach bid to ſtand from Marſh.

Sentence of condemnation read againſt Marſh.

This being done, the Biſhop tooke a writing out of his boſome, and began to read the ſentence of condemnation: but when the Biſhop had read almoſt halfe thereof, the Chancellor called him, and ſaid; Good my Lord, ſtay, ſtay: for if ye proceed any farther, it will be too late to call it again, and ſo the Biſhop ſtayed. Then his popiſh Prieſts and many other of the ignorant people called upon Marſh, with many earneſt words to recant, and amongſt other one Pulleyn a Shoomaker ſaid to him; for ſhame man remember thy ſelf and recant. They bade him kneele down and pray, and they would pray for him: So they they kneeled down, and he desired them to pray for him, and he would pray for them.

The bishop then asked him again, whether he would not have the Queens mercy, in time: and he answered, he did gladly desire the ſame, and did love her Grace as faithfully as any of them; but yet he durſt not deny his Saviour Chriſt, for loſing his mercy everlaſting, and ſo win everlaſting death.

The Biſhop proceedeth in his ſentence.

Another ſtay in reading the ſentence.

Then the biſhop put his ſpectacles againe upon his noſe, and read forward his ſentence, about five or ſix lines, and there againe the Chancellor with a glavering and ſmiling countenance called to the biſhop, and ſaid: Yet good my Lord once again ſtay, for if that word be ſpoken all is paſt, no relenting will then ſerve: and the biſhop (pulling off his ſpectacles) ſaid, I would ſtay, if it would be.

G. Marſh exhorted to recant but could not be turned.

How ſayſt thou, quoth he, wilt thou recant? Many of the Prieſts and ignorant people bade him ſo do, and call to God for grace; and pulled him by the ſleeve, and bade him recant, and ſave his life. To whom he anſwered, I would as fain live as you, if in ſo doing I ſhould not deny my maſter Chriſt, and again he ſhould deny me before his father in heaven.

The B. readeth out the ſentence.

The ſtrait keeping of Marſh in priſon.

So the biſhop read out his ſentence unto the end, and ſtraight after ſaid unto him. Now will I no more pray for thee, than I will for a dogge. And Marſh anſwered, that notwithſtanding, he would pray for his Lordſhip: and after this the biſhop delivered him unto the Sheriffes of the City. Then his late Keeper bade him farewell good George, with weeping teares, which cauſed the Officers to carry him to a priſon at the North gate, where he was very ſtraitly kept untill the time he went to his death, during which time he had ſmall comfort or relief of any worldly creature.

The brotherly zeale of good men in comforting G. Marſh.

For being in the dungeon or dark priſon, none that would him good, could ſpeak with him, or at the leaſt durſt enterpriſe ſo to doe for feare of accuſation: and ſome of the Citizens which loved him in God for the Goſpels ſake (whereof there were but a few) although they were never acquainted with him, would ſometime in the evening at a hole upon the wall of the City (that went into the ſaid darke priſon(call to him, and aske him how he did. Hee would anſwer them moſt cheerefully, that he did well, and thanked God moſt highly that he would vouchſafe of his mercy to appoint him to bee a witneſſe of his truth, and to ſuffer for the ſame, wherein hee did moſt reioyce, beſeeching him that he would give him grace not to faint under the croſſe, but patiently beare the ſame to his glory, and comfort of his Church: with many other like godly ſayings at ſundry times, as one that moſt deſired to bee with Chriſt. Onse or twice he had money caſt him in at the ſame hole, about ten pence at one time, and two ſhillings at another time: for which he gave God thanks, and uſed the ſame to his neceſſity.

Amry and Couper, Sheriffes of Cheſter.

Marſh led to his martyrdom

The old uſe in Lancaſhire to give money to buy Trentals.

When the time and day appointed came that he ſhould ſuffer, the Sheriffs of the City, whoſe names were Amry and Couper, with their officers and a great number of poor ſimple barbers with ruſty Bills and Pollaxes, went to the Northgate, and there tooke out the ſaid George Marſh, who came with them moſt humbly and meekly, with a locke upon his feet. And as hee came upon the way towards the place of execution, ſome folkes proffered him mony, and looked that hee ſhould have gone with a little purſe in his hand, (as the manner of felons was, accuſtomed in that City in times paſt; at their going to execution) to the end to gather money to give unto a Prieſt to ſay Trentals or maſſes for them after their death, whereby they might, as they thought, be ſaved: but Marſh ſaid he would not as then be troubled with medling with money, but willed ſome good man to take the money, if the people were diſpoſed to give any, and to give it unto the priſoners or poor people. So he went all the way unto his death, with his book in his hand, looking upon the ſame, and many of the people ſaid; this man goeth not unto his death as a thiefe, or as one that deſerveth to dye.

G. Marſh refuſeth to receive mony going to his death.

G. Marſh refuſeth the queens pardon.

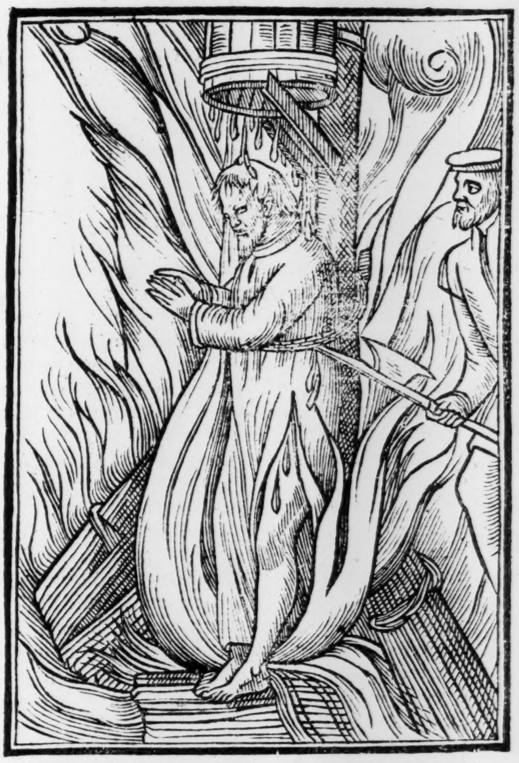
Now when he came to the place of execution without the City, neere unto Spittle boughton, one Cawdrey, being then a deputy Chamberlain of Cheſter, ſhewed Marſh a writing under a great Seale, ſaying; that it was a pardon for him if he would recant. Whereat Marſh anſwered, that he would gladly accept the ſame (and ſaid farther, that he loved the Queene) but foraſmuch as it tended to pluck him from God, hee would not receive it upon that condition.

G. Marſh not ſuffred to ſpeak to the people.

After that, he began to ſpeak to the people, ſhewing the cauſe of his death, and would have exhorted them to ſtick unto Chriſt. Whereupon one of the Sheriffes ſaid: George Marſh, wee muſt have no ſermoning now. To whom hee ſaid, maſter, I cry you mercy: and ſo kneeling down made his prayers, and then put off his clothes unto his ſhirt, and then was he chained unto the poſte, having a number of fagots under him, and a thing made like a firkin, with pitch and tar in the ſame over his head: and by reaſon the fire was unſkilfully made, and that the wind did drive the ſame to and fro, he ſuffered great extremity in his death, which notwithſtanding he abode very patiently.

The martyrdome of Geo. Marſh, at Weſtcheſter Anno 1555. April 24.

The cruell burning of George Marſh, Martyr.



Wherein this in him is to be noted, then when as he had been a long time tormented in the fire without moving, having his fleſh ſo broyled and puft up, that they which ſtood before him underneath could ſee the chaine wherewith he was faſtned, and therefore ſuppoſed no leſſe but he had been dead, notwithſtanding ſuddenly he ſpread abroad his armes, ſaying. Father of heaven have mercy upon me, and ſo yeelded his ſpirit into the hands of the Lord.

Upon this, many of the people ſaid that hee was a martyr, and died marvellous patiently and godly. Which thing cauſed the biſhop ſhortly after to make a Sermon in the Cathedrall Church, and therin affirmed, that the ſaid Marſh was an heretike, burnt like an heretike, and was a firebrand in hell.

Gods iuſt revenging hand upon a perſecuting Biſhop.

In recompence of this his good and charitable Sermon, within ſhort time after, the iuſt iudgement of God appeared upon the ſaid biſhop; recompenſing him in ſuch wiſe, that not long after he turned up his heeles and dyed. Upon what cauſe his death was gendred, I have not here preciſely to pronounce, becauſe the rumor and voyce of the people is not always to be followed. Notwithſtanding, ſuch a report went in all mens mouths, that he was burned of an harlot. Wherefore whether hee died ſo or no I am not certain, neither dare lean too much upon publike ſpeech. Albeit this is certaine, that when he was afterward ſearched, being dead, by ſome of his ſecret friends and certaine Aldermen for ſtopping the rumor of the people, this maidenly prieſt and Biſhop was found not to be free from certain appearance, which declared but ſmall virginity in him, and that the rumor was not raiſed up altogether upon nought amongſt the people. But of this I will ſtay and proceed no further, not becauſe more cannot be ſaid, but becauſe I will not be ſo uncharitable in defacing theſe men, as they are cruell in condemning Gods ſervants to death.

Letters of George Marſh.

This good man wrote divers and ſundry letters out of priſon beſides his examinations, as before ye have heard. Touching the which his examinations, this letter firſt he ſendeth to his friends, the copy whereof here followeth.

A letter of George Marſh to the Reader, touching the matter of his examination.

A letter of G. Marſh to the reader.

HEre have you, dearly beloved friends in Chriſt, the chiefe and principall articles of Chriſtian doctrine briefly touched, which heretofore I have both believed, profeſſed, and taught, and as yet doe believe, profeſſe and teach, and am ſurely purpoſed by Gods grace, to continue in the ſame untill the laſt day. I doe want both time and opportunity to write out at large the probations, cauſes, parts, effects, and contraries or errours of theſe articles, which who-ſo deſireth to know, let them reade over the common places of the godly learned men, Philip Melancthon, and Eraſmus Sarcerius, whoſe judgement in theſe matters of religion, I do chiefly follow, and leane unto. The Lord give us underſtanding in all things, and deliver us from this preſent evill world, according to his will and pleaſure, and bring us againe out of this hell of affliction, into which it hath pleaſed the mercifull Lord to throw us downe: and deliver us out of the mouth of the Lion, and from all evill doing, and keep us unto his everlaſting and heavenly Kingdome, Amen.

1 Pet. 3.

Though Sathan bee ſuffered as wheat to ſift us for a time, yet faileth not our faith through Chriſts aide, but that we are at all times able and ready to confirme the faith of our weake brethren, and alwaies ready to give an anſwer to every man that aſketh us a reaſon of the hope that is in us, and that with meekneſſe and reverence having a good conſcience, and when as they backbite us as evill doers, they may be aſhamed, foraſmuch as they have falſly accuſed our good converſation in Chriſt. I thought my ſelfe now of late yeares, for the cares of this life, well ſetled with my loving and faithfull wife and children, and alſo well quieted in the peaceable poſſeſſion of that pleaſant Euphrates, I doe confeſſe it: but the Lord, who worketh all things for the beſt to them that love him, would not there leave me, but did take my deare and beloved wife from me; whoſe death was a painefull croſſe to my fleſh.

Anno 1555.

G. Marſh, Curate to Laurence Saunders.

Alſo I thought my ſelfe now of late well placed under my moſt loving and moſt gentle Maſter Laurence Saunders in the Cure of Langhton. But the Lord of his great mercy would not ſuffer mee long there to continue (although for the ſmall time I was in his Vineyard, I was not an idle workman.) But hee hath provided mee, I perceive it, to taſte of a farre other cup, for by violence hath hee yet once againe driven mee out of that glorious Babylon, that I ſhould not taſte too much of her wonton pleaſures, but with his moſt dearely beloved Diſciples to have my inward rejoycing in the croſſe of his Sonne Ieſus Chriſt: the glory of whoſe Church, I ſee it well, ſtandeth not in the harmonious ſound of Bels, and Organs, nor yet in the gliſtering of Miters and Copes, neither in the ſhining of guilt images and lights, (as the blinde Papiſts doe judge it) but in continuall labours and daily afflictions for his names ſake.

The glory of the Church ſtandeth not in outward ſhewes.

God at this preſent here in England hath his fanne in his hand, and after his great harveſt, wherinto theſe yeares paſt hee hath ſent his labourers, is now ſifting the corne from the chaffe and purging his floore, and ready to gather the wheat into his garner, and burne up the chaffe with unquenchable fire.

Take heede and beware of the leaven of the Scribes and of the Sadduces. I meane the erroneous doctrine of the Papiſts, which with their gloſſes deprave the Scriptures. For as the Apoſtle ſaint Peter doth teach us; There ſhall bee falſe teachers amongſt us, which privily ſhall bring in damnable ſects: And ſaith that many ſhall follow their damnable wayes, by whom the way of truth ſhall be evill ſpoken of, and that through covetouſneſſe they ſhall with fained words make merchandiſe of us; And Chriſt earneſtly warneth us, to beware of falſe Prophets, which come to us in ſheeps clothing, but inwardly they are ravening wolves. By their fruits you ſhall know them. The fruits of the Prophets are their doctrine. In this place are we Chriſtians taught that wee ſhould try the Preachers, and others that come under colour to ſet forth true Religion unto us, according to the ſaying of S. Paul; Try all things, and choſe that which is good. Alſo the Evangeliſt S. Iohn ſaith, Believe not every ſpirit, but prove the ſpirits whether they bee of God or not, for many falſe Prophets, ſaith hee, are gone out into the world. Therefore if thou wilt know the true Prophets from the falſe, try their doctrine by the true touch-ſtone, which is the word of God: and as the godly Bereans did, Search yee the Scriptures, whether thoſe things which be preached unto you bee even ſo or not; or elſe by the outward converſation of them ye may eaſily be deceived. Deſunt fortaſsis aliqua.

Acts 21

Whether theſe being that good ſalt of the earth, that is, true Miniſters of Gods word, by whoſe doctrine, being received through faith, men are made ſavourie unto God, and which themſelves loſe not their ſaltneſſe, now when they be proved with the boiſterous ſtorms of adverſity and perſecution; or others being that unſavoury ſalt which hath loſt his ſaltneſſe, that is to wit, thoſe ungodly miniſters, which do fall from the word of God into the dreames and traditions of Antichriſt: whether of theſe, I ſay, be more to be credited and believed, let all men judge.

Mat. 5
True ſalt diſcerned from the corrupt and unſavoury ſalt.

Wherfore my dearely beloved, receive yͤ word of God with meekneſſe, that is grafted in you, which is able to ſave your ſouls: And ſee that ye be not forgetfull hearers, deceiving your ſelves with ſophiſtry, but doers of the word; whom Chriſt doth liken to a wiſe man, which buildeth his houſe on a rocke, that when the great raine deſcended, and the floods came and beat upon the houſe, it fell not, becauſe it was grounded upon a rock: this is to wit, that when Sathan, with all his legion of divels, with all their ſubtle ſuggeſtions, and the world with all the mighty Princes thereof, with their crafty counſels, do furiouſly rage againſt us, we faint not, but abide conſtant in the truth, being grounded upon a moſt ſure rock, which is Chriſt, and the doctrine of the Goſpel, againſt which the gates of hell, (that is, the power of Sathan) cannot prevaile.

Mat. 16

And be ye followers of Chriſt and his Apoſtles and receive the word in much affliction (as the godly Theſſalonians did:) for the true followers of Chriſt and the Apoſtles, be they which receive the word of God. They only receive the word of God, which both believe it, and alſo frame their lives after it, and be ready to ſuffer all maner of adverſity for the name of the Lord, as Chriſt and all the Apoſtles did, and as all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt doe: for there is none other way into the kingdome of heaven, but through much tribulation. And if we ſuffer any thing for the kingdome of heavens ſake, and for righteouſnes ſake, we have the prophets, Chriſt, the Apoſtles and Martyrs for an enſample to comfort us: for they did all enter into the Kingdome of heaven at the ſtrait gate and narrow way that leadeth unto life, which few doe finde. And unleſſe we will be content to deny our own ſelves, and take up the croſſe of Chriſt, and his ſaints, it is an evident argument, that we ſhall never reigne with him.

And again, if we can find in our hearts patiently to ſuffer perſecutions and tribulations, it is a ſure token of the righteous judgement of God, that we are counted worthy of the kingdome of God, for which we alſo ſuffer. It is verily (ſaith the Apoſtle) a righteous thing with God, to recompence tribulation to them that trouble us, and reſt to us that be troubled: For after this life, the godly being delivered from their tribulations and paines, ſhall have a moſt quiet and joyfull reſt; whereas the wicked and ungodly contrariwiſe ſhal be tormented for evermore with intollerable and unſpeakable paines, as Chriſt by the Parable of the rich glutton and wretched Lazarus, doth plainly declare and teach. Theſe ought we to have before our eyes always, that in the time of adverſity and perſecution (wherof all that will be the children of God ſhall bee partakers, and wherwith it hath pleaſed God to put ſome of us in ure already) wee may ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Lord, and endure even unto the end, that we may be ſaved. For unleſſe we, like good warriours of Jeſus Chriſt, will endeavour our ſelvs to pleaſe him, who hath choſen us to be ſouldiers, and fight the good fight of faith even unto the end, we ſhall not obtaine that crown of righteouſneſſe, which the Lord, that is a righteous Judge, ſhall give to all them that love his comming.

Let us therefore receive with meekneſſe the word that is grafted in us, which is able to ſave our ſoules, and ground our ſelves on the ſure rocke Chriſt. For (as the Apoſtle ſaith) other foundation can no man lay, beſides that which is laid already, which is Ieſus Chriſt. If any man build on this foundation, gold, ſilver, precious ſtones, timber, hay, ſtubble, every mans worke ſhall appeare, for the day ſhall declare it, and it ſhall bee ſhewed in the fire And the fire ſhall try every mans worke what it is. If any mans worke that hee hath builded upon abide, hee ſhall receive a reward: if any mans worke burne, he ſhall ſuffer loſſe; but he ſhall be ſaved himſelf, nevertheleſſe yet as it were through fire.

1 Cor. 3

By fire here doth the Apoſtle underſtand perſecution and trouble, for they which doe truly preach and profeſſe the word of God, which is called the word of the croſſe, ſhall be railed upon and abhorred, hated, thruſt out of the company, perſecuted and tryed in the furnace of adverſity, as gold and ſilver are tried in the fire.

Fire in Scripture what it ſignifieth.

By gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones, he underſtandeth them that in the midſt of perſecution abide ſtedfaſt in the word. By timber, hay, and ſtubble, are meant ſuch, as in time of perſecution doe fall away from the truth. And when Chriſt, doth purge his floore with the wind of adverſity, theſe ſcatter away from the face of the earth like light chaff which ſhall be burned with unquenchable fire. If they then which do believe, doe in time of perſecution ſtand ſtedfaſtly in the truth, the builder (I doe meane the Preacher of the word) ſhall receive a reward, and the work ſhall be preſerved and ſaved; but if ſo be that they go back and ſwerve, when perſecution ariſeth, the builder ſhall ſuffer loſſe, that is to ſay, ſhall loſe his labour and coſt, but yet he ſhall be ſaved, if he, being tryed in the fire of perſecution, doe abide faſt in the faith.

For we are the true temple of God, and the ſpirit of God dwelleth in us, if ſo be that we continue in the doctrine of the Goſpell. The third is, when we make our body a quick ſacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, that is, when we mortifie and kill our fleſhly concupiſcences and carnall luſts, and ſo bring our fleſh through the helpe of the ſpirit, under the obedience of Gods holy Law. This is a ſacrifice to God moſt acceptable, which the Apoſtle calleth, Our reaſonable ſerving of God. And let us be ſure, that unleſſe we do now at this preſent take better heed to our ſelves, and uſe thankfully the grace of God offered to us by the Goſpel preached theſe yeares paſt, whereby we are induced and brought to the knowledge of the truth; unleſſe, I ſay, we keep Chriſt and his holy word dwelling by faith in the houſe and temple of our hearts, the ſame thing that Chriſt threatneth unto the Jewes, ſhall happen unto us; that is to wit, the unclean ſpirit of ignorance, ſuperſtition, idolatrie, and infidelity and unbeliefe, the mother and head of all vices, which by the grace of God was caſt out of us, bringing with him ſeven other ſpirits worſe than himſelfe, ſhall to our utter deſtruction returne againe unto us: and ſo ſhall we be in worſe caſe than ever wee were before. For if wee, after we have eſcaped from the filthineſſe of the world through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, be yet tangled therein again and overcome, then is the later end worſe than the beginning: and it had bin better for us not to have knowne the way of righteouſneſſe, than after we have knowne it, to turn from the holy commandement given unto us.

For it is then happened unto us according to the true Proverb, The dog is turned to his vomit again, and the ſow that was waſhed to wallowing in the mire. And thus to continue and perſevere in infidelity, and to kicke againſt the manifeſt and known truth, and ſo to dye without repentance, and with a deſpaire of the mercy of God in Jeſus Chriſt, is to ſinne againſt the holy Ghoſt, which ſhall not be forgiven, neither in this world, neither in the world to come. For it is not poſſible (ſaith ſaint Paul) that they which were once lightened, and have taſted of the heavenly gift, and have taſted of the good word of God, and of the power of the world to come; if they fall away, ſhould be renewed againe by repentance: foraſmuch as they have, as concerning themſelves, crucified the ſonne of God again, making a mocking of him. Saint Pauls meaning in this place is, that they that believe truly and unfainedly Gods word, doe continue and abide ſtedfaſt in the known truth.

If any therfore fall away from Chriſt and his word, it is a plaine token that they were but diſſembling hypocrites for all their faire faces outwardly, and never beleeved truely; as Judas, Simon Magus, Demas, Hymeneus, Philetus, and others were, which all fell away from the knowne veritie, and made a mocke of Chriſt: which ſaint Paul doth call here, to crucifie Chriſt anew, becauſe that they turning to their old vomit again, did moſt blaſphemouſly tread the benefits of Chriſts death and paſſion under their feet. They that are ſuch can in no wiſe be renued by repentance: for their repentance is fleſhly, as the repentance of Cain, Saul, and Judas was, which being without godly comfort, breedeth deſperation unto death. Theſe are not of the number of the elect: and as ſaint John doth ſay, They went out from us, but they were not of us: for if they had beene of us, they would have remained with us unto the end. Alſo the Apoſtle ſaith in another place, If we ſin willingly after wee have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſin, but a fearefull looking for judgement and violent fire, which ſhall devoure the adverſaries.

Wherefore my beloved in Chriſt, let us (on whom the ends of the world are come) take diligent heed unto our ſelvs, that now in theſe laſt and perillous times (in the which the divell is come downe, and hath great wrath becauſe hee knoweth his time is but ſhort, and whereof the Prophets, Chriſt and the Apoſtles have ſo much ſpoken, and given us an earneſt forewarning) we withhold not the truth in unrighteouſneſſe, believing, doing, or ſpeaking any thing againſt our knowledge and conſcience, or without faith. For if we ſo do, for whatſoever cauſe it be, it is a wilfull and obſtinate infidelity, and a ſinne unto death: And as our ſaviour Chriſt ſaith, If yee believe not, yee ſhall die in your owne ſinnes. For unleſſe we hold faſt the word of life, both believing it, & alſo bringing forth fruit worthy of repentance, we ſhall with the unprofitable fig-tree, which did but cumber the ground, be cut down, and our talent taken from us, and given unto another that ſhall put it to a better uſe: and we, through our own unthankfullneſſe put from the mercy of God, ſhall never bee able to pay our debts, that is to ſay, we ſhall altogether bee loſt, and undone. For the earth that drinketh in rain that commeth oft upon it, and bringeth forth herbs meet for them that dreſſe it, receiveth bleſſing of God: but that ground that beareth thorns and bryars, is reproved and is nigh unto curſing whoſe end is to be burned.

Neverthelesſe dear friends, we truſt to ſee better of you, and things which accompany ſalvation, and that ye being the good ground, watered with the moiſtneſſe of Gods word plenteouſly preached among you, will with a good heart hear the word of God and keep it, bringing forth fruit with patience. And be none of thoſe forgetfull and hypocritiſh hearers, which although they heare the word, yet the Divell commeth, and catcheth away that which was ſowen in their heart; either having no root in themſelves, endure but a ſeaſon, and as ſoone as tribulation or perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, by & by they are offended; either with the cares of this world and deceitfulneſſe of riches choake the word, and ſo are unfruitfull. Read the parable of the ſower, and among other things note and mark, that the moſt part of the hearers of Gods word are but hypocrites, and hear the word without any fruit or profit, yea, only to their greater condemnation; for only the fourth part of the ſeed doth bring forth fruit. Therfore let not us that be Miniſters, or profeſſors, and followers of Gods word, be diſcouraged, though that very few doe give credit, & follow the doctrine of the Goſpel, & be ſaved.

For God doth here follow an example of a loving father, which when he ſeeth that fatherly love and correction doth not help towards his children, uſeth another way. And if yee refuſe thus to doe, your owne blood will bee upon your owne heads. And as yee have had plenteous preaching of the Goſpell, more than other have had: ſo ye ſhall be ſure, if ye repent not and bring forth fruits worthy of repentance, to bee ſorer plagued, and to receive greater vengeance at Gods hand, than others, and the Kingdome of God ſhall be taken from you, and bee given to another Nation, which will bring forth the fruits thereof.

And ſee that ye receive not the word of God in vain, but continually labor in faith, and declare your faith by your good works, which are infallible witneſſes of the true iuſtifying faith, which is never idle, but worketh by charity. And ſee that ye continually give your ſelves unto all manner of good workes: Amongſt the which, the chiefeſt are to be obedient to the Magiſtrates (ſith they are the ordinance of God, whether they be good or evill) unleſſe they command idolatry and ungodlines, that is to ſay, things contrary unto true religion. Now what weapons yee muſt fight withall, learne of Saint Paul, a champion both much exerciſed, and alſo moſt valiant and invincible. For we muſt thinke none other, but that the life of man is a perpetuall warfare upon earth, as the examples of all godly men throughout all ages doe declare. The valiant Warriour S. Paul being delivered into the hands of the ungodly, and that ſo many times, and alſo from ſo many extreme perils and dangers of death, as he his own ſelfe doth witneſſe, is faine to commit himſelfe in the end to the rough waters of the ſea, where he was in great perill and ieopardy of his owne life: yet was God alwaies (to the great comfort of all that hear of it) moſt ready to comfort and ſuccour him, and glorioully delivered him out of all his troubles; ſo that no man that invaded him, could do him any harme, and in the end hee was compelled to ſay; I have finiſhed my courſe, the time of my departing is at hand, I long to be looſed, and to be with Chriſt, which is the beſt of all, moſt heartily deſiring death.

Faſting is acceptable to God, if it be done without hypocriſie, that is to ſay, if we uſe it to this intent, that therby this mortall body and diſobedient carkaſe may be tamed and brought under the ſubiection of the ſpirit: and againe, if we faſt to this intent, that we may ſpare wherewith to help and ſuccour our poore needy brethren.

This faſt doe the true Chriſtians uſe all the dayes of their life, although among the common ſort of people remaineth yet ſtill that ſuperſtitious kind of faſting, which God ſo earneſtly reproveth by his Prophet Eſay. For as for true chaſtening of the body and abſtaining from vice, with ſhewing mercy towards our needy neighbours, we will neither underſtand nor hear of it, but ſtill think with the Jewes, that we do God a great pleaſure when we faſt, and that we then faſt, when we abſtaine from one thing, and fill our bellies with another. And verily in this point doth our ſuperſtition much exceed the ſuperſtition of the Jews: for we never read that they ever took it for a faſt, to abſtain from fleſh, and to eate either fiſh or white meat as they call it.

Eſay 58.

The Jewiſh manner of faſting reproved.
The Chriſtians in ſuperſtitious faſting exceed the Jewes.

To faſting and prayer muſt be ioyned almes, and mercy towards the poore and needy: and that our almes may be acceptable unto God, three things are chiefly required:

Mercy to the poore.

First, that we give with a cheerfull and ioyful heart; for the Lord loveth a cheerfull giver.

2 Cor. 9.
In almes three things required.

Secondly that we give liberally, putting aſide all niggardſhip, knowing that he that ſoweth little, ſhall reap little, and he that ſoweth plenteouſly, ſhall reap plenteouſly. Let every man therefore do according as he is able. The pooreſt caitiffe in the world may give as great and acceptable an alms in the ſight of God, as the richeſt man in the world can do. The poore widow that did offer but two mites, which make a farthing, did highly pleaſe Chriſt: Inſomuch that he affirmed with an oath, That ſhe of her penury had added more to the offerings of God, than all the rich men, which of their ſuperfluity had caſt in very much. For if there be firſt a willing mind (as S. Paul ſaith) it is accepted, according to that a man hath, and not according to that a man hath not.

Mark 12.

2 Cor. 8.

Thirdly, we muſt give without hypocriſie and oſtentation, not ſeeking the praiſe of men, or our owne glory or profit. And although the Scriptures in ſome places make mention of a reward to our almes and other good works, yet ought we not to thinke that wee doe merit or deſerve any thing: but rather we ought to acknowledge, that God in his meere mercy rewardeth in us his owne gifts. For what hath he that giveth almes, that he hath not received? He then that giveth to a poore man any manner of thing, giveth not of his owne, but of thoſe goods which he hath received of God. What haſt thou, ſaith the Apoſtle, that thou haſt not received? If thou haſt received it, why reioyceſt thou, as though thou hadſt not received it?

Almes without oſtentation

Works of mercy do not merit with God touching our ſalvation any thing.

1 Cor. 4.

This ſentence ought to be had in remembrance of all men. For if wee have nothing, but that which we have received, what can we deſerve? or what need we to diſpute and reaſon of our owne merits? it commeth of the free gift of God, that we

we live, that we love God, that we walk in his fear. Where is our deſerving then? We muſt alſo in this our ſpirituall warfare arme our ſelves with continuall prayer, a very neceſſary, ſtrong, and invincible weapon, and after the example of Chriſt and all other godly men, cry heartily unto God in faith, in all our diſtreſſes and anguiſhes. Let us go boldly to the ſeate of grace, where we ſhall be ſure to receive mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. For now is pride and perſecution encreaſed: now is the time of deſtruction and wrathfull diſpleaſure.

To be faithful in temptation.

Wherfore, my dear brethren, be ye fervent in the Law of God, and ieopard yee your lives, if need ſhall require, for yͤ teſtament of the fathers, and ſo ſhall ye receive great honor, and an everlaſting name. Remember Abraham: Was not he found faithful in temptation, and it was reckoned unto him for righteouſneſſe? Ioſeph in time of his trouble kept the commandement, and was made a Lord of Egypt. Phinees was ſo fervent for the honour of God, that he obtained the covenant of an everlaſting Prieſthood. Ioſhua for the fulfilling of the word of God, was made the Captaine of Iſrael. Caleb bare record before the Congregation, and received an inheritance. David alſo in his mercifull kindnes obtained the throne of an everlaſting Kingdome. Elias being zealous and fervent in the law, was taken up into heaven. Ananias, Azarias, and Miſael remained ſtedfaſt in the faith, and were delivered out of the fire. In like maner Daniel being unguilty, was ſaved from the mouth of the Lyons.

And thus ye may conſider throughout all ages ſince the world began, that whoſoever put their truſt in God were not overcome. Feare not ye then the words of ungodly men: for their glory is but dung and wormes; to day they are ſet up, and to morrow are they gone: for they are turned into earth, and their memoriall commeth to nought. Wherefore let us take good hearts unto us, and quit our ſelves like men in the Law: for if we doe the things that are commanded us in the Law of the Lord our God, we ſhall obtaine great honor therein.

He exhorteth to zeal & courage
Act. 14.

Beloved in Chriſt, let us not faint be cauſe of affliction, wherewith God trieth all them that are ſealed unto life everlaſting: for the only way into the Kingdome of God is through much tribulation. For the kingdome of heaven (as God teacheth by his Prophet Eſdras) is like a City builded and ſet upon a broad field, and full of all good things, but the entrance is narrow and ſudden (full of ſorrow and travell, perils and labors:) Like as if there were a fire at the right hand, and a deep water at the left; and as it were one ſtraight path between them both, ſo ſmall, that there could but one man goe there. If this City were now given to an heire, and he never went through the perillous way, how could he receive his inheritance? Wherfore ſeeing we are in this narrow and ſtraight way, which leadeth unto the moſt ioyfull and pleaſant city of everlaſting life: let us not ſtagger, either turn back, being afraid of the dangerous and perillous way, but follow our Captaine Ieſus Chriſt in the narrow and ſtraight way, and be affraid of nothing no not even of death it ſelf: for it is he that muſt lead us to our iourneys end, and open us the door unto everlaſting life.

4 Eſdras 7.
Strait is the way which the elect muſt walk in.
Death is a door to life.

Conſider alſo the courſe of this world, how many there be which for their Maſters ſake, or for a little promotions ſake, would adventure their lives in worldly affaires, as commonly in wars, and yet is their reward but light and tranſitory, and ours is unſpeakable, great and everlaſting. They ſuffer pains to be made Lords on earth for a ſhort ſeaſon: how much more ought we to endure like pains, yea peradventure much leſſe to be made kings in heaven for evermore? Conſider alſo the wicked of this world, which for a little pleaſures ſake, or to be avenged on their enemies, will fight with ſword and weapons, and put themſelves in danger of impriſonment and hanging. So much as vertue is better than vice, and God mightier than the divel, ſo much ought we to excell them in this our ſpirituall battell.

If worldly men ieopard ſo much for earthly things, how much more ought we to ieopard for everlaſting things.

And ſeeing brethren, it hath pleaſed God to ſet me, and that moſt worthy Miniſter of Chriſt, Iohn Bradford your countreymen in the forefront of this battell, where (for the time) is moſt danger, I beſeech you all in the bowels of Chriſt to help us, and in all our fellow-ſouldiers ſtanding in like perillous place, with your prayers to God for us, that we may quit our ſelves like men in the Lord, and give ſome example of boldneſſe and conſtancy mingled with patience in the feare of God, that yee and others our brethren, through our example, may be ſo encouraged and ſtrengthened to follow us, that ye alſo may leave example to your weak brethren in the world, to follow you, Amen.

Conſider what I ſay; the Lord give us underſtanding in all things. Brethren, the time is ſhort; it remaineth that ye uſe this world as though ye uſed it not: for the faſhion of this world vaniſheth away. See that ye love not the world, neither the things that are in the world: but ſet your affection on heavenly things, where Chriſt ſitteth on the right hand of God. Be meek, and long ſuffering, ſerve and edifie one another, with the gift that God hath given you. Beware of ſtrange doctrine; lay aſide the old converſation of greedy luſts, and walk in a new life. Beware of uncleanneſſe, covetouſneſſe, fooliſh talking, falſe doctrine and drunkenneſſe: reioyce and be thankfull towards God, and ſubmit your ſelves one to another. Ceaſe from ſin, ſpend no more time in vice, bee ſober and apt to pray, be patient in trouble, love each other, and let the glory of God and profit of your neighbour be the only marke ye ſhoot at in all your doings. Repent yee of the life that is paſt, and take better heed to your doings hereafter. And above all things cleave ye faſt to him, who was delivered to death for our ſins, and roſe again for our iuſtification. To whom with the Father and the holy Ghoſt be all honor and rule for evermore. Amen.

Salute from mee in Chriſt all others which love us in the faith, and at your diſcretion make them partakers of theſe letters: and pray ye all for me and others in bonds for the Goſpel, that the ſame God (which by his grace hath called us from wicked Papiſtry unto true Chriſtianitie, and now of love proveth our patience by perſecution) will of his mercy & favor in the end gloriouſly deliver us, either by death, or by life, to his glory, Amen. good gifts, and grow up into a perfect man in Chriſt: theſe be earneſtly to exhort you, yea and to beſeech you in the tender mercy of Chriſt, that with purpoſe of heart ye continually cleave unto the Lord, and that yee worſhip and ſerve him in ſpirit, in the Goſpell of his Sonne. For God will not be worſhipped after the commandements and traditions of men, neither yet by any other meanes appointed, preſcribed and taught us, but by his holy word. And though all men for the moſt part defile themſelves with the wicked traditions of men, and ordinances after the world, and not after Chriſt: yet do ye after the enſample of Toby, Daniel, and his three companions, Mattathias and his three ſons, bee at a point with your ſelves, that ye will not bee defiled with the uncleane meats of the heathen; I doe meane the filthineſſe of Idolatry, and the very Heatheniſh Ceremonies of the Papiſts: but as the true worſhippers, ſerve yee God in ſpirit and verity, according to the ſacred Scriptures: which I would wiſh, and will you above all things continually and reverently (as both Saint Paul and Chriſt command you) to ſearch and reade, with the wholeſome monitions of the ſame: to teach, exhort, comfort and edifie one another, and your brethren and neighbours, now in the time of this our miſerable captivity, and great famiſhment of ſoules, for want of the food of Gods word. And doubt not but that the merciful Lord, who hath promiſed to be with us even unto the worlds end, and that whenſoever two or three be gathered together in his Name he will be in the midſt of them, will aſſiſt you, and teach you the right meaning of the ſacred Scriptures, will keep you from all errors, and lead you into all truth, as he hath faithfully promiſed.

And he that increaſed the five loaves and two fiſhes to feed five thouſand men, beſides women and children, ſhal alſo augment his gifts in you, not only to the edifying and winning of others in Chriſt, but alſo to an exceeding great increaſe of your knowledge in God and his holy word. And feare not your adverſaries: for either according to his accuſtomed manner God ſhall blinde their eyes that they ſhall not ſpie you, either get you favor in their ſight, or els graciouſly deliver you out of their hands by one meanes or other.

Tob.2. Tob.3.

Obey with reverence all your ſuperiors, unleſſe they command idolatry or ungodlineſſe. Make proviſion for your houſholds, chiefly that they be inſtructed and taught in the Law of God. Love your wives even as your owne ſelves, and as Chriſt loved the Congregation. Love your children, but rate them not, leſt they be of a deſperate mind: and bring them up in the nurture and information of the Lord, and teach them even as the godly parents of Toby the yonger, and Suſanna did teach their children, even from their infancy to reverence God according to his law, and to abſtaine from ſinne, providing that in no wiſe they be brought up in idlenes and wantonneſſe, ſeeing that ye reckon your ſelves to be the children of God, and look for the life which God ſhall give to them which never turne their belief from him. See that ye ever feare God, and keepe his Commandements: and though the plague of God chance upon you, yet remaine yee ſtedfaſt in the faith and feare of God, and thanke him, and ſerve him in ſuch holineſſe and righteouſnes as are acceptable before him al the days of your life. Comfort your ſelves in all your adverſities, and ſtay your ſelves in him, who hath promiſed not to leave you as fatherleſſe and motherleſſe children without any comfort, but that he will come to you like a moſt gentle and mercifull Lord. He will continually ſtand by you in all your troubles, aſſiſting, helping, and ſuccouring you at all times. I will be with you (ſaith he) unto the end of the world. And cleave you faſt unto him, which was incarnate, lived, wrought, taught and dyed for your ſins, yea, roſe againe from death, and aſcended into heaven for your iuſtification. Repent ye of the life that is paſt, and ceaſe from ſin, and from hence forward live as much time as remaineth in the fleſh, not after the luſts of men, but after the will of God. To do good and diſtribute, forget not. Faſt and pray buſily, and as every man hath received the gift, miniſter the ſame one to another as good Miniſters of the manifold graces of God, that God in all things may be glorified through Ieſus Chriſt, to whom be praiſe and dominion for ever, and while the world ſtandeth, Amen.

Yours George Marſh.

Another letter.

Another letter of G. Marſh to certain faithfull brethren in the Congregation.

THe ſame grace and peace (dearely beloved in Chriſt) do I intirely deſire and wiſh unto you, which the Apoſtle S. Paul wiſheth to all them, unto whom hee did write and ſend his Epiſtles, than which two things no better can bee wiſhed and deſired of God. Grace is throughout all the Epiſtles of Paul, taken for the free mercy and favor of God, whereby he ſaveth us freely without any deſervings or works of the law. In like manner peace is taken for the quietneſſe and tranquillity of the conſcience, being throughly perſwaded that through the onely merits of Chriſts death and blood-ſhedding, there is an atonement and peace made betweene God and us, ſo that God will no more impute our ſins unto us, nor yet condemn us.

Grace.

Peace what it is.

He exhorteth to ſtedfaſtneſſe in the Goſpel.

Leiver. Pilkinton. Bradford. Saunders.

Men baniſhed for the Goſpel in Q. Maries time.

Dearely beloved, I will not be negligent to put you alwaies in remembrance of things, though that you know them your ſelves, and bee alſo eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth: notwithſtanding, I think it meete, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to ſtir you up by putting you in remembrance. Wherefore I beſeech you brethren, and exhort you in the Lord Ieſus, that yee increaſe more and more, even as yee have received how yee ought to walke and to pleaſe God. And as Barabas that good man, and full of the holy Ghoſt, exhorted the Antiochians, with purpoſe of heart cleave ye continually unto ye Lord. And ſtand faſt, and be not moved from the hope of the Goſpel, whereof God be thanked, ye have had plenteous preaching unto you theſe yeares paſt, by the faithfull Miniſters of Ieſus Chriſt, Leiver, Pilkinton, Bradford, Saunders, and others like, which now, when perſecution ariſeth becauſe of the word, doe not fall away like ſhrinking children and forſake the truth, but are preſt and ready for your ſakes, which are his myſticall body, to forſake the chiefe and principall delights of this life, and ſome of them in giving place to the outragious tyranny of the world, to forſake their livings, friends, native land, and other chiefe pleaſures of this life, and to commit themſelves to painfull exile, that if it pleaſe God, Chriſt may come againe out of Egypt. And other ſome are ready to fulfil their Miniſtery unto the uttermoſt: that is to wit, with their painfull impriſonments and blood-ſhedding, if need ſhall ſo require, to confirm firm and ſeal Chriſts Goſpell whereof they have been Miniſters: and as S. Paul ſaith, not only to be caſt into priſon, but alſo to die for the name of the Lord Jeſus.

The meaning of S. Pauls words opened.

The condition of a true Paſtor.

Be ye not therefore aſhamed of the teſtimony of our Lord Jeſus, neither be ye aſhamed of us which are his priſoners, but ſuffer ye adverſity with the Goſpel, for which word we ſuffer as evil doers, even unto bonds: but the word of God is not bound with us. Therfore we ſuffer all things for the elects ſake, that they alſo may obtain the ſalvation which is in Chriſt Jeſus with eternall glory: wherfore ſtand ye faſt in the faith, and be not moved from the hope of the Goſpell, and ſo ſhall ye make us even with ioy to ſuffer for your ſakes, and as the Apoſtle ſaith; To fulfill that which is behinde of the paſſions of Chriſt in our fleſh, for his bodies ſake, which is the congregation. S. Paul doth not here mean, that there wanteth any thing in the paſſion of Chriſt, which may be ſupplyed by man: for the paſſion of Chriſt, as touching his own perſon, is that moſt perfect and omniſufficient ſacrifice, wherby we are all made perfect, as many as are ſanctified in his blood: but theſe his words ought to be underſtood of the elect and choſen, in whom Chriſt is and ſhall be perſecuted unto the worlds end. The paſſion of Chriſt then, as touching his myſticall body which is the Church, ſhall not be perfect till they have all ſuffered, whom God hath appointed to ſuffer for his Sons ſake. Wherefore ſtabliſh your ſelves, and be of good comfort, and be not moved in theſe afflictions, knowing that we are appointed therunto. For on our parts nothing can be greater conſolation and inward ioy unto us in our adverſity than to heare of your faith and love, and that ye have a good remembrance of us alwaies, praying for us as we doe for you, as the Apoſtle writeth of the Theſſalonians, ſaying, Now are we alive, if ye ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Lord: for good ſhepheards doe alwaies count the welfare and proſperous eſtate of Chriſt flock to be their own; for while it goeth well with the congregation, it goeth wel with them alſo in whatſoever affliction or adverſity they be: but when they ſee the Church in any peril or weakneſſe, then be they weary of their own lives, then can they have no reſt nor ioy. Who is weak, ſaith S. Paul, and I am not weak? who is offended, and I doe not burne? But this affection is not in them that ſeek their own lucre and glory.

A chriſtian mans life is a warfare upon earth.

The Church is ever forewarned before afflictions.

Act. 27.

And foraſmuch as the life of man is a perpetuall warfare upon earth, let us run with ioy unto the battell that is ſet before us, and like good warriours of Jeſus Chriſt pleaſe him, who hath choſen us to be ſouldiers, and not like ſhrinking children faint and fall away from the truth now in time of adverſity and tribulation, wherewith all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus muſt be tried, even as gold and ſilver is proved in the fire and whereof all the Scriptures have given us ſo much forewarning. For God is wont for the moſt part, to warn his elect and choſen, what affliction and trouble ſhal happen unto them for his ſake, not to the intent to fray them therby, but rather to prepare their minds againſt yͤ boiſterous ſtorms of perſecution. As we have a notable example in the Apoſtle S. Paul, unto whom God ſent Agabus, who propheſied unto him of the impriſonment and bands that hee ſhould ſuffer at Jeruſalem: in whom we have alſo a good example of conſtancy and ſtedfaſtneſſe, which regarding nothing the teares of his familiar friends, nor yet the perill of his own life, did through fire and water go on ſtill to ſet forth the glory of God; and he being delivered from the hands of his ungodly and blood-thirſty enemies, ⁊ that ſo many times, is in concluſion fain to commit himſelfe to the rough waters of the ſea, where he was a long ſeaſon in great perill and ieopardy of his owne life. But God was alwaies (to the great comfort of all that ſhall heare of it) moſt ready to help and ſuccour him. Firſt, he did ſend him a moſt friendly and ſweet company, I meane Ariſtarchus and Lucas, ſo ruling the heart of the under Captain Julius, that he courteouſly intreated him, and gave him liberty to go to his friends, and to refreſh himſelf, and he was beneficiall unto him at all times. In like manner was God with Joſeph, and delivered him from all his adverſities, and gave him favour and wiſdom in the ſight of Pharaoh king of Egypt, inſomuch that hee made him governour over all Egypt, and over all his houſhold. In like maner was he with Jeremy and Daniel, in their great troubles, and appointed men for them in their moſt troubles, to relieve, ſuccour and helpe them to their ſingular comfort.

Peter delivered out of priſon.

Alſo when Peter was in Herods priſon, ſleeping between two ſouldiers, bound with two chains, and the keepers before the door keeping the priſon the ſame night that Herod had intended to have brought him out unto the people the day following and to have put him unto death to pleaſe the Jews withall, as a little before hee had killed James the brother of John with the ſword; God ſent his Angel, and the chains fell off from Peters hands, and the iron gate opened unto him by its own accord, and ſo was Peter wonderfully delivered by God. For it is the true living God that looſeth all bands, and delivereth out of priſon and not that fained God S. Leonard. On that true God did S. Peter call, unto him did he aſcribe the glory of his deliverance, ſaying, Now I know of a truth, yͤ God hath ſent his angel, ꝛc.

Theſe things are written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. The God of patience and comfort, grant that we be like minded one towards another, after the enſample of Chriſt Jeſus, that we all agreeing together may with one mouth glorifie God the Father of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt.

After hearty commendations to you, with thanks for that yee did viſit mee a priſoner in Chriſt, and unacquainted with, to your coſts, this ſhall bee to let you know, that yee ſhall receive from me mine examination and handling at Lachum, and the cauſe of mine impriſonment, according as I did promiſe you: and this ye ſhall receive by my brother or ſome one of the Bradſhawes of Bolton within this ſevennight, willing you to ſhew the ſame to ſuch faithfull men about Mancheſter or elſewhere, as you do take to be favorers of true religion, and Chriſts holy word, and then to deliver it again. And whereas you did put me in comfort, that if I did want any thing neceſſary unto this life, you with ſome others would bee bearers with mee in this my coſtly ⁊ painful affliction; I give you moſt hearty thanks ⁊ reioyce greatly in the Lord, who ſtirs up yͤ hearts of others to be careful for me in this my great neceſſity. I thank God, as yet I do want nothing, ⁊ intend to be as little chargable to others (ſaving my mother) as I can. If I do want, I will be bold with you and others, to ſend for your reliefe and help in my neceſſity; deſiring you in the mean while to pray for me, and all others in the bonds of Chriſt, that God would perform the thing which he hath begun in us, that we may with boldneſſe confeſſe Jeſus Chriſt, and fight the good fight of faith.

GRace be with you, and peace be multiplyed in the knowledge of God & Jeſus the Lord.

After hearty commendations and thankes to you, not only for your large token, but much more for your loving letters, full of conſolation to me as touching my perſon to you unknown: theſe ſhall be to certifie you that I reioyce greatly in the Lord, when I do perceive how my ſweet Saviour Chriſt doth ſtir up the minds, not only of my familiar friends in times paſt, but alſo of ſundry and divers heretofore unto me unknown and unacquainted, to beare part with me in this my painful and coſtly impriſonment, ſending me things not only neceſſary for this preſent life, but alſo comfortable letters, encouraging and exhorting mee to continue grounded and ſtabliſhed in the faith, and not to be moved away from yͤ hope of the Goſpel, wherof, according to my ſmall talent, I have been a Miniſter: and daily I call and cry unto the Lord in whom is all my truſt, and without whom I can do nothing, that he which hath begun a good work in me, would vouchſafe to go forth with it untill the day of Jeſus Chriſt, being ſurely certified in my conſcience of this, that he will ſo do, foraſmuch as he hath given me, that not only I ſhould believe on him, but alſo ſuffer for his ſake. The Lord ſtrengthen me with his holy ſpirit, that I may be one of the number of thoſe bleſſed, wͭ induring to the end, ſhal be ſaved

And wheras you ſay, that my ſuffering of perſecution with Chriſt is a thing to you moſt comfortable, I make anſwer that in all mine adverſitie and neceſſity nothing on your behalf is greater conſolation unto me, than to hear of the faith and love of others, and how they have good remembrance of us always, even as the Apoſtle reporteth by the Theſſalonians, ſaying. Now are we alive, if ye ſtand ſtedfaſt in the Lord. For my truſt in the Lord is, that this my buſineſſe ſhall happen to the furtherance of the Goſpel, and that you will be none of thoſe forgetfull and hypocritiſh hearers, wherof ſome being but way-ſide hearers, the divell commeth and taketh away the word out of their hearts, leſt they ſhould believe and be ſaved, (but let prayer bee made without ceaſing by the congregation unto God for them) and (no doubt) God will to your conſolation gloriouſly deliver by one means or other his oppreſſed. Only tarry ye the Lords leaſure; bee ſtrong, let your heart bee of good comfort, and wait ye ſtill for the Lord. He tarrieth not that will come, look for him therefore and faint not, and he will never fail you.

GRace and peace from God the Father, & the Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you alway, Amen.

What good affliction worketh in the godly

We had a letter from you, which is a great comfort unto us, to ſee you take yͤ croſſe ſo thankfully. Trouble & affliction doth prove, try, inſtruct, confirme and ſtrengthen the faith, provoke and ſtir up prayer, drive & force us to amendment of life, to the fear of God, to meekneſſe, to patience, to conſtancy, to gentleneſſe, to ſoberneſſe, temperancy, and to all manner of vertues, and are the occaſion of exceeding much good, as wel tranſitory as eternall, in this world as in the world to come: There is neither good nor bad, godly nor ungodly, but he hath one croſſe or other. And although ſome there bee that can ſhift for a while, and make proviſion for themſelves for a time, by craft or ſubtilty and diſſimulation, or by ſome falſhood in fellowſhip (as they call it) yet they bring themſelves at length into the higheſt danger, confuſion, and ſhame, both in this world, and in the world to come. And ſeeing that all the troubles and adverſity in this world are a thouſand times more light and eaſie, yea nothing in compariſon of the eternall fire, which is prepared and already kindled for the unfaithfull wicked enemies of God; all faithful and godly perſons ought to bear and ſuffer their tranſitory affliction and adverſity the more patiently, willingly, and thankfully; conſidering and remembring all the dearly beloved friends of God, which were wonderfully vexed and plagued of their enemies, Abraham of the Caldees, Lot of the Sodomites, Iſaac of Iſmael, Jacob of Eſau, Moſes of his people, David of Saul, and of his own Son. As for Job, he had not a drop of blood in his body. John Baptiſt, the holieſt that ever was born of a woman, was without any law, right or reaſon, beheaded in priſon, as though God had knowne nothing at all of him.

Examples of holy men ſuffering affliction.

We have many thouſand fellow martyrs and companions of our miſery and adverſity, in reſpect of whoſe impriſonment, racking, chains, fire, wild beaſts, and other meanes wherewith they were tormented, all that we ſuffer is but a blaſt of wind. Therefore now, whoſoever is aſhamed of the Croſſe of Chriſt, and agreeved therewith, the ſame is aſhamed to have Chriſt for his fellow & companion, and therefore ſhall the Lord Jeſus Chriſt be aſhamed of him again at the later day.

Thus I leave for this time, beſeeching you to let me have your advice, becauſe I do not outwardly ſpeak that with my tongue that I doe think with my heart. Pray for me, as I for you. I beſeech the holy Ghoſt have you in his keeping alway, Amen.

By your friend, Iames Bradſhaw.

A prayer of G. Marſh, which he uſed daily to ſay.

A prayer of G. Marſh, martyr

O Lord Ieſus Chriſt, which art the only Phiſitian of wounded conſciences, we miſerable ſinners truſting in thy gracious goodneſſe, do briefly open unto thee the evill tree of our heart, with all the roots, boughs, leaves, and fruits, and with all the crookes, knots and knoures, all which thou knoweſt: for thou throughly perceiveſt as well the inward luſts, doubtings, and denying thy providence, as theſe groſſe outward ſins which we commit inwardly and deadly. Wherefore we beſeech thee, according to the little meaſure of our infirmity, although we be farre unable and unapt to pray, that thou wouldeſt mercifully circumciſe our ſtony hearts, and for theſe old hearts create new within us, and repleniſh us with a new ſpirit, and water us, and moiſten us with the juice of heavenly grace, and wels of ſpirituall waters, whereby the inward venome and noyſome juice of the fleſh may be dryed up, and cuſtome of the old man changed, and our heart, alwayes bringing forth thornes and briars to be burned with fire, from henceforth may beare ſpirituall fruits in righteouſneſſe and holineſſe, unto life everlaſting, Amen.

Beloved, among other exerciſes, I do daily on my knees uſe this confeſſion of ſins, willing and exhorting you to do the ſame, & daily to acknowledge unfainedly to God your unbelief, unthankfulnes, & diſobedience againſt him. This ſhall ye doe,

Anno 1555.

do, if ye will diligently conſider & look your ſelvs firſt in the pure glaſs of Gods commandements and there ſee your outward filthineſſe & uncleannes, and ſo learn to vanquiſh the ſame, that is to wit, fall in hearty diſpleaſure againſt ſinne, and therby be provoked to long after Chriſt. For we truly are ſinners; but he is iuſt, and the iuſtifier of all them that believe on him. We are poor, but he is rich in mercy toward all them that call upon him. If we hunger & thirſt for righteouſnes; let us reſort unto his table, for he is a moſt liberal feaſt maker. He will ſet before us his own holy body, which is given to us to be our meat, and his precious blood, which was ſhed for us, and for many for the remiſſion of ſins, to be our drink. He biddeth, willeth, and calleth for gueſts, which hunger and thirſt. Come (ſaith he) all ye that labor and are laden, and I will refreſh you, coole and eaſe you, and you ſhall find reſt unto your ſoules.

Mat. 11.

The life and ſtory of W. Flower, who for ſtriking of a Prieſt, was apprehended, firſt having his hand cut off, and after martyred for his conſtant ſtanding to the truth.

W. Flower Martyr.

WIlliam Flower, otherwiſe named Branch firſt concerning his trade of life, and bringing up, hee was born at Snowhill in the Countie of Cambridge, where he went to ſchool certain yeeres, and then came to the Abby of Ely; where, after he had remained a while, hee was a profeſſed Monke according to the order & rule of the ſame houſe wherin he remained, uſing and bearing the habit of a Monk, and obſerving the rules and order of the ſame houſe, untill he came to one and twenty years of age, or thereabout: and before he came to that age, and being a profeſſed Monk, he was made a prieſt alſo in the ſame houſe, and there did celebrate & ſing Maſſe a good ſpace together. After that, by reaſon of a viſitation, and certaine iniunctions given in the ſame time by the authoritie of King Henry the eighth, he forſook the ſame houſe, & caſting from him the ſaid Monkes habit and religion aforeſaid, took upon him and uſed the habit of a ſecular Prieſt, and returned to Snowhill, where hee was borne; and there he did celebrate and ſing Maſſe, and taught children their Primar and Accidence about halfe a yeere together.

W. Flower firſt a Monke, then a Prieſt in the houſe of Ely.

W. Flower at the ſuppreſſion of Abbies, turned his religion.

W. Flower a Maſſe Prieſt.

Then he went from thence to Ludgate in Suffolke, and there ſerved as a ſecular Prieſt about a quarter of a yeare; and from thence hee then went to Stoniland, where he tarried and ſerved as a ſecular Prieſt alſo, untill the comming out of the ſix Articles: and then he departed from thence, and went into Glouceſter ſhire, where after he had made his abode in the Countrey a while, at length in Tewkeſbury, according to Gods holy ordinance, hee married a wife, with whom he ever after faithfully and honeſtly continued: & after his mariage, he tarried in Tewkeſbury about two yeers together: and then from thence he went unto Broſley, where he tarried three quarters of a yeere, and practiſed Phyſicke and Chirurgery, and from thence he removed to Northhampton ſhire, where under a Gentleman he taught children their Primars, and to write and reade, a good ſpace. And ſo departing from thoſe parts; he came to London, and there remained for a certaine ſpace. After that, being deſirous to ſee his country, he returned to Snowhill where he was borne: from thence to Brankeſtrey in Eſſex, then to Corall, where hee taught children a ſpace, and ſo came to Lambeth beſide London, where he hired a houſe, and placed his wife, where he & his wife did ever ſince dwell together til this time: howbeit for the moſt part he was alwaies abroad; and very ſeldome at home, except once or twiſe in a moneth, to viſit and ſee his wife; where he being at home upon Eaſter day about 10. or 11. a clock in the forenoon of the ſame day, came over the water from Lambeth into ſaint Margarets Church at Weſtminſter, where he finding and ſeeing a Prieſt called John Cheltam miniſtring and giving the Sacrament of the altar to the people, and therewith being greatly offended in his conſcience with the prieſt for the ſame his doing (for that hee iudged him not to be a Catholike Miniſter, neither his act to bee Catholike and laudable according to Gods word) did ſtrike and wound him upon the head, and alſo upon the arme and hand with his woodknife, the prieſt having the ſame time in his hand a Chalice, with certaine conſecrated hoſts therin, which were ſprinkled with the blood of the ſaid prieſt.

W. Flower marrieth a wife.

W. Flower commeth to Lambeth.

W. Flower ſtriketh a Popiſh Prieſt at the altar in Weſtminſter.

In the which ſo doing as indeed he did not wel or Evangelically, ſo afterward, being examined before biſhop Boner, did no leſſe confeſſe his not well doing in the ſame, ſubmitting therfore himſelfe willingly to puniſhment, when it ſhould come. Howbeit touching his beliefe in the Sacrament, and the Popiſh miniſtration, he neither would nor did ſubmit himſelfe.

W. Flower repenteth his act in ſtriking.
W. Flower conſtant in his faith.

Wherupon the foreſaid W. Flower, being firſt apprehended and laid in the gatehouſe at Weſtminſter (where he had given two groats the ſame day a little before to the priſoners, ſaying, hee would ſhortly after come to them) with as many irons as he could beare: afterward was convented before Boner his Ordinary, Aprill 19. Anno 1555. where the Biſhop after he had ſworne him upon a book (according to his ordinary manner) miniſtred articles & interrogatories to him. But before I ſpeak of the articles, firſt we have here to ſet forth what communication paſſed betwixt him and Robert Smith being then alſo there priſoner with him in Newgate, concerning his fact done at Weſtminſter, the tenor and effect of which communication here followeth.

W. Flower laid in the gate houſe at Weſtminſter.

W. Flower brought before Biſhop Boner.

A communication or debating betweene Robert Smith priſoner in Newgate, and W. Flower, concerning his ſtriking of the Prieſt at Weſtminſter.

Robert Smith.

The talke betweene Robert Smith and W. Flower.

FRiend, for as much as I do underſtand that you doe profeſſe the Goſpell, and alſo have ſo done a long ſeaſon, I am bold to come unto you, and in the way of communication to demand and learn a truth at your own mouth, of certain things by you committed, to the aſtoniſhing not only of me, but of divers other, that alſo profeſſe the verity.

Flower. I praiſe God for his great goodnes, in ſhewing me the light of his holy word; and I give you hearty thanks for your viſitation, intending by Gods grace to declare all the truth that yee ſhall demand lawfully of me, in all things.

Smith. Then I deſire you to ſhew me the truth of your deed, committed on John Cheltam prieſt, in the Church, as neere as you can, that I may heare from your owne mouth how it was.

The zeale of W. Flower in ſeeing the Lords honor defaced.

Flo. I came from my houſe at Lambeth over the water, and entring into S. Margarets Church (ſo called) and there ſeeing the people falling down before a moſt ſhamefull and deteſtable Idol, being moved with extreme zeale for my God, whom I ſaw before my face diſhonored, I drew forth my Hanger, and ſtrake the prieſt which miniſtred the ſame unto them: wherupon I was immediately apprehended, and this is moſt true, as the act is manifeſt.

Smi. Did ye not know yͤ perſon that ye ſtrake, or were ye not zealous upon him for any evil wil or hatred betwéen you at any time.

Flo. No verily, I never to my knowledge ſaw the perſon before that preſent, neither ought him or any man alive evill will, or malice; for if he had not had it, another ſhould, if I had any time come where the like occaſion had béen miniſtred, if God had permitted me to doe it.

Smith. Do ye think that thing to be well done, and after the rule of the Goſpel?

Extraordinary zeales are no generall rules to be followed.

Flo. I doe confeſſe all fleſh to be ſubiect to the power of Almighty God, whom he maketh his Miniſters to do his will and pleaſure; as in example, Moſes, Aaron, Phinees, Joſhua, Zimry, Jehu, Judith, Mattathiah, with many others, not only changing degrées, but alſo planting zeales to his honour, againſt all order and reſpect of fleſh and blood. For, as ſaith S. Paul, His works are paſt finding out: by whoſe ſpirit I have alſo given my fleſh at this preſent unto ſuch order, as it ſhall pleaſe the good will of God to appoint, in death, which before the act committed I looked for.

Smith. Think you it convenient for me, or any other, to do the like by your example?

W. Flower intending at Pauls to have done the like.

Flo. No verily, neither do I know if it were to do again, whether I could do it again, or no: for I was up very early at Pauls Church (ſo called) upon Chriſts day in the morning, to have done it in my iealouſie: but when I came in place I was no more able to do it, than now to undoe that is done; and yet now being compelled by the ſpirit, not only to come over the water, and to enter the Church, but being in mind fully content to dye for the Lord, gave over my fleſh willingly without all fear, I praiſe God. Wherfore I cannot learne you to do the like. Firſt, becauſe I know not what is in you. Secondly, becauſe the rules of the Goſpell command us to ſuffer with patience all wrongs and iniury: yet nevertheles, if hee make you worthy, that hath made mee zealous, ye ſhall not be letted, iudged, nor condemned: for he doth in his people his unſpeakeable workes in all ages, which no man can comprehend. I humbly beſéech you to iudge the beſt of the ſpirit, and condemn not Gods doings: for I cannot expreſſe with my mouth the great mercies that God hath ſhewed on mee in this thing, which I repent not.

Smith. Are ye not aſſured to have death miniſtred unto you for the ſame act committed, and even with extremity?

W. Flower prepared himſelfe to death before the fact committed.

Flo. I did before the déed committed, adiudge my body to die for the ſame: whereupon I carried about me in writing, mine opinion of God and the holy Scriptures; that if it had pleaſed God to have given them leave to have killed my body in the Church, they might in the ſaid writing have ſéen my hope which I (praiſe God) is laid up ſafe within my breſt, notwithſtanding any death that may be miniſtred upon my body in this world; being aſcertained of everlaſting life through Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and being moſt heartily ſorry for all mine offences committed in this fleſh, and truſting ſhortly through his mercy, to ceaſe from the ſame.

Smith. It is no néed to examine or commune with you of the hope that yee have any further: for I perceive (God be praiſed) yee are in good eſtate, and therefore I beſéech God for his mercies ſpread his wings over you, that as for his love you have béene zealous, even to the loſſe of this life, ſo he may give you his holy ſpirit to conduct you out of this death into a better life, which I think will be ſhortly.

Flo. I hunger for the ſame (dear friend) being fully aſcertained that they can kill but the body, which I am aſſured ſhall receive life again everlaſting, and ſée no more death; entirely deſiring you and all that feare the Lord, to pray with me to almighty God, to perform the ſame in me ſhortly. And thus Robert Smith departed, leaving him in the dungeon, and went again to his Ward. And this (gentle Reader) is the truth, as néer as the ſaid Smith could report it.

Anno 1555.

And thus much concerning the talke betwéen him and Robert Smith in Newgate, concerning his fact in ſtriking the Prieſt. Now to return again to the matter of his examination, where we left: We ſhewed before how this William Flower, after his ſtriking the Prieſt, firſt was laid in the gatehouſe; then, being examined before Boner, had articles miniſtred againſt him: the copy whereof here followeth.

Articles objected and miniſtred by Boner, againſt William Branch, alias Flower, late of Lambeth in the Countie of Surrey.

Articles objected againſt W. Flower by D. Boner.

First, that thou being of a lawfull age and diſcretion at the leſt of ſeventéen yéers old waſt profeſſed a Monk in the late Abbey of Ely, wherein after thy profeſſion thou remainedſt untill the age of 21. yéers, uſing all the mean time the habit and religion of the ſame houſe, and waſt reputed and taken notoriouſly for ſuch a perſon.

In the later daies certaine ſhall depart from the faith, forbidding mariage and eating of meats. 1 Tim. 4.

Item, that after the premiſſes, thou waſt ordered and made Prieſt, according to the laudable cuſtome of the Catholike Church, and afterward thou didſt execute and miniſter as a prieſt, and waſt commonly reputed, named, and taken for a prieſt.

Item, that after the premiſſes thou forgetting God, thy conſcience, honeſty, and the laudable order of the Catholike Church, didſt contrary to thy profeſſion and vow, take, as unto thy wife, one woman, commonly called Alice Pulton, in the Pariſh Church of Tewkeſbury in the Dioceſſe of Glocester, with whom thou haddeſt mutuall cohabitation, and carnall copulation, as man and wife, and begateſt of her two children.

A great hereſie.

Item, that thou being a religious man and a prieſt, didſt contrary to the order of the Eccleſiaſticall Laws, take upon thée to practiſe in divers places within the Dioceſſe of London, Phyſick, and Chirurgery, when thou waſt not admitted, expert, nor learnnd.

Item, that upon Eaſter day laſt paſt, that is to wit, the fourtéenth day of this preſent moneth of April, within the Pariſh Church of S. Margarets at Weſtminſter, within the County of Middleſex and Dioceſſe of London, thou didſt maliciouſly, outragiouſly, and violently pull out thy weapon, that is to wit, thy woodknife or hanger. And whereas the Prieſt and Miniſter there, called ſir John Cheltam, was executing his Cure and charge, eſpecially in doing his ſervice, and miniſtring the ſacrament of the altar to communicants, then didſt thou wickedly and abominably ſmite with thy ſaid weapon the ſaid Prieſt, firſt upon the head very ſore, and afterwards upon his hands or other parts of his body, drawing blood aboundantly upon him; the ſaid Prieſt then holding the ſaid ſacrament in his hand, and giving no occaſion why thou ſhouldeſt ſo hurt him; the people being grievouſly offended therwith, and the ſaid Church polluted thereby, ſo that the inhabitants were compelled to repaire to another Church to communicate, and to receive the ſaid ſacrament.

Item, that by reaſon of the premiſſes, thou waſt and art by the Eccleſiaſticall Laws of the Church, amongſt other penalties, excommunicate and accurſed, ipſo facto, and not to be companied withall, neither in Church, nor otherwhere, but in ſpeciall caſes.

Item,

Anno 1555.

His faith in the ſacrament.

Item, that thou, concerning the verity of Chriſts naturall body and blood in the ſacrament of the Altar, haſt been by the ſpace of theſe yeeres, 20.19.18.17. 16.15.14.13.12.11.10.9.8.7.6. 5.4.3.2. and 1. or any one of them, and yet art at this preſent of this opinion; that is to ſay, that in the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, after the words of conſecration, there is not really, truly, and in very deed contained (under the formes of bread) the very true and naturall body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

Item, that thou for the hatred and diſdaine that thou hadſt and didſt beare againſt the ſaid ſacrament, and the vertue thereof, and againſt the ſaid Prieſt miniſtring the ſame, (as before) didſt ſmite, wound, and hurt him in manner and form as before is declared.

Item, that thou, over and beſides the pains due unto thee for the doing of the cruell fact, art alſo by the order of the Eccleſiaſticall lawes of the Church, and the laudable cuſtome and ordinance of the ſame, to be reputed, taken, and iudged (as thou art indeed) a very heretike, and to be puniſhed by and with the paines due for hereſie, by reaſon of the ſaid hereſie and damnable opinion.

Item, that all the premiſſes be true, manifeſt, and notorious and famous, and that upon the ſame and every part thereof, there was and is within the ſaid Pariſh of S. Margarets and other places thereabout, a publike voice and fame.

The anſwer of William Flower made to the articles aforeſaid.

Flower anſwereth to the articles.

TO the firſt article he anſwereth and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof, except that he ſaith and confeſſeth that he never conſented and agreed in his heart to be a Monk.

Flower made Monk againſt his will.

To the ſecond article he anſwereth and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof. Howbeit he ſaith, that he never did, nor yet doth eſteeme the ſaid order of Prieſthood, according to the ſaid order of the Catholike Church, becauſe he was offended therewith in his conſcience.

Flower confeſſeth his matrimony to be honeſt & lawfull.

W. Flower more devout to God being in the ſtate of matrimony, than before.

To the third article he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that he intending to live in godly matrimony, and not forgetting God, did marry with the ſaid Alice Pulton named in this article, wherein he beleeveth that he did well, and according to Gods lawes. Further, confeſſing and beleeving, that all the time when he was profeſſed Monke, and made Prieſt, he did thereby utterly forget God: but when he did ſo marry the ſaid Alice Pulton, and in continuing with her did beget three children, he did remember God, as he ſaith, and beleeveth that he did then lawfully.

To the fourth article he anſwereth, and beleeveth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

The order of Flowers ſtriking the Prieſt at the Altar. Note that the ſaid W. Flower afterward in his next appearance corrected and reformed this anſwer.

To the fifth article he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that his conſcience being greatly offended with the ſaid ſir John Cheltam Prieſt, for miniſtring of the ſacrament of the Altar to the people at the place and time ſpecified in this article, he did ſo ſmite and ſtrike the ſame Prieſt with his hanger or woodknife, as well upon his head, as upon other parts and places of his body, which he remembreth not, whereby the blood ran out, and was ſhed in the ſaid Church, as he beleeveth, having, as he ſaith, none other cauſe or matter ſo to do, but onely that his conſcience was offended and grieved, in that the ſame Prieſt did ſo give and miniſter the ſaid ſacrament to the people: which people he beleeveth was greatly abaſhed and offended with his ſaid fact and doing, and were enforced and compelled to goe out of the Church, and to repaire to another to receive the ſaid ſacrament. And further, being then demanded and examined, whether he did then mind and intend to have killed the ſaid Prieſt, or not: he ſaid he would not anſwer thereunto. And being further examined, whether he did well or evill in ſtriking the ſaid Prieſt; he would make no anſwer thereunto, as he ſaid.

Flower would not anſwer whether he intended to kill the Prieſt.

To the ſixth he anſwereth and ſaith, that whether he be ſo excommunicate or accurſed, as is contained in this article, he referreth himſelfe herein to the Eccleſiaſticall lawes.

To the ſeventh he anſwereth and ſaith, that by the ſpace of ſixe and twenty yeeres now paſt, he hath alwayes been, and yet is of this opinion touching the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, as followeth; videlicet, that in the ſacrament of the Altar, after the words of conſecration, there is not really, truly, and in very deed contained under the forme of bread, the very true and naturall body of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

To the eighth he anſwereth, and beleeveth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

To the ninth he anſwereth, and herein he referreth himſelfe to the ſaid lawes, cuſtome, and ordinance ſpecified in this article, that is to ſay, the Canonicall lawes.

To the laſt he anſwereth and beleeveth, that thoſe things before by him confeſſed be true, and thoſe which he hath denied, be untrue; and that the ſaid common voice and fame hath and doth only labour and goe upon thoſe things by him before confeſſed.

By me W. Flower, alias Branch.

W. Flower exhorted to recant.

After this examination done, the Biſhop began after the beſt ſort of his fine Divinity to inſtruct him, and to exhort him to returne againe to the unity of his mother the catholike Church, with ſuch reaſons as he is commonly wont to uſe to others, promiſing many faire things if he would ſo doe, beſides the remitting of that was paſt.

To this William Flower anſwering again, thanked him for his offer: and where it was in his power to kill or not to kill his body, he ſtood therewith contented, let him doe therein what he thought; yet over his ſoule he had no ſuch power, which being once ſeparated from the body, is in the hands of no man, but only of God, either to ſave or ſpill. As concerning his opinion of the ſacrament, he ſaid he would never go from that he had ſpoken, do he with him what he would.

W. Flower refuſeth to revoke his faith and doctrine.

Then the Biſhop aſſigned him againe to appeare in the ſame place at afternoone, betwixt 3. and 4. In the meane time to adviſe himſelfe of his former anſwers, whether he would ſtand to the ſame his opinions or no: which if he ſo did, he would further proceed againſt him, &c.

Another appearance of W. Flower before B. Boner.

At afternoone the ſaid William Flower appeared againe before the ſaid Biſhop the houre and place appointed. To whom the Biſhop ſitting in his Conſiſtory, ſpake theſe words: Branch, ye were this forenoon here before me, and made anſwer to certaine articles; and thereupon I reſpited you till now, to the intent you ſhould conſider and weigh with your ſelfe your ſtate, and to remember while you have time, both your abominable act, and alſo that evill opinion which ye have conceived touching the verity of Chriſts true naturall body in the ſacrament of the Altar.

W. Flower ſtandeth to his doctrine.

To whom the ſaid Branch anſwered againe, and ſaid as followeth: That which I have ſaid, I will ſtand to; and therefore I require that the law may proceed againſt me. Whereupon the Biſhop commanded his Notarie (Harward by name) to read to him againe his articles, as before. Which being read, ẏ ſaid William Flower perſiſting in his godly ſentence, anſwered to all parts of the articles, as in the forenoone before, ſave onely that he requeſted the Biſhop concerning the fifth article, he might alter ſomthing his anſwer therein, after this tenor and manner of words: to wit, and moreover confeſſeth and ſaith, that whereas he ſtrake the Prieſt on Eaſter day laſt paſt, in S. Margarets Church in Weſtminſter, he hath ſince that time, and yet doth miſlike himſelfe in that doing, and doth now iudge and beleeve that the ſame his act was evill & naught. Howbeit he ſaith and beleeveth that for the matter and cauſe wherefore he ſo ſtrooke the ſaid Prieſt (which was for miniſtring of the ſacrament of the Altar, which he taketh and iudgeth abominable) he neither did nor doth miſlike himſelfe at all therein.

Flower miſliked his owne act in ſtriking the Prieſt.

Flower reformeth his anſwer to the ninth article.

Moreover, he deſireth of the ſaid Biſhop licence to be granted him, to alter and take out ſomewhat of the ninth Article, and in place thereof, theſe words to be placed; to wit, Herein he referreth himſelfe to the lawes, cuſtome and ordinance ſpecified in this article, &c. At which requeſt, Boner granted to the altering of both the Articles according as he deſired, and ſo put in the acts.

After this, the Biſhop turning againe to his old maner of exhorting, went about with words (and words onely) to perſwade him to ſubmit himſelfe to the catholike Church, and to the faith thereof. All which his perſwaſions notwithſtanding, William ſtill remained in the conſtancy of his ſentence, ſaying, that he would not be removed from that he had ſpoken, to die therefore. Whereupon the Biſhop aſſigned him the next day (being the twentieth day of Aprill) to appeare in the ſame day and place, betweene the houres of 8. and 9. before noone, there and then to heare the ſentence pronounced, in caſe he would not relent, &c.

The laſt appearance of William Flower before Biſhop Boner.

The laſt appearance of W. Flower before B. Boner.

IN the which day, houre, and place, the ſaid William Flower as he was appointed, was brought by the Keeper, belonging to the Warden of the Fleet, before Boner, who after his wonted manner of perſwaſion going about to reduce him to his catholike Church and the unity thereof, that is, from Chriſt to Antichriſt; ſometimes with faire promiſes alluring, ſomtime with menaces and terrours, fearing him, &c. To this William anſwering, ſaid on this wiſe; Doe what ye will, I am at a point: for the heavens ſhall as ſoone fall, as I will forſake mine opinion, &c. Whereupon the Biſhop after he had commanded theſe words to be regiſtred, called for the depoſitions of certaine witneſſes, produced for the better information of this matter, the names of which witneſſes were theſe: William Jenings, John Bray, Robert Graunt, Richard Dod, William Pampion, Robert Smalwood, the Pariſh Prieſt of S. Margarets at Weſtminſter. The ſumme and effect of whoſe depoſitions here enſueth.

W. Flowers conſtancy.

Witneſſe produced againſt W. Flower.

The depoſitions or atteſtations producted upon the anſwers of William Flower.

RObert Graunt of Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid anſwers of William Flower, ſaith and depoſeth; that he did heare and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid anſwers, and ſubſcribe to the ſame with his own hand, and alſo was preſent in the Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, when the ſaid William Flower did ſmite and wound the Prieſt, when (as he ſaith) he was miniſtring the ſacrament; and how this examinate among other preaſed towards him to take him, and was hurt thereby upon his chin, and after he was taken, this examinate holp to conduct him to the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter.

RIchard Dod of Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid anſwers, ſaith and depoſeth; that he did heare and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid anſwers, and ſubſcribe to the ſame with his owne hand; and alſo did ſee and was preſent, when the ſaid Flower upon Eaſter day laſt paſt drew his wood-knife, and ſtrake the Prieſt upon the head, hand, and arme: who being wounded therewith, and having a chalice with conſecrated hoſts there in his hand, ſprinkled with the ſaid Prieſts bloud, was holpen and reſcued by this examinate, and the ſaid Flower carried to the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter, and his wood-knife taken away by this examinate.

WIlliam Pampion, one of the Churchwardens of the ſaid Pariſh Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid anſwers of the ſaid Flower, ſaith and depoſeth, that the ſame anſwers be true, and in his ſight were ſubſcribed with the hand of the ſaid Flower. And that upon Eaſter day laſt paſt, about eleven of the clock in the forenoone, in the Pariſh Church of Saint Margarets in Weſtminſter, among a great number of the people ready to be houſeled, the Prieſts backe being turned toward the ſaid Flower, he the ſaid Flower ſuddenly drew forth his wood-knife, and ſtrake ſir John Cheltam the Prieſt, both upon his head, hand, and arme, whereby he was wounded, and bled abundantly, and the chalice with conſecrated hoſts being in his hand, were ſprinkled with his bloud, and the people in great feare cried out lamentably, and thought they ſhould preſently have been killed.

RObert Smalwood of Weſtminſter, examined upon the ſaid anſwers, ſaith and depoſeth that he did heare and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid anſwers, and ſubſcribe the ſame with his owne hand; and touching the ſtriking and wounding the Prieſt in S. Margarets Church in Weſtminſter upon Eaſter day laſt, this examinate ſaith, he was not there when the fact was done, but immediately after, he came to Church, and found ſir John hurt, and wounded in the head, hand, and arme, by the ſaid Flower, and the people in great heavineſſe by reaſon thereof. Alſo the people did report (as this examinate ſaith) that Flower did the deed, as the Prieſt had the chalice in his hand, miniſtring the ſacrament to the people.

WIlliam Jenings of Weſtminſter, being examined upon the anſwers of the ſaid William Flower, ſaith and depoſeth by vertue of his oath, that he did heare and ſee the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid anſwers, and ſubſcribe to the ſame with his own hand in yͤ Conſiſtory place: and further depoſeth, that he (upon Eaſter day laſt paſt) was preſent in the Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, where Flower ſtrake the ſaid ſir John Cheltam Prieſt, firſt upon the head, and afterward upon his arme two ſore ſtrokes, whereby the ſaid Prieſt is like to loſe his hand. Alſo this Jurate depoſed, that the ſaid ſir John Cheltam had a chalice with certain conſecrated hoſts therein (in his hand) which were ſprinkled with the bloud of the ſaid Prieſt, and after the ſaid Flower was apprehended by this examinate and others, they carried him immediately to the Gatehouſe in Weſtminſter.

John Bray one of the Churchwardens of the Pariſh Church of S. Margarets in Weſtminſter, ſworne and examined upon the ſaid anſwers, ſaith and depoſeth, that he did heare and ſée the ſaid Flower acknowledge and recognize the ſaid anſwers, and alſo ſubſcribe unto the ſame. And further depoſeth of Flowers ſtriking the Prieſt, in effect, as the reſt of the examinates do, and that this ſaid Jurate was preſent there at the déed doing.

After the depoſitions of theſe foreſaid witneſſes being taken, publiſhed, and denounced, the ſaid Biſhop ſpeaking to William Flower, asked him if he knew any matter or cauſe why his ſentence ſhould not be read, and he to be pronounced as an Heretike. Whereunto the Martyr of God anſwereth againe as followeth; I have nothing at all to ſay, for I have already ſaid unto you all that I have to ſay; and that I have ſaid I will not go from: and therefore do what you will, &c.

Sentence of condemnation and degradation pronounced againſt William Flower.

Which when he had ſpoken, the Biſhop procéeded to the ſentence, condemning and excommunicating him for an Heretike, and after pronounced him alſo to be degraded, and ſo committed him to the ſecular power. Upon the 24. day of the foreſaid moneth of Aprill, which was S. Marks Even, he was brought to the place of martyrdome, which was in Saint Margarets Churchyard at Weſtminſter, where the fact was committed: and there coming to the ſtake where he ſhould be burned, firſt he maketh his prayer to Almighty God, with a confeſſion of his Chriſtian faith, in manner as followeth.

A prayer and confeſſion of William Flower.

Flowers prayer.

OH eternall God, moſt mighty and mercifull Father, who haſt ſent down thy Sonne upon the earth, to ſave me and all mankinde, who aſcended up into heaven againe, and left his bloud upon the earth behinde him, for the redemption of our ſins, have mercy upon me, have mercy upon me, for thy deare Sonne our Saviour Ieſus Chriſts ſake, in whom I confeſſe only to be all ſalvation and juſtification, and that there is none other meane, nor way, nor holineſſe, in which or by which any man can be ſaved in this world. This is my faith, which I beſeech all men here to beare witneſſe of.

Then he ſaid the Lords prayer, and ſo made an end.

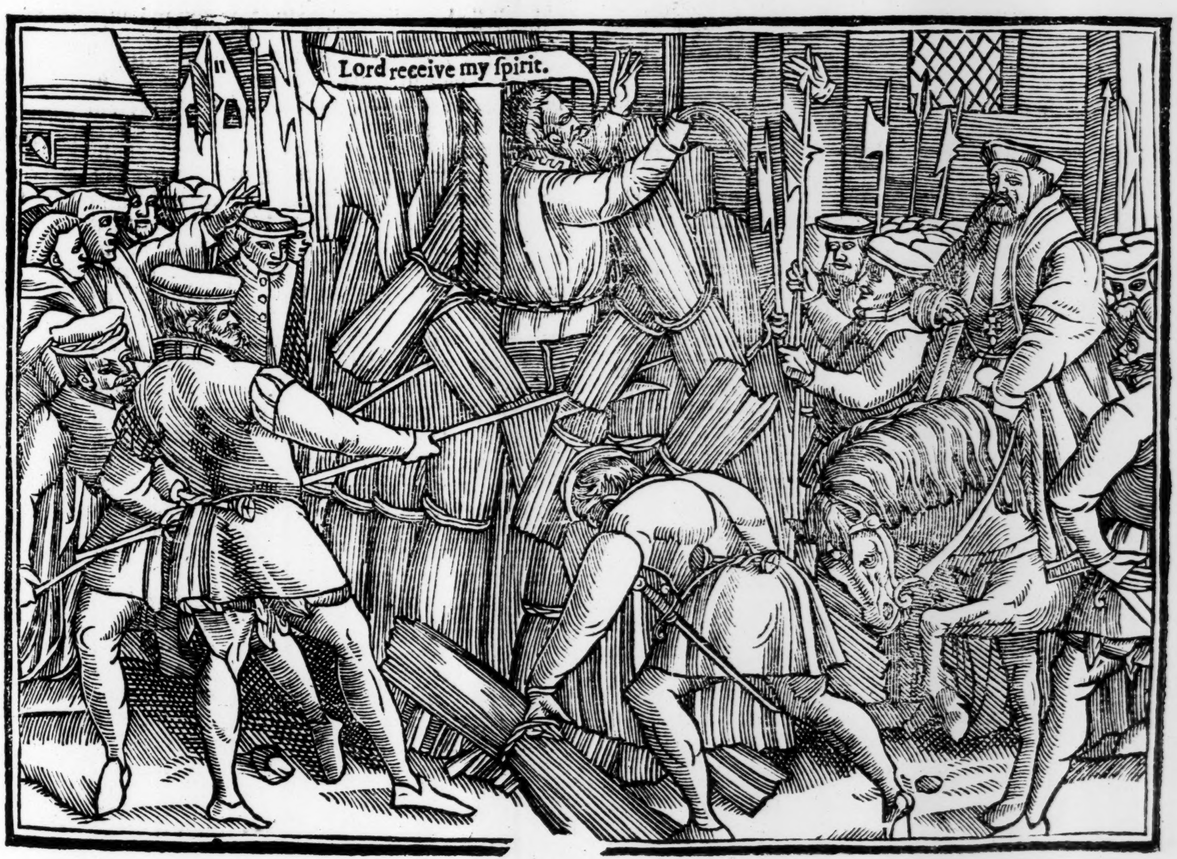
Talk between W. Flower and M. Cholmeley.

Then M. Cholmeley came to him, willing him to recant his hereſie, whereby he might do good to the people, or elſe he would be damned.

Flower anſwered as followeth: Sir, I beſéech you for Gods ſake be contented: for that I have ſaid, I have ſaid, and I have béene of this faith from the beginning; and I truſt to the living God he will give me his holy ſpirit to continue to the end. Then he deſired all the world to forgive him whom he had offended, as he forgave all the world.

This done, firſt his hand being held up againſt the ſtake, was ſtriken off, his left hand being ſtayed behinde him. At the which ſtriking off his hand, certaine that were preſent beholders of the matter, and purpoſely obſerving the ſame, credibly informed us, that he in no part of his body did once ſhrink at the ſtriking thereof, but once a little he ſtirred his ſhoulders.

The burning of William Flower at Weſtminſter, the 24. of Aprill, Anno 1555.



Lord receive my ſpirit.

And thus fire was ſet unto him, who burning therein, cried with a lowd voice; O the Sonne of God have mercy upon me, O the Sonne of God receive my ſoule, three times, and ſo his ſpeech being taken from him, he ſpake no more, lifting up notwithſtanding his ſtump with his other arme, as long as he could.

And thus indured this conſtant witneſſe and faithfull ſervant of God the extremity of the fire, being therein cruelly handled, by reaſon that to his burning little wood was brought, ſo that for lack of ſagots there not ſufficient to burne him, they were faine to ſtrike him down into the fire. Where he lying along (which was dolefull to behold) upon the ground, his nether part was conſumed in the fire, whileſt his upper part was cleane without the fire, his tongue in all mens ſight ſtill moving in his mouth

May 1555.

The third of May a letter was ſent to George Colt and Thomas Daniel, to make ſearch for, and apprehend John Bernard and John Walſh, who uſed to repaire to Sudbury, and carrying about with them the bones of Pigot that was burned, doe ſhew them to the people, perſwading them to be conſtant in his religion, and upon examination to commit them to further ordering, according to the lawes.

This day Stephen Appes was committed to the little eaſe in the Tower, there to remaine two or three dayes, untill further examination.

The 12. day M. Thomas Roſſe Preacher, was by the Councels letters delivered from the Tower to the Sheriffe of Northfolke, to be conveighed and delivered to the Biſhop of Norwich, and he either to reduce him to recant, or elſe proceed againſt him according to the law.

The 16. a letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, ſignifying what the LL. had done for Roſſe, and that order ſhould be given, according to his Lordſhips requeſt, for letters to the Biſhops: and for Appes, whom the Lieutenant of the Tower reporteth to be mad, his Lordſhip perceiving the ſame to be true, ſhould commit him to Bedlem, there to remaine untill their further order.

The 26. a letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, to conferre with the Biſhop of London, and the Juſtices of the Peace of that County, wherein they are to be executed, that are already condemned for religion, and upon agreement of places, to give order for their execution accordingly.

The 28. a letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, to cauſe ſpeedy preparation to be made of ſuch money as was appointed for ſuch perſons as ſhould carry the ioyfull tydings of Queene Maries good delivery of childe, to divers Princes: ſo as they be not compelled to ſtay when time ſhall come. The Embaſſadors were, to the Emperor the Lord Admirall, to the French King the Lord Fitzwater, to the King of Romans ſir Henry Sidney, to the King of Portingall Richard Shelley, whoſe free paſſage through France M. Doctor Wotton was willed to procure by letters the 24. of June.

The 29. was a letter directed to ſir Frances Inglefield to make ſearch for one John D. at London, and to apprehend him, and ſend him to the Councell, and to make ſearch for ſuch papers and books as he thinketh may touch the ſame D. or one Benger.

The burning and martyrdome of Iohn Cardmaker, and Iohn Warne Vpholſter, which ſuffered both together in Smithfield, Anno 1555.

May 30. John Cardmaker and John Warne, Martyrs.

Upon the 30. day of May ſuffered together in Smithfield John Cardmaker, otherwiſe called Taylor, Prebendary of the Church of Wels; and John Warne Upholſter, of the Pariſh of S. John in Walbrooke. Of whom it remaineth now particularly to entreat, beginning firſt with M. Cardmaker, who firſt was an obſervant Frier before the diſſolution of the Abbeyes: then after was a married Miniſter, and in K. Edwards time appointed to be a Reader in Pauls, where the Papiſts were ſo much agrieved with him for his doctrines ſake, that in his reading they cut and mangled his gowne with their knives. This Cardmaker being apprehended in the beginning of Queene Maries reigne, with M. Barlow Biſhop of Bathe, was brought to London, and laid in priſon in the Fleet, King Edwards lawes yet being in force. But after the Parliament was ended, in which the Pope was againe admitted as ſupreme head of the Church, and the Biſhops had alſo gotten power and authority, Ex officio, to exerciſe their tyranny, theſe two were brought before Wincheſter Chancellor, and others appointed by commiſſion (as before is mentioned) to examine the faith of ſuch as were then priſoners, and as unto others before, ſo now unto them the Chancellor offered the Queenes mercy, if they would agree, and be conformable, &c.

M. Cardmaker Reader in Pauls.

Cardmaker with M. Barlow apprehended and laid in the Fleet.

To this they both made ſuch an anſwer, as the Chancellor with his fellow Commiſſioners allowed them for Catholikes. Whether they of weakneſſe ſo anſwered, or he of ſubtilty would ſo underſtand their anſwer, that he might have ſome forged example of a ſhrinking brother to lay in the diſh of the reſt, which were to be examined, it may eaſily be perceived by this, that to all them which followed in examination, he obiected the example of Barlow and Cardmaker, commending their ſoberneſſe, diſcretion, and learning. But whatſoever their anſwer was, yet notwithſtanding Barlow was led againe to the Fleet, from whence he afterward being delivered, did by exile conſtantly beare witneſſe to the truth of Chriſts Goſpell. Cardmaker was conveighed to the Counter in Breadſtreet, the Biſhop of London procuring it to be publiſhed, that he ſhould ſhortly be delivered, after that he had ſubſcribed to tranſubſtantiation and certain other articles. To the ſame priſon where Cardmaker was, Laurence Saunders was brought (after the ſentence of excommunication and condemnation was pronounced againſt him) where theſe two priſoners had ſuch Chriſtian conference, that whatſoever the breath of the Biſhops bluſtred, and the tickle eares of the people too lightly beleeved, in the end they both ſhewed themſelves conſtant Confeſſors and worthy Martyrs of Chriſt: as of Laurence Saunders it is already written. After whoſe departure Cardmaker remained there priſoner, to be baited of the Papiſts, which would needs ſeeme to have a certaine hope that Cardmaker was become theirs. Continuall and great conference divers of them had with him, with reaſonings, perſwadings, threatnings, and all to none effect. To the end that their doings might appeare, he required them to put their reaſons in writing, and promiſed by writing to anſwer them.

Barlow and Cardmaker acceptable to Wincheſter as Catholikes.

M. Barlow exiled for the truth.

Conference betweene Laurence Saunders and John Cardmaker.

Doctor Martin, who bare alſo a part in thoſe pageants, took upon him to be the chiefe doer by writing, whoſe long unſavoury letters and ſimple reaſons for Tranſubſtantiation, and ſuch papiſticall traſh, this Cardmaker anſwered largely, learnedly, and ſubſtantially, confuting the ſame, opening the falſhood of his arguments, and delivering the ſentences of the Fathers (which Martin abuſed for his purpoſe) to their true underſtanding; which his anſwers I would had come to our hands. Thus conſtantly abode this man of God all the enemies doings, as he did alſo the death which he ſuffered in Smithfield in London: whereof ye ſhall heare more anon. But firſt we will ſurvey the matter and manner of his articles objected againſt him by B. Boner, with his anſwers annext to the ſame, as conſequently hereunder followeth.

Articles objected by Boner againſt Iohn Taylor, aliàs Cardmaker, with his anſwers unto the ſame.

May 24. Articles miniſtred againſt John Cardmaker by the biſhop of London.

John Cardmaker firſt an obſervant Frier.

FIrſt, I Edmund Biſhop of London, object againſt thee ſir John Taylor, aliàs Cardmaker, that thou waſt and art of the City and Dioceſſe of London, and ſo of the iuriſdiction of me Edmund Biſhop of London.

Item, that thou in times paſt diddeſt profeſſe the rule of S. Francis, and diddeſt by vow promiſe to keep poverty, chaſtity, and obedience, according to the rule of S. Francis.

Item, that thou in times paſt didſt receive all the orders of the Church then uſed: to wit, tam majores quàm minores.

John Cardmaker married.

Item, that thou after thy ſaid entry into religion and profeſſion and orders aforeſaid, didſt take to wife a widow, and with her hadſt carnall copulation, and didſt get of her a woman child, breaking thereby thy vow and order, and alſo the ordinance of the Church.

Item, that thou haſt beleeved and taught, and ſo doſt beleeve, that in the ſacrament of the Altar under the viſible ſignes there, that is to ſay, under the formes of bread and wine, there is really and truly the true and very naturall body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt.

The beliefe of the Popes Catholike Church.

Item, that the beliefe of the Catholike Church is, that in having the body and blood of Chriſt really and truly contained in the ſacrament of the Altar, is to have (by the omnipotent power of Almighty God) the body and blood of Chriſt there inviſibly and really preſent under the ſaid ſacrament, and not to make thereby a new God, or a new Chriſt, or a new body of Chriſt.

To ſpeak naturally of the naturall body of Chriſt, theſe two cannot ſtand together at one time, unleſſe we grant Chriſt to have two bodies.

Item, that it may ſtand well together, and ſo is the faith of the catholike Church; that the body of Chriſt is viſibly and truly aſcended into heaven, and there is in the viſible form of his humanity; and yet the ſame body in ſubſtance is inviſibly and truly contained in the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar.

“That Chriſt never willed, neither can the Scriptures beare it.

Item, that Chriſt at his laſt ſupper taking bread into his hands, bleſſing it, breaking it, giving it to his Apoſtles, and ſaying; Take, eat, this is my body; did inſtitute a ſacrament there, “willing that his body really and truly ſhould be contained in the ſaid ſacrament, no ſubſtance of bread and wine there remaining, but only the accidents thereof.

Anſwers of Cardmaker to the Articles aforeſaid.

John Cardmaker anſwereth to the articles.

TO the firſt article he anſwereth, and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part therof.

To the ſecond article he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that he, being under age, did profeſſe the ſaid order and religion, and afterward by the authority of King Henry the eighth, he was diſpenſed with for the ſame religion.

To the third he anſwereth, and confeſſeth the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

To the fourth he anſwereth and confeſſeth, the firſt part therof to be true: and to the ſecond part of the ſame article he anſwereth and ſaith, that in marriage he brake no vow, becauſe he was ſet at liberty to marry, both by the lawes of this Realme and alſo by the lawes and ordinances of the Church of the ſame.

To the fifth he anſwereth and confeſſeth, that he hath beleeved and taught, as it is contained in this article, but he doth not now ſo beleeve nor teach.

To the ſixth he anſwereth, that he doth not beleeve the ſame to be true in any part thereof.

To the ſeventh he anſwereth, that he doth not beleeve the ſame to be true in part thereof.

The firſt part of this article is true: the ſecond is falſe.

To the eighth he anſwereth and doth beleeve, videlicet, that it is true; that is to ſay, that Chriſt taking bread at his laſt Supper into his hands, bleſſing it, breaking it, giving it to his Diſciples, and ſaying; Take, eat, this is my body, did inſtitute a ſacrament there. And to the other part of his article, videlicet (willing that his body really and truly ſhould be contained in the ſaid ſacrament, no ſubſtance of bread and wine there remaining, but onely the accidents thereof) he anſwereth that he doth not beleeve the ſame to be true.

By me Iohn Cardmaker.

Maſter Cardmaker calling to minde afterwards the ready cavillings of the Papiſts, and thinking himſelf not to have fully and according to his true meaning anſwered the later part of the laſt eighth article, did the next day after the foreſaid anſwers exhibite unto the Biſhop in a ſchedule this hereafter following.

A more full anſwer to the ſecond part of the eighth article.

Where in my anſwer to your articles I deny the preſence of Chriſt in the ſacrament, I meane not his ſacramentall preſence, for that I confeſſe; but my deniall is of his carnall preſence in the ſame. But yet further, becauſe this word is oftentimes taken of the holy Fathers, not only for bread and wine, but alſo for the whole adminiſtration and receiving of the ſame, according to Chriſts inſtitution: ſo I ſay, that Chriſt is preſent ſpiritually to, and in all them which worthily receive the ſacrament; ſo that my deniall is ſtill of the reall, carnall, and corporall preſence in the ſacrament, and not of the ſacramentall nor ſpirituall preſence.

Sacramentall preſence in the ſacrament. Carnall preſence in the ſacrament denied.

This have I thought good to add to my former anſwer, becauſe no man ſhould miſunderſtand it.

By me Iohn Cardmaker.

Next to theſe articles of Maſter Cardmaker, I thought beſt to inferre the articles and anſwers likewiſe of John Warne his Martyrfellow, in manner as followeth.

Articles miniſtred againſt Iohn Warne Upholſter, of the Pariſh of S. Iohn in Walbrooke, with his anſwers to the ſame.

Articles againſt John Warne Upholſter in Walbrooke.

FIrſt, that thou John Warne, being of the age of 29. yeeres, and of the Pariſh of S. John of Walbrooke in London, haſt beleeved and doſt beleeve firmly and ſtedfaſtly, that in the ſacrament, commonly called the ſacrament of the altar, there is not the very true and naturall body of our Saviour Chriſt in ſubſtance, under the formes of bread and wine.

Againſt tranſubſtantiation.

Item, that thou haſt beleeved, and doſt beleeve, that after the words of conſecration ſpoken by the Prieſt, there is not (as the Church of England doth beleeve and teach) the body of Chriſt; but that there doth only remaine the ſubſtance of materiall bread, as it is before the conſecration, or ſpeaking of the words of conſecration, and that the ſaid bread is in no wiſe altered or changed.

Againſt the ſacrifice of the Maſſe.

Item, that thou haſt ſaid and doſt beleeve, that if the Catholike Church doe beleeve and teach, that there is in the Maſſe, now uſed in England, and in other places of Chriſtendome, a ſacrifice wherein there is a ſacrament containing the body and blood of Chriſt really and truly; then that beliefe and faith of the Church is naught, againſt Gods truth and the Scripture.

Hereſie for laughing at a Spaniel ſhorne on the head.

Item, that thou haſt ſaid, that where about a twelve moneth agone, and more, a great rough Water-ſpaniel of thine was ſhorne on the head, and had a crown like a Prieſt made in the ſame, thou didſt laugh at it and like it, though thou didſt it not thy ſelfe, nor kneweſt who did it.

Item, that thou neither this lent laſt paſt, nor at any time ſince the Queens Maieſties reigne, haſt come into the Church, or heard Maſſe, or been confeſſed, or received the ſacrament of the Altar; and haſt ſaid, that thou art not ſorry that thou haſt ſo done, but thou art glad, becauſe thou haſt not therewith defiled thy conſcience, which otherwiſe thou ſhouldeſt have done.

Upon all which articles John Warne being examined by the ſaid Boner, in preſence of divers witneſſes, the 23. of May, the yeere 1555. did confeſſe and beleeve the ſame, and ſubſcribe hereunto his name with his own hand.

By me Iohn Warne.

Another addition of articles

Alſo it was obiected againſt the ſaid John Warne, by the Biſhop aforeſaid, as followeth.

John Warne about the time of Anne Aſkew was condemned to be burned, and had his pardon

John Warne pardoned by King Henry the eighth.

Item, that thou John Warne waſt in time paſt here in the City of London, convented in the Guildhall for hereſie againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, according to the order of the lawes of this Realme of England in the time of King Henry the eighth, and when Alderman Barnes was Sheriffe, and the Thurſday after that Anne Aſkew was burnt in Smithfield, and thereupon thou waſt ſent as a priſoner to Newgate, to whom Edmund Biſhop of London did repaire with his Chaplaines, to inſtruct thee in the true faith of Chriſt, touching the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, and to bring thee from thy errour, which was, that in the ſacrament of the Altar there is not the body of Chriſt, nor any corporall preſence of Chriſts body and blood, under the formes of bread and wine; but that in the ſaid ſacrament there is only materiall bread and wine, without any ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood at all: and becauſe thou wouldſt not leave and forſake thy ſaid hereſie therein, but perſiſt and abide obſtinately and wilfully therein, thou wert according to the ſaid lawes condemned to death and to be burnt; and thereupon labour being made for thee to the King and other in the Court, thou hadſt a pardon of King Henry the eighth, and ſo thereby didſt ſave thy life.

John Warne denieth tranſubſtantiation.

Neverthèleſſe, in thy heart, conſcience, and minde, thou didſt both then, and alſo afore beleeve no otherwiſe than at this preſent thou doſt beleeve; that is to ſay, that in the ſacrament of the Altar there is neither yͤ very true body or blood of Chriſt, nor no other ſubſtance but the ſubſtance of materiall bread and wine, and to receive the ſaid materiall bread and wine, and to breake it, and to diſtribute it among the people, only is the true receiving of Chriſts body, and no otherwiſe: ſo that thy faith and belief is, that in the ſaid ſacrament there is no ſubſtance of Chriſts materiall body and blood: but all the thing that is there, is materiall bread, and the receiving thereof as afore; and that the ſubſtance of the naturall and true body of Chriſt, born of the Virgin Mary, is onely in heaven, and not in the ſacrament of the Altar. In which thine opinion thou haſt ever hitherto ſince continued, and ſo doſt continue at this preſent, thou confeſſing all this to be true, and in witneſſe thereof ſubſcribing thy name thereunto, as followeth.

By me Iohn Warne.

Anno 1555.

The plaine anſwer of John Warne to the articles.

John Warne being examined upon the foreſaid articles by the Biſhop before certaine witneſſes, whoſe names were John Boſwell, John Heywood, Robert Ravens, the 23. of May, did anſwer to the ſame, confeſſing and granting the articles and the contents thereof to be true, according as they were obiected in every part, ſubſcribing alſo the ſame with his hand. Such ſtrength and fortitude Gods holy ſpirit wrought in him, to ſtand ſtoutly and confidently to the defence of the ſincere doctrine of his Son.

Whereupon the Biſhop exhorting him with many words to leave his hereſies (as he called them) and to returne to the boſome of his mother the holy Church, commanded him to appeare againe the next day, being the 24. of the ſame moneth.

The ſecond ſeſſion againſt John Warne.

Who ſo doing (and anſwering as he did before) was willed to come thither againe at afternoon, and ſo he did: where and at what time he was earneſtly exhorted by the ſaid Biſhop to recant his opinions. To whom he anſwered, that he would not depart from his received profeſſion, unleſſe he were thereunto throughly perſwaded by the holy Scriptures.

The third ſeſſion. May 25.

Upon which anſwer he was willed to come againe the next day, being the 25. day of the ſame moneth, at one of the clock in the afternoone. At which day and houre the Biſhop examined him again upon all his former articles before obiected, to the which he moſt conſtantly did ſtick, with his further anſwer thereunto added: I am perſwaded (quoth he) that I am in the right opinion, and I ſee no cauſe to repent; for all filthineſſe and Idolatry is in the Church of Rome.

John Warne conſtant againſt the Biſhops perſwaſions.

Sentence given againſt John Warne

The Biſhop then ſeeing that notwithſtanding all his faire promiſes, and terrible threatnings (wherof he uſed ſtore) he could not any thing prevaile; finiſhed this examination with the definitive ſentence of condemnation pronounced againſt the ſaid John Warne, and ſo charged the Sheriffes of London with him, under whoſe cuſtody he remained in the priſon of Newgate, untill the 30. day of the ſame moneth of May.

May 30. Cardmaker & John Warne brought to execution.

Upon the which 30. of May, being the day appointed for their execution, John Cardmaker with the ſaid John Warne were brought by the Sheriffes to the place where they ſhould ſuffer. Who being come to the ſtake, firſt the Sheriffes called Cardmaker aſide, and talked with him ſecretly, ſo long, that in the meane time Warne had made his prayers, was chained to the ſtake, and had wood and reede ſet about him, ſo that nothing wanted but the firing; but ſtill abode Cardmaker talking with the Sheriffes.

John Warne tyed to the ſtake.

The people afraid of Cardmakers recanting.

The people which before had heard that Cardmaker would recant, and beholding this maner of doing, were in a marvellous dumpe and ſadneſſe, thinking indeed that Cardmaker ſhould now recant at the burning of Warne. At length Cardmaker departed from the Sheriffes, and came towards the ſtake, and (in his garments as he was) kneeled downe and made a long prayer in ſilence to himſelfe: yet the people confirmed themſelves in their fantaſie of recanting, ſeeing him in his garments, praying ſecretly, and no ſemblance of any burning.

John Cardmaker ſtandeth conſtantly to the fire. Cardmaker & Warne ioyne hands.

His prayers being ended, he roſe up, put off his clothes unto his ſhirt, went with bold courage to the ſtake, and kiſſed it ſweetly: hee tooke Warne by the hand, and comforted him heartily and ſo gave himſelfe to be alſo bound to the ſtake moſt gladly. The people ſeeing this ſo ſuddenly done, contrary to their fearfull expectation, as men delivered out of a great doubt, cried out for ioy (with ſo great a ſhout as hath not lightly been heard a greater) ſaying; God be praiſed, the Lord ſtrengthen thee Cardmaker, the Lord Jeſus receive thy ſpirit. And this continued while the executioner ecutioner put fire to them, and they both paſſed thorow the fire to the bleſſed reſt and peace among Gods holy Saints and Martyrs, to enioy the crowne of triumph and victory prepared for the elect ſouldiers and warriours of Chriſt Ieſus in his bleſſed Kingdome. To whom be glory and maieſty for ever. Amen.

The confeſſion of the faith of Iohn Warne Citizen of London, which he wrote the day before he was burned, the 30. day of May, Anno 1555.

I beleeve in God the Father Almighty, and maker of heaven and earth.

The confeſſion of Iohn Warn.

A Father, becauſe he is the Father of our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, who is the everlaſting word, whom before all worlds he hath begotten of himſelfe, which word was made fleſh, and therein alſo manifeſted to be his Sonne; in whom he hath adopted us to be his children, the inheritors of his Kingdome, and therefore he is our Father: An Almighty God, becauſe he hath of nothing created all things viſible and inviſible, both in heaven and in earth, even all creatures contained therein, and governeth them.

And in Ieſus Chriſt his onely Son our Lord.

The eternall word, perfect God with his Father, of equall power in all things, of the ſame ſubſtance, of like glory, by whom all things were made, and have life, and without whom nothing liveth: he was made alſo perfect man, and ſo being very God, and very man in one perſon, is the only Saviour, Redeemer, and Ranſomer of them which were loſt in Adam our forefather. He is the only meane of our deliverance, the hope of our health, the ſurety of our ſalvation.

Which was conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, born of the Virgin Mary.

According to the Fathers moſt mercifull promiſe, this eternall Son of God, forſaking the heavenly glory, humbled himſelfe to take fleſh of a Virgin, according to the Scriptures, uniting the ſubſtance of the Godhead to the ſubſtance of the manhood, which he took of the ſubſtance of that bleſſed Virgin Mary, in one perſon, to become therin the very Meſſiah, the annointed King and Prieſt, for ever appointed to pacifie the Fathers wrath, which was iuſtly gone out againſt us all for our ſin.

Suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and deſcended into hell.

He was arraigned before Pontius Pilate the Ruler of Jewry, and ſo uniuſtly accuſed of many crimes, that the Ruler iudged him innocent, and ſought meanes to deliver him; but contrary to knowne iuſtice, he did let goe Barrabbas which had deſerved death, and delivered Chriſt to be crucified, who deſerved no death: which doth declare unto us manifeſtly, that he ſuffered for our ſinnes, and was buffeted for our offences, as the Prophets do witneſſe, thereby to have it manifeſted to all men, that he is that Lamb of God that taketh away the ſins of the world. Therfore ſuffering for our ſins, he received and did beare our deſerved condemnation, the paines of death, the taſte of abiection, the very terror of hell, yeelding his ſpirit to his Father, his body to be buried in earth.

The third day he roſe again from death to life.

To make full and perfect the whole work of our redemption and iuſtification, the ſame crucified body which was laid in the grave, was raiſed up againe the third day from death, by the power of his Father, and glory of his Godhead: he became the firſt fruits of the reſurrection, and got the victory of death, that all by him might be raiſed up from death. Through whom all true penitent ſinners may now boldly come unto the Father, and have remiſſion of their ſins.

He aſcended into heaven, and ſitteth on the right hand of God the Father Almighty.

The triumphant victory over death.

After that in his death and reſurrection he had conquered ſin, death, and the divell, and had been converſant forty dayes in the earth being ſeen of the Apoſtles, and more than five hundred brethren at once, in the ſame body in which he wrought the work of our ſalvation, he aſcended into heaven with eternall triumph, for the victory over death, ſin, hell, leaving the paſſage open, by which all true beleevers may and ſhall enter into his Kingdome, where he now ſitteth at his fathers right hand, that is to ſay, in power and glory equall, in maieſty coeternall.

From thence he ſhall come to judge the quicke and the dead.

He ſhall appeare againe in great glory to receive his elect unto himſelfe, and to put his enemies under his feet, changing all living men in a moment, and raiſing up all that be dead, that all may be brought to his iudgement. In this ſhall he give each man according to his deeds. They which have followed him in regeneration, which have their ſins waſhed away in his blood, and are clothed with his righteouſneſſe, ſhall receive the everlaſting Kingdome, and reigne with him for ever; and they, which after the race of the corrupt generation of Adam have followed fleſh and blood, ſhall receive everlaſting damnation with the divell and his angels.

I beleeve in the Holy Ghoſt.

I doe beleeve that the Holy Ghoſt is God, the third perſon in Trinity, in unity of the Godhead equall with the Father and the Sonne, given through Chriſt to inhabit our ſpirits, by which we are made to feele and underſtand the great power, vertue, and loving kindneſſe of Chriſt our Lord. For he illumineth, quickneth, and certifieth our ſpirit, that by him we are ſealed up unto the day of redemption, by whom we are regenerate and made new creatures, ſo that by him and through him we do receive all the abundant goodneſſe promiſed us in Ieſus Chriſt.

This is an holy number of Adams poſterity, elected, gathered, waſhed, and purified by the blood of the Lambe from the beginning of the world, and is diſperſed through the ſame by the tyranny of Gog and Magog, that is to ſay, the Turk and his tyranny, and Antichriſt, otherwiſe named the Biſhop of Rome, and his angels, as this day alſo doth teach.

The communion of Saints.

Which moſt holy congregation (being as Paul teacheth, builded upon the foundation of the Apoſtles and Prophets, Chriſt being the head corner-ſtone) though it be by the tyranny of Satan and his miniſters perſecuted, ſome by impriſonment, ſome by death, and ſome by other afflictions and painfull torments; yet doth it remaine in one perfect unity, both in faith and fellowſhip: which unity is knit in an unſpeakable knot, aſwell of them which are departed from this mortall life, as of them which now be living, and hereafter ſhall be in the ſame, and ſo ſhall continue untill they all do meet in the Kingdome, where the head Ieſus Chriſt with all his holy members (of which number through Chriſt I aſſuredly beleeve that I am one) ſhall be fully complete, knit, and united together for evermore.

The forgiveneſſe of ſinnes.

Anno 1555.

Remiſſion only through Chriſt.

I do beleeve that my ſinnes, and all their ſins which do rightly beleeve the holy Scripture, are forgiven onely through that Ieſus Chriſt, of whom onely I doe profeſſe that I have my whole and full ſalvaton and redemption, which S. Paul ſaith, cometh not through our works and deſervings, but freely by grace, leſt any ſhould boaſt himſelf. Through the blood of his croſſe all things in heaven and earth are reconciled, and ſet at peace with the Father; without him no heavenly life given, nor ſin forgiven.

The reſurrection of the body.

Reſurrection.

I do beleeve, that by the ſame my Saviour Chriſt, I and all men ſhall riſe again from death; for he, as S. Paul ſaith, is riſen againe from the dead, and is become the firſt fruits of them which ſleepe. For by a man came death, and by a man cometh the reſurrection from death. This man is Chriſt, through the power of whoſe reſurrection I beleeve that we all ſhall riſe againe in theſe our bodies; the elect clothed with immortality to live with Chriſt for ever; the reprobate alſo ſhall riſe immortall to live with the divell and his angels in death everlaſting.

And the life everlaſting.

Through the ſame Ieſus, and by none other, I am ſure to have life everlaſting. He onely is the way and entrance into the Kingdome of heaven. For ſo God loved the world, that he did give his onely Sonne Ieſus Chriſt, to the end that ſo many as doe beleeve in him might have everlaſting life. The which I am ſure to poſſeſſe ſo ſoone as I am diſſolved, and departed out of this tabernacle, and in the laſt day ſhall both body and ſoule poſſeſſe the ſame for ever, to the which God grant all men to come.

Iohn 3. Life and ſalvation only by faith in Chriſt.

I beleeve, that the Sacraments, that is to ſay, of Baptiſme and of the Lords Supper, are ſeales of Gods moſt mercifull promiſes towards mankinde. In baptiſme, as by the outward creature of water I am waſhed from the filthineſſe which hangeth on my fleſh; ſo do I aſſuredly beleeve, that I am by Chriſts blood waſhed cleane from my ſinnes, through which I have ſure confidence of my certaine ſalvation. In the partaking of the Lords Supper, as I receive the ſubſtance of bread and wine (the nature of which is to ſtrengthen the body) ſo do I by faith receive the redemption wrought in Chriſts body broken on the Croſſe, life by his death, reſurrection by his reſurrection, and in ſumme, all that ever Chriſt in his body ſuffered for my ſalvation, to the ſtrengthening of my faith in the ſame. And I beleeve, that God hath appointed the eating and drinking of the creatures of bread and wine in his holy Supper according to his word, to move and to ſtirre up my minde to beleeve theſe articles above written.

Two ſacraments of the New Teſtament.

This is my faith; this do I beleeve; and I am content by Gods grace to confirme and ſeale the truth of the ſame with my blood.

By me Iohn Warne.

A Letter of Iohn Cardmaker to a certaine friend of his.

The peace of God be with you.

A letter of M. Cardmaker to a certain friend of his.

YOu ſhall right well perceive that I am not gone backe, as ſome men do report me, but as ready to give my life, as any of my brethren that are gone before me, although by a policie I have a little prolonged it, and that for the beſt, as already it appeareth unto me, and ſhall ſhortly appeare unto all. That day that I recant any point of doctrine, I ſhall ſuffer twenty kinds of death, the Lord being mine aſſiſtance, as I doubt not but he will. Commend me to my friend, and tell him no leſſe. This the Lord ſtrengthen you, me, and all his elect. My riches and poverty is as it was wont to be, and I have learned to reioyce in poverty as well as riches; for that I count now to be very riches. Thus fare ye well in Chriſt. Salute all my brethren in my name. I have conferred with ſome of my adverſaries, learned men, and I finde that they be but Sophiſts and ſhadowes.

A note concerning M. Cardmaker.

A note concerning the talk between Maſter Cardmaker, and Beard a Promoter.

MAſter Cardmaker being condemned, and in Newgate, one Beard a Promoter came to him two or three dayes before he was burned, and ſaid unto him; Sir, I am ſent unto you by the Councell, to know whether ye will recant or no?

Card. From which Councell are ye come? I thinke ye are not come, nor yet ſent from the Queens Councell, but rather from the Commiſſioners, unto whom (as I ſuppoſe) ye belong. And whereas ye would know, whether I will recant or no, thus I pray you report of me to thoſe whom ye ſaid ſent you. I know you are a Taylor by your occupation, and have endeavoured your ſelfe to be a cunning workman, and thereby to get your living: ſo I have been a Preacher theſe twenty yeeres, and ever ſince that God by his great mercy hath opened mine eyes to ſee his eternall truth, I have by his grace endeavoured my ſelf to call upon him, to give me the true underſtanding of his holy word, and I thanke him for his great mercy; I hope I have diſcharged my conſcience in the ſetting forth of the ſame, to that little talent that I have received.

Beard. Yea ſir, but what ſay you to the bleſſed ſacrament of the Altar?

Card. I ſay, and mark it well, that Chriſt the night before his bitter paſſion, ordained the holy and bleſſed Communion, and hath given commandement, that his death ſhould be preached before the receiving thereof, in remembrance of his body broken, and his precious blood ſhed for the forgiveneſſe of our ſinnes, to as many as faithfully beleeve and truſt in him.

The ſentence and iudgement of M. Cardmaker touching the ſacrament.

And furthermore, to conclude the matter briefly with him, he aſked of him, whether the ſacrament he ſpake of had a beginning or no? Whereunto when he had granted and affirmed the ſame to be, then M. Cardmaker againe thus inferred thereupon: If the ſacrament (ſaid he) as you confeſſe, have a beginning and an ending, then it cannot be God; for God had no beginning nor ending: and ſo willing him well to note the ſame, he departed from him.

The fifth day, M. Secretary Bourne, the Maſter of the Rolles, ſir Francis Englefield, ſir Richard Read, and Doctor Hughes, authoriſing them or two or three of them at the leaſt, to proceed to further examination of Benger, Cary, D. and Field, upon ſuch points as they ſhall gather out of their former confeſſions, touching their lewd and vaine practices of calculating or coniuring, preſently ſent unto them with the ſaid letters.

The ſeventh day there was another letter to ſir Iohn Tregonwell, willing him to ioyne in commiſſion with the ſaid Lord North, and others above named, about the examination of the ſaid parties and others, for coniuring and witchcraft.

And the 29. of Auguſt, Cary and D. were ſet at liberty upon bands for their good appearing untill Chriſtmas after.

The 12. day a letter was ſent to the Lord Treaſurer, to cauſe Writs to be made to the Sheriffe of Suſſex, for the burning and executing of Dirike a Brewer, at Lewes, and other two, the one at Stainings, the other at Chicheſter.

The 23. of Iune a letter was ſent to Boner, to examine a report given to the Councell of foure Pariſhes within the Soken of Eſſex, that ſhould ſtill uſe the Engliſh Service, and to puniſh the offenders, if any ſuch be.

The ſtory of Iohn Ardeley and Iohn Simſon of the Pariſh of Wigborow the great, in Eſſex.

The ſtory of Iohn Simſon & Iohn Ardeley, Martyrs.

WIth M. Cardmaker and Iohn Warne, upon the ſame day, and in the ſame company, and for the ſame cauſe was alſo condemned Iohn Ardeley, and Iohn Simſon, which was the 25. day of May. But before we come to the ſtory of them, firſt here is to be noted the copie of the King and Queenes letter, directed from the Court the ſame day, and ſent by a Poſt early in the morning to the Biſhop, in tenor and forme as followeth.

To the right reverend Father in God, our right truſty and welbeloved, the Biſhop of London.

The King and Queens letter to B. Boner.

RIght reverend Father in God, right truſty and welbeloved, we greet you well. And where of late wee addreſſed our letters to the Iuſtices of Peace within every of the Counties of this our Realme, whereby amongſt other inſtructions given them for the good order and quiet government of the Countrey round about them, they are willed to have a ſpeciall regard unto ſuch diſordered perſons as (forgetting their duties towards God and us) do leane to any erroneous and hereticall opinions, refuſing to ſhew themſelves conformable to the Catholike Religion of Chriſts Church; wherein if they cannot by good admonitions and faire means reforme them, they are willed to deliver them to the Ordinary, to be by him charitably travelled withall, and removed (if it may be) from their naughty opinions, or elſe if they continue obſtinate, to be ordered according to the Lawes provided in that behalfe: underſtanding now, to our no little marvell, that diverſe of the ſaid diſordered perſons, being by the Iuſtices of Peace for their contempt and obſtinacy, brought to the Ordinaries to be uſed as is aforeſaid, are either refuſed to be received at their hands, or if they be received, are neither ſo travelled with, as Chriſtian charity requireth, nor yet proceeded withall according to the order of Iuſtice, but are ſuffered to continue in their errors, to the diſhonour of Almighty God, and dangerous example of others; like as wee finde this matter very ſtrange, ſo we have thought convenient both to ſignifie our knowledge, and therewith alſo to admoniſh you to have in this behalfe ſuch regard henceforth to the office of a good Paſtor and Biſhop, as when any ſuch offenders ſhall be by the ſaid Officers or Iuſtices of Peace brought unto you, you to uſe your good wiſdome and diſcretion in procuring to remove them from their errours if it may be, or els in proceeding againſt them (if they ſhall continue obſtinate) according to the order of the lawes; ſo as through your good furtherance both Gods glory may be better advanced, and the Common-wealth more quietly governed. Yeoven under our ſignet, at our honour of Hampton Court, the 24. of May, the firſt and ſecond yeeres of our Reignes.

Q. Mary ſtirreth Boner to ſhed innocent blood.

This letter thus comming from the Court to the Biſhop, made him the more earneſt and haſty to the condemnation as well of others, as of theſe men, of whom now we have preſently to intreat, of Iohn Simſon I meane and Iohn

John Ardeley and John Simſon, both huſbandmen in the towne of Wigborough.

Ardely. Which both being of one countrey, and of one towne together, and of one trade, that is, being both huſbandmen in the towne of Wigborow in Eſſex, and alſo almoſt both of one age, ſave that Simſon was of the age of 34. the other of 30. were brought up both together by the under Sheriffe of Eſſex, to Boner Biſhop of London, upon the accuſation (as in that time it was called) of hereſie.

As touching the order and manner of their examinations before the Biſhop; as the articles miniſtred againſt them, were much like, ſo their anſwers againe unto the ſame were not much diſcrepant in manner and forme; as out of the Biſhops own regiſters here followeth expreſſed.

Articles objected againſt Iohn Simſon, and Iohn Ardeley, of the Pariſh of Wigborow the great in Eſſex, husbandmen, by Boner Biſhop of London, at Fulham, May 22. Anno 1555.

Articles miniſtred againſt John Simſon and John Ardeley.

1 First, that thou John Simſon (or John Ardeley) huſbandman, of the age of 34. yeeres or thereabout, waſt and art of the pariſh of great Wigborow, within the Dioceſſe of London, and thou haſt not beleeved, nor doſt beleeve, that there is here in earth one catholike and univerſall whole Church, which doth hold and beleeve all the faith and religion of Chriſt, and all the neceſſary articles and ſacraments of the ſame.

2 Item, that thou haſt not beleeved, nor doſt beleeve, that thou art neceſſarily bounden, under the paine of damnation of thy ſoule, to give full faith and credence unto the ſaid catholike and univerſall Church, and to the religion of the ſame, in all neceſſary points of the ſaid faith and religion, without wavering or doubting in the ſaid faith or religion, or in any part thereof.

The Church of Rome, Italy, Spaine, and other forraigne countries in Europe.

3 Item, that thou haſt not beleeved, nor doſt beleeve, that that faith and religion, which both the Church of Rome, Italy, Spaine, England, France, Ireland, Scotland, and all other Churches in Europe, being true members and parts of the ſaid catholike and univerſall Church, doe beleeve and teach, is both agreeing with the ſaid catholike and univerſall Church, and the faith and religion of Chriſt, and alſo is the very true faith and religion which all Chriſtian people ought to beleeve, obſerve, follow, and keepe: but contrariwiſe thou haſt beleeved, and doſt beleeve, that that faith and religion, which the ſaid Church of Rome, and all the other Churches aforeſaid have heretofore beleeved, and do now beleeve, is falſe, erroneous, and naught, and in no wiſe ought to be beleeved, obſerved, kept, and followed of any Chriſtian man.

The ſubſtance of Chriſts body under formes of bread and wine.

4 Item, that albeit it be true, that in the ſacrament of the Altar there is in ſubſtance the very body and blood of Chriſt under the formes of bread and wine, and albeit that it be ſo beleeved, taught, and preached undoubtedly in the ſaid Church of Rome, and all other the Churches aforeſaid, yet thou haſt not ſo beleeved, nor doſt ſo beleeve; but contrariwiſe thou haſt and doſt beleeve firmly, and ſtedfaſtly, that there is not in the ſaid ſacrament of the Altar, under the ſaid formes of bread and wine, the very ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood, but that there is onely the ſubſtance of materiall and common bread and wine, with the formes thereof; and that the ſaid materiall and common bread and wine are only the ſignes and tokens of Chriſts body and blood, and by faith to be received, only for a remembrance of Chriſts paſſion and death, without any ſuch ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood at all.

Anno 1555.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

5 Item, that thou haſt beleeved and taught, and thou haſt openly ſpoken, and to thy power maintained and defended, and ſo doſt beleeve, thinke, maintaine, and defend, that the very true receiving and eating of Chriſts body and blood, is only to take materiall and common bread, and to break it, and to diſtribute it amongſt the people, remembring thereby the paſſion and death of Chriſt onely.

The Maſſe abominable.

6 Item, that thou haſt likewiſe beleeved, taught and ſpoken, that the Maſſe now uſed in this Realme of England, and other the Churches aforeſaid, is abominable and naught, and full of Idolatry, and is of the ordinance of the Pope, and not of the inſtitution of Chriſt, and hath no goodneſſe in it, ſaving the gloria in excelſis, and the Epiſtle and the Goſpell, and that therefore thou haſt not, nor wilt not come to be preſent at the Maſſe, nor receive the ſacrament of the Altar, or any other ſacrament of the Church, as they are now uſed in this Realme of England, and other the Churches aforeſaid.

7 Item, that thou haſt in times paſt beleeved preciſely, and obſtinately affirmed and ſaid, and ſo doſt now beleeve and thinke, that auricular confeſſion is not needfull to be made unto the Prieſt, but it is a thing ſuperfluous and vaine, and ought onely to be made to God, and to none other perſon: and likewiſe thou haſt condemned as ſuperfluous, vaine, and unprofitable, all the ceremonies of the Church and the Service of the ſame, and haſt ſaid, that no Service in the Church ought to be ſaid but in the Engliſh tongue, and if it be otherwiſe ſaid, it is unlawfull and naught.

The anſwers of Iohn Simſon, and alſo of Iohn Ardeley, to the foreſaid Articles.

Their anſwers to the articles.

To the firſt, they beleeve, that here in earth there is one catholike and univerſall holy Church, which doth hold and beleeve as is contained in the firſt article, and that this Church is diſperſed and ſcattered abroad throughout the whole world.

To the ſecond, they beleeve, that they be bound to give faith and credence unto it, as is contained in the ſecond article.

To the third, as concerning the faith and religion of the Church of Rome, of Italy, Spaine, France, Ireland, Scotland, and other Churches in Europe, they ſay, they have nothing to doe with that faith and religion: but as concerning the faith and religion of England, that if the ſaid Church of England be ruled and governed by ẏ word of life, then the Church of England hath the faith and religion of the catholike Church, and not otherwiſe; and do ſay alſo, that if the Church of England were ruled by the word of life, it would not go about to condemne them and others of this hereſie.

Tranſubſtantiation denied.

To the fourth they anſwer, that in the ſacrament, commonly called the ſacrament of the Altar, there is very bread and very wine, not altered nor changed in ſubſtance in any wiſe, and that he that receiveth the ſaid bread and wine, doth ſpiritually and by faith only receive the body and blood of Chriſt, but not the very naturall body and blood of Chriſt in ſubſtance under the formes of bread and wine.

To the fifth they ſay, they have anſwered, anſwering to the ſaid fourth article, and yet neverthelesse they ſay, that they have beleeved, and do beleeve, that in the ſacrament of the Altar there is not the very ſubſtance of Chriſts body and blood, but only the ſubſtance of the naturall bread and wine.

To the ſixth they ſay, that they beleeve, that ẏ

Maſſe

Anno 1555

The Maſſe detected.

Maſſe is of the Pope, and not of Chriſt; and therfore it is not good, nor having in it any goodneſſe, ſaving the Gloria in excelſis, the Epiſtle and Goſpell, the Creed, and the Pater noſter; and for this cauſe they ſay they have not, nor will not come and heare Maſſe.

To the ſeventh John Ardeley anſwereth and ſaith, that he beleeveth the contents of the ſame to be true; but John Simſon doth anſwer, that he is not as yet fully reſolved with himſelf, what anſwer to make thereunto; and further, that as touching the common and daily Service ſaid and uſed in the Church, he ſaith, that he never ſaid, that Service in the Church ought to be ſaid but in the Engliſh tongue, nor yet he never ſaid, that if it be otherwiſe ſaid and uſed than in Engliſh, it is unlawfull and naught.

Iohn Ardeley and Iohn Simſon.

Another appearance of Simſon and John Ardeley before the biſhop.

Thus theſe articles being to them objected, and their anſwers made unto the ſame, as before, the Biſhop, according to the old trade of his Conſiſtory Court, reſpited them to the afternoone, bidding them to make their appearance the ſaid day and place, betweene the houres of two and three. At what time the ſaid Biſhop repeating againe the ſaid articles unto them, and beginning with John Ardeley did urge and ſolicitate him, according to his manner of words, to recant.

The words of John Ardeley to Boner.

To whom John Ardeley againe conſtantly ſtanding to his profeſſed religion, gave anſwer in words, as followeth; My Lord (quoth he) neither you, nor any other of your religion, is of the catholike Church; for you be of a falſe faith: and I doubt not but you ſhall be deceived at length, beare as good a face as ye can. Ye will ſhed the innocent blood, and you have killed many, and yet go about to kill more, &c.

And added further, ſaying; If every haire of my head were a man, I would ſuffer death in the opinion and faith that I am now in. Theſe with many other words he ſpake. Then the Biſhop yet demanding if he would relinquiſh his erroneous opinions (as he called them) and be reduced againe to the unity of the Church, he anſwered, as followeth; No, God foreſhield that I ſhould ſo do; for then I ſhould loſe my ſoule.

John Ardeley & Jo. Simſon condemned.

After this, the ſaid Biſhop asking John Ardeley (after his formall manner) if he knew any cauſe why he ſhould not have ſentence condemnatorie againſt him, ſo read the condemnation, as he alſo did againſt John Simſon, ſtanding likewiſe in the ſame cauſe and conſtancy with John Ardeley: which was done the 25. day of May, and ſo were they both committed to the ſecular power, that is, to the hands of the Sheriffs, to be conveighed to the place where they ſhould be executed. But before I come to their execution, here is not to be paſſed a thing not unworthy the looking upon, which hapned in the cloſing up the examination of theſe two innocent Martyrs of God, which is this.

☞ A note of the ſudden feare of Boner.

At the time of the examination of this Simſon & John Ardeley aforeſaid, there was aſſembled ſuch a great multitude of people, that becauſe the Conſiſtory was not able to hold them, they were faine to ſtand in the Church, neere about the ſaid Conſiſtory, waiting to ſee the priſoners when they ſhould depart. It hapned in the meane time, that the Biſhop being ſet in a heat with the ſtout and bold anſwers of the ſaid two priſoners (eſpecially of John Simſon) burſt out in his loud and angry voice, and ſaid; Have him away, have him away.

Now the people in the Church hearing theſe words, and thinking (becauſe the day was farre ſpent) that the priſoners had their judgement, they being deſirous to ſee the priſoners had to Newgate, ſevered themſelves, one running one way, another another way, which cauſed ſuch a noiſe in the Church, that they in the Conſiſtory were all amazed, and marvelled what it ſhould meane: wherefore the Biſhop alſo being ſomwhat affraid of this ſudden ſtirre, asked what there was to do. The ſtanders by anſwering, ſaid, that there was like to be ſome tumult: for they were together by the eares.

The ridiculous feare of Boner & his Doctors.

When the Biſhop heard this, by and by his heart was in his heeles, and leaving his ſeat, he with the reſt of the Court betooke them to their legs, haſtening with all ſpeed poſſible to recover the doore that went into the Biſhops houſe: but the reſt being ſomewhat lighter of foot than my Lord, did ſooner recover the doore, and thronging haſtily to get in, kept the Biſhop ſtill out, and cried; Save my Lord, ſave my Lord, but meaning yet firſt to ſave themſelves if any danger ſhould come, whereby they gave the ſtanders by good matter to laugh at; reſembling in ſome part a ſpectacle not much unlike to the old ſtagers at Oxford, worſe feared than hurt, when as the Church there was noiſed to be ſet on fire, whereof ye may read before. But of this matter enough.

John Simſon & Joh. Ardeley ſent into Eſſex to be executed. The martyrdome of Simſon & Ardeley. June 10.

Now John Simſon and John Ardeley being delivered (as is aforeſaid) to the Sheriffes, were ſhortly after ſent downe from London to Eſſex, where both they in one day (which was about the tenth day of June) were put to death, albeit in ſeverall places; for John Simſon ſuffered at Rochford, John Ardeley the ſame day was had to Railey, where he finiſhed his martyrdome moſt quietly in the quarrell of Chriſts Goſpell.

A note of Iohn Ardeley.

For the better conſideration of the rigorous cruelty of theſe catholike dayes, this is furthermore not unworthy of all men to be noted and knowne to all poſterity, concerning the examinations of this Ardeley and his company; how that they being brought before the Commiſſioners, were by them greatly charged of ſtubbornneſſe and vain-glory. Unto whom they anſwered in defence of their own ſimplicity, that they were content willingly to yeeld to the Queen all their goods and lands, ſo that they might be ſuffered to live under her, in keeping their conſcience free from all idolatry and papiſticall religion. Yet this would not be granted, although they had offered all to their heart blood; ſo greedy and ſo thirſty be theſe perſecutors of Chriſtian blood. The Lord give them repentance if it be his will, and keep from them the juſt reward of ſuch cruell dealing. Amen.

The ridiculous handling and proceeding of Biſhop Boner and his mates againſt Iohn Tooly, firſt ſuſpected and condemned after his death, and then digged out of his grave, and given to the ſecular power, and ſo burned for an heretike.

The ſtory of John Tooly.

About the ſame time of the burning of theſe two aforeſaid, in the beginning of the ſaid moneth of June, fell out a ſolemne proceſſe, and much ado was made about the popes ſpiritualty againſt John Tooly in a caſe of hereſie. The ſtory is this. There was about the time that the Spaniards began firſt to keep a ſtir in England, one John Tooly a citizen & Poulter in London, who conſpired with certain other of his ſociety, to rob a Spaniard at S. James: and although the deed were heinous and wicked of it ſelf, yet was it aggravated & made greater than it was by other being committed againſt ſuch a perſon, and againſt ſuch a country, which both the Queen and her whole Court did highly favour. The robbery being knowne, and brought into iudgement, this Toly was found guilty, and iudged to be hanged, whereas notwithſtanding in this Realme there are many moe thefts committed than theeves executed.

John Tooly died a true chriſtian man. The chriſtian confeſſion of Tooly.

The covetouſneſſe of the Pope.

The foreſaid Toly being led to the gallowes (which ſtood faſt by Charing Croſſe) a little before he died, ſtanding upon the Cart, read a certaine prayer in a printed booke, and two other prayers written in two ſeverall papers: who then having the halter about his necke, deſired the people there preſent to pray for him, and to beare him witneſſe that he died a true Chriſtian man, and that he truſted to be ſaved onely by the merits of Chriſts paſſion, and ſhedding of his precious blood, and not by any Maſſes, or Trentals, Images, or Saints, which were (as he ſaid) meere idolatry and ſuperſtition, and deviſed by the Biſhop of Rome: and as the ſame Toly, and two other his fellowes which were there hanged with him, did ſteale and rob for covetouſneſſe, ſo the Biſhop of Rome did ſell his Maſſes and Trentals, with ſuch other paltry, for covetouſneſſe, and there being in a great anger (as appeared) againſt the Biſhop of Rome, ſpake with a loud voice theſe words following; From the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, and all his deteſtable enormities; From falſe doctrine and hereſie, and from the contempt of thy word and commandement, Good Lord deliver us.

Ex Regiſtro.

And then adding further to the ſame, he ſpake unto the people; All you that be true Chriſtian men, ſay with me, Amen. And immediately thereupon 300. perſons and more, to the iudgement and eſtimation of thoſe that were there preſent, anſwered and ſaid, Amen, three times together at the leaſt.

After this it hapned, that when Toly had read the Bill the firſt time, it fell from him, and a certaine young man (who was thought to bee a Prentice) ſtouped downe, and tooke up the Bill, and climbed up by the Cart, and delivered it unto Toly again, which hee againe did read to the people. That done he delivered unto one of the Marſhals Officers the booke aforeſaid, and willed him to deliver it unto one Hankes, ſaying, that it was his booke. Furthermore, he delivered one of the prayers written in a paper to one Robert Bromeley Sergeant, which deſired to have it of him. Upon the top of which Bill was written a line, containing theſe words; Beware of Antichriſt, and ſubſcribed underneath; Per me Thomam Harold, priſoner in the Marſhalſea, enemy to Antichriſt. For the Bill aforeſaid Robert Bromeley was brought afterward coram nobis, and was faine to aske pardon of the Biſhop, and to deteſt all the words of Toly, and glad ſo to eſcape.

Thus while Toly had made his prayers, as is abovesaid, to be delivered from and popes tyranny, by the ſame praier he fell into great tyranny. For ſo ſoon as the brute of this fact came unto the eares of the Prieſts and Mitred Prelates, they were not a little mad thereat, thinking it not tolerable that ſo great a reproach ſhould bee done againſt the holy Father. Calling therefore for a councell together, as though it had been a matter of great importance. Tolies talk at his death was debated among themſelves.

A councell called againſt Tooly.

Cardinall Poole a great doer in burning dead mens bones.

At the laſt (after much Pro and Contra) they all conſented to thoſe mens iudgements, which thought it meet that the violating of the Popes Holines ſhould be revenged with fire and fagot. And I doe eaſily believe that Cardinall Poole was no ſmall doer in this ſentence: for as Winchester and Boner did alwaies thirſt after the blood of the living, ſo Pooles lightning was for the moſt part kindled againſt the dead; and he reſerved this charge onely to himſelfe, I know not for what purpoſe, except peradventure being loth to be ſo cruell as the other, he thought neverthelesse by this meanes to diſcharge his duty towards the Pope. By the ſame Cardinals like lightning and fiery fiſt the bones of Martin Bucer, and Paulus Phagius, which had lien almoſt two yeeres in their graves, were taken up and burned at Cambridge, as Tolies carkaſſe was here at London. And beſides this, becauſe he would ſhew ſome token of his diligence in both Univerſities, he cauſed Peter Martyrs wife, a woman of worthy memory, to be digged out of the Churchyard, and to be buried on the dunghill. Of theſe two prodigious acts ye ſhall heare more hereafter. But now to our purpoſe of Toly, which having ended his prayer, was hanged and put into his grave, out of which he was digged againe, by the commandement of the Biſhops, and becauſe he was ſo bold to derogate the authority of the Biſhop of Rome, at the time of his death, it pleaſed them to iudge and condemne him as an heretike upon the commandement of the Councels letter, as here appeareth.

Anno 1555.

Martin Bucer, Paulus Phagius, Peter Martyrs wife, & John Tooly, burned for heretikes after their death.

A Letter ſent unto Boner Biſhop of London, from the Councell.

The Councels letter to biſhop Boner concerning Tooly.

After our very hearty commendations to your Lordſhip, underſtanding that of late amongſt others that have ſuffered about London for their offences, one lewd perſon that was condemned for felony, died very obſtinately, profeſſing at the time of his death ſundry hereticall and erroneous opinions; like as we think it not convenient that ſuch a matter ſhould be overpaſſed without ſome example to the world, ſo we thought good to pray your Lordſhip to cauſe further inquiry to be made thereof, and thereupon to proceed to the making out of ſuch proceſſe, as by the Eccleſiaſticall lawes is provided in that behalfe. And ſo we bid your Lordſhip heartily well to fare. From Hampton Court, the 28. of Aprill, 1555.

Your Lordſhips loving friends,

Anon after a Citation was ſet up upon Pauls Church doore under the Biſhop of Londons great ſeale; the tenor whereof here enſueth.

The Writ or Mandate of Boner Biſhop of London, ſet up at Charing Croſſe, on Pauls Church doore, and at S. Martins in the field, for the citing and further inquiring out of the caſe of Iohn Tooly.

A citation ſet up by Boner, and that in Latin, commanding his kin and kinsfolke to ſay for him what they could, before the ſentence given, or elſe to hold their peace for ever.

Edmund by the ſufferance of God, Biſhop of London, to all and ſingular Parſons, Vicars, Curates, and others, Clerkes and learned men, being within our Dioceſſe of London, and ſpecially unto Richard Clonie, our ſworne Sumner, greeting, ſalutation, and benediction. Forſomuch as it is come to our hearing by common fame, and the declaration of ſundry credible perſons, that one John Toly late Citizen and Poulter of London, the ſonne of perdition and iniquity, coming to the profundity of malice, in the ſelfe ſame time in the which he ſhould goe to hanging, according to the lawes of the Realme, for the great theft lately by him committed, at which time chiefly he ſhould have cared for the wealth of his ſoule, and to have died in the unity of the catholike Church, did utter divers and ſundry

Anno 1555.

ſundry damnable, blaſphemous and hereticall opinions and errors, utterly contrary and repugnant to the verity of the Catholike faith and unity of the ſame, and did exhort, ſtir up, and encourage the people, there ſtanding in great multitude, to hold and defend the ſame errors and opinions: And moreover, certain of the people there ſtanding, as it did appeare, affected with errors and hereſies, as fautors and defenders of the ſaid John, did confirm and give expreſſe conſent to the foreſaid words, propoſitions, and affirmations; which thing we do utter with ſorrow and bitterneſſe of heart.

Note how Boner here pretendeth conſcience in proſecuting this matter, when only he was commanded unto it by the Councels letters.

Wee therefore the foreſaid Edmund and Biſhop aboveſaid, not being able, nor daring to paſſe over in ſilence, nor wincke at the foreſaid hainous act, leſt by our negligence and ſlacknes the blood of them might be required at our hands at the moſt terrible day of judgement, deſiring to be certified and informed whether the premiſſes declared unto us, be of the truth, and leſt that any ſcabbed ſheepe, lurking amongſt the ſimple flocke of our Lord, do infect them with peſtiferous hereſie: to you therfore we ſtraightly charg and command that you cite, or cauſe to be cited all and ſingular, having or knowing the truth of the premiſſes, by ſetting up this Citation upon the Church door of S. Martins in the field, being within our Dioceſſe of London, and alſo upon the Cathedrall Church doore of Saint Pauls in London, leaving there the copie hereof, or by other meanes or waies, the beſt you can, that this citation and monition may come to their knowledge.

All which and ſingular by the tenour of theſe preſents we cite and admoniſh that they appear, and every one of them do appeare before us our vicar generall, or commiſſary, whatſoever hee be in that behalfe, in our Cathedrall Church of S. Paul in London, in the Conſiſtory place, upon Thurſday the ſecond day of May now next enſuing, betwixt the houres of nine and ten of the clocke in the forenoone the ſame day, to beare witneſſe of the truth in this behalfe, and to depoſe and declare faithfully the truth that they know or have heard of the premiſſes, and moreover to do and receive what law and reaſon doth require.

The wife, children and kindred of John Tooly, cited.

Further wee commit unto you as before, and ſtraightly enjoyning you do command, that yee will generally cite the wife of the ſaid Tooly that is dead, and his children, and his kindred by Father and Mother, his friends and his familiars in eſpeciall, and all other and every of them, if there be any perhaps that deſire to defend and purge the remembrance of the perſon in the premiſſes, that yee admoniſh them after the manner and form aforeſaid, whom we likewiſe by the tenor of theſe preſents, do in ſuch ſort cite and moniſh that they appear all, and that every one of them do appear (under paine to bee compelled to keep ſilence for ever hereafter in this behalfe) before us, or our Vicar generall in ſpirituall matters, or ſuch our Commiſſary, at the day, houre, and place aforeſaid, to defend the good name and remembrance of him that is dead, and to ſay, alledge and propoſe in due form of Law, a cauſe reaſonable, if they have any or can tell of any, why the ſaid John Tooly, that is dead, ought not to be determined, and declared for ſuch an heretike and excommunicate perſon, and his remembrance condemned, in the deteſting and condemning of ſo hainous a deed and crime, and his body or carkaſſe to lack Church buriall, as a rotten member cut off from the Church, and the ſame to be committed to the arme and power ſecular, and they compelled hereafter for ever to hold their peace.

The carkaſſe of Tooly cut off from Chriſtian buriall.

And furthermore, to do, receive, and to ſuffer as law and reaſon wil, and as the quality of ſuch matter, and the nature of themſelves doe conſtrain and require; and moreover, that you cite and moniſh, after the manner aforeſaid, all and every of the receivers, fautors, and creditors of the ſaid John Tooly that is dead, eſpecially if any of them do incline and give conſent to thoſe wicked and deteſtable affirmations, propoſitions, and rehearſals aforeſaid, that on this ſide the ſaid Thurſday they returne and ſubmit themſelves unto us, and to the lap of the mother holy Church: which thing if they doe, wee truſting upon the mercy of Almighty God, doe promiſe that wee will receive them being penetent for ſuch their errors and faults, with thanks, benignity, mercy, and favor, to the comfort and health of their owne ſoules, and in that behalf ſave their honeſties to the uttermoſt of our power; otherwiſe, if they will not provide thus to come of their own accord, but to abide the ordinary proceſſe of the Law, let thoſe men know that we will puniſh more ſeverely this offence, according to the uttermoſt of the Law, and as farre as the Law will beare it; and what ye ſhall do in the premiſſes, let him among you, which ſhall execute this our preſent Mandate, certifie us, or our Vicar generall in ſpirituall matters, either by his own perſon, or by his letters patents, together with theſe authentically ſealed.

The biſhop layeth his bait to catch whom he may trouble.

Dated at London under our ſeal, the laſt day of April. 1555. and of our tranſlation the 16.

Tooly ſuſpended and excommunicated.

When the time of this citation was expired, and this Tooly being cited did not appeare: next in order of Law came the ſuſpenſion (whereas one ſuſpenſion had beene enough for him) and after that commeth the excommunication, that is, that no man ſhould eat and drink with him, or if any met him by the way, he ſhould not bid him good morrow, and beſides that, he ſhould bee excluded from the communion of the Church. Theſe things being prepared in ſuch maner, as in ſuch caſes full wiſely they uſe to do, at length one ſtood out for the nonce, that made anſwer to certaine articles, rehearſed in judgement openly, and that in the behalfe of the dead man. But when the poore dead man could neither ſpeak for himſelf, nor did (as they ſaid) ſufficiently anſwer them by the other, to avoid the name of an heretike: firſt witneſſes were provided againſt him, whoſe names were Henry Clark Eſquire, Thomas Way Keeper of the Marſhalſey, Philip Andrew Undermarſhall, William Holingworth Fiſhmonger, William Gellard, William Walton Chandeler, Richard Longman Merchanttaylor, Philip Britten, John Burton Brewer Thomas Smith Sergeant. Then he was for an heretike condemned, and ſo committed to the ſecular power, namely to the Sheriffs of London, which with like diligence went about to execute their charge. Therfore receiving the man being ſuſpended, excommunicated, condemned as an heretike, and beſides that, dead, they laid him on the fire to be burned, namely, ad perpetuam rei memoriam, for a continuall remembrance thereof. This was done the fourth day of June.

Witneſſe againſt John Tooly.

Tooly given to the ſecular power.

Here followeth the hiſtory and martyrdome of the worthy ſervant of Chriſt, Thomas Haukes Gentleman, with his examinations and anſwers had with B. Boner, recorded and penned with his own hand.

The ſtory of M. Thomas Haukes Martyr.

IMmediately after the ſtory of Doctor Taylor, mention before was made of ſix men brought and convented before Biſhop Boner upon the eighth

8. day of February. The names of which martyrs were Steven Knight, W. Pigot, Thomas Tomkins, J. Laurence, W. Hunter. In which number was alſo Tho. Haukes, and condemned likewiſe with them the 9. day of the foreſaid moneth of February. But becauſe his execution did not ſo ſhortly follow with theirs, but was prolonged to this preſent 10. day of the moneth of June, wherewith we are now in hand, it followeth therefore now conſequently to enter tractation thereof, firſt, beginning briefly with his godly converſation and inſtitution of life, then ſhewing of his troubles, alſo of his examinations and conflicts with the biſhop & other adverſaries, according as the order of his ſtory doth require.

The life and converſation of Tho. Haukes.

As touching therefore his education and order of life, firſt hee was of the Countrie of Eſſex, borne of an honeſt ſtock, in calling and profeſſion a courtier, brought up daintily from his childhood, and like a Gentleman. Beſides that, he was of ſuch comlines and ſtature, ſo wel endued with excellent qualities, that he might ſeem on every ſide a man (as it were) made for the purpoſe But his gentle behaviour toward other, and eſpecially his fervent ſtudie and ſingular love unto true religion and godlineſſe did ſurmount all the reſt. Wherein as God did ſingularly adorn him: even ſo he, being ſuch a valiant Martyr of God, may ſeeme to nobilitate the whole company of other holy Martyrs, and as a bright ſtar to make the Church of God and his truth, of themſelves bright and cleare, more gloriouſly to ſhine by his example.

The victory of Martyrs, is the triumph of Chriſt. Ambroſe.

For if the conqueſts of Martyrs are the triumphs of Chriſt (as S. Ambroſe doth notably and truly write) undoubtedly Chriſt in few men hath either conquered more notably, or triumphed more gloriouſly, than in this yong man: he ſtood ſo wiſely in his cauſe, ſo godly in his life, and ſo conſtantly in his death.

Tho. Haukes firſt in ſervice with the Earle of Oxford.

But to the declaration of the matter, firſt this Haukes following the guiſe of the Court, as hee grew in yeares, entred ſervice with the Lord of Oxford, where he remained a good ſpace, being there right well eſteemed and loved of all the houſhold, ſo long as Edward the ſixth lived. But he dying, all things began to go backward, religion to decay, godlineſſe not only to waxe cold, but alſo to be in danger every where, and chiefly in the houſes of good men. Haukes miſliking the ſtate of things, and eſpecially in ſuch mens houſes, rather than he would change the profeſſion of true godlineſſe, which he had taſted, thought to change the place; and ſo, forſaking the Noblemans houſe, departed thence to his own home, where more freely he might give himſelfe to God and uſe his own conſcience.

Haukes compelled to leave the Earle of Oxfords houſe

But what place in this world ſhall a man find ſo ſecret for himſelf, whither the old wicked Serpent cannot creepe, whereby hee may have ſome matter to overthrow the quietneſſe of the godly? Now in the mean ſeaſon (as it happened) Hauks keeping his houſe at home, had borne unto him a young ſon, whoſe baptiſme was deferred to the third weeke, for that he would not ſuffer him to be baptized after the papiſticall maner: which thing the adverſaries not able to ſuffer, laying hands upon him, did bring him to the earle of Oxford, there to be reaſoned with, as not ſound in Religion, in that hee ſeemed to contemn the ſacraments of the Church.

Haukes child three weekes unchriſtened.

Haukes brought before the Earle.

The Earl either intending not to trouble himſelfe in ſuch matters, or elſe ſeeing himſelf not able to weigh with him in ſuch caſes of religion, ſent him up to London with a Meſſenger, and letters, and ſo, willing to cleer his own hands, put him in yͤ hands of Boner B. of London; the contents of which his letter ſent to Boner, be theſe.

Haukes ſent up by the Earle to Biſhop Boner

A letter of the Earle of Oxford to Boner.

The Earles letter to Boner

Moſt reverend Father in God, be it known unto you, that I have ſent you one Thomas Haukes, dwelling in the Countie of Eſſex, who hath a childe that hath remained unchriſtened more than three weekes; who, being upon the ſame examined, hath denied to have it baptized, as it is now uſed in the Church, whereupon I have ſent him to your good Lordſhip, to uſe as ye think beſt, by your good diſcretion.

When the Biſhop had peruſed this letter, and afterward reade it to M. Haukes, he hearing the ſame, thought with himſelf that he ſhould not be very well uſed, ſeeing he was put to his diſcretion. Then wrote the Biſhop a letter again to him that ſent the priſoner, with many great thanks for his diligence in ſetting forth the Queenes proceedings. Then began the Biſhop to enter communication with M. Haukes, firſt aſking, what ſhall move him to leave his childe unchriſtened ſo long? To whom M. Haukes anſwered thus again as followeth.

Private talk or conference betweene maſter Haukes and B. Boner.

Haukes. Becauſe we bee bound to doe nothing contrary to the word of God.

Boner. Why, baptiſme is commanded by the word of God.

Haukes. His inſtitution therein I do not deny.

Boner. What deny ye then?

Haukes. I deny all things invented and deviſed by man.

Boner. What things be thoſe that bee deviſed by man, that ye be ſo offended withall?

Haukes. Your Oyle, Creame, Salt, Spittle, Candle, and conjuring of water &c.

Mans invention added to Baptiſme. The forefathers.

Boner. Will ye deny that which all the whole world, & your father hath been contented withal?

Haukes. What my father and all the whole world hath done, I have nothing to do withal: but what God hath commanded me to doe, to that ſtand I.

Boner. The Catholike Church hath taught it.

The Catholike Church.

Haukes. What is the Catholike Church?

Boner. It is the faithfull congregation, whereſoever it be diſperſed throwout the whole world

Haukes. Who is the head thereof?

Boner. Chriſt is the head thereof.

Haukes. Are wee taught in Chriſt, or in the Church now?

Boner. Have ye not read in the eighth of John, where he ſaid, he would ſend his comforter which ſhould teach you all things?

Hauks. I grant you it is ſo, that he would ſend his comforter, but to what end? Forſooth to this end, that he ſhould lead you into all truth and verity, and that is not to teach a new doctrine.

Boner. A ſir, ye are a right Scripture man. For yee will have nothing but the Scripture. There is a great number of your countrey-men of your opinion. Do you know one Knight and Pygot?

Haukes. Knight I know, but Pygot I doe not know.

Boner. I thought yee were acquainted with him: it ſeemeth ſo by your judgement. What Preachers doe ye know in Eſſex Haukes. I know none.

Boner. Do ye not know one Baget there?

Haukes. Yes forſooth, I know him.

Boner. What manner of man is he?

Haukes. An honeſt man ſo far as I know.

Boner. Do you know him if yee ſee him?

Haukes. Yea that I do. Then ſaid he to one of his ſervants, Go call me Baget hither. And then he ſaid to me; Ye ſeem to be a very proud man and a ſtubborn. He that brought me up ſtood all this while by.

Anno 1555

Haukes. What ſhould move your Lordſhip ſo to ſay?

Boner looked to be curtiſed.

Boner. Becauſe I ſee in a man that came with you much humility and lowlineſſe.

Hauks. It ſeemeth your Lordſhip ſpeaketh that to me, becauſe I make no courteſie to you: and with that came Baget. Then the Biſhop ſaid to Baget: How ſay ye Sir, know ye this man?

Baget brought to the ſight of Tho. Haukes

Baget. Yea forſooth my Lord; with that Baget and I ſhook hands. Then ſaid the Biſhop to Baget, Sir, this man hath a childe which hath lyen three weekes unchriſtened (as I have letters to ſhew) who refuſeth to have it baptiſed, as it is now uſed in the Church: how ſay you thereto?

Baget. Forſooth my Lord I ſay nothing thereto (with low courteſie to the hard ground.)

Boner. Say you nothing thereto? I will make you tell me whether it be laudable, and to be frequented and uſed in the Church or not.

Baget. I beſeech your Lordſhip to pardon me, he is old enough, let him anſwer for himſelfe.

Boner chafeth at Bagets anſwer.

Boner. Ah Sir knave, are yee at that point with me? Goe call me the Porter, ſaid hee, to one of his men, Thou ſhalt ſit in the ſtockes, and have nothing but bread and water. I perceive I have kept you too well. Have I made thus much of you, and have I you at this point? Then came the Biſhops man, and ſaid; The Porter is gone to London: Then ſaid the Biſhop to Baget; Come with me, and he went away with him, and commanded me away, and bade one of his Gentlemen to talke with me (who was one of his own teaching) who deſired amongſt other things to know of me, with whom I was acquainted in Eſſex, and what men they were that were my teachers.

Boner taketh Baget with him aſide to coniure him.

Haukes. When I ſee your Commiſſion, I will make you anſwer. And then immediately came the Biſhop again: but ere he came, his man and I had much talke. Then the Biſhop ſate down under a vine in his Orchard, and called Baget to him, whom he carried away, and brought again, and called me alſo, and ſaid to Baget: How ſay ye now ſir unto Baptiſme? Say whether it bee to be frequented and uſed in the Church, as it is now, or no?

Baget taught to ſay after Boner.

Baget. Forſooth my Lord, I ſay it is good.

Boner. I befoole your heart, could ye not have ſaid ſo before? Yee have wounded this mans conſcience. Then the Biſhop turned to me, and ſaid; How ſay ye now ſir, this man is turned and converted.

Tho. Haukes builded his faith upon no man.

Haukes. I build my faith neither upon this man, neither upon you, but only upon Chriſt Ieſus, who (as Paul ſaith) is the founder and author of all mens faith.

Boner. I perceive ye are a ſtubborne fellow. I muſt be glad to worke another way with you, to win you.

Tho. Haukes forbidden to talke in the biſhops houſe.

Haukes. Whatſoever ye do, I am ready to ſuffer it: for I am in your hands to abide it.

Boner. Well ye are ſo, Come on your waies, yee ſhall goe in, and I will uſe you Chriſtianlike: You ſhall have meat and drink, ſuch as I have in my houſe: but in any wiſe talke not.

Haukes. I purpoſe to talke nothing but the word of God and truth.

Boner. I will have no hereſie talked on in my houſe.

Haukes. Why is the truth become hereſie? God hath commanded that we ſhould have none other talk in our houſe, in our bed, at our meat, and by the way, but all truth.

Boner. If yee will have my favor, be ruled by my counſell.

Haukes. Then I truſt you will grant me my requeſt.

Boner. What is that?

Haukes. That your Doctors and Servants give me none occaſion: for if they doe, I will ſurely utter my conſcience. Then commanded he his men to take in Baget, and let not Haukes and him talk together. And ſo thus we departed, and went to dinner, and I dined at the Stewards table.

Tho. Haukes and Baget ſeparated aſunder.

After dinner, his Chaplaines and his men began to talke with me. But amongſt all other, there was one Darbiſhire principall of Broadgates in Oxford, and the Biſhops kinſman, who ſaid to me, that I was too curious: for ye will have (ſaid he) nothing but your little pretty Gods book.

Talk between Darbiſhire and Tho. Haukes.

Haukes. And is it not ſufficient for my ſalvation? Yes (ſaid he) it is ſufficient for our ſalvation, but not for our inſtruction.

Haukes. God ſend me the ſalvation, and you the inſtruction. And as we thus reaſoned, came the Biſhop, who ſaid unto me; I gave you a commandement that you ſhould not talke.

Salvation. Inſtruction.

Haukes. And I deſired you that your Doctors and Servants ſhould give mee none occaſion. Then went we into his Orchard again, he and his Doctors and I.

Boner. Would not ye be contented to have, that your child ſhould bee chriſtened after the Book that was ſet out by King Edward?

Talk between M. Haukes and Boner. Baptiſme after K. Edwards book.

Haukes. Yes, with a good will: it is a thing that I deſire.

Boner. I thought ſo: yee would have the ſame thing. The principall is in the name of the father, the ſon, and of the holy Ghoſt, and in neceſſitie it may ſerve.

Haukes. Chriſt did uſe it without any ſuch neceſſity: and yet we lack the chiefeſt point.

Boner. What is that?

Haukes. Goe teach all Nations, baptizing them, &c.

Boner no Preacher.

Boner. Thou ſpeakeſt that becauſe I am no Preacher.

Haukes. I ſpeake the Text: I do not meane you. Then ſpake all the Doctors and his men that were with him: he ſpeaketh it of you my Lord (with a great noiſe that they made.)

Boner. Will ye be content to tarry here, and your childe ſhall bee baptized, and you ſhall not know of it, ſo that you will agree to it?

Haukes. If I would ſo have done, I needed not to have come to you: for I had the ſame counſell given before.

Boner. You ſeeme to be a luſtie young man; you will not give your head for the waſhing; you will ſtand in the defence of it for the honor of your Country. Do ye think that the Queen and I cannot command it to be done in ſpite of your teeth?

M. Hauks will not conſent to have his child chriſtened after the popiſh order.

Haukes. What the Queene and you can do, I will not ſtand in it: but ye get my conſent never the ſooner.

Boner. Well, you are a ſtubborne young man: I perceive I muſt work another way with you.

Haukes. Yee are in the hands of God, and ſo am I.

Boner. Whatſoever you think, I would not have you ſpeak ſuch words unto me. And ſo we departed untill evenſong time: and ere evenſong was begun, my Lord called for mee to come to him into the Chappell, and ſaid; Haukes, thou art a proper young man, and God hath done his part unto thee; I would be glad to doe thee good. Thou knoweſt that I am thy Paſtor, and one that ſhould anſwer for thee. If I would not teach thee well, I ſhould anſwer for thy ſoule.

Haukes. That I have ſaid, I will ſtand to it, God willing: there is no way to remove it.

Boner. Nay nay Haukes, thou ſhalt not be ſo wilfull

Anno 1555

wilfull. Remember Chriſt bade two go into his Vineyard, the one ſaid he would, and went not, the other ſaid he would not, and went Haukes. The laſt went.

Boner entreth talke of the ſacrament.

Boner. Doe thou likewiſe, and I will talke friendly with thee; how ſayeſt thou? It is in the ſixth of S. John; I am the bread of life : and the bread that I will give is my fleſh, which I will give for the life of the world. And whoſoever eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood, hath everlaſting life. My fleſh is very meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed. And he that eateth my fleſh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. Do ye believe this?

Haukes. Yea, I muſt needs believe the Scriptures.

Boner. Why? then I truſt that you be ſound in the bleſſed Sacrament.

Haukes. I beſeech your Lordſhip to feele my conſcience no farther then in that, that I was accuſed in unto you.

Boner. Well, well, let us go unto evenſong.

Haukes. With that I turned my back to goe out of the Chappell.

Tho. Haukes refuſeth to heare Boners Evenſong.

Boner. Why, will you not tarry evenſong?

Haukes. No forſooth.

Boner. And why?

Haukes. For I will not.

Boner. And why will you not?

Haukes. For becauſe I have no edifying thereby, for I underſtand no Latine.

Boner. Why? you may pray by your ſelfe. What bookes have ye?

Haukes. I have the new Teſtament, the bookes of Salomon, and the Pſalter.

Boner. Why I pray you, tarry here, and pray you on your Pſalter.

Haukes. I will not pray in this place, nor in any ſuch. Then ſaid one of his Chaplains; let him go my Lord, and he ſhall be no partaker with us in our prayers.

Haukes. I think my ſelfe beſt at eaſe when I am fartheſt from you. And ſo the Biſhop went to Evenſong, and I came downe and walked betweene the Hall and the Chappel in the Court, and tarried there till Evenſong was done, and within an houre after that Evenſong was done, the Biſhop ſent for me into his Chamber where he lay himſelf, and when I came, there was hee, and three of his Chaplaines.

Tho. Haukes called for again by Boner

Boner. Yee know of the talke that was betweene you and mee, as concerning the Sacrament. You would not have your conſcience ſought any farther, than in that ye were accuſed of.

Haukes. I thought you would not be both mine accuſer and iudge.

Boner. Well, yee ſhall anſwer mee to the ſacrament of the altar, the ſacrament of Baptiſm, the ſacrament of Penance, and the ſacrament of Matrimony, Haukes. There is none of theſe, but I dare ſpeak my conſcience in them.

Boner. The ſacrament of the altar ye ſeem to be ſound in.

Tho. Haukes knoweth no ſacrament of the altar.

Haukes. In the ſacrament of the altar? why ſir, I do not know it.

Boner. Well, we will make you to know it, & believe in it too, ere ever we have done with you.

Haukes. No, that ſhall ye never do.

Boner. Yes, a Fagot will make you doe it.

Haukes. No, no, a point for your fagot. What God thinketh meet to be done, that ſhall ye doe, and more ye ſhall not do.

The matter and ſubſtance of the ſacrament

Boner. Do ye not believe that there remaineth in the bleſſed ſacrament of the altar, after the words of conſecration be ſpoken, no more bread, but the very body and blood of Chriſt? and at that word hee put off his cap.

Haukes. I doe believe as Chriſt hath taught mee.

Boner. Why? did not Chriſt ſay, Take, eate, this is my body?

Haukes. Chriſt ſaid ſo: but therefore it followeth not, that the ſacrament of the altar is ſo as you teach, neither did Chriſt ever teach it ſo to be Boner. Why? the Catholike Church taught it ſo, and they were of Chriſts Church.

Haukes. How prove you it? The Apoſtles never taught it ſo. Read the Acts, the ſecond, and the twenty. Neither Peter nor Paul ever taught it, neither inſtituted it ſo.

Boner. Ah ſir, yee will have no more than the Scripture teacheth, but even as Chriſt hath left it bare.

Haukes. He that teacheth me any otherwiſe, I will not believe him.

Boner. Why, then ye muſt eat a Lamb, if yee will have but Chriſts inſtitution only.

Touching the neceſſary points of doctrine and ſacraments, only the word is to be followed.

Haukes. Nay, that is not ſo: before that Chriſt did inſtitute the Sacrament, that ceremony ceaſed, and then began the Sacrament.

Boner. Alas, you know not how it began, neither of the inſtitution thereof.

Haukes. Then I would be glad to learne.

Boner. Marry, we will teach you: but you are ſo ſtubborn that ye will not learne.

Haukes. Except ye learne me by the word of God, I will never credit you, nor believe you: and thus wee concluded. Then the Biſhop and his Chaplaines laughed and ſaid: Jeſu, Jeſu, what a ſtubbornneſſe and arrogantneſſe is this? and this was in his chamber where he lay. Then ſaid the Biſhop to me, goe ye down and drinke, for it is faſting day: it is Midſommer Even, but I think ye love neither faſting nor praying.

A falſe conceived opinion of Boner againſt the Proteſtants.

Faſting and praying no man denyeth.

Hauks. I will never deny faſting neither praying, ſo that it be done as it ought to be done, and without hypocriſie or vain glory.

Boner. I like you the better for that: and ſo we left for that night.

The next day the Biſhop went to London: for Fecknam was made Deane that day, and I tarried ſtill at Fulham.

Then did the Biſhops men deſire me to come to Maſſe, but I did utterly refuſe it, anſwering them as I did their Maſter.

Boner returneth from London.

That night the Biſhop came home to Fulham again.

Talke betweene Harpsfield and Thomas Haukes.

Talk between Tho. Haukes and Harpsfield

Then upon the Munday morning very early, the Biſhop did call for me. There was with him Harpsfield Archdeacon of London, to whom the Biſhop ſaid; this is the man that I told you of, who would not have his child chriſtened, nor will have any ceremonies.

Harpsfield. Chriſt uſed ceremonies. Did he not take clay from the ground, and took ſpittle, and made the blind man to ſee?

But Chriſt never made any ordinance or cuſtome of that ceremony.

Haukes. I wot well that, but Chriſt did never uſe it in Baptiſme. If ye will needs have it, put it to the uſe that Chriſt put it unto.

The ſtate of children dying without baptiſme.

Harpsfield. Admit your childe die unchriſtened: what a heavie caſe ſtand you in?

Haukes I admit that if it do, what then?

Harpſ. Marry then are ye damned, and your child both.

Haukes. Iudge you no farther than ye may by the Scriptures,

Harpſ. Do ye not know that your child is born in originall ſinne?

Haukes. Yes that I doe.

Harpſ. How is originall ſin waſhed away?

Haukes

Anno 1555.

Haukes. By true faith & belief in Chriſt Jeſus.

Harpſ. How can your child being an infant believe?

Haukes. The deliverance of it from ſin ſtandeth in the faith of his parents.

Harpſ. How prove you that?

Haukes. By S. Paul, in the 7. and the firſt to the Corinthians, ſaying, The unbelieving man is ſanctified by the believing woman, and the unbelieving woman is ſanctified by the believing man, or elſe were your children unclean.

The believing parents ſanctifie the child.

Harpſ. I will prove that they whom thou putteſt thy truſt in, will be againſt thee in this opinion.

Haukes. Who be thoſe?

Harpſ. Your great learned men in Oxford.

Haukes. If they do it by the Scriptures, I will believe them.

Boner. Recant, recant: do ye not know that Chriſt ſaid, Except ye be baptiſed ye cannot be ſaved?

Chriſtianity ſtandeth not in outward ceremonies.

Haukes. Doth Chriſtianity ſtand in outward ceremonies, or no?

Boner. Partly it doth: what ſay you to that?

Haukes. I ſay as S. Peter ſaith, Not the waſhing of water purgeth the filthines of the fleſh, but a good conſcience conſenting unto God.

Harpſ. Beware of pride, Brother, beware of pride.

Sirach. 10.

Haukes. It is written, Pride ſerveth not for men, nor yet for the ſons of men.

Boner commeth in with his Maſſe. Maſſe profitable for nothing.

Boner. Let us make an end here. How ſay you to the Maſſe, Sirra?

Haukes. I ſay it is deteſtable, abominable, and profitable for nothing.

Boner. What nothing profitable in it? what ſay you to the Epiſtle and Goſpel?

Haukes. It is good, if it be uſed as Chriſt left it to be uſed.

Boner. Well, I am glad that ye ſomewhat recant: recant all, recant all.

Haukes. I have recanted nothing, nor will do.

Boner. How ſay you to Confiteor?

Confiteor in the Maſſe, a thing deteſtable.

Haukes. I ſay it is abominable and deteſtable, yea, and a blaſphemy againſt God and his Son Chriſt, to call upon any, to truſt to any, or to pray to any, ſave only to Chriſt Jeſus.

Boners ſimilitude to prove praying to Saints. We ought not to believe in Saints. Ergo, wee ought not to call upon them

Boner. To truſt to any, we bid you not: but to call upon them, and to pray to them, we bid you. Do ye not know when ye come into the Court ye cannot ſpeake with the King and the Queen, unleſſe ye call to ſome of the privie chamber that are next to the King and Queene?

Haukes. They that liſt receive your doctrine. You teach me that I ſhould not believe nor truſt in any, but to call on them: and S. Paul ſaith, How ſhould I call upon him, on whom I believe not?

Praying for the dead.

Boner. Will you have no body to pray for you when you be dead?

Haukes. No ſurely, except you can prove it by the Scriptures. Then the Biſhop pointed unto Harpsfield, and ſaid unto me; Is it not well done to deſire this man to pray for me?

Haukes. Yes ſurely, ſo long as we live, prayer of the righteous man is available: but this mans prayers, you being dead, profiteth nothing at all.

Boner. Will ye grant the prayer of the righteous man to prevail?

Haukes. I grant it doth for the living, but not for the dead.

Boner. Not for the dead?

Pſal. 49.

Haukes. No forſooth, for David ſaith, No man can deliver his brother from death, nor make agreement unto God for him: for it coſt more to redeem their ſoules, ſo that yee muſt let that alone for ever.

Ezek. 14.

Alſo Ezekiel ſaith, Though Noah, Daniel, or Iob dwelt amongſt them, yet can they in their righteouſneſſe exceed no farther than themſelvs. Then the Biſhop ſaid to Harpsfield, Sir, ye ſee this man hath no need of our Lady, neither of any of the bleſſed Saints. Well, I will trouble you no longer; I did call you hoping that you ſhould do ſome good on him, but it will not be. And he ſaid to me, Sir, It is time to begin with you; wee will rid you away, and then we ſhall have one heretike leſſe.

Boner when he cannot overcome by doctrine, goeth about to oppreſſe by authority.

Harpſ. What bookes have you?

Haukes. The new Teſtament, Salomons books, and the Pſalter.

Harpſ. Will you read any other books?

Haukes. Yea, if you will give me ſuch bookes as I will require.

Harpſ. What books do you require?

Haukes. Latimers books, my Lord of Canterburies booke, Bradfords Sermons, Ridleyes bookes.

Boner. Away, away, he will have no bookes but ſuch as maintain his hereſies: and ſo they departed, for Harpsfield was booted to ride unto Oxford, and I went to the Porters lodge again.

The next dayes talke.

The next days talk. This biſhops name was Bird, biſhop ſometime of Cheſter, and Suffragane before of Coventry, of whom read before.

The next day came thither an old biſhop, who had a pearle in his eye, and he brought with him to my Lord a diſh of apples, and a bottle of wine. For he had loſt his living, becauſe he had a wife. Then the Biſhop called me againe into the Orchyard, and ſaid to the old Biſhop: this young man hath a childe, and will not have it chriſtened.

Haukes. I deny not Baptiſme.

B. Boner reproved for his anger.

Boner. Thou art a fool, thou canſt not tell what thou wouldeſt have, and that he ſpake with much anger.

Haukes. A Biſhop muſt be blameleſſe or faultleſſe, ſober, diſcreet, no chider, nor given to anger.

Boner. Thou judgeſt me to be angry: no by my faith am I not, and ſtroke himſelfe upon the breaſt.

Then ſaid the old biſhop, Alas good young man, you muſt be taught by the Church, and by your ancients, and do as your forefathers have done before you.

Boner. No, no, he will have nothing but the Scriptures, and God wot hee doth not underſtand them. Hee will have no ceremonies in the Church, no not one. What ſay you to holy water?

Haukes. I ſay to it, as to the reſt, and to all that be of his making that made them.

Boner. Why, the Scriptures do allow it.

Haukes. Where prove you that?

See how Boner proveth holy water by the Scripture. Elizeus put ſalt in the water, not to waſh away ſin, but only to make the water ſweet.

Boner. In the book of Kings, where Elizeus threw ſalt into the water.

Haukes. Yee ſay truth, it is written in the fourth booke of the Kings, the ſecond chapter; the children of the Prophets came to Elizeus, ſaying The dwelling of the City is pleaſant, but the waters be corrupted. This was the cauſe that Elizeus threw ſalt into the water, and it became ſweet and good: and ſo when our waters bee corrupted, if ye can by putting in of ſalt make them ſweet, clear and wholeſome, we will the better believe your ceremonies.

Boner. How ſay you to holy bread?

Haukes. Even as I ſaid to the other. What Scripture have you to defend it?

Boner proveth holy bread by the five loaves and three fiſhes

Boner. Have yee not read where Chriſt fed five thouſand men with five loaves, and three fiſhes.

Haukes. Will ye make that holy bread? There

Chriſt dealt fiſh with his holy bread.

Boner. Looke I pray you how captious this man is.

Haukes. Chriſt did not this miracle, or other, becauſe we ſhould do the like miracle, but becauſe we ſhould believe and credit his doctrine therby.

Boner. We believe no doctrine, but that which is wrought by miracles.

Mark, 16.

Haukes. No forſooth, for Chriſt ſaith, These tokens ſhall follow them that believe in me: they ſhall ſpeak with new tongues, they ſhall caſt out Divels, and if they drink any deadly poiſon, it ſhall not hurt them.

How converted Chriſtians do ſpeake with tongues.

Boner. With what new tongues do ye ſpeake?

Haukes. Forſooth, where before that I came to the knowledge of Gods word, I was a foule blaſphemer and filthy talker, ſince I came to the knowledge thereof, I have lauded God, praiſed God, and given thanks unto God, even with the ſame tongue; and is not this a new tongue?

Boner. How do you caſt out Divils?

Haukes. Chriſt did caſt them out by his word, and hee hath left the ſame word, that whoſoever doth credit and believe it, ſhall caſt out divels.

Boner. Did you ever drink any deadly poyſon?

Haukes. Yea forſooth that I have; for I have drunken of the peſtilent traditions and ceremonies of the Biſhop of Rome.

Boner. Now you ſhew your ſelfe to be a right heretike.

Haukes. I pray you, what is hereſie?

B. Boner an heretike by his own deſinition

Boner. All things that are contrary to Gods word.

Haukes. If I ſtand in any thing contrary hereto, then am I worthy to be ſo called.

Boner. Thou art one, and thou ſhalt be burned, if thou ſtand and continue in this opinion. Ye thinke we are afraid to put one of you to death: yes, yes, there is a brotherhood of you, but I will break it; I warrant you.

The Papiſts doe beſides Gods book in burning men for their faith.

Haukes. Where prove you that Chriſt or his Apoſtles did kill any man for his faith?

Boner. Did not Paul excommunicate?

Haukes. Yes my Lord, but there is a great difference betweene excommunicating and burning Boner. Have ye not read of the man and the woman in the Acts of the Apoſtles, whom Peter deſtroyed.

Haukes. Yes forſooth, I have read of one Ananias, and Sapphira his wife, which were deſtroyed for lying againſt the holy Ghoſt, which ſerveth nothing to your purpoſe.

Boner. Well you will grant one yet.

Hauk. Wel, if you will have us to grant you be of God, then ſhew mercy, for that God requireth.

This biſhop here forgetteth his leſſon, Benedicite perſequentibus vos.

Boner. We will ſhew ſuch mercy unto you, as ye ſhewed unto us: for my benefice or biſhoprick was taken away from me, ſo that I had not one penny to live upon.

Haukes. I pray you my Lord, what do ye give him now that was in the biſhopricke or benefice before that ye came againe to it? whereunto he anſwered me never a word: for he turned his back unto me, and talked with other men, ſaying that he was very ſorry for me, but he truſted that I would turne with S. Paul, becauſe I was ſo earneſt: and ſo he departed and went to dinner, and I to the Porters lodge again.

Tho. Haukes afterwards called for again to talk with the old biſhop.

After dinner I was called into the Hall again, and the biſhop deſired the old biſhop to take me into his chamber: for I would be glad (ſaid he) if ye could convert him. So hee took me into his chamber, and ſate him down in a chaire, and ſaid to me; I would to God I could do you ſome good. Ye are a young man, and I would not wiſh you to go too far, but learn of your elders to bear ſomewhat.

Haukes. I will bear with nothing that is contrary to the word of God. And I looked that the old Biſhop ſhould have made me an anſwer, and he was faſt aſleep.

Anno 1555

Then I departed out of the chamber alone, and went to the Porters lodge again, and there ſaw I the old Biſhop laſt: I ſuppoſe he is not yet awake.

Talke between Fecknam and Haukes.

The next days talk with Fecknam.

The next day came Fecknam unto me and ſaid; Are ye he that will have no ceremonies?

Haukes. What mean you by that?

Fecknam. Ye wil not have your child chriſtned, but in Engliſh, and you wil have no ceremonies.

Haukes. Whatſoever the Scripture commandeth to be done I refuſe not.

Fecknam. Ceremonies are to be uſed by the Scriptures.

Haukes. Which be thoſe?

Fecknams reaſon lyeth in Pauls breeches.

Fecknam. How ſay you by Pauls breeches?

Haukes. I have read no ſuch thing.

Feck. Have ye not read in the Acts of the Apoſtles, how things went from Pauls body, and they received health thereby?

Acts 19.

Haukes. I have read in the xix. of the Acts, how there went partlets and napkins from Pauls body, Is it that ye mean?

Fecknam maketh every act ſpoken of in the new Teſtament to be a ceremony.

Fecknam. Yea the ſame is it: what ſay you to thoſe ceremonies?

Haukes. I ſay nothing to the ceremonies. For the text ſaith, that God did ſo work by the hands of Paul, that there went partlets and napkins from him, &c. So that it ſeemed by the text, that it was God that wrought, and not the ceremonies

Mark 5. Luke 8.

Fecknam. How ſay yee to the woman that came behind Chriſt, and touched the hemme of his veſture? did not her diſeaſe depart from her by that ceremony?

Fecknam taken ſhort in his own tale.

Haukes. No forſooth: for Chriſt turned back, and ſaid to Peter, Who is it that toucheth mee? And Peter ſaid, Thou ſeeſt the people thruſt thee; and askeſt thou, Who touched mee? Some bodie hath touched me (ſaith Chriſt) for vertue hath gone out of me. I pray you, whether was it the vertue that healed this woman, or his veſture?

Fecknam. Both.

Fecknam driven in a ſtrait, driveth him to the ſacrament.

Haukes. Then is not Chriſt true: for he ſaid, Go thy way thy faith hath made thee whole.

Boner. Away, away to the ſacrament for theſe are but meere trifles to that.

Fecknam. How ſay ye ſirra; Chriſt took bread, and brake it, and ſaid, Take, eat, this is my body?

Haukes. I grant Chriſt ſaid ſo.

It is his ſacramentall body, or the ſacrament of his body, but not his true body.

Fecknam. And is it not ſo?

Haukes. No forſooth, I do not underſtand it ſo.

Fecknam. Why, then is Chriſt a lyer?

Haukes. I think ye will ſo prove him.

Fecknam. Will I? why I have ſpoken the words that Chriſt ſpake.

The words of Chriſt are to be underſtood, not as he ſpake, but as he meant them.

Haukes. Is every word to bee underſtood as Chriſt ſpake it? Chriſt ſaid, I am a door, a vine, I am a King, a way, &c.

Feckn. Chriſt ſpake theſe words in parables.

Haukes. And why ſpeaketh he this in parables when he ſaid, I am a door, a vine, a king, a way, &c. more than this when he ſaid, This is my body? For after the ſame phraſe of ſpeech, as he ſaith, This is my body: ſo ſaith he, I am a doore, a vine, a king, a way; he ſaith not, I am like a door, like a vine, &c.

Then Fecknam ſtood up, and ſaid, I had ſuch a one before me this other day. Alas, theſe places ſerve nothing for your purpoſes. But I perceive ye hang and build on them that be at Oxford.

Haukes. What mean you by that?

Feck. I mean Latimer, Cranmer, and Ridley.

Haukes

Anno 1555.

Haukes. I know nothing elſe by them, but that they be both godly and learned.

Fecknam' falleth out of his matter to rayling.

Fecknam. Wilt thou truſt to ſuch dolts? One of them hath written a book, wherin he affirmeth a reall preſence in the ſacrament.

Haukes. What he hath done, I know not, but what he doth I know.

Fecknam. Ridley hath preached at Pauls Croſſe openly, that the Divell believeth better than you: for he believeth that Chriſt is able of ſtones to make bread, and ye will not believe, Chriſts body in the ſacrament, and yet thou buildeſt thy faith upon them.

Tho. Haukes buildeth his faith upon no man.

Haukes. I build my faith upon no man, and that ye well know: for if thoſe men, and as many mo as they be, ſhould recant, and deny that they have ſaid or done, yet will I ſtand to it, and by this ſhall ye know that I build my faith upon no man.

Boner. If any of thoſe recant, what will ye ſay to it?

Haukes. When they recant, I will make you an anſwer.

Boner. Then thou wilt ſay as thou doeſt now for all that.

Haukes. Yea indeed will I, and that truſt to it, by Gods grace.

B. Boner iudgeth other men by his own ſore.

Boner. I dare ſay Cranmer would recant, ſo that he might have his living. And ſo the Biſhop and Fecknam departed from mee with great laughing, and I went again to the porters lodge

Talk between Haukes and Chadſey.

Another daies talke with D. Chadſey.

The next day came D. Chadſey to the biſhop and him. The biſhop declared unto him that I had ſtood ſtubbornly in the defence againſt the chriſtening of my child, and againſt the ceremonies of the Church, and that I would not have it chriſtened but in Engliſh.

Then ſaid D. Chadſey; then he denieth the order of the Catholike Church.

Bon. Yea, he thinketh that there is no Church but in England and in Germany.

The Church of Rome.

Haukes. And ye think that there is no Church, but the Church of Rome.

Chad. What ſay ye to the Church of Rome?

Haukes. I ſay it is a Church of a ſort of vicious Cardinals, Prieſts, Monkes and Friers, which I will never credit nor believe.

The Biſhop of Rome.

Chad. How ſay ye to the Biſhop of Rome?

Haukes. From him and all his deteſtable enormities, Good Lord deliver us.

Chad. Marry ſo may we ſay, From K. Henry the eighth, and all his deteſtable enormities, Good Lord deliver us.

Haukes. Where were ye whiles that he lived, that ye would not ſay ſo?

Chad. I was not far.

Haukes. Where were ye in his ſons dayes?

Chad. In priſon.

Haukes. It was for your well doing.

Boner. He will by no meanes come within my Chappell, nor heare Maſſe: for neither the Maſſe, neither the ſacrament of the altar can he abide, neither will hee have any ſervice but in Engliſh.

Chadſeyes argument. Chriſt never ſpake engliſh: ergo, we muſt not pray in Engliſh. An inſtance given againſt Chadſey.

Chad. Chriſt never ſpake in Engliſh.

Haukes. Neither ſpake hee ever any Latine but alwaies in ſuch a tongue as the people might be edified thereby. And Paul ſaith, That tongues profit us nothing. Hee maketh a ſimilitude betweene the pipe and the harpe, and except it be underſtood what the trumpet meaneth, who can prepare himſelfe to the battell: ſo if I heare the tongue which I doe not underſtand, what profit have I thereby? no more than hee hath by the trumpet, that knoweth not what it meaneth.

Chad. If ye underſtand Pauls ſaying, he ſpeaketh it under a prophecy, If ye prophecy to you in tongues, &c.

Haukes. Forſooth Paul ſpeaketh plainely of tongues: for tongues ſerve not for them that believe.

Chad. I tell you Paul ſpeaketh altogether upon prophecy.

1 Cor.

Haukes. Paul maketh a diſtinction betweene prophecying and tongues, ſaying, That if any man ſpeake with tongues, let it be by two or three at the moſt, and let another interpret it. But if there be no interpreter, let them keep ſilence in the congregation, and let himſelfe pray unto God: and then let the Prophets ſpeak two or three, and that by courſe, and let the other judg: and if any revelation be made to him that ſitteth by, let the firſt hold his peace: ſo that it ſeemeth that Paul maketh a diſtinction betweene tongues and prophecying.

Latine ſervice.

Boner. The order was taken in the Catholike Church that the Latine tongue ſhould ſerve thorow the whole world, becauſe that they ſhould pray all generally together in one tongue, and that to avoid all contention and ſtrife, and to have one univerſal order thorow the whole world

Haukes. This did your Councels of Rome conclude.

Boner. Underſtand yee what the generall Councels of Rome meant?

The generall Councels of Rome.

Haukes Indeed all your generall Councels of Rome be in Latine, and I am an Engliſh man: therfore I have nothing to do with them.

Chad. Yee are too blame, being an unlearned man to reprove all the Councels thorowout all the whole world.

Haukes. I reprove them not, but Paul rebuketh them, ſaying, If any man preach any other doctrine than that which I have taught, doe you hold him accurſed.

Chad. Hath any man preached any other doctrine unto you?

Haukes. Yea, I have been taught another Goſpel ſince I came into this houſe.

Other doctrine taught in the Church of Rome than ever Paul taught.

Chad. What Goſpel have ye been taught?

Haukes. Praying to Saints, and to our Lady, and truſt in the Maſſe, holy bread, and holy water and in Idols.

Cha. He that teaches you ſo, teaches not amiſs

Haukes, Curſed be he that teacheth me ſo: for I will not truſt him nor believe him.

Boner. You ſpeak of Idols, and ye know not what they meane.

Idols.

Haukes. God hath taught us what they be: for whatſoever is made, graven, or deviſed by mans hand, contrary to Gods word, that ſame is an Idoll. What ſay you to that?

Chad. What be thoſe that ye are ſo offended withall?

The Croſſe.

Haukes. The croſſe of wood, ſilver, copper, or gold, &c.

Boner. What ſay ye to that?

Haukes, I ſay it is an idol. What ſay you to it?

Images.

Boner. I ſay every idoll is an image, but every image is not an idoll.

Haukes. I ſay, what difference is there betweene an Idol and Image?

Note here Boners definition of an idoll.

Boner. If it bee a falſe God, and an image made of him, that is an Idoll: but if an image be made of God himſelfe, it is no idoll, but an image, becauſe he is a true God

Haukes. Lay your image of your true God and of your falſe God together, and ye ſhall ſee the difference. Have not your images feet, and go not, eyes and ſee not, eares and hear not, hands and feele not, mouths and ſpeak not? and even ſo have your idols.

[illegible] the wordes of S. Paul.

Chad. God forbid, ſaith S. Paul, that I ſhould rejoyce in any thing els, but in the croſſe of Chriſt Ieſus.

Haukes. Do ye underſtand Paul ſo? Do ye underſtand Paul? Unto the which he anſwered me never a word.

Boner. Where can we have a godlier remembrance when we ride by the way, than to ſee the Croſſe?

Haukes. If the Croſſe were ſuch a profit unto us, why did not Chriſts Diſciples take it up, and ſet it on a pole, and carry it in proceſſion, with Salve, feſta dies?

Chad. It was taken up.

The people ſeduced by falſe pieces of the holy Croſſe.

Haukes. Who tooke it up? Helene, as ye ſay; for ſhe ſent a piece of it to a place of Religion, where I was with the viſiters when that houſe was ſuppreſſed, and the piece of the holy Croſſe (which the religious had in ſuch eſtimation, and had robbed many a ſoule, committing Idolatry to it) was called for, and when it was proved, and all come to all, it was but a piece of a lath covered over with copper, double guilded as it had bin cleane gold.

Boner. Fie, fie, I dare ſay thou ſlandereſt it.

Haukes. I know it to be true and doe not believe the contrary. And thus did the Biſhop and the Doctor depart in a great fume: and Chadſey ſaid unto me, as he was about to depart, It is pity that thou ſhouldeſt live, or any ſuch as thou art. I anſwered, In this caſe I deſire not to live, but rather to die.

Note here diſcreetly the ſpirit of Chadſey.

Chad. Ye die boldly, becauſe ye would glory in your death, as Jone Butcher did.

Haukes. What Jone Butcher did, I have nothing to do withall: but I would my part might be to morrow. God make you in a better minde, ſaid they both, and ſo they departed, and I went to the Porters lodge with my Keeper.

The next day Doctor Chadſey preached in the Biſhops Chappell, and did not begin his Sermon untill all the ſervice was done: and then came the porter for me, and ſaid, My Lord would have you come to the Sermon, and ſo I went to the Chappell doore, and ſtood without the doore.

Boner. Is not this fellow come?

Haukes. Yes I am here.

Boner. Come in man.

Tho. Haukes will not come into Boners Chappell.

Haukes. No, that I will not. He called againe, and I anſwered; I will come no neerer, and ſo I ſtood at the doore. Then ſaid the Biſhop, go to your Sermon.

Then Doctor Chadſey put the ſtole about his neck, and carried the holy water ſprinkle unto the Biſhop, who bleſſed him, and gave him holy water, and ſo he went to his Sermon.

His Theame. Chadſeyes Sermon.

The Text that he treated on, was the xvi of Matthew, Whom do men ſay that I the ſonne of man am? Peter ſaid; Some ſay that thou art Helias, ſome ſay that thou art Iohn Baptiſt, ſome ſay thou art one of the Prophets. But whom ſay yee that I am? Then ſaid Peter, thou art Chriſt the ſonne of the everliving God. Then left he the text there, and ſaid, Whoſe ſins ſoever ye binde, are bound: which authority (ſaid he) is left to the heads of the Church, as my Lord here is one, and ſo unto all the reſt that bee underneath him. But the Church hath beene much kicked at ſith the beginning: yet kicke the heretikes, ſpurne the heretikes never ſo much, the Church doth ſtand and flouriſh. And then hee went ſtraight way to the ſacrament, and ſaid his minde on it, exalting it above the heaven (as the moſt of them do) and ſo returned to his place againe, ſaying, Whoſe ſinnes yee doe remit are remitted and forgiven: and ſo hee applyed it to the Biſhops and Prieſts to forgive ſinnes, and ſaid, All that be of the Church will come and receive the ſame. And this he proved by S. John in the xi. chap. ſaying, that Chriſt came to raiſe Lazarus, which when he was riſen, was bound in bands: then ſaid Chriſt to them that were in authority (who were his Diſciples) go ye and looſe him: looſe him you. And this was the effect of his Sermon, applying all to them, that they have the ſame authority that Chriſt ſpake of to his Apoſtles, and ſo ended his Sermon, and they went to dinner.

Chadſey exalteth the Sacrament.

Scripture clerkly applyed.

Anno 1555

Another communication betweene Tho Haukes, and the Biſhop.

AND after dinner I was called into the Chappell, whereas were certaine of the Queenes ſervants, & other ſtrangers, whom I did know.

Boner. Haukes, how like you the ſermon?

Haukes. As I like all the reſt of his doctrine.

Another talke betweene Tho. Haukes and Boner, and the Queenes men.

Boner. What? are ye not edified thereby?

Haukes. No ſurely.

Boner. It was made only becauſe of you.

Haukes. Why? then am I ſorry that yee had no moe heretikes here, as ye call them: I am ſorry that ye have beſtowed ſo much labor on one, and ſo little regarded.

Boner. Well, I will leave you here, for I have buſineſſe, I pray you talk with him: for if ye could do him good (ſaid he) I would be glad.

This the Biſhop ſpake to the Queenes men, who ſaid unto me; Alas what mean you to trouble your ſelfe about ſuch matters againſt the Queenes proceedings?

Haukes. Thoſe matters have I anſwered before them that be in authority: and unleſſe I ſee you have a farther commiſſion, I will anſwer you nothing at all. Then ſaid the Biſhops men (which were many) my Lord hath commanded you to talk with them.

Tho Haukes refuſeth to talk with the Queenes ſervants.

Hauks. If my Lord will talk with me himſelf, I will anſwer him. They cried Fagots, burne him, hang him, to priſon with him; it is pitie that he liveth, lay irons upon him, and with a great noiſe they ſpake theſe words. Then in the midſt of all their rage I departed from them, and went to the Porters lodge again.

The next daies talke.

THe next day the Biſhop called mee into his chamber, and ſaid; Ye have been with mee a great while, and ye are never the better, but worſe and worſe: and therefore I will delay the time no longer, but ſend you to Newgate.

Another daies talk betweene Haukes and Boner.

Haukes. My Lord, you can doe mee no better pleaſure.

Boner. Why? would you ſo fain go to priſon?

Haukes. Truly I did look for none other, when I came to your hands.

Boner. Come on your waies, ye ſhall ſee what I have written. Then did he ſhew me certain Articles, and theſe are the contents of them:

Boner ſheweth Haukes articles in writing.

Whether the Catholike Church do teach and believe that Chriſts reall preſence doth remaine in the ſacrament or no, after the words of conſecration, according to the words of Saint Paul, which are theſe; Is not the bread which we break the partaking of the body of Chriſt, and the cup which we bleſſe, the partaking of the blood of Chriſt? which if it were not ſo, Paul would never have ſaid it.

Haukes. What your Church doth, I cannot tel: but I am ſure that the holy Catholike Church doth never ſo take it, nor believe it.

Answer of Haukes to the firſt article.

Boner. Whether doth the Catholike Church teach and believe the Baptiſme that now is uſed in the Church, or no?

Haukes. I anſwered to it, as I did to the other queſtion before. Then did the Biſhop with much flattery counſell mee to bee perſwaded, and to keep me out of priſon, which I utterly refuſed, and ſo wee departed. And I ſuppoſed that the Talk betweene Haukes and D. Harpsfield Archdeacon of Canterbury.

the next day I ſhould have gone to priſon, and ſo I had, ſave for the Archdeacon of Canterbury, whoſe name is Harpsfield, whom the biſhop had deſired to talk with me, and began to perſwade me concerning the Sacrament, and the ceremonies: and after much talk he ſaid, that the ſacrament of the altar was the ſame body that was borne of the Virgin Mary, which did hang upon the croſſe.

A queſtion put to Harpsfield.

Haukes. He was upon the Croſſe both alive and dead: which of them was the Sacrament?

Harpſ. The Archdeacon anſwered, alive.

Haukes. How prove you that?

Harpſ. Ye muſt believe. Doth not S. John ſay, He is already condemned that believeth not?

Haukes. S. John ſaith, He that believeth not in the Son of God is already condemned: but hee ſaith not, He that believeth not in the Sacrament, is already condemned.

Harpſ. There is no talke with you: for ye are both without faith and learning, and therfore I will talk no more with you in Scripture.

Another queſtion put to Harpsfield, why the Roodeloft is ſet betweene the Church & the Chancell.

Haukes. Then two that ſtood by bade me enter further in talk with him, and then ſaid I unto him, Why is the Roodloft ſet betwixt the body of the Church, and the Chancell?

Harpſ. I cannot tell: for ye have aſked a queſtion, which you cannot aſſoyle your ſelfe.

Haukes. Yes that I can: for this ſaith one of your owne Doctors; That the body of the Church doth repreſent the Church militant, and the Chancell the Church triumphant: and ſo becauſe we cannot goe from the Church militant to the Church triumphant, but that wee muſt beare the croſſe of Chriſt, this is the cauſe of the Roodloft, being betweene the bodie of the Church and the Chancell.

Harpſ. This is well and clarkly concluded.

Hauks. As all the reſt of your doctrine is, and ſo with many perſwaſions on his part we ended, & ſo departed: and I to the Porters lodge againe.

Another dayes talke.

Haukes ſent to the Gatehouſe at Weſtminſter with the biſhops warrant.

THe next day in the morning, which was the firſt day of July, the biſhop did call me himſelf from the Porters lodge, commanding me to make me ready to goe to priſon, and to take ſuch things with me, as I had of mine owne. And I ſaid, I do neither intend to bride, neither to ſteale, God willing. Then he did write my warrant to the Keeper of the Gate-houſe at Weſtminſter, and delivered it to Harpsfield, who with his owne man and one of the biſhops men brought me to priſon, and delivered the warrant and me both to the Keeper: and this was contained in the warrant.

The biſhops warrant.

I will and command you, that you receive him who commeth, named in this warrant, and that hee bee kept as a ſafe priſoner, and that no man ſpeak with him, and that yee deliver him to no man, except it bee the Councell, or to a Juſtice: for hee is a Sacramentary, and one that ſpeaketh againſt baptiſme, a ſeditious man, a perillous man to be abroad in theſe perillous dayes. And thus was I received, and they departed. And there I remained thirteene dayes, and then the Biſhop ſent two of his men unto me, ſaying, my Lord would be glad to know how ye doe. I anſwered them, I doe like a poore priſoner. They ſaid, My Lord would know, whether ye be the ſame man that ye were when yee departed. I ſaid, I am no changling. They ſaid, My Lord would be glad that ye ſhould do well. I ſaid, if my Lord will me any good, I pray you deſire him to ſuffer my friends to come to mee. So they ſaid they would ſpeake for mee, but I heard no more of them.

The Biſhops men ſent to Haukes in the Gatehouſe.

This is the firſt examination of me Thomas Haukes, being examined by Edmund Boner, then Biſhop of London, and by his Chaplaines and Doctors at Fulham, foure miles from London, where I lay, till I came to priſon to Weſtminſter: and after his two men had been with me, I heard no more of him, till the third day of September.

Here followeth the ſecond time of mine examination, the which was the third day of September, for the Biſhop did ſend his men for mee to come to his Palace of London, and ſo my keeper and his men brought me to his Palace the ſame day.

The ſecond time of Haukes his examination.

THe biſhop of Wincheſter, then being Chancellor, preached that day at Pauls Croſſe, and the biſhop of London ſaid to my Keeper, I think your man will not go to the Sermon to day.

Haukes. Yea my Lord, I pray you let me goe: and that that is good I will receive, and the reſt I will leave behind me, and ſo I went. And when the Sermon was done, I and my Keeper came to the biſhops houſe, and there we remained till dinner was done: and after dinner the biſhop called for me, and aſked me if I were the ſame man that I was before.

Haukes. I am no changling, nor none will be.

Boner. Yee ſhall finde me no changeling neither. And ſo he returned into his chamber, and there he did write the ſide of a ſheet of paper, and all that while I ſtood in the great chamber, and as many with me as might well ſtand in the chamber. And as I ſtood there, D. Smith came unto me, (who once recanted, as it appeared in Print) ſaying, that he would be glad to talke brotherly with me. I aſked him what he was. Then ſaid they that ſtood by, he is Doctor Smith. Then ſaid I, Are you he that did recant? And he ſaid, it was no recantation, but a declaration.

D. Smith cometh to Haukes. D. Smiths recantation.

Haukes. You were beſt to term it well for your own honeſty.

D. Smith. Shall I term it as it pleaſeth you?

Haukes. To bee ſhort with you, I will know whether ye will recant any more or no, before that I talke with you, credit you, or believe you: and ſo I departed from him to the other ſide of the chamber. Then ſaid the biſhops men and his Chaplaines, that my Lord commanded mee to talk with him. Then they that ſtood by, cried with a great noiſe; hang him, burne him; it is pitie that he liveth, that diſobeyeth my Lords commandement.

Miles Huggards words to Tho. Haukes.

Then ſaid one Miles Huggard; where prove you that infants were baptized?

Haukes. Go teach all Nations, baptizing them in the name of the father, and of the ſon, and of the holy Ghoſt. Sir, here is none excepted.

M. Hug. What ſhall we go to teach children?

Haukes. That word doth trouble you: it might be left out full well: it is too much for you to teach. Is not your name Miles Huggard?

Miles Huggard.

M. Hug. So am I called.

Haukes. Bee you not a Hoſier, and dwell in pudding lane?

Huggard more meet to eat a pudding, than to diſpute of Scripture.

M. Hug. Yes that I am, and there I do dwell.

Haukes. It ſhould ſeeme ſo, for yee can better ſkill to eat a pudding, and make a hoſe, than in Scripture either to anſwer or oppoſe. With that he was in great rage, and did chafe up and down. Then I deſired that ſome man would ſome pain to walk the Gentleman, he did fret ſo for anger. Then one that ſtood by mee (who was Parſon of Horne-church, and Rumford in Eſſex) ſaid; Alas, what doe you meane? a young man to be ſo ſtubborn? there ſeemeth too much pride in you.

Hauks. Are ye not the Parſon of Hornchurch?

Parſon. Yes that I am.

Haukes. Did you not ſet ſuch a Prieſt in your Benefice?

Parſon. Yes for a ſhift.

Parſon of Horn-church compared the the Weather-cock of Pauls.

Haukes. Like will to like; ſuch maſter, ſuch man. For I know the Prieſt to be a very vile man, as any could be. I aſked the Parſon what kin he was to the wether-cocke of Pauls? and he fell into a great laughter, with the reſt of his companions. He ſaid, that I did raile.

Frivolous queſtions.
Eſay 53.

Then ſaid another that ſtood by unto me; what book have you here? I anſwered, the new Teſtament. May I look in it, ſaid he? Yea that ye may, ſaid I. And ſo he looked in my book, and ſaid it was corrupt. I anſwered him, if the things contained in it be true, then are ye falſe Prophets. He ſaid that hee would appoſe mee in the firſt word of the Teſtament, ſaying; here is a generation of Chriſt: And Eſay ſaith, No man can tell his generation.

Haukes. What meaneth Eſay by that?

I would learne of you, ſaid he.

Haukes. Yee would bee angry if the ſcholler ſhould teach the Maſter: but if ye will have me to teach you, I will tell you Eſayes meaning.

Then ſaid he, no man can tell the generation betweene the father and the ſon: but you (I dare ſay) did know it before.

Haukes. Why then Eſay denieth not the generation.

Then ſaid he, Why is Chriſt called Chriſt?

Haukes. Becauſe he is a Meſſias.

Then ſaid he, Why is he called a Meſſias.

Haukes. Becauſe he was ſo propheſied by the Prophets.

Then ſaid he, Why is your book called a book?

Haukes. Theſe words do breed more ſtrife, than godly edifying.

Beware, ſaid he, that ye do not decline from the Church, for if you do, you will prove your ſelf an heretike.

Difference between the true Prophets and the falſe.
The falſe Prophets ſay: Dicit Eccleſia, thus ſaith the Church.
The true Prophets ſay, Dicit Dominus, thus ſaith the Lord.

Haukes. Even as ye do call us heretikes, that do incline to Chriſts Church from your Church: ſo are yee all falſe Prophets that doe decline from Chriſts Church to your own Church. And by this ſhall all men know you to be falſe Prophets, if ye ſay, This ſaith the Church: and will not ſay, this ſaith our Lord. And ſo hee went his way, as though he had a flea in his eare.

The Biſhop writeth Hauks confeſſion.

Then came another and ſaid unto mee, hee would talk with me, for he perceived (as he ſaid) that I was angry, and out of patience.

Haukes. I will ſee your commiſſion, or ever I talk with you, or with any man more. For I wiſt not how to be be rid of them, they came ſo thick about me. For I ſaid that I came to talk with my Lord, and not with any of them.

With that came the Biſhop, bringing a letter in his hand, the which hee had written in my name, and read it unto me after this manner: I Thomas Haukes doe here confeſſe and declare before my ſaid Ordinary Edmund Biſhop of London, that the Maſſe is abominable and deteſtable and full of all ſuperſtition, and alſo as concerning the ſacrament of the body and blood of Chriſt (commonly called the ſacrament of the altar) that Chriſt is in no part thereof, but only in heaven: this I have believed, and this I do believe, &c.

Haukes. Stop there my Lord: what I have believed, what have you to do withall? But what I do believe, to that ſtand I, and will. Then he took his pen, and ſaid that he would ſcrape it out for my pleaſure, and ſo he did to my thinking.

Then he went further with his writing, & ſaid; I T. Hauks have talked with my ſaid Ordinary and with certain good, godly, and learned men. Notwithſtanding I ſtand ſtill in mine opinion.

Anno 1555.

Haukes. Shall I grant you to be good, godly, and learned men, and yet grant my ſelf to ſtand in a contrary opinion? No, I will not grant you to be good, godly, and learned men.

Boner. Ye will grant that ye have talked with us: the other I will put out for your pleaſure. Then ſaid al his Doctors, if your Lordſhip bee ruled by him, he will cauſe you to put out all together: and then he read more to me. Here unto this bill have I ſet my hand; and then he offered me the bill and his pen, and bade me ſet my hand to it.

Haukes. Ye get not my hand to any thing of your making or deviſing.

Tho. Haukes denieth to ſet his hand to Boners writing.

Boner. Wilt not thou ſet to thy hand? It ſhall be to thy ſhame for the denying of it.

And then he called all his doctors and ſaid he would have every mans hand to it that was in the chamber, and ſo he had al their hands to it, and ſaid: He that will not ſet his hand to it, I would he were hanged, and ſo ſaid all his Chaplains and Doctors with a great noiſe.

Boner in a fume with Haukes.

Then the biſhop thruſt me on the breaſt with great anger, and ſaid he would be even with me, and with all ſuch proud knaves in Eſſex.

Haukes. Yee ſhall do no more than God ſhall give you leave.

Bo. This gear ſhal not be unpuniſhed, truſt to it.

Haukes. As for your curſings, railings, and blaſphemings, I care not for them: for I know the moths and worms ſhall eat you, as they eate cloth or wooll.

Biſhop. I will be even with you, when time ſhall come.

Haukes. You may in your malice deſtroy a man: but when ye have done, ye cannot doe ſo much as make a finger, and ye be meetly even with ſome of us already.

Boner. If I do thee any wrong, take the Law of me.

Haukes. Salomon ſaith, Go not to Law with a Iudge. For he will judge according to his own honor

Boner. Salomon ſaith, Give not a fool an anſwer

Haukes. What? do ye count me a foole?

Boner. Yea, by my troth, do I, and ſo doſt thou me too: but God forgive thee, “ and ſo do I.

Haukes. Thought is free, my Lord. Then took Boner the bill, and read it again, and when hee ſaw that he could not have my hand to it, then he would have had me to take it into my hand, and to give it to him again.

“ And then now ye ſaid, you would be even with him.

Haukes. What needeth that ceremony? Neither ſhall it come into my hand, heart, or mind. Then he wrapt it up, and put it in his boſome, and in a great anger went his way, and called for his horſe, and went to horſback, for the ſame day he rode in viſitation into Eſſex: and ſo went I to priſon, from whence I came with my keeper. And this was the ſecond time of my examination.

Written by me Th. Haukes, who deſireth all faithfull men and brethren to pray unto God to ſtrengthen me in his truth unto the end. Pray, pray, pray, gentle brethren pray.

The publike examination of Th. Haukes.

After all theſe private conferences, perſwaſions, and long debatings had with T. Haukes in the biſhops houſe as hitherto have been declared, the biſhop ſeeing no hope to win him to his wicked waies, was fully ſet to proceed openly againſt him after the ordinary courſe of his popiſh law. Whereupon T. Hauks ſhortly after was cited with the reſt of his other fellows above ſpecified, to wit, T. Tomkins, St. Knight, W. Pygot, I. Laurence, & W. Hunter, to appear in the biſhops

Anno 1555.
Ex Regiſtro.
The firſt daies Seſſions against Tho. Haukes.

Conſiſtorie, the 8. day of February, this preſent yeare, viz. 1555. Upon which appearance, was laid againſt him in like order as to the other, firſt the bill of his confeſſion, written with Boners hand, to the which bill yee heard before how the bleſſed ſervant of God denied to ſubſcribe.

The ſecond daies Seſſions againſt Tho. Haukes.

The anſwer of Tho. Haukes.

After which bill of confeſſion, being read, and he conſtantly ſtanding to the ſaid confeſſion, the Biſhop then aſſigned him with the other five the the next day following, which was the ix. of February, to appear before him again, to give a reſolute anſwer what they would ſticke unto. Which day being come, and theſe foreſaid ſix priſoners being ſeverally called before the biſhop at the comming of Thomas Haukes, the biſhop willed him to remember what was ſaid to him yeſterday, and now while he had time and ſpace, to adviſe with himſelf what he would anſwer, for he ſtood upon life and death. Well quoth maſter Haukes again, I will willingly receive whatſoever ſhall be put unto me. Then were certain other Interrogatories or Articles commenced againſt him by the ſaid biſhop (in like manner as to the other) to the number of foure, with another bill alſo which Boner brought out of his boſome, containing private matters againſt the ſaid Thomas Haukes, which the Biſhop called hereſies and errours, but we may better call them Chriſtian verities. To the which matter being read, the ſaid Haukes anſwered openly againe, ſaying that it was true, and that he was glad it was ſo true as it was, with moe words to the like effect. And this was in the forenoon, the ix. day of February. In the afternoone againe the ſaid Haukes appearing and hearing the foreſaid bill of his confeſſion, with the Articles and Interrogatories read unto him, with like conſtancie in anſwering againe to the Biſhop; My Lord (ſaid hee) as you being my friends have cauſed theſe my ſayings to be written: ſo doe you cauſe them to be read: and yet I will never goe from them. And then being exhorted by the Biſhop, with many fair words, to return again to the boſome of the mother Church: No my Lord (ſaid he) that will I not: for if I had an hundred bodies, I would ſuffer them all to bee torne in peeces, rather than I willl abiure or recant. And ſo continuing ſtill in the ſame ſong, notwithſtanding that the Doctors and Lawyers were ever calling upon him to come againe to the unity of the Church, hee ever kept them off with this anſwer, that he would never goe from the beliefe he was in, ſo long as he lived. Whereupon Boner at the laſt read the ſentence of death upon him, and ſo was hee condemned the ſame day with the reſidue of his fellowes, which was the ninth of February. Neverthelesse his execution was prolonged, and hee remained in priſon till the 10. day of June. Then was hee committed to the hands and charge of the Lord Rich, who, being aſſiſted with power ſufficient of the worſhipfull of the Shire, had the foreſaid Thomas Haukes down into Eſſex, with ſix other fellow priſoners whoſe ſtories hereafter follow, there to ſuffer martyrdome, Hauks at Coxhall, the other ſeverally in other ſeverall places.

Agreed between Tho. Haukes and his friends to give them a token in the fire, whether the pain of burning were ſo grievous as it ſeemeth or no.

A little before his death, certain there were of his familiar acquaintance and friends, who frequented his company more familiarly, which ſeemed not a little to be confirmed both by the example of his conſtancy, and by his talk; yet notwithſtanding the ſame againe, being feared with the ſharpneſſe of the puniſhment which he was going to, privily deſired that in the midſt of the flame he would ſhew them ſome token if hee could, whereby they might be more certain whether the pain of ſuch burning were ſo great, that a man might not therin keep his mind quiet and patient. Which thing he promiſed them to doe: and ſo ſecretly between them it was agreed, that if the rage of the pain were tolerable and might be ſuffered, then he ſhould lift up his hands above his head toward heaven, before he gave up the Ghoſt.

Tho. Haukes carried to the place of execution.

Tho. Haukes ſtanding at the ſtake reaſoneth with the Lord Rich.

Not long after, when the houre was come, T. Haukes was led away to the place appointed for the ſlaughter, by the L. Rich and his aſſiſtants, who being now come unto the ſtake, there mildly and patiently addreſſed himſelf to the fire, having a ſtrait chain caſt about his middle, with no ſmall multitude of people on every ſide compaſſing him about. Unto whom after he had ſpoken many things, but eſpecially unto the L. Rich reaſoning with him of the innocent blood of ſaints, at length after his fervent prayers firſt made, and poured out unto God, the fire was ſet unto him.

A token given in the fire that burning is not ſo intolerable a pain as it was thought.

The end and martyrdome of Tho. Haukes at Coxhall.

In the which when he continued long, and when his ſpeech was taken away by violence of the flame, his ſkinne alſo drawne together, and his fingers conſumed with the fire, ſo that now all men thought certainly he had been gone, ſuddenly and contrary to all expectation the bleſſed ſervant of God, being mindfull of his promiſe afore made, reached up his hands burning on a light fire, which was marvellous to behold, over his head to the living God, and with great reioycing as ſeemed, ſtrooke or clapped them three times together. At the ſight whereof there followed ſuch applauſe and out-cry of the people, and eſpecially of them which underſtood the matter, that the like hath not commonly been heard: and ſo the bleſſed martyr of Chriſt, ſtraight way ſinking down into the fire, gave up his ſpirit, An. 1555 June 10. And thus have you plainly and expreſſly deſcribed unto you the whole ſtory, as well of the life, as of the death of T. Haukes, a moſt conſtant and faithfull witnes of Chriſts holy Goſpel.

Letters.

An Epiſtle to the Congregation, by Thomas Haukes.

A letter of Th. Haukes to the congregation.

The manifold dangers which a true Chriſtian hath to paſſe through in this world.

Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, be alway with you all (my deare brethren and ſiſterne in the Lord Jeſus Chriſt) for ever; and his holy ſpirit conduct and lead you all in all your doings, that you may always direct your deeds according to his holy word; that when he ſhall appeare to reward every man according to their works, ye may as obedient children, be found watching, ready, to enter into his everlaſting Kingdome with your lamps burning, and when the Bridegroome ſhall ſhew himſelfe, ye need not to be aſhamed of this life which God hath lent you, which is but tranſitory, vain, and like unto a vapour, that for a ſeaſon appeareth and vaniſheth away: ſo ſoon paſſeth away all our terreſtriall honour, glory, and felicity. For all fleſh (ſaith the Prophet) is graſſe, and all his glory as the flower of the field, which for a ſeaſon ſheweth her beauty, and as ſoone as the Lord bloweth upon it, it withereth away, and departeth. For in this tranſitory and dangerous wilderneſſe, we are as Pilgrims and ſtrangers following the footſteps of Moſes, among many unſpeakable dangers, beholding nothing with our outward man, but all vain vanities: and vexation of mind; ſubiect to hunger, cold, nakedneſſe, bonds, ſickneſſe, loſſe, labours, baniſhment, in danger of that dreadfull Dragon, and his ſinfull ſeed, to be devoured, tempted and tormented, who ceaſeth not behind every buſh to lay a-baite, when we walk awry to have his pleaſure upon us, caſting abroad his apples in all places, times, and ſeaſons, to ſee if Adam will be allured and entiſed to leave the living God, and his moſt holy commandements, whereby he is aſſured of everlaſting life, promiſing the world at will, to all that will fall down in all ages, and for a meſſe of pottage ſell and ſet at naught the everlaſting kingdome of heaven. So fraile is fleſh and blood; And in eſpeciall Iſrael is moſt ready to walk awry, when he is filled with all maner of riches, as ſaith the Prophet.

The higher in dignity the nearer to danger.

Therfore I am bold in bonds (as entirely deſiring your everlaſting health and felicity) to warn you, and moſt heartily deſire you to watch and pray: For our eſtate is dangerous, and requireth continuall prayer. For on the high mountains, doth not grow moſt plenty of graſſe, neither are the higheſt trees fartheſt from danger, but ſeldome ſure, and alwaies ſhaken of every wind that bloweth. Such a deceitfull thing (ſaith our Saviour) is honor and riches, that without grace it choketh up the good ſeed ſowne on his creatures, and blindeth ſo their ſeeing, that they go groping at noon day in darkneſſe: it maketh a man think himſelf ſomewhat, that is nothing at all. For though for our honour we eſteem our ſelvs and ſtand in our own light, yet when we ſhall ſtand before the living God, there ſhall be no reſpect of perſons. For riches helpeth not in the day of vengeance: neither can wee make the Lord partiall for money. But as ye have miniſtred unto the Saints, ſo ſhall ye receive the reward, which I am fully perſwaded and aſſured ſhall be plenteouſly poured upon you all, for the great goodneſſe ſhewed unto the ſervants of the living God. And I moſt heartily beſeech almighty God to poure forth a plenteous reward upon you for the ſame, and that he will aſſiſt you with his holy Spirit in all your doings, that ye may grow, as ye have begun, unto ſuch a perfection as may be to Gods honour, your own ſalvation, and the ſtrengthening of the weake members of Chriſt. For though the world rage, and blaſpheme the elect of God, ye know that it did ſo unto Chriſt, his Apoſtles, and to all that were in the Primitive Church, and ſhall be unto the worlds end.

Prov. 11. Riches help not before God

Gods elect alwaies beare the ſlander in this world.

Therfore believe in the light while ye have it, leſt it be taken away from you; if you ſhall ſeem to neglect the great mercy of God that hath been opened unto you, and your hearts conſented unto it, that it is the very and only truth pronounced by Gods only ſon Jeſus Chriſt, by the good will of our heavenly Father. Therefore I ſay in the bowels of my Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſtick faſt unto it; let it never depart out of your hearts and converſation, that you with us and we with you at the great day, being one flock as we have one ſhepheard, may riſe to the life immortall, through Jeſus Chriſt our only Saviour. Amen.

Yours in him that liveth for ever,
Thomas Haukes.

Here followeth another letter of T. Haukes, ſent to his wife after his condemnation, being priſoner in Newgate: the copie whereof is this.

The copie of Thomas Haukes letter to his wife.

A letter of T. Haukes unto his wife.

Grace be with you, and peace from God the father, and from our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, which gave himſelf for our ſins, to deliver us from this preſent evill world, through the good will of God our Father, to whom be praiſe for ever and ever, Amen.

My deare yoke-fellow in the Lord, foraſmuch as ẏ Lord hath not only called me to work in his vineyard, but hath alſo fulfilled his good worke in me (I truſt to his glory, and to the comfort of all thoſe that look for his comming) I thought it my duty, deare yoke-fellow, to write unto you ſome leſſons out of Gods booke; and if you will direct your ſelfe thereafter, doubt not of it but God, who refuſeth none that will come to him with their whole heart, will aſſiſt you with his holy ſpirit, and direct you in all his ways, to his honour and glory, who grant it for his mercy ſake, Amen.

Anno 1555.

Leſſons for inſtructions to his wife.

First, I exhort you to feare God, to ſerve and honour his holy Name, to love him with all your heart, ſoule, and minde, to beleeve faithfully all his promiſes, to lay ſure hold upon them, that in all your troubles whatſoever they are, ye may run ſtraight to the great mercy of God, and he will bring you forth of them, keepe you within his wings; then ſhall ye be ſure that neither divell, fleſh, nor hell ſhall be able to hurt you.

He exhorteth her to beware of Idolatry. Idolatry puniſhed of God.

But take heed; If you will not keepe his holy precepts and lawes, and to the uttermoſt of your power call for the helpe of God to walke in the ſame, but will leave them, and run to all abominations with the wicked world, and do as they doe; then be ſure to have your part with the wicked world in the burning Lake that never ſhall be quenched. Therefore beware of Idolatry, which doth moſt of all ſtink before the face of Almighty God, and was of all good men moſt deteſted from the beginning of the world. For the which, what Kingdomes, Nations, and Realmes God hath puniſhed with moſt terrible plagues, with fire, brimſtone, hunger, ſword, and peſtilence, &c. to the utter ſubverſion of them, it is manifeſtly to be ſeene through the whole Bible. Yea his owne peculiar people, whom he had done ſo much for, when they fell from him, and went and ſerved other gods, contrary to his commandement, he vtterly deſtroyed and rooted them out from off the earth: and as many as died in that damnable ſtate, not repenting their abominable evill, he threw them into the pit of hell. Againe, how he hath preſerved thoſe that abhorre ſuperſtition and idolatry, and that have only taken hold upon God with their whole heart, to ſerve him, and to love him, to feare him, &c. it is moſt manifeſtly to be ſeen even from the beginning, out of what great dangers he hath ever delivered them: yea when all hope of deliverance was paſt as touching their expectation, even then in the ſight of all his enemies would he work his godly will and purpoſe, to the utter amazing and deſtruction of all thoſe that were his manifeſt enemies.

Exhortation to prayer.

Further, I exhort you in the bowels of Chriſt, that you will exerciſe and be ſtedfaſt in prayer; for prayer is the onely meane to pierce the heavens, to obtaine at the hand of God whatſoever we deſire, ſo that it be aſked in faith. Oh what notable things doe we read in Scriptures that have been obtained through fervent prayer? We are commanded to call upon him for helpe, aid, and ſuccour in neceſſities and troubles: And he hath promiſed to help us. Againe, they that will not cal upon him with their whole heart, but upon other dead creatures, in whom there is no help (for there was none found worthy to open the booke, but only the Lamb Chriſt which was killed for our ſinnes) I ſay, who that will refuſe his helpe, muſt even by the terrible iudgements of God come utterly to confuſion: as it hath, and is daily manifeſt to be ſeene. And whatſoever you deſire of God in your prayer, aſke it for Ieſus Chriſts ſake, for whom and in whom God hath promiſed to give us all things neceſſary. And though that which we aſk come not by and by at the firſt and ſecond calling, yet continue ſtill knocking, and he will at the length open his treaſures of mercy, ſo that ye ſhall be ſure to obtain; for he hath ſo promiſed if ye continue in faith, hoping ſurely in him. Theſe former leſſons, with all ſuch inſtructions as I have told you by mouth, I doe wiſh that you would moſt earneſtly learne; and then I doubt not, but God who is the giver of all grace, will aſſiſt you in all your doings, that ye may be found worthy of his Kingdome, which is prepared through Chriſt.

Praying to God, and not to creatures.

To continue in prayer, and to pray only in the name of Chriſt

Care for his children.

He meaneth M. Clement Throgmorton, who deſired to have the bringing up of his child.

Further, where it hath pleaſed God to ſend us children, my deſire is, that they may be brought up in the feare of God, and in his lawes. And this is to certifie you, that ye deliver in any wiſe my eldeſt ſonne unto M. Throgmorton, who upon his good will hath promiſed me to bring him up according to my deſire; and (I truſt) as God hath put into his heart. See therefore that ye deliver him in any wiſe without delay: and as for the other, if ye ſhall ſeeme to be burdened with him (which I think nature will not ſuffer) my deſire is, that it be brought up in the feare of God to the uttermoſt of your indeavour, with ſome honeſt man that hath the feare of God before his eyes, and let us give thanks unto God which hath given them us, beſeeching him that they may be counted worthy to be of that flocke that ſhall ſtand on the right hand of the maieſty of God, when he ſhall iudge the world, Amen.

Keeping of good company.

Yet once againe I warne you, that ye continue in fervent prayer, as I ſaid before; then ſhall ye be ſure, that God even of his own mercy, according as he hath promiſed, will be an husband unto you, and provide better for you than ever I was able to do: yea, he will cauſe all men that feare him to pitie you, to helpe you, to ſuccour you in all your neceſſities, ſo that if any will do you wrong, he will be avenged on him. Moreover, I wiſh you to keep company with thoſe of whom ye may learne to come to a more perfect knowledge in God, and I doubt not but God will provide that ſuch will be glad to receive you, if you ſhall profeſſe and go forward in his truth.

Exhortation to take heed whom ſhe marrieth, and that ſhe marry in the Lord.

Finally, and to make an end, I deſire you that ye take heed with whom ye couple your ſelfe. See that he be a man that feareth God, loveth his laws, and will walk in the ſame to the uttermoſt of his power: ſuch a one as can be content to love you, and to care for you. Take heed he be no brawler, no drunkard, no wicked perſon, not given to filthineſſe, no worldling, no dicer nor carder. In fine, no filthy perſon, but chuſe you ſuch a one as God may be glorified in both your lives. And againe on your part, love him, ſerve him, obey him in all godlineſſe, as long as God ſhall give you life in this world. Then ſhall ye both be ſure to obtain that kingdome which God the Father hath prepared, and Ieſus Chriſt obtained for you, that never ſhall have end, where I truſt to abide your comming, Amen.

By your husband, Thomas Haukes.

Ye heard before in the letter of Tho. Haukes written to his wife, mention made concerning his eldeſt ſonne to be ſent to M. Throgmorton. Now what he writeth to the ſaid M. Throgmorton touching the ſame matter, by this his letter to the ſaid party hereunder enſuing, may appeare.

A Letter of Thomas Haukes to M. Clement Throgmorton.

Another letter of Thomas Haukes written to M. Clement Throgmorton.

GRace, mercy, and peace from God the Father, and from our Lord Ieſus Chriſt, be with you, and aſſiſt you in all your thoughts, words, and workes, that he in all things, as moſt worthy, may be glorified, and that the bleſſing of Abraham may be powred plenteouſly on you and all your poſterity.

Whereas the love of God hath moved you to require my ſonne to be brought up before your eyes, and the ſelfe ſame love hath alſo moved me in like caſe to leave him in your hands, as unto a father in mine abſence, I ſhall require you in Gods behalfe according to your promiſe, that ye will ſee him brought up in the feare of the Lord, and inſtructed in the knowledge of his holy word, that he may thereby learne to leave the evill, and know the good, and alwayes be pricked forward with fatherly inſtructions to follow my footſteps, that as Almighty God hath made me worthy through his ſpeciall grace to work his will in obedience, he may learne to follow me his father in the like, to Gods honour and praiſe: And this I require you in Gods behalfe to fulfill, or cauſe to be fulfilled, as ye before the living God will make anſwer for the ſame. I have left for the child certaine books which ſhall be delivered unto you, wherein his inſtruction and ſalvation lieth, if he learne and practiſe the ſame. And thus moſt humbly beſeeching you once againe, to be as good to him as your promiſe was unto me, that is, to be a father, and a wall of defence unto him in all troubles, I leave him in your hand through the Lord Ieſus, and deſire him to bleſſe both him and you according to his good promiſe: and all that good which ye ſhall do unto him, I ſhall moſt heartily deſire the everlaſting God to recompence unto you in his Kingdome, where I hope to meet both him and you among all Gods elect. To which God be all praiſe, honour, and glory, Amen.

Yours and all mens in Chriſt Ieſus,
Thomas Hawkes.

The hiſtory of Thomas Wats, examined, tried, and burnt for the truth of the Goſpell.

June 10. The ſtory of Tho. Wats, Martyr.

Tho. Wats diſpoſeth his goods before he ſhould be apprehended.

Thomas Wats of Billerica, within the county of Eſſex, of the Dioceſſe of London, was by his occupation a Linnen Draper: who before he was apprehended, had ſold and made away his cloth in his ſhop, and diſpoſed his things being ſet in order to his wife and children, and gave away much of his cloth unto the poore. For he looked alwayes to be taken by Gods adverſaries and his, as ſhortly after came indeed to paſſe: ſo that upon the 26. day of Aprill, he was apprehended and brought before the Lord Rich, and other Commiſſioners at Chelmsford, and there being accuſed for not coming to the Church, was upon the ſame examined before the Lord Rich, Henry Tyrel, ſir Anthony Browne, Edmund Tyrel, Thomas Mildman, Iohn Wiſeman, Roger Appleton, Richard Weſton, Juſtice Gaudy, &c. The ſumme and principall effect of which examination, hereunder followeth briefly expreſſed.

The examination of Thomas Wats before the Lord Rich, and others.

The examination of Tho. Wats before the Lord Rich, and other the Queens Commiſſioners.

When this Thomas Wats came before the Lord Rich, and other the Juſtices, whoſe names are ſpecified in the letter following (which they ſent unto the Biſhop of London againſt him) at the Seſſions at Chelmesford, the Lord Rich ſaid theſe words or the like in effect unto him.

The words of the Lord Rich to Tho. Wats.

Wats, ye be brought hither, as I underſtand, becauſe of diſobedience to the King and the Queens lawes. Ye will not come to the Church, ye will not heare Maſſe, &c. but have your conventicles a ſort of you in corners, contrary to the King and Queenes proceedings. Unto which his words Wats anſwered and ſaid.

My Lord, if I have offended a law, I am ſubject here to the law. Then Anthony Brown Juſtice ſaid unto him; Wats, I pray thee tell me who hath been thy Schoolmaſter to teach thee this geere, or where didſt thou firſt learne this religion? Forſooth, quoth Wats, even of you ſir: you taught it me, & none more than you. For in King Edwards dayes in open Seſſions you ſpake againſt this religion now uſed, no Preacher more. You then ſaid the Maſſe was abominable, and all their trumpery beſides, wiſhing and earneſtly exhorting that none ſhould beleeve therein, and that our beliefe ſhould be only in Chriſt: and you ſaid then whoſoever ſhould bring in any ſtrange nation to rule here, it were treaſon, and not to be ſuffered. Then ſaid Browne to my Lord Rich, he belies me my Lord. What a knave is this? he will ſoon belie me behinde my back, when he doth it before my face; and my Lord Rich ſaid again, I dare ſay he doth ſo.

Anno 1555

Wats words to the L. Rich. Sir Anthony Browne a Goſpeller in King Edwards dayes, and a perſecutor in Q. Maries dayes.

After theſe words, Wats took occaſion to ſpeak ſomwhat of King Philip and of his coming in, but what it was, I could not iuſtly learne. But thus much was heard, that after thoſe words ſpoken, the Bench among themſelves ſtood up, and ſaid one to another, Treaſon, ſaving one good man called Juſtice Gawdy, who a little before was about to ſpeak: but when he heard them cry treaſon, he held down his head as one grieved and troubled at their doings.

Juſtice Gaudy a good man.

In concluſion, the Commiſſioners being weary of him, or elſe not willing to meddle further in ſuch high matters, ſent him up to the Biſhop of London, with their letter withall, importing the cauſe of his ſending up, as the contents thereof hereunder follow to be ſeen.

A Letter ſent by certaine Iuſtices in Eſſex to Boner Biſhop of London.

A letter of the Lord Rich, Henry Tyrel, and other Juſtices to Boner.

After our moſt hearty commendations to your good Lordſhip, theſe ſhall be to advertiſe you, that at our Seſſions of Oyer & Terminer holden at Chelmsford the 26. day of April laſt paſt, there came before us in open Court one Thomas Wats of Billerica within your Dioceſſe, by ordinary proceſſe, and then and there being examined why he refuſed to come to his Pariſh Church, and there to receive the ſacrament of the Altar, and heare divine Servise, according to the inſtitution of holy Church, he openly there anſwered generally; that like as the Service of the Church ſet out in the dayes of late K. Edward 6. was ſaid by us now to be abominable, hereticall, ſchiſmaticall, and all naught, ſo he ſaid, that all that is now uſed and done in that Church, is abominable, hereticall, ſchiſmaticall, and all naught, with divers other erroneous, and arrogant words: and therfore we have thought good to ſend him to your Lordſhip, to be further examined by you of his particular opinions, as to your paſtorall office ſhall ſeem convenient, certifying you further, that in our opinion he is one of the moſt arrogant hereticks that hath been heard ſpeak, or ever came before you, and not meet to be kept here in any Goale, as well for feare of corrupting others, as for divers and ſundry other ſpeciall cauſes hereafter to be more declared. Thus leaving to moleſt your good Lordſhip, we commit you to the Holy Ghoſt. Given at Chelmsford the 27. of Aprill, Anno 1555.

Tho. Wats ſent up by the Juſtices of Eſſex to biſhop Boner.

Now when the Biſhop had received him, how he uſed him it is eaſie (by his common practices with others) to iudge. What his private conferences rences were, I know not, but what was publikely done in the Conſiſtorie at Pauls (the common ſtage for theſe tragedies) you ſhall here ſee.

The firſt appearance of Thomas Wats in the Biſhops Conſiſtory.

The firſt appearance of Thomas Wats in the biſhops conſiſtory.

FIrſt upon Thurſday, being the ſecond day of May, Thomas Wats was brought thither before the Biſhop of London, and there being examined upon his words had before the Lord Rich, and others (as is contained in their letters) he did earneſtly affirme the ſame to be true. Whereupon the Biſhop obiected, and examined him upon theſe articles following, to the which he anſwered, as under may appeare.

Articles obiected againſt Thomas Wats of Billerica in the County of Eſſex, within the Dioceſſe of London, by Boner Biſhop there, as enſueth.

Articles againſt Tho. Wats.

1 FIrſt, that the ſaid Thomas Wats was of Billerica, and ſo of the iuriſdiction of the Biſhop of London.

The ſacraments of the Church of Rome.

2 Item, that he beléeved not in the ſacraments of the holy and Catholike Church, as the Catholike Church of Rome, and all other Churches members of the ſame, ever hitherto have beléeved, and is taught of all good and faithfull people, nor hath allowed the ſaid ſacraments, rites, uſages, or ceremonies of the ſaid Church, but hath deſpiſed the ſame.

The ſubſtance of the ſacrament.

3 Item, that he beléeveth, and alſo hath taught others, that the ſubſtance of materiall bread and wine doe remaine in the ſacrament of the Altar after the conſecration, and that the ſaid materiall bread and wine are the ſignes and tokens of Chriſts body hanged upon the Croſſe, and of his blood there ſhed, and that in the ſaid ſacrament there is only a memory or remembrance of Chriſts body and blood, and nothing elſe.

The preſence in the ſacrament.

4 Item, that he beléeveth, and doth preciſely affirme, that the very true preſence of Chriſts body and blood in ſubſtance, is not in the ſacrament of the Altar, but onely in heaven, and no where elſe.

The Maſſe abominable.

5 Item, that he beléeveth, affirmeth, and ſaith, that the Maſſe now uſed in the Church of Rome, here in England, and other places, is full of Idolatry, abomination, and wickedneſſe, and that Chriſt did never inſtitute it, nor ordaine it, nor yet allow it as a good and laudable thing to be uſed in his Church.

Confeſſion to God.

6 Item, that he beléeveth and affirmeth, that auricular confeſſion to be made unto the Prieſt is not neceſſary, but ſuperfluous: and that it is enough for a man to beléeve only, and to confeſſe himſelfe unto God, without any Prieſt or Miniſter at any time, though he may have the Prieſt to confeſſe him unto.

Defence of Martyrs.

7 Item, that he beléeveth that Luther, Wickliffe, Doctor Barnes, and all other that have holden againſt the ſacrament of the Altar, and ſuffered death by fire or otherwiſe for the maintenance of the ſaid opinion, were good men and faithfull ſervants and Martyrs of Chriſt in ſo beléeving and dying.

Faſting, praying, and almeſdeeds.

8 Item, that he hath and doth beléeve, that to faſt, pray, or to do almes-déeds, is a thing utterly unprofitable; for if a man ſhall be ſaved, he ſhall be ſaved without doing of them; and if he ſhall be damned, they ſhall not help him, or doe him any good at all.

Q. Maries Service reproved.

9 Item, that the ſaid Wats of late coming into open Court at the Seſſions before the Lord Rich, ſir Henry Tyrel Knight, Anthony Brown Eſquire, and others, and being then and there examined, did openly confeſſe, that he had refuſed to come to the Church, and to heare there the divine Service, and to receive the ſacrament of the Altar, according to the order of the Church; becauſe that like as the Service of the Church ſet out in the dayes of the late King Edward the ſixth, was ſaid and alledged to be abominable, hereticall, ſchiſmaticall, and all naught; ſo he the ſaid Thomas Wats then and there ſaid openly before the ſaid Commiſſioners, that all that is now uſed and done in the Church, is abominable, hereticall, ſchiſmaticall, and altogether naught: And that he did alſo then utter before the ſaid Commiſſioners other erroneous and arrogant words, to the hurt of his ſoule, and to the evill example of the people there preſent.

Wats reputed by the lawes for an heretike.

10 Item, that he the ſaid Thomas by reaſon of the premiſſes, was and is to be taken, had, reputed, and iudged as a manifeſt and open heretike, and for the ſame, by the order of Eccleſiaſticall lawes is to be declared accurſed; and being obſtinate and incorrigible, is to be delivered to the ſecular power, there to be puniſhed as an heretike.

The Church of Rome a Synagogue of Satan.

11 Item, that he over and beſides all theſe offences and treſpaſſes aforeſaid, had alſo added this treſpaſſe, that is to wit, that he had beléeved and deliberately ſpoken, that ẏ Church of Rome in her rites, ceremonies, ſacraments, conſtitutions, and traditions, is the Synagogue of Satan; and therefore that he had conſented and agréed in opinion and beliefe with one John Tooly, of late hanged at Charing Croſſe, who at the time of his executing, deſired the people to pray to be delivered from the tyranny of the Biſhop of Rome, with all his enormities; as who ſhould ſay, that his authority and doings were tyranny, and had all enormities and iniquities in them.

12 Item, that the premiſſes and every part thereof be true, notorious, manifeſt, and openly ſpoken and talked of amongſt the honeſt and credible perſons in great multitude, and that of all and ſingular the ſame within Billerica aforeſaid, and other places thereabout, being of the Dioceſſe of London, there is a common voice and fame thereof.

The anſwer of the ſaid Thomas Wats to the foreſaid Articles.

His anſwers to the articles.

TO the firſt he ſaid and confeſſed the ſame to be true in every part thereof.

To the ſecond article he anſwered, that he beléeveth in all the ſacraments according to Chriſts inſtitution, and the catholike Church; but not according to the Biſhop of Romes Church: and further ſaid, that he doth not beléeve now as he had done in times paſt; for in time paſt he beléeved as the Church then beléeved, but now he doth not ſo beléeve; for the Church of Rome had deceived us, and therefore he ſaid he did not beléeve as the Church of Rome beléeveth, but as Chriſt hath taught him: And further ſaid, that he was ſo taught to beléeve by preaching of one M. Alvey, and other whoſe names he remembred not; which Alvey he ſaid did preach the word of God truly and ſincerely.

Tho. Wats firſt won to the Goſpell by M. Alvey.

To the third he anſwered, that he hath and doth beléeve, that Chriſts body is in heaven, and no where elſe: and further, that he will never beléeve that Chriſts body is in the ſacrament.

To the fourth he anſwered, confeſſing and firmely beléeving the ſame to be true.

To the fifth, that he did beléeve, that the Maſſe is abominable, and that he will not go one iot from that his beléefe.

To the ſixth, that he neither did, nor yet doth beléeve, that the Prieſt can abſolve him of his ſins:

Anno 1555

ſins:howbeit,he denieth not but it is good to aſke counſell at the Prieſts mouth.

To the ſeventh he ſaid,that he knew not what the opinions of the ſaid perſons named in the ſaid article were; and in caſe the ſaid perſons did beleeve,that the body and blood of Chriſt were really and in very deed in the ſacrament of the Altar,then that they were not good men. But in caſe they did beleeve that the body and blood of Chriſt was not in the ſacrament of the Altar really and truly, then he beleeved that they were good Chriſtian men.

To the eighth, that he had not ſpoken as is contained in this article, but ſaid, that he hath and doth beleeve,that faſting,prayers, and almſdeeds be works of a lively faith.

To the ninth he confeſſed,that he did utter and ſpeak,as in this article is contained, and further he deſired God that he might die in that faith and beliefe,wherein he now is.

To the tenth he anſwered and ſaid, that he will ſubmit himſelfe herein to the order of the law: and further ſaid,that he truſteth that with God he ſhall be bleſſed,although with men he be accurſed.

The Biſhop of Rome an enemy to Chriſt.

To the eleventh he ſaid, that he beleeved that the Biſhop of Rome is a mortall enemy to Chriſt and his Church. And as for Tooly he ſaid, he did never ſee or know him: but in caſe the ſaid Tooly did wiſh and pray as is contained in the article, then he did likewiſe wiſh and conſent with him therein.

To the twelfth he anſwered,that all which before he confeſſed to be true, is alſo true: and all that he hath denied to be true, he denieth againe to be true,and beleeveth the ſame to be according to ſuch things as he hath confeſſed.

By me Thomas Wats.

Another appearance of Thomas Wats in the Conſiſtory.

Tho. Wats againe appeareth in the Conſiſtory.
The Biſhops words to Tho. Wats.

THeſe articles thus propounded and anſwered, the Biſhop commanded him to appeare againe in the ſame place at three of the clocke in the afternoon,upon the ſame day.At which houre being brought thither by his Keeper, the Biſhop began with him in this wiſe; Wats,you know what I ſaid unto you to day, and what I appointed unto you at this time.The time is now come: weigh & conſider with your ſelf, that you are but a man;and albeit that you will wilfully caſt away your body, yet caſt not ſo away your ſoule, but while ye have time,return and confeſſe the truth.

The anſwer of Wats.

Wherunto Thomas Wats anſwered and ſaid, I am weary to live in ſuch idolatry as ye would have me to live in. Upon which anſwer the Biſhop cauſed his articles againe to be read. He thereto anſwered as before, and farther ſubſcribed the ſame with his own hand.

Another appearance before D.Harpsfield.

Another appearance before D.Harpsfield.

THe Biſhop after many perſwaſions to cauſe him to recant, willed him to depart as then, and to come againe on Saturday at eight of the clock in the morning. Where the Biſhop being abſent, D.Nicolas Harpsfield,as then being his Deputy, did ſit, and earneſtly exhorted him to deny his opinions. To whom in the end he anſwered.

Wats ſubmitteth him to the law,and not to the Popes law

Well, ye have a law to condemne me, and I ſubmit my ſelfe to the law; but not to the lawes of the Church(as you call it:) And farther I doe affirme, and will ſtand to mine anſwers that I have made.

Tho. Wats privately appeareth againe before the biſhop.

Whereupon D.Harpsfield willed him to appeare there again upon Friday,being the 10 day of the ſame moneth of May. Upon which day the Biſhop privatly ſent for the ſaid Thomas Wats into his chamber,and there with many faire promiſes tempted and tried him, whether he would revoke his errors(as he then termed them.)But Wats anſwered him in this ſort; I will not beleeve your Church, neither the Romiſh Church, and therfore you doe but labour in vaine thus to travaile with me. He was hereupon againe diſmiſſed for that time untill Friday the 17. day of May,and then commanded to appeare in yͤ Conſiſtory;which commandement he obeyed,and having the accuſtomed former articles miniſtred unto him,made then ſuch anſwers as before.

Wats anſwer to the biſhop.

Tho. Wats brought againe to the Conſiſtory.

THus being toſt to and fro from day to day,and houre to houre, he was at the laſt, the 18. day of the moneth of May, brought into the Conſiſtory, where firſt was made a briefe recitall of all the former proceſſe: and there the ſaid Wats being (by the Biſhop and others) willed to deny his profeſſion,made this finall anſwer; God keep me from the doctrine that ye would have me to come unto, which ye have now declared. And I beſeech God that I may perſevere in that that I have done; for I will ſtand to mine anſwers.

The finall anſwer of Tho. Wats.

The biſhop perceiving his faire flattering promiſes nothing to prevaile (and having no great ſtore of other reaſons to perſwade with)put forth his laſt and ſtrongeſt argument of condemnation. Which being ended,he was delivered to the Sheriffes of London, and by them was ſent to Newgate,where he remained untill the 9. day of June,or (as ſome record) to the 22. of May: at what time he was carried unto Chelmsford, and there was brought to Scots houſe, keeping then an Inne at Chelmsford, where,as they were eating meat with Haukes, and the reſt that came downe to their burning, they prayed together both before and after their meat.

Sentence of condemnation againſt Tho. Wats.

Then Wats went and prayed privatly to himſelf, and afterward came to his wife and his ſixe children being there, & ſaid theſe words in effect; Wife, and my good children, I muſt now depart from you. Therefore henceforth know I you no more.

more,but as the Lord hath given you unto me,ſo I give you again unto the Lord, whom I charge you ſee you doe obey,and feare him: and beware ye turne not to this abominable Papiſtry, againſt the which I ſhall anon, by Gods grace, give my blood. Let not the murthering of Gods Saints cauſe you to relent, but take occaſion thereby to be the ſtronger in the Lords quarrell, and I doubt not but he will be a mercifull father unto you. All theſe and ſuch like words ſpake he unto them,and they unto him: of whom two, as it is ſaid,offered to be burnt with him. In the end he bade them farewell, and kiſſed them all, and was carried to the fire.

The words of Tho. Wats to the Lord Rich.

At the ſtake, after he had kiſſed it, he ſpake to my Lord Rich theſe or the like words; My Lord, ſaith he, Beware, beware, for you doe againſt your own conſcience herein,and without you repent, the Lord will revenge it: For you are the cauſe of this my death.

Concerning the childbed of Queene Mary as it was rumoured among the people.

The childbirth of Q. Mary.

LOng perſwaſion had been in England with great expectation,for the ſpace of half a yeere or more, that the Queene was conceived with child. This report was made by the Queenes Phyſitians, and other nigh about the Court: ſo that divers were puniſhed for ſaying the contrary. And commandement was given, that in all Churches ſupplication and prayer ſhould be made for the Queens good delivery: the certificate whereof ye may read before in the letter of the Councell ſent to Boner. And alſo the ſame moreover may appeare by proviſion made before in Act of Parliament for the child.

Rockers and Nurſes provided for Queen Maries child.

And now forſomuch as in the beginning of this moneth of Iune about Whitſontide, the time was thought to be nigh that this yong maſter ſhould come into the world, and that Midwives, Rockers, Nurſes, with the Cradle and all,were prepared and in a readineſſe, ſuddenly, upon what cauſe or occaſion it is uncertaine, a certaine vaine rumor was blown in London of the proſperous deliverance of the Queen,and the birth of the child. Inſomuch that the bels were rung,bonfires and proceſſions made, not only in the city of London, and in moſt other parts of the Realme, but alſo in the towne of Antwerpe Guns were ſhot off upon the river by the Engliſh ſhips, and the Mariners thereof rewarded with an hundred Piſtolets or Italian crownes by the Lady Regent, who was the Queene of Hungary. Such great reioyceing and triumph was for the Queens delivery,and that there was a Prince borne. Yea,divers Preachers,namely one the Parſon of S. Anne within Alderſgate, after Proceſſion and Te Deum ſung, tooke upon him to deſcribe the proportion of the child, how faire,how beautifull,and great a Prince it was, as the like had not been ſeen.

Proceſſions and bonfires in London for ioy of the young Prince. Triumph at Antwerpe for the ſame.

In the midſt of this great adoe, there was a ſimple man (this I ſpeak but upon information) dwelling within foure miles of Warwick, that never had been before half way to London,which ſaid concerning the bonfires made for Q. Maries child: here is a ioyfull triumph,but at length all will not prove worth a meſſe of potage,as indeed it came to paſſe: For in the end all proved cleane contrary, and the ioy and expectations of men were much deceived. For the people were certified, that yͤ Queen neither was as then delivered, nor after was in hope to have any child.

Q. Maries child would not come.

At this time many talked diverſly: ſome ſaid this rumor of the Queens conception was ſpread for a policy; ſome other affirmed, that ſhe was deceived by a Tympany or ſome other like diſeaſe, to thinke her ſelfe with child, and was not; ſome thought ſhe was with child, and that it did by ſome chance miſcarry, or els that ſhe was bewitched; but what was the truth thereof, the Lord knoweth, to whom nothing is ſecret. One thing of mine owne hearing, and ſeeing, I cannot paſſe over unwitneſſed.

What became of Q. Maries child no man can tell.

There came to me, whom I did both heare & ſee, one Iſabel Malt, a woman dwelling in Alderſgate ſtreet in Horn Alley, not far from the houſe where this preſent book was printed, who before witneſſe made this declaration unto us, that ſhe being delivered of a man child upon Whitſunday in yͤ morning, which was the 11. day of Iune. Anno 1555. there came to her the Lord North, and another Lord to her unknown,dwelling then about old Fiſhſtreet, demanding of her if ſhe would part with her child, and would ſweare yͭ ſhe never knew nor had any ſuch child. Which if ſhe would, her ſon (they ſaid) ſhould be well provided for, ſhe ſhould take no care for it, with many faire offers if ſhe would part with yͤ child.

After that came other women alſo, of whom one they ſaid ſhould have beene the Rocker, but ſhe in no wiſe would let go her ſonne, who at the writing hereof being alive, and called Timothy Malt,was of the age of 13. yeeres, and upward.

Ex teſtimonio cujuſdam puerperæ Londinenſis.

Thus much, I ſay, I heard of the woman her ſelfe. What credit is to be given to her relation, I deale not withall, but leave it to the liberty of the Reader, to beleeve it they that liſt; to them that liſt not I have no farther warrant to aſſure them.

Among many other great preparations made for the Queenes deliverance of child, there was a cradle very ſumptuouſly and gorgeouſly trimmed, upon the which cradle for the child appointed, theſe Verſes were written, both in Latine and Engliſh.

The young Princes cradle.

Quam Mariæ ſobolem Deus optime ſumme dediſti,

The child which thou to Mary, O Lord of might haſt ſend,
To Englands joy in health preſerve, keepe, and defend.

Verſes upon the cradle.

About this time there came over into England a certaine Engliſh booke, giving warning to Engliſh men of the Spaniards, and diſcloſing certaine cloſe practices for recovery of Abbey lands,which booke was called A warning for England. Whereof ye ſhall underſtand more, God willing,when we come to the Spaniſh Inquiſition. So that by the occaſion of this book,upon the 13. day of this moneth came out a certaine Proclamation, ſet forth in the name of the King and Queene, repealing and diſanulling all manner of bookes written or printed, whatſoever ſhould touch any thing the empairing of the Popes dignity, whereby not onely much godly edification was hindred, but alſo great perill grew among the people. The copy of which Proclamation here followeth.

A Proclamation ſet out by the King and Queene for the reſtraining of all bookes and writings, tending againſt the doctrine of the Pope and his Church.

VVHereas by the Statute made in the ſecond yeere of King Henry the fourth concerning the repreſſing of hereſie, there is ordained and provided a great puniſhment, not only for the authors, makers, and writers of books containing wicked doctrine, and erroneous and hereticall opinions, contrary to the catholike faith, and determinati

Articles to be enquired upon by the Wardens of every company, touching ſeditious bookes, eſpecially touching the book called A warning for England.

This book called A warning for England, look for hereafter, when we come (God willing) to the Spaniſh Inquiſition.

Articles to be inquired upon.

1 Whether they have ſeene any of the foreſaid bookes.

2 Whether they have heard of any of the ſaid bookes.

3 Where they were, and in what place they have ſeene them.

4 Whom they know to have lately come from beyond the ſea, eſpecially from Zuricke, Straſbrough, Franckford, Wezel, Emden, and Diſburge.

2 Whom they know or vehemently ſuſpect to be common carriers of letters or mony thither from hence.

6 That they bring to my Lord Maior all ſuch ſeditious books as they have, or ſhall have found hereafter.

The books of the Proteſtants to be weighed with books of the Papiſts.

In this Proclamation thou haſt heard, Chriſtian Reader, the profound and learned cenſure of the Catholike Church of England, what bookes they miſlike and reject as heretical, ſchiſmatical, and pernicious. Againſt the which Catholike cenſure of theſe learned fathers, I have not at this time to inferre: neither doth any leaſure ſerve now to write Apologies in defence of theſe authors here condemned. Only ſo much leave it may pleaſe the Reader to grant me to ſet before him here a paire of ballance, wherein to weigh the books on the one ſide condemned, with the books on the other ſide allowed, to the end that we weighing the one with the other, may diſcern the better between them, which part weigheth beſt with Gods holy truth and true Catholike Church, againſt manifeſt Idolatry and palpable abomination. And now therefore, as they have in this preſent proclamation given their condemnation upon theſe books above recited: ſo I deſire thee to give thy cenſure upon their books by them allowed, and upon the matter in them conteined, and mark well what good ſtuffe it is.

The Primer ſet forth in Queene Maries time, printed by J. Wayland.

And firſt to begin with the Primer in Engliſh for children after the uſe of Saliſbury, imprinted with a priviledg according to the King & Queens Majeſties letters patents in the reign of Queen Mary. Let us repeate and ſurvey ſome part of the ſaid Primer (for to expreſſe all, it were too long) long) beginning, with the firſt leſſon of our Ladie, in theſe words:

Holy Mary; mother moſt pure of Virgins all;
Mother and daughter of the King celeſtiall,
So comfort us in our deſolation,
That by thy prayer and ſpeciall mediation,
We enjoy the reward of the heavenly reigne, &c.

Conferre this with the Scriptures, good Reader, and judge uprightly whether this doctrine be tolerable in the Church or not.

It followeth more in the ſecond Leſſon.

Holy Mary of all godly the godlieſt,
Pray for us, of all holy the holieſt;
That he our prayers accept may in good wiſe,
Which of thee was borne, and reigneth above the (skies, &c.

In the third Leſſon.

Thy Son beſeech with humble interceſſion,
To purge us clean of our tranſgreſſion,
That ſo being redeemed we may the place aſcend,
Where thou dwelleſt with him world without end.

The Verſicle.

One mediator between God and men, the man Jeſus Chriſt.

Pray for the people, intreate for the Clergy, make interceſſion for the devoute womankinde, let all feele thy helpe that worthily ſolemnize thy memoriall, &c.

Another Verſicle.

Holy Mother of God, make thy petition, that we may deſerve Chriſts promiſſion, &c.

And in the Antheme after Benedictus, thus it followeth.

Falſe merits.

We beſeech thee of thy pitie to have us in remembrance, and to make meanes for us unto Chriſt, that we being ſupported by thy help, may deſerve to attain the Kingdome of Heaven.

Furthermore in the Collect after it followeth.

Wrong mediation.

And grant, that through the gracious interceſſion of the Virgin thy mother, we may be delivered from this preſent heavineſſe, aud have the fruition of eternall gladneſſe.

It followeth moreover in the ſaid Primer thus, concerning the materiall Croſſe.

Idolatry to the materiall Croſſe.

O God which haſt aſcended thy moſt holy Croſſe, and haſt given light to the darkneſſe of the world, vouchſafe by the vertue of thy Croſſe, to illumine, viſit, and comfort both our hearts and bodies, &c.

Moreover, in the name of Saint John Baptiſt thus it prayeth.

Let no man glory in any man: for all things are yours, &c. 1 Cor. 3.

O Lord defend us alway through the continuall ſuccours of Saint Iohn Baptiſt. For the more fraile we be, the more need we have to be relieved with neceſſary prayers, &c.

In which words note (good Reader) not only the abſurdity of doctrine, but alſo the ſtoliditie of the reaſon. For where their doctrine pretendeth that S. John Baptiſt ſhould pray for us, here we pray to God for S. John Baptiſt, that he will heare his prayer praying for us. It followeth furthermore in the name of Peter and Paul.

What is Paul, what is Apollo, but the ſervants of him on whom you beleeve? 1 Cor. 3.

Heare us mercifully, and grant that through the merits of them both, we may obtaine the glory everlaſting, &c.

Of Saint Andrew.

So let him, O Lord, be a continuall petitioner for us to thee, &c.

Of Saint Laurence thus.

Saint Laurence the Deacon did work a good work. For by the vertue of the holy Croſſe he gave ſight to the blinde, &c.

And how can this be true, when the holy Croſſe was not yet found in the time of Saint Laurence? For Helen which firſt found the Croſſe, as they ſay, came after Saint Laurence more then fortie yeers.

To Thomas Becket Archbiſhop of Canterbury.

Horrible blaſphemie and derogation to Chriſts bloud.

By the bloud of Thomas, which he for thee did ſpend,
Make us Chriſt to climb, whither Thomas did aſcend.

Of S. Nicholas.

Falſe merits.

O God which haſt glorified bleſſed Nicholas thy holy Biſhop with innumerable miracles, grant we beſeech thee, that by his merits and prayers we may be delivered from the fire of hell.

Of Mary Magdalen.

Grant we beſeech thee, through thy mercy, to let her purchaſe for us the bliſſe everlaſting, &c.

Another prayer to our Ladie.

The dolorous compaſſion of Gods ſweet mother,
Bring us to the bliſſe of Almighty God the Father, &c.

Another prayer in the ſaid Primer to our Lady.

The office of Chriſt given to our Lady.

Eſtabliſh us in peace and tranquillitie,
And change the name of ſinfull Eva:
Looſe thy priſoners from captivitie,
Vnto the blinde give ſight againe.
Deliver us from malignitie,
To the end we may ſome grace attaine.
Shew thy ſelf to be a mother:
So that he accept our petition.
Deliver us from bondage of ſinne, &c.

Item.

Holy mother ſuccour the miſerable, comfort the weak ſpirited, give courage to the deſperate, pray for the people, make interceſſion for the Clergy, and be a mean for the devout womankinde, &c.

Another blaſphemous prayer.

Blaſphemy.

O thou meek mother have mercy therefore
On wretches, for whom thou hadſt theſe paines all,
Seeing thy Son that Vine cluſter preſſed ſore:
And from the peſtilence of death eternall,
Keep us by voiding the Fiend infernall,
And joyne us with them which rewarded be
With eternall life, ſeeing the Deitie.

Another blaſphemy in the ſaid Primer.

Idolatry.

Haile Queen mother of mercy, our life, our ſweetneſſe, our hope. Vnto thee do we cry and ſigh, weeping and wailing. Come off therefore our Patroneſſe, caſt upon us thy pitifull eyes; and after this our baniſhment, ſhew to us the bleſſed fruit of thy wombe. O gate of glory be for us a reconciliation unto the Father and the Son. From the wretched their faults expell: wipe the ſpots of ſins uncleane, &c.

Item to our Lady.

The fruit of thy wombe everlaſting,
We may behold through thy deſerving, &c.

Item.

If Maries merits might help us, then Chriſt dyed in vaine.

Grant we beſeech thee, that by her merits and prayers we may attaine to that unſpeakable joy, whereas ſhe being aſſumpt, doth now rejoyce with thee in Heaven for ever.

Like Primer, like Pſalter.

And thus much hitherto of this Catholike Primer, called our Ladies Mattens. Whereunto if it were not tedious for the Reader, we would alſo adjoyne our Ladies Pſalter, to the intent that all indifferent Readers, as they have ſeen what Books theſe Catholike Fathers have condemned and do condemne for hereticall; ſo the ſame may alſo ſee and judge, what Books on the other ſide they approve as lawfull and Catholike. And for as much as it is not known peradventure to all men, what our Ladies Pſalter is, or what it meaneth; yea, and ſome peradventure will deny any ſuch booke of our Ladies Pſalter to be written or approved, here therefore we will firſt produce the name of the Author, who was Bonaventure, a Seraphicall Doctor, Biſhop alſo and Cardinall, canonized moreover by Pope Sixtus the fourth, An. 1482. for a Saint in the Calendar, who in his book thus intitled in Latin; Incipit Pſalterium beatæ Virginis, compilatum per Seraphicum Doctorem Sanctum Bonaventuram Epiſcopum Albanenſem, nec non ſanctæ Romanæ Eccleſiæ Bonaventure compiler of our Ladies Pſalter.

This Bonaventure lived, An. 1170. and was canonized, An. 1482.

Presbyterum Cardinalem, in honorem genetricis, &c. Fol. 84. In the ſecond part of his whole works (which were imprinted at Argentine, An. 1495.) to ſhew himſelf a devout ſervant to his Ladie, hath taken every Pſalme of Davids Pſalter (which he peculiarly made and referred to Almightie God) and hath in divers of the ſaid Pſalmes and Verſes put out the name of the Lord, and hath placed in the name of our Ladie. This being done through the whole Pſalmes and every one of them, it is now called our Ladies Pſalter, uſed to be ſung and ſaid in the praiſe and ſervice of our Ladie. A brief taſte whereof for examples ſake (for, to ſhew all, it were too long) we thought here to exhibite unto the Reader in order, as followeth.

The Title in Engliſh of the Pſalter.

The title of the book called our Ladies Pſalter

¶ Here beginneth the Pſalter of the bleſſed Virgin, made by the Seraphicall Doctor St. Bonaventure, the Biſhop of Alban, and Cardinall of the holy Church of Rome, &c.

The book called our Ladies Pſalter. Ex 2. parte operum S. Bonaventuræ.

1 BEatus vir, qui intelligit nomen tuum Maria Virgo, gratia tua animam ejus confortabit. Tanquam aquarum fontibus irrigatum uberrimum in eo fructum juſtitiæ propagabis, &c. Vniverſas enim fœminas vincis pulchritudine carnis; ſuperas Angelos & Archangelos excellentia ſanctitatis. Miſericordia tua & gratia ubique prædicatur, &c. Gloria Patri.

That is to ſay.

Our Ladies beauty.

Bleſſed is the man which underſtandeth thy name, O Virgin Mary, thy grace ſhall comfort his ſoule. Thou ſhalt bring forth in him the moſt plentifull fruit of Juſtice, being watered as it were with fountaines of water. All women thou paſſeſt in the beautie of thy bodie; all Angels and Archangels in the excellencie of thy holineſſe. Thy mercy and thy grace is magnified every where, &c. Glorie be to the Father, &c.

2 Quare fremuerunt inimici noſtri, & adverſum nos meditati ſunt inania? Protegat nos dextera tua Mater Dei, ut acies terribiliter confundens & deſtruens eos. Venite ad eam, qui laboratis & tribulati eſtis, & dabit refrigerium animabus veſtris. Accedite ad eam in tentationibus veſtris, & ſtabiliet vos ſerenitas vultus ejus. Benedicite illam in toto corde veſtro, miſericordia enim illius plena eſt terra, &c. Gloria Patri.

Treaſon againſt Chriſts perſon and dignitie.

Why doe our enemies fret and imagine vaine things againſt us? Let thy right hand defend us O Mother of God, terribly confounding and deſtroying them as a ſword. Come unto her all ye that labour and are troubled, and ſhe will give reſt unto your ſoules. Come unto her in your temptations, and her loving countenance ſhall ſtabliſh and comfort you. Bleſſe her with all your heart; for the earth is full of her mercie. Glorie be to the Father, &c.

3 Domina quid multiplicati ſunt qui tribulant me? In tempeſtate tua perſequeris & diſſipabis eos. Diſſolve colligationes impietatis noſtræ; tolle faſciculos peccatorum noſtrorum. Miſerere mei Domina & ſana infirmitatem meam; tolle dolorem & anguſtiam cordis mei. Ne tradas me manibus inimicorum meorum, & in die mortis meæ conforta animam meam. Deduc me ad portum ſalutis, & ſpiritum meum redde factori meo.

Blaſphemous Idolatry.

Why are they ſo many O Lady that trouble me? In thy fury thou ſhalt perſecute and deſtroy them. Looſe the bonds of our impiety, and take away the burden of our ſins. Have mercy upon me, O Lady, and heale my infirmitie. Take away my ſorrow and the anguiſh of my heart. Deliver me not into the hands of mine enemies, and in the day of my death comfort my ſoule. Bring me unto the haven of ſalvation, and reſtore my ſpirit unto my Maker and Creator. Glory be to the Father, &c.

4 Cum invocarem, exaudiſti me Domina, & è ſublimi ſolio tuo mei dignata es recordari. A rugientibus præparatis ad eſcam & de manibus quærentium me liberabit gratia tua. Quoniam benigna eſt miſericordia & pietas tua in omnes, qui invocant nomen ſanctum tuum. Benedicta ſis Domina in æternum, & majeſtas tua in ſeculum. Glorificate eam omnes gentes, &c.

False Faith.

When I called to thee, thou heardeſt me, O my Lady, and out of thy high throne thou didſt vouchſafe to think upon me. From the roaring of them that prepare themſelves to devoure me, and out of the hands of ſuch as ſeek after my life, thy grace ſhall deliver me: Becauſe thy mercy and thy pitie are great towards all them that call upon thy holy name. Bleſſed be thou O Lady for ever, and thy majeſtie for ever and ever. Glorifie her all nations of the earth, &c.

5 Verba mea auribus percipe Domina, &c. Converte luctum noſtrum in gaudium, & tribulationem noſtram in jubilationem. Corruant ante pedes noſtros inimici noſtri; virtute tua eorum capita conterantur, &c.

Derogation of the Croſſe of Chriſt.

Heare my words, O Ladie, &c. Turn our mourning into gladneſſe, and our trouble into rejoycing. Let our enemies fall before our feet, and with thy power daſh their heads in pieces.

6 Domina ne in furore Dei ſinas corripi me, neque in ira ejus judicari, &c. De porta inferi, & de ventre abyſſi tuis ſanctis precibus libera nos. Aperiantur nobis januæ ſempiternæ, ut enarremus in æternum mirabilia tua. Quia non mortui, neque qui in inferno ſunt, laudabunt te Domina, ſed qui tua gratia vitam æternam obtinebunt.

O Ladie, ſuffer me not to be rebuked in Gods anger, nor to be chaſtned in his heavie diſpleaſure, &c. From the gate and deep pit of hell, with thy holy prayers deliver us. Let the everlaſting gates be opened, that we may ſhew forth thy marvellous workes for ever. Becauſe the dead, nor they that be in hell, ſhall not praiſe thee O Ladie, but they which ſhall obtaine by thy grace life everlaſting.

7 Domina mea in te ſperavi, de inimicis meis libera me Domina. Conclude ora Leonis, & labia perſequentium conſtringe. Non moreris propter nomen tuum facere nobis miſericordiam tuam. Splendor vultus tui fulgeat ſuper nos, ut ſervetur conſcientia noſtra apud altiſſimum. Si perſequitur inimicus animam meam Domina adjutorio tuo conforter, ne vibret gladium ſuam contra me.

Vaine truſt. Wrong invocation.

Manifeſt Idolatry.

O my Ladie, in thee do I put my truſt; deliver me from mine enemies O Ladie. Stop the mouth of the Lyon, and binde the lips of the perſecutors. Make no tarrying for thy names ſake, to ſhew thy mercie upon me. Let the brightneſſe of thy countenance ſhine upon us, that our conſcience may be ſaved before the moſt higheſt. If the enemy do perſecute my ſoule, O Ladie help me that he deſtroy me not.

9 Confitebor tibi Domina in toto corde meo, & narrabo in populis laudem & gloriam tuam, &c. Inveniant gratiam per te inventricem gratiæ & ſalutis; reſpirant ad indulgentiam humiles pœnitentes; ſana contritiones cordis eorum, &c.

I will give thanks to thee O Ladie with my * whole heart, and will ſhew forth among the nations thy praiſe and glory, &c. They ſhall finde grace through thee, the finder out of grace and ſalvation, the humble and penitent groane for pardon and forgiveneſſe, heale thou the ſores of their heart, &c.

* Thou ſhalt love the Lord thy God with thy whole heart, with all thy ſtrength and power, &c. Deut. 6.

11 In te Domina confido, &c. Exquirite illam à juventute veſtra, & glorificabit vos, &c. Miſericordia illius noſtrorum auferat multitudinem peccatorum, & fœcunditatem nobis conferat meritorium, &c.

In thee O Ladie do I put my truſt, &c. Seeke her even from your youth, and ſhe ſhall glorifie you, &c. Her mercie take from us the multitude of our ſinnes, and give unto us plenteouſneſſe of merits, &c.

Derogation of Chriſts Paſſion.

12 Salvum me fac mater pulchræ dilectionis, fons clementiæ, &c. Gyrum terræ ſola circuis, ut ſubvenias invocantibus te, &c.

Save me O mother of love, and fountaine of mercie, &c. Thou thy ſelf alone haſt gone about the compaſſe of the earth to help them that call upon thee, &c.

13 Vſque quo Domina oblivíſceris me, & non liberas me in die tribulationis? Vſque quo exaltabitur inimicus meus ſuper me? Potentia virtutis tuæ contere ipſum, &c. Magnificamus te gratiæ inventricem, per quam ſæcula reparantur, &c.

How long doſt thou forget me O Ladie, and doſt not deliver me in the day of my trouble? How long ſhall mine enemy triumph over me? With thy mighty power deſtroy him, &c. We magnifie thee the finder and the author of grace, by whom the world is repaired, &c.

16 Conſerva me Domina, quoniam ſperavi in te, &c. Benedicta ſunt ubera tua, quibus “ lacte deifico Salvatorem enutriſti, &c.

“ Milk making God.

Preſerve me O Ladie: for in thee have I put my truſt, &c. Bleſſed be thy breſts, which with thy deifying milk didſt nouriſh the Saviour, &c.

Yea rather bleſſed be they which heare the Word of God and keep it.

18 Diligam te Domina cœli & terræ; in gentibus nomen tuum invocabo. Confitemini illi tribulati corde, & roborabit vos contra inimicos veſtros, &c. Religioſi omnes honorate illam, quia ipſa eſt adjutrix veſtra & ſpecialis advocata. Eſto refrigerium noſtrum glorioſa mater Chriſti, quia tu es totius religionis mirabile firmamentum.

I will love thee O Ladie of heaven and earth; I will call upon thy name among the nations. Confeſſe your ſelves unto her, ye that are troubled in heart, and ſhe ſhall ſtrengthen you againſt your enemies, &c. All ye Cloyſterers honour her, for ſhe is your helper and ſpeciall Advocate. Be thou our refreſhing and reſt, for thou art the marvellous foundation of all religion.

Idolatry of the Cloyſterers.

20 Exaudi nos Domina in die tribulationis, &c. Ne projicias nos in tempore mortis noſtræ, ſed ſuccurre animæ, cum deſeruerit corpus ſuum. Mitte Angelum in occurſum ejus per quem ab hoſtibus defendatur, &c. Sentiat in pœnis refrigerium tuum, & concede ei locum inter electos Dei.

Heare us O Ladie in the day of trouble, &c. Caſt us not away in the time of our death, but ſuccour our ſoule when it forſaketh the body. Send an Angell to meete it, that it may be defended from the enemies, &c. In torments and paine let it feele thy comfort, and grant to it a place among the elects of God.

25 Ad te Domina levavi animam, &c. Non prævaleant adverſum me laquei mortis, &c. Ductrix mea eſto ad patriam, & me cœtui Angelorum digneris aggregare.

To thee O Ladie do I lift up my ſoule, &c. Let not the ſnares of death prevaile againſt me, &c. Be thou my guide to the heavenly reſt, and to the company of Angels aſſociate me.

26 Iudica me Domina, quoniam ab innocentia mea digreſſus ſum: ſed quia ſperavi in te non infirmabor, &c.

“ Judge thou me O Ladie, for I am falne from mine innocencie: but becauſe I put my truſt in thee, therefore I ſhall not fall, &c.

“ All judgement is given to Chriſt alone, and before him the Virgin alſo her ſelf ſhall be judged.

27 Domina illuminatio mea ſit ſplendor faciei tuæ, &c. Serenitas gratiæ tuæ refulgeat menti meæ, &c.

O Ladie, let the brightneſſe of thy face be my light, and let the cleereneſſe of thy grace ſhine unto my minde, &c.

28 Ad te Domina clamabo, &c. Miſerere mei in die anguſtiæ meæ, & in luce veritatis tuæ libera me.

To thee O Ladie, &c. Have mercy upon me in the day of my trouble, and in the light of thy truth deliver me, &c.

31 In te Domina ſperavi, non confundar in æternum, in gloria tua ſuſcipe me. Tu es fortitudo mea & refugium meum, conſolatio mea & protectio mea, &c. Educas me laqueo quem abſconderunt mihi, quoniam tu es adutrix mea. In manus tuas Domina commendo ſpiritum meum.

In thee O Ladie do I put my truſt, let me not be confounded for ever, in thy glory receive me. Thou art my ſtrength and my refuge, my conſolation and protection, &c. Deliver me from the ſnare that they have laid for me, becauſe thou art my helper. Into thy hands I commend my ſpirit, &c.

If our Lady be all in all, then God be like ſitteth idle in heaven.

34 Benedicam Dominam in omni tempore, &c. In periculis, in rebus dubiis invocate eam, & in neceſſitatibus invenietis auxilium, &c. Sumite exemplum converſationis ejus & æmulamini ſtudia humilitatis ejus. Quia ergo Domina humilima fuiſti, Verbum increatum ex te carnem ſuſcipere coegiſti.

I will alwayes praiſe our Lady, &c. In perils, in adverſitie call upon her, and in time of need ye ſhall finde ſuccour. Let her converſation be an example unto you, and follow the vertue of her humilitie. Becauſe therefore O Ladie thou waſt humble and lowly, thou didſt compell the Word increate to take fleſh of thee.

Horrible blaſphemy againſt the Lord.

36 Dixit injuſtus, &c. A malo propoſito diſcedat; Mater Dei, inclina vultum Dei ſuper nos: Coge illum peccatoribus miſereri, &c. Benedictum ſit imperium tuum ſuper cœlos; benedicta ſit magnificentia tua ſuper terram.

The wicked man ſaid, &c. Let him depart from his evill purpoſe; O mother of God, turn the countenance of God toward us: “ Compell him to be mercifull unto ſinners. Bleſſed be thy impery and dominion in heaven, and bleſſed be thy magnificence upon the earth.

“ O impious blaſphemy.

45 Eructavit cor meum verbum bonum Domina, &c. Per tuam ſanctitatem peccata mea purgentur: per tuam integritatem mihi incorruptibilitas condonetur, &c.

My heart is inditing a good matter, O Ladie, &c. By thy holineſſe let my ſinnes be purged, by thy integritie let me obtaine incorruption, &c.

If Mary forgive ſins, then is our Faith in Chriſt in vaine.

47 Omnes gentes plaudite manibus, &c. Quoniam ipſa eſt porta vitæ, janua ſalutis, & vitæ noſtræ reconciliatrix; ſpes pœnitentium, ſolamen lugentium, pax beata cordium atque ſalus. Miſerere mei Domina, miſerere mei, quia tu es lux & ſpes omnium confidentium in te, &c.

Clap your hands all ye people, &c. For ſhe is the gate of life, the doore of ſalvation, the reconciler of our life; the hope of the penitent, the comfort of the ſorrowfull, the bleſſed peace of hearts and ſalvation. Have mercy upon me O Ladie, have mercie upon me; for thou art the light and hope of all that put their truſt in thee.

Theſe words ſtink of blaſphemous idolatry.

51 Miſerere mei Domina, quæ mater miſericordiæ nuncupatis. Et ſecundum viſcera miſerationum tuarum munda me ab omnibus iniquitatibus meis, &c.

Have mercy upon me O Ladie, which art called the mother of mercy, and in the bowels of thy great compaſſion cleanſe me from mine iniquities.

54 Domina, in nomine tuo ſalvum me fac, & ab injuſtitiis meis libera me, &c.

O Ladie in thy name ſave me, and from mine unrighteouſneſſe deliver me, &c.

The Croſſe of Chriſt evacuate.

70 Domina in adjutorium meum intende, &c. Miſerere ſervorum tuorum, ſuper quos invocatum eſt nomen tuum, &c.

Make haſte O Ladie to help me, &c. Have mercie on thy ſervants, upon whom thy name is vocated, &c.

Blinde truſt.

71 In te Domina ſperavi, non confundar in æternum, in tua miſericordia libera me, &c.

In thee Ladie have I put my truſt: let me not be confounded for ever, in thy mercie deliver me, &c.

79 Domina, venerunt Gentes in hæreditatem Dei, quas tu meritis tuis Chriſto confœderaſti, &c.

O Ladie, the Gentiles are come into the inheritance of God, whom thou didſt joyne unto Chriſt by thy merits, &c.

Gods honour derogated.

89 Qui regis Iſrael, &c. Odor vitæ de illa progreditur, & omnis ſalus de corde illius ſcaturizat.

Thou that ruleſt Iſrael, &c. The ſavour of life cometh from her, and all health floweth out of her heart, &c.

Falſe truſt.

91 Qui habitat in adjutorio matris Dei, in protectione ipſius commorabitur, &c. Clamate ad illam in periculis veſtris, & flagellum non appropinquabit Tabernaculo veſtro. Fructus gratiæ inveniet qui ſperaverit in illa, porta Paradiſi reſerabitur ei.

Whoſo dwelleth in the help of the mother of God, ſhall dwell in the ſhadow of her protection, &c. Cry unto her in your dangers, and the ſcourge ſhall not come neer your Tabernacle. The fruit of grace ſhall be to him whoſo truſteth in her, and the gate of Paradiſe ſhall be open unto him.

95 Venite exultemus Dominæ noſtræ, &c. Suſcipe in fine animas noſtras, & introduc nos in requiem æternam, &c.

Come let us rejoyce to our Ladie, &c. Receive our ſoules at our laſt end, and bring them into everlaſting reſt, &c.

Abominable blaſphemie.

105 Confitemini Dominæ noſtræ, & invocate nomen ejus, &c. Salus ſempiterna in manu tua, Domina, &c.

Praiſe our Ladie, and call upon her name, &c. Everlaſting ſalvation is in thy hand, O Ladie, &c.

110 Dixit Dominus Dominæ noſtræ; Sede mater mea à dextris meis, &c.

The Divell and the Pope ſaith ſo, and not God.

The Lord ſaid unto our Ladie; Sit here my mother on my right hand, &c.

114 In exitu animæ meæ ex hoc mundo occurre ei Domina, & ſuſcipe eam, &c. Eſto illi ſcala ad regnum cœlorum, & iter rectum ad Paradiſum Dei, &c.

In the paſſing of my ſoule out of this world, come and meete it, O Ladie, and receive it, &c. Be to it a ladder to the Kingdome of Heaven, and a right way to the Paradiſe of God, &c.

119 Miſerationibus tuis plena eſt terra, ideo viam juſtificationum tuarum exquiſivi, &c. Concupiſcam in æternum laudare te Domina cum docueris me " juſtificationes tuas, &c.

" Blaſphemy.

The whole earth is full of thy mercies, and therefore I will ſearch out the way of thy juſtifications, &c. I will covet for ever to praiſe thee O Lady, when thou ſhalt teach me thy juſtifications, &c.

Blaſphemy.

125 Qui confidunt in te mater Dei, non timebunt à facie inimici, &c.

They that put their truſt in thee, O Mother of God, ſhall not be afraid of the face of their enemy, &c.

" Blaſphemy.

127 " Niſi Domina ædificaverit domum cordis noſtri, non permanebit ædificium ejus.

Except our Ladie ſhall build the houſe of our heart, the building thereof ſhall not continue.

128 Beati omnes qui timent Dominam noſtram, & beati omnes qui ſciunt facere voluntatem ſuam, &c.

Bleſſed is every one that feareth our Ladie, and bleſſed be all they which know to do her will, &c.

Idolatrous invocation.

130 De profundis clamavi ad te Domina, Domina exaudi vocem meam: Fiant aures tuæ intendentes, &c.

Out of the deep I have called unto thee, O Lady, O Ladie, heare my voice, &c.

132 Memento Domina David, & omnium invocantium nomen tuum, &c.

O Ladie remember David, and all them that call upon thy name, &c.

" Falſe truſt.

134 Ecce nunc benedicite Dominam, omnes qui " ſperatis in nomine ſancto ejus, &c.

Behold and bleſſe now our Ladie, all ye that put your truſt in her holy name.

Blaſphemy.

136 Super flumina Babylonis, &c. Non invenietur propitiatio ſine illa.

At the floods of Babylon, &c. There is no propitiation to be found without her, &c.

Gods office appointed to our Lady.

140 Eripe me Domina ab omni malo, & ab hoſte inferni defende me, &c.

Deliver me O Ladie from all evill, and from the infernall enemy defend me, &c.

145 Oculi noſtri ſperant in te Domina. Mitte nobis cibum & eſcam delectantem. Laudationem tuam loquitur lingua mea, & benedicam te in ſeculum ſeculi.

Our eyes look up and truſt in thee. Do thou ſend us meate and food convenient, &c. My tongue ſhall ſpeak thy praiſe, and ſhall bleſſe thee for ever.

148 Lauda Ieruſalem Dominam, glorifica illam etiam O Sion. Ipſa enim conſtruit muros tuos, & filios tuos benedicit. Gratia ſua te impinguat, pacemque donat terminis tuis.

Idolatry.

Praiſe thou our Ladie, O Jeruſalem, and glorifie her alſo O thou Sion: For ſhe buildeth up thy wals, and bleſſeth thy children. Her grace maketh thee fat, and giveth peace unto thy coaſts, &c.

I could alſo recite other things more of like blaſphemy following immediately after this Pſalter of our Ladie, in the Seraphicall Doctor aforeſaid, as theſe:

Horrible blaſphemy.

Ecce Domina Salvatrix mea, fiducialiter agam in te, & non temebo, &c. Quia fortitudo mea es tu. Et facta es mihi in ſalutem, i. Behold O Ladie my Saviour, I will be bold in thee, and will not feare, &c. Becauſe thou art my ſtrength, &c. And art become my ſalvation, &c.

Blaſphemy.

Exulta totum genus humanum, quia talem dedit tibi Mediatricem Dominus Deus tuus, i. Rejoyce O all mankinde, becauſe the Lord thy God hath given unto thee ſuch a Mediatrix, &c.

The Scripture abuſed.

Confitebor tibi Domina, quia abſcondiſti hæc à ſapientibus, & revelaſti ea parvulis, i. I will confeſſe to thee, O Ladie, becauſe thou haſt hid theſe things from the wiſe, and haſt revealed them to the little ones, &c.

Generatio prava atque perverſa agnoſce Dominam noſtram Salvatricem tuam. Nunquid ipſa eſt mater tua quæ poſſedit te, & in fide generavit te? i. O thou wicked and peeviſh generation, knowledge our Ladie thy Saviour. Is not ſhe the mother that hath poſſeſſed thee, and in Faith hath begotten thee?

Curſed blaſphemy.

O benedicta, in manibus tuis repoſita eſt noſtra ſalus, i. O thou bleſſed, in thy hands is laid up our ſalvation, &c.

In nomine tuo omne genu flectatur, cœleſtium, &c. In thy name let every knee bend, in Heaven and earth, and in hell.

Quemadmodum infans ſine Nutrice non poteſt vivere; ita nec ſine Domina noſtra poſſes habere ſalutem, i. Like as the infant cannot live without the Nurſe, ſo neither canſt thou have ſalvation without our Ladie.

Blaſphemy.

Quicunque vult ſalvus eſſe, ante omnia opus eſt ut teneat de Maria firmam fidem. Quam niſi quiſque integram inviolatamque ſervaverit, abſque dubio in æternum peribit, i. Whoſo will be ſaved, before all things he muſt needes hold this belief of our Ladie: which belief, unleſſe every one ſhall hold perfect and ſound, ſhall periſh without doubt for ever.

Moreover, after theſe ſo horrible things and intolerable to be heard, conſequently in the next tractation followeth the Roſary or Garland of our

The Roſary or Garland of our Ladie, called Corona beatæ Mariæ.

our Ladie, compiled by the ſaid Bonaventure; wherein theſe words are to be read as followeth: O Mediatrix between God and man, the Lord hath worthily magnified thee, that thou only ſhouldeſt conceive his Sonne. Wherefore, O good Mary our Mediatrix, Mother of Grace, and Mother of Mercy, &c. And moreover, within few lines it followeth in theſe words; Therefore O our Empreſſe and Lady moſt bountifull, by the authoritie of a mother command, command (I ſay) thy welbeloved Sonne, that he will ſtirre up our minds from the love of worldly things, to heavenly deſires, &c.

Mary made a commander of Chriſt.

Item, O the Advocate of the miſerable, the eyes of thy ſervants be directed to thee, &c.

To theſe premiſſes, I might alſo adjoyne the horrible and moſt blaſphemous words of the ſaid Bonaventure in the ſaid Book, Fol. 100. pag. 2. Col. 1. which I beſeech thee to reade and note. Quæ major bonitas quam quod Chriſtus, i. What greater goodneſſe can be, then that Chriſt is content to be captive upon the Altar?
